He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 21st ultimo, proposing to appropriate $75,000 to aid in the reconstruction of the building for the Homeopathic Hospital in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. DEPEW on the 3d instant, proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection and equipment of isolation buildings in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 24th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $25,000 for improving Sherman avenue, in the District of Columbia, from Florida avenue north, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported it with amendments, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 26th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $30,000 for paving Fourteenth street north of Whitney avenue, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 26th instant, proposing to appropriate $100,000 for paving Sixteenth street from Morris street to Columbia road, and for grading and regulating Sixteenth street north of Columbia road, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 4th instant, proposing to appropriate $2,500 for grading and improving the property lately purchased for the Western High School, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 5th instant, proposing to appropriate $15,000 for paving with asphalt Seventh street NW., from G street to K street, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, to report it with sundry amendments, and to submit a report thereon. I ask that the bill may be placed upon the Calendar, and I give notice that on Monday I shall ask the Senate to take it up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BATE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2252) for the relief of Daniel H. Snyder, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 14047) for the relief of the clerks of circuit and district courts of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 12064) for the relief of Lebbeus H. Rogers and the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased.

CONNECTICUT RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7185) to authorize the board of commissioners for the Connecticut bridge and highway district to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River at Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, to report it favorably with amendments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered now. It is to enable to be built across the river at Hartford, Conn., a bridge which is going to cost two or three million dollars, and unless the bill is passed at this session the construction of the bridge will be delayed for a year. It is a short bill.

Mr. HOAR. Before consent is given, I wish to ask a question, if I may have leave. Does the bill provide for a sufficient draw?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It does. That matter has been attended to, and it is all entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported. It will be read in full to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, before the word "bridge," insert the word "draw."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Massachusetts rise to object?

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection if this amendment is adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, page 3, line 6, after the word "bridge," to insert:

and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 7284) providing for the restoration to the Navy list of certain officers, graduates of the United States Naval Academy, who have been heretofore honorably discharged under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 7285) authorizing, empowering, and directing the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries to establish in the State of Florida, on the Gulf of Mexico, a station for the investigation of problems connected with the marine-fishery interests of the region; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Fish and Fisheries.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 7286) for the relief of the estate of Samuel Ward, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 7287) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas Watts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 7288) extending the time for making proof and payment for all lands taken under the desert-land laws by the members of the Colorado Cooperative Colony for a further period of three years; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 7289) granting a pension to Charles A. Porter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 7290) granting an increase of pension to Albanis L. Anderson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for grading and macadamizing Illinois avenue from Albemarle street to Flint street, Brightwood Park, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PATTERSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 6357) relating to currency for the Philippine Islands; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr, PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for continuing the work of improving the military reservation at the Presidio of San Francisco and improving other military reservations in the harbor of San Francisco, Cal., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, at an annual salary of $1,800, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, until otherwise provided for by law.

INCREASED PENSIONS FOR LOSS OF LIMBS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4850) "to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States, or are totally disabled in the same," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 4, 5, and 7, and agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, and 8 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

J. H. GALLINGER,
P. J. McCUMBER,
JAS. P. TALIAFERRO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. SULLOWAY,
W. A. CALDERHEAD,
ROBERT W. MIERS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to make an observation concerning this bill.

It is a bill that the Senate passed increasing the pensions of soldiers who lost limbs in the service of their country. The other House amended it in several important particulars. The amendments the Senate conferees have receded from are inconsequential. Three amendments made by the House, important in their nature, are still in disagreement.

The first amendment is one whereby the increases under the bill are denied to the soldiers who fought in the Spanish war and lost limbs as a consequence, thus making the increases applicable only to the soldiers who were on the roll previous to the Spanish war. It is a discrimination against the Spanish war soldiers only in this one particular. They now get the benefit of all our pension laws, but if the House proposition is agreed to they will be denied the benefit of the pension laws relating to this particular disability. The Senate conferees did not feel that that was a proper thing to do.

The second amendment relates to the rates, the House having reduced the rates in every particular from those named in the bill by the Senate.

The third amendment is of still greater importance. The House attached an amendment to the bill increasing the pensions from $12 to $30 per month of a considerable class of soldiers who are on the roll under the act of June 27, 1890, and who require the frequent and periodical attendance of another person. The amount of money that would be required to meet that additional appropriation can not readily be ascertained, the First Deputy Commissioner of Pensions estimating that it would probably amount to over $4,000,000. That may be an excessive estimate, but that it would take a very large amount of money out of the Treasury goes without the saying.

It is proper, I should suggest, that this proposed increase of pension is to a class of soldiers who were placed on the rolls without being required to prove any disability whatever as of service origin. The Senate conferees feel that there is no necessity for such legislation at the present time, and they likewise feel very strongly of opinion that this bill increasing the pensions of the maimed soldiers should stand by itself, and that they should be dealt with as a class.

I trust, Mr. President, that the report may be adopted, and then I shall ask for a further conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to these amendments of the House, and ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate at the further conference; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. McCUMBER, and Mr. TALIAFERRO were appointed.

BILLS AND DEBATES RELATING TO TRUSTS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to introduce a resolution and have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the recent publication of the Department of Justice entitled "Bills and Debates in Congress Relating to Trusts," as corrected and indexed by the compiler, be made a Senate document; that 100 copies of the publication be printed for the immediate use of the Senate, and the compiler receive a compensation of —— dollars for the preparation of said index, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution, I think, will not require the expenditure of $500, so that it does not need to go to the Committee on Printing, but it will require an expenditure from the contingent fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. RAWLINS on the 27th ultimo, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to inform the Senate what courts-martial have been ordered and held in the Philippine Islands, and what judgments rendered by them in consequence of the dispatch sent by the Secretary of War to Major-General Chaffee referred to in the memorandum of the Secretary of War for the Adjutant-General under date of April 15, 1902; also what action was taken by the President or the Secretary of War on the judgment of any court-martial so ordered, either approving or disapproving the same.

Also, that the records in full of the several following courts-martial ordered and held in the Philippine Islands be communicated, to wit:

That on Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith.
That on Maj. Edwin F. Glenn, Fifth Infantry.
That on Lieut. Edwin A. Hickman, First Cavalry.
That on Lieut. J. H. A. Day, Marine Corps.
That on Maj. L. W. T. Waller, of the Marine Corps.
That on Lieut. Preston Brown, Second Infantry.
That on Capt. James A. Ryan, Fifteenth Cavalry.
That on Lieut. —— Cooke.
That on Lieut. Julian E. Gaiyot.
That on Lieut. N. E. Cook, of the Philippine Scouts.
That on Lieut. W. S. Sinclair, battalion adjutant, Twenty-eighth Infantry.

Also, any record or reports of investigations which may be on file in the War Department relating to the case of the so-called "Father Augustine," alleged to have been put to death by Cornelius M. Brownell, formerly a captain of the Twenty-sixth Volunteer Infantry, at Banate, island of Panay, province of Iloilo, in December, 1900; also any investigations made by the Department of Justice into the facts of such case, together with any legal conclusions reached thereon and reported to the War Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. RAWLINS. I understood that there were some Senators who desired to speak upon the resolution, and while I am personally ready for a vote, perhaps it had better lie over and retain its place.

Mr. LODGE. My recollection agrees with that of the Senator from Utah. I supposed that there were one or two Senators who desired to speak upon the resolution.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that it may lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the resolution may lie over, retaining its place.

Mr. LODGE. Retaining its place, subject to call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

MILITARY OCCUPATION OF PANAMA AND COLON, ETC.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, yesterday a resolution was pending at the time of the call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It went to the Calendar at 2 o'clock.

Mr. MORGAN. It was not ordered to the Calendar by the President of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it went to the Calendar under the rules.

Mr. MORGAN. The President did not order it to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now on the Calendar. It goes there anyway, without any order, when it has had its day in court.

Mr. HALE. At the termination of the morning hour I asked the incumbent of the chair if the resolution would go to the Calendar. The reply was that it would go to the Calendar, as I presume it did under the rule.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not hear any reply from the Chair. The Chair made no reply.

Mr. HALE. Whether I asked it or not, it would go, under the rules, to the Calendar at the end of the second day.

Mr. MORGAN. The point I state is that at the moment of time when the hour of 2 o'clock had arrived I called the Senator from Maine to order and the Chair observed that 2 o'clock having arrived that question between the Senators would go over, as I understood——

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. MORGAN. So that the question of order has not been settled, and the resolution of course would not go over under the rules pending a proposition of that kind, as I contend.

I can easily, of course, reintroduce the resolution and have the matter brought forward, if I choose to do it, but I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate in trifling with the subject. I want merely to get the action of the Senate upon this resolution, as to whether I am entitled as a Senator to the information that I seek, whether it is legitimate, and whether it is the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to furnish it.

I do not want to have the matter covered up in this way. It is not, in my judgment, becoming to the Senate of the United States to shrink from asking its officers for proper and legitimate information. I have never known it denied before. I want the Senate to take a vote on the resolution, as to whether I am entitled to have the information that I call for from the records of the Navy Department. I do not ask anything else at all.

I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw any objection to the consideration of the resolution. I am ready for a vote on it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, there has been no undue pressure in regard to this matter. The rules are very clear. If at the end of the second day the morning hour expires, whatever is up and not acted upon goes to the Calendar. On that presumption I asked the question yesterday whether the resolution would go to the Calendar at the close of the morning hour, and it went to the Calendar.

Now, the Senator is undoubtedly entitled at any time to move to take up the resolution. It is on the Calendar, because the rules sent it there.

Mr. MORGAN. I know that.

Mr. HALE. I did not send it there; the rules sent it there; and the Senator can move at any time to take it up, and a majority of the Senate can take it up.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand that probably as well as the Senator from Maine, and I could avail myself of it, but I do not care to engage the Senate in a consideration of a motion of that kind when by the simplest process in the world we can take a vote on it now.

Mr. HALE. If the resolution comes up under any circumstances, either the motion pending or the one that will be made by me at once would be to refer the resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the motion which is pending. That is the question I want to have decided.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that it is pending now. The resolution is on the Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. That motion settles the question, because if it ever gets to that committee I presume it will never get out.

Mr. HALE. It would not probably get out in its present form, I think.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Maine is a little incorrect in saying that no pressure has been brought about this business. I was taken off my feet while arguing this matter by a motion made legitimately under the rules of the Senate by one Senator and seconded by another, which under our rules closes the doors and takes the Senate into secret legislative session. When we came out of that session I was still on the floor and my resolution was still before the Senate.

So it is to be inferred, of course, that no adverse action was taken upon the resolution, and no affirmative action was taken on the Senator's motion to refer it. The motion stood in statu quo for an hour and a quarter back from the secret session. So pressure was brought, and the pressure failed to dislodge the resolution and it is before the Senate now.

The Chair rules that it goes to the Calendar. Now, I merely propose that we shall take a vote upon the resolution and see whether or not the Senate wants this information. The world wants it I know, and I want to give it, because I think it is my duty to call for it. It is in the Department. It is of record there, and I want to get it before the world and before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MORGAN. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The Senator can either move to take it up, which for some reason he is reluctant to do, or he can ask unanimous consent to take it up. I will not object, provided it is understood that at once a vote may be taken without further debate on my motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Senator can get a vote then.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent to take a vote on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take up for consideration the resolution from the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate; and the motion to refer, made by the Senator from Maine, is in order.

Mr. MORGAN. On that motion I ask for a vote by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BATE. Will the Chair please state the question?

Mr. TELLER. Can we know what the question is? Can the resolution be read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be read, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN on the 5th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to send to the Senate copies of all reports and of all correspondence in the Navy Department, with naval or other officers of the United States, on duty in the bays of Panama and Colon since April, 1902, which relate to the military occupation of said bays and the region between them, and the cities of Colon and Panama, by the forces of the United States; or that relate to the operation of military or police forces of Colombia, or of any insurgents that were in arms against the Government of Colombia in that region of country since April, 1902; or that relate to any measures of any officers of the United States to bring about the pacification of that region or any intervention by such officers to that end; or that relate to the terms and conditions of the surrender of insurgent forces in that quarter to the forces or authorities of the Republic of Colombia.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the Senator from Alabama objects to this proposed reference. I should like to inquire whether he objects because he desires to speak on it now?

Mr. MORGAN. I want a vote. I do not wish to cut off any other Senator from speaking, but I have said all I want to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama demanded a vote by yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. QUAY. I ask for information, as my attention was distracted while the resolution was being read. Does the resolution contain the ordinary clause, "if not inconsistent with the public interest?" Some of that correspondence might of necessity be confidential.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no such clause, I will say to the Senator, that I am aware of, which has ever been inserted in a resolution addressed to any Department of the Government except the Secretary of State. The heads of departments are mere clerks, and are required, and have always been required and directed to deliver to the Senate such records as their files contain if we saw proper to demand them. So I did not put that clause in because the inquiry is not addressed to the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to refer the resolution to the Committee on Naval Affairs, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary prceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a permanent pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], and I will withhold my vote until he comes in.

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. HEITFELD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and withhold my vote.

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. RAWLINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. TURNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understand that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY], who is absent, is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], who is also absent.

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEITFELD] is paired with my colleague [Mr. PLATT], and I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. I suggest that those pairs be transferred, so that the Senator from Idaho and I can both vote.

Mr. HEITFELD. That is agreeable.

Mr. DEPEW. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEITFELD. I vote "nay."

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana. As I have a general pair with that Senator, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CLAY. I was requested to state that the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is confined to his home by illness, and to announce that he is paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

Mr. ELKINS. I suggest to the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] that we transfer our pairs so that the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] will stand paired with my colleague [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Very well.

Mr. ELKINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Alger,	Depew,	Gamble,	Millard,
Allison,	Dillingham,	Hale,	Perkins,

So the resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MAJ. WILLIAM CRAWFORD GORGAS.

Mr. PETTUS. Yesterday I reported the bill (S. 6895) to authorize the promotion of Maj. William Crawford Gorgas, surgeon in the Army of the United States, and I asked for its present consideration, but was turned off by an objection. I ask the indulgence of the Senate that the bill may be considered at this time. It is a very short one.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Maj. William Crawford Gorgas, surgeon, United States Army, to the grade of assistant surgeon-general, United States Army, with the rank of colonel, the number in that grade of the Medical Department to be temporarily increased for that purpose during the time that he may hold that office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH M. SIMMS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Calendar and have considered at the present time the bill (S. 6666) for the relief of Joseph M. Simms, captain, United States Revenue-Cutter Service (retired).

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that Capt. Joseph M. Simms, United States Revenue-Cutter Service (retired), having been promoted "for meritorious acts of public service and wounds received in the United States service, as appears upon the public records of the volunteer service of the Army and Navy and of the Revenue-Cutter Service," he shall hereafter receive the full retired pay of his rank.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. HOAR. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7069) for the appointment of an additional judge in the Indian Territory, to report it with amendments.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is quite an important measure, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary were, on page 1, in section 1, after the word "who," at the end of line 5, to strike out "shall be denominated associate justice of said southern district and;" so as to make the section read:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint an additional judge for the southern district of the Indian Territory, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall have the same compensation and authority as other judges of the United States courts in the Indian Territory, and shall be a member of the court of appeals for the Indian Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 3, line 1, after the word "found," to insert "but this section shall not be applicable to suits of a local nature;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That persons residing in said southern district of the Indian Territory may be sued only in the division in which they reside and in the court therein nearest to such residence, unless there be more than one defendant in such action, and then such person may be sued in the district or division in which such codefendants or one of them reside or may be found; but this section shall not be applicable to suits of a local nature: Provided, That cases now pending in said southern district shall be tried in the division where pending, the same as if brought in said division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 4, in the following words:

SEC. 4. That the marshal, attorney, clerk, United States commissioners, and constables of the said southern district shall continue to exercise their function throughout said southern district.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 4. That the United States marshal, United States attorney, clerk of the district court, and the United States commissioners, and constables for the said southern district shall continue to exercise functions as heretofore.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN KANSAS.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7642) providing for the holding of terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States at Kansas City, Kans., and for other purposes, to report it favorably with an amendment. It is a brief bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That terms of the circuit court and of the district court of the United States for the first division of the judicial district of Kansas, in addition to those now provided by law, shall be hereafter held at the city of Kansas City, Kans., on the second Monday of January and first Monday of October of each year, but a jury shall not attend said October term excepting upon the order of the court, and a grand jury shall not attend either of said terms except upon the order of the district court.

SEC. 2. That all acts and parts of acts so far as in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MONONGAHELA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16975) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OWNERS AND OFFICERS OF BRIG OLIVE FRANCES.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3034) for the relief of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, and others on board said brig.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that the claims of the owners and officers of the brig Olive Frances, of Machiasport, Me., and others on board the brig, for damages and losses sustained by reason of collision of the United States gunboat Winooski, on July 30, 1866, be referred for examination and adjudication to the district court of the United States for the district of Maine.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14512) to amend an act to add certain counties in Alabama to the northern district therein, and to divide the said northern district, after the addition of said counties, into two divisions, and to prescribe the times and places for holding courts therein, and for other purposes, approved May 2, 1884.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD S. CRILL.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2422) for the relief of Edward S. Crill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Edward S. Crill, of Florida, $175, for rent of building for post-office in Palatka, Fla., for the third and fourth quarters of the year 1886.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENTS AND MARKERS ON GETTYSBURG BATTLEFIELD.

Mr. ALGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7) authorizing the Secretary of War to cause to be erected monuments and markers on the battlefield of Gettysburg, Pa., to commemorate the valorous deeds of certain regiments and batteries of the United States Army.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Gettysburg National Park Commission, under the supervision of the Secretary of War, to erect such monuments and markers of granite and bronze upon the battlefield of Gettysburg, in the State of Pennyslvania, as will fittingly designate the positions, indicate the movements, and commemorate the valorous services of the following batteries and regiments of United States Regulars upon the battlefield: Batteries E, G, H, I, and K, First United States Artillery; A, B, D, G, L, and M, Second United States Artillery; C, F, and K, Third United States Artillery; A, B, C, F, G, and K, Fourth United States Artillery; C, D, F, I, and K, Fifth United States Artillery; Second, Third, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Fourteenth, and Seventeenth Regiments of United States Infantry; First, Second, Fifth, and Sixth Regiments of Cavalry; and United States Engineers Detachment, etc.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOUNTS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5437) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army. It is very necessary that this bill should pass, so as to enable the heads of departments and accounting officers to adjust the accounts of Army officers.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, in section 2, line 14, after the word "act," to strike out "which" and insert "of the accounts of any officer whose combined responsibility for public money and Government property;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the accounts of military officers, whether of the line or staff, for Government property charged to them, shall be closed by the proper accounting officers whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, it will be for the interest of the United States to do so: Provided, That such accounts originated subsequent to April 21, 1898, and prior to the 9th day of July, 1901: Provided further, That no settlement shall be made by the officers of the Treasury, under this act, of the accounts of any officer whose combined responsibility for public money and Government property shall exceed the sum of $5,000, and only of such officers of the Army in whose accounts there is no apparent fraud against the United States: And provided further, That this act shall remain in force for two years from and after its passage, and no longer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the time has come for executing the unanimous-consent agreement relative to the consideration of pension bills, but, unless some Senator objects, I shall yield to the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] in order that they may ask for the consideration of certain bills.

PROTECTION OF WILD ANIMALS, ETC., IN FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6689) for the protection of wild animals, birds, and fish in the forest reserves of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate for its information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to designate such areas in the public forest reserves as should, in his opinion, be set aside for the protection of wild animals, birds, and fish, and be recognized as a breeding place therefor.

SEC. 2. That when such areas have been designated, as provided for in section 1 of this act, hunting, trapping, killing, or capture of wild animals, birds, and fish upon the lands and within the waters of the United States within the limits of said areas shall be unlawful, except under such regulations as may be prescribed, from time to time, by the Secretary of the Interior; and any person violating such regulations shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction in any United States court of competent jurisdiction, be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned for a period not exceeding one year, or shall suffer both fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 3. That it is the purpose of this act to protect from trespass the public lands of the United States and the wild animals, birds, and fish which may be thereon, and not to interfere with the operation of the local game laws as affecting private, State, or Territorial lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the Senator from California whether the lands referred to in the bill as being within forest reserves are subject to the exercise of this kind of power on the part of Congress?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, this bill has the approval of the Interior Department. It was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval, and he has approved it. The report accompanying the bill is quite full, I will say to the Senator from Utah, and it interferes with no local State laws whatever.

I have received numerous letters, I will say to my friend from Utah, from representative citizens residing in the different States where these reserves are located, and they are all earnestly in favor of the enactment of such a bill as this into law.

Mr. RAWLINS. The purpose of the proposed law is, I think, all right, and if the committee has given the matter careful consideration I shall not object to the consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FARGO, N. DAK.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7115) to provide for the erection of an addition to the public building in the city of Fargo, N. Dak.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "eighty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected a suitable addition to the public building at Fargo, N. Dak., including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States court, the post-office, and other governmental offices in said city; the cost of the said addition, including the said fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $80,000. Said addition to said public building shall be erected on the site belonging to the United States at Fargo, N. Dak.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I now ask that the order of the Senate regarding the consideration of pension bills may be executed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement the unobjected pension bills on the Calendar will now be considered.

SUSAN E. DUNCAN.

The bill (H. R. 1531) granting an increase of pension to Susan E. Duncan was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "of" where it occurs the first time, to strike out the name "Suasn" and insert "Susan;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan E. Duncan, widow of Alender P. Duncan, late lieutenant-colonel Fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the amendment is simply to correct a typographical error, let it be disagreed to, and the error will be corrected when the bill is enrolled.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRACE A. NEGLEY.

The bill (H. R. 3504) granting an increase of pension to Grace A. Negley was announced as the next bill in order on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be passed over. I will make a statement occupying a moment at this time.

The House passed a bill for Mrs. Negley, widow of General Negley, at $50 per month, and one for Mrs. Sigel, widow of General Sigel, at $100 a month. The Committee on Pensions has a rule that no bill will be reported for a widow at a rate exceeding $50 per month. It has been suggested to me that an effort will be made on the floor to restore the rate to the widow of General Sigel, and in that case the friends of Mrs. Negley want to be heard. So I believe both of those cases had better be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN MACFARLANE.

The bill (H. R. 15571) granting an increase of pension to John Macfarlane was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill (S. 7277) granting an increase of pension to Elbert H. Dagnall was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elbert H. Dagnall, late of Capt. Samuel Bone's company, Georgia Volunteers, Creek Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN CONTAL.

The bill (H. R. 5101) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Contal was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin Contal, late of Company K, Sixth Regiment United States Infantry, and captain of Company F, Ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MOSES WHITCOMB.

The bill (H. R. 9950) granting an increase of pension to Moses Whitcomb was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Moses Whitcomb, late of Company E, One hundredth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERVIN THOMPSON.

The bill (H. R. 13239) granting an increase of pension to Ervin Thompson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Ervin Thompson, late of Company E, Forty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and Company D, Fiftieth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NIMROD F. CLARK.

The bill (H. R. 13240) granting an increase of pension to Nimrod F. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Nimrod F. Clark, late of Company B, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES H. DURHAM.

The bill (H. R. 16534) granting an increase of pension to James H. Durham was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of James H. Durham, late of Twenty-second Battery Indiana Volunteer Light Artillery, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH R. PRENTICE.

The bill (H. R. 15684) granting an increase of pension to Joseph R. Prentice was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Joseph R. Prentice, late of Company C, Nineteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. That ends the pension Calendar, Mr. President.

BILLS TO CORRECT MILITARY RECORDS.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a few cases on the Calendar for the correction of military records. It will only take a few moments to dispose of them. There are different Senators interested in those bills, and I ask that they may be considered now, subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

EDWARD T. LEWIS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2871) to correct the military record of Edward T. Lewis.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 3, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and directed;" and in line 8, after the word "discharge," to insert "Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to remove the charge of desertion now appearing on the records on file in his office against Edward T. Lewis, late a private of Company K, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall accrue by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEVI L. REED.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10095) for the relief of Levi L. Reed.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Cavalry," to insert "as of date July 31, 1865;" so as to makethe bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue an honorable discharge to Levi L. Reed, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment United States Cavalry, as of date July 31, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES F. DEISCH.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4907) to correct the military record of Charles F. Deisch.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "States," to insert "as of date April 4, 1864," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of Charles F. Deisch, late a private in Company G, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to said Charles F. Deisch an honorable discharge from the service of the United States as of date April 4, 1864.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH T. VINCENT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2205) to correct the military record of Joseph T. Vincent.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That Joseph T. Vincent, late first lieutenant and quartermaster, Fifty-ninth Regiment United States Colored Infantry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said regiment on the 25th day of January, 1864, and shall be entitled to all the rights and benefits that are now or may hereafter be provided by law for honorably discharged officers: Provided, That the said Vincent shall not be entitled to any pay or allowances to which he was not entitled prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMEON PERRY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6570) to correct the military record of Simeon Perry.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of Simeon Perry, late a private in Company H, Thirty-sixth Regiment Missouri Infantry Volunteers, which afterwards became Company A, Thirty-second Regiment Missouri Infantry Volunteers, by removing the charge of desertion and substituting therefor "Absented himself without proper authority and so remained from December 20, 1862, to May 58, 1863, when he enlisted in Company G, Eleventh Regiment Missouri Cavalry Volunteers, served faithfully, and was honorably discharged July 2, 1865," but no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES W. HOWARD.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6960) for the relief of Charles W. Howard.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs that Charles W. Howard shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged, upon tender of his resignation on account of disability, from the military service of the United States as a second lieutenant of the Second Regiment Missouri Artillery Volunteers, on the 10th day of December, 1863, and authorizes the Secretary of War to issue for Howard a certificate of honorable discharge in accordance with the terms of this act; but no pay or allowance shall become due or payable to any person by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUILDING FOR BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7263) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon, to be used for a laundry and stable for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and to provide for the erection of an addition to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing building on the ground now occupied by the laundry building and stable, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he will not allow the unfinished business to be temporarily laid aside until the consideration of the pending public building bill is completed.

Mr. QUAY. Very well, if there will be no discussion upon it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. There will be none, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside until the completion of this bill.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. MASON. I think the substance of this bill was called to my attention a year or two ago. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if in these condemnation proceedings there is no limit fixed to the amount that is to be paid.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. For the property that is to be acquired?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is estimated by the Department that it will cost $15,000. It is comparatively cheap property.

Mr. HOAR. We can not fix a limit to condemnation.

Mr. MASON. I understand, but——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Department estimates that the land can be acquired by condemnation for about $15,000. No limit is fixed.

Mr. MASON. As I remember, there is a laundry and a large lot of machinery that will probably be destroyed. Is there provision made for condemning that?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The stable and laundry are upon the property of the Government at the present time, and they must be moved in order to make room for the large addition that is to be built. It will be necessary to condemn land elsewhere for the purpose of erecting a new laundry and stable thereon.

Mr. MASON. This has no reference to the Government Printing Office?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It is entirely different from the Government Printing Office. It has no reference to it.

Mr. MASON. I understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLERKS OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave of the Senator from New Jersey to allow me to put two bills on their passage, which will lead to no debate.

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14047) for the relief of the clerks of circuit and district courts of the United States. It is a bill reported this morning.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to reopen and restate the emolument accounts of the clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the years 1891 to 1900, inclusive, where a balance against said clerks has been created contrary to the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury dated July 29, 1901, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States cited therein, and to settle the same in accordance with said decisions; and upon satisfactory proof, which shall be made under oath, of any balance due any of said clerks, to certify and pay such balance to them out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. QUAY. I will make no objection to these or to several other bills which I understand are to be presented with the understanding that they elicit no discussion. I am very desirous to listen to the speech of the Senator from New Jersey, and he is exceedingly anxious to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will state that if it was not for the same wish which I entertain in common with the Senator from Pennsylvania to hear the continuation of the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey, I should myself object to these bills. But I shall not do so for the same reason.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEBBEUS H. ROGERS AND OTHERS.

Mr. HOAR. I also ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12064) for the relief of Lebbeus H. Rogers and the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes Lebbeus H. Rogers and the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to pay into the Treasury of the United States $12,000, being the principal sum named in the official bond of Henry W. Howgate upon which William B. Moses, deceased, and Rogers were sureties, and such payment, together with court costs in the suits against them, shall be received in full satisfaction and discharge of all obligations whatsoever of said parties to the United States thereunder, and in full satisfaction and discharge of all judgments entered against said Rogers or said administrators in favor of the United States upon the said bond, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, upon receiving such payment, to satisfy said judgments; and each of them, of record. But nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting in any manner the liability of said Howgate or his legal representatives to the United States on said bond or otherwise.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR GUAM.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of two short bills, one to establish a civil government for Guam and the other for Tutuila. They are exactly alike. I ask the Senate first to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 6599) to provide a government for the island of Guam, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think that Senators should have an opportunity to examine the bill. It is a very important matter as to the governmant of a distant people not represented on this floor. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object at all to the bill going over, if the Senator from Massachusetts desires that it shall, for it is an important bill in a certain sense; that is to say, it is a bill which provides a civil government for the island of Guam, and it fixes tariff duties which shall be imposed on articles going into that island, so as to raise revenue for the island.

Mr. HOAR. Does it also deal with the matter of extradition?

Mr. FORAKER. It does. I added a provision to the bill in relation to that as an amendment which I was about to offer.

Mr. HOAR. Of course, whatever opinion the Senator from Ohio or his committee may have in regard to the rightfulness of our government of foreign dependencies, I am sure that they would deal with a question like this in the most wise and humane fashion; I make no question about that at all; but I think the bill is important enough, if the Senator from Ohio does not object, to go over for to-day.

Mr. FORAKER. I have no objection to that. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that a similar bill has been reported as to the government of the island of Tutuila. There are two of these bills—one for Guam and one for Tutuila. They are exactly alike, except that the amendment as to extradition has been already printed as to only one of them. I intended to offer it as to the other when the bill was considered.

Mr. HOAR. If unanimous consent may be given that the Senator from Ohio may now offer his amendment, so that it will be printed, then let the bill go over.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment is printed in this bill, and I will ask that it may now be read for the information of the Senate. It will take only a moment to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, when that amendment has been read, I shall ask for the regular order.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following as new sections:

SEC. 4. That the provisions of section 1014 of the Revised Statutes, so far as applicable, shall apply throughout the United States for the arrest and removal therefrom to said island of any fugitive from justice charged with the commission of any crime or offense against the United States within said island, and shall apply within said island for the arrest and removal therefrom to the United States of any fugitive from justice charged with the commission of any crime or offense against the United States. Such fugitive may, by any judge or magistrate of said island, and agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders therein, be arrested and imprisoned, or bailed, as the case may be, pending the issuance of a warrant for his removal to the United States, which warrant it shall be the duty of a judge of the court of first instance seasonably to issue and of the officer or agent of the United States designated for the purpose to execute. Such officer or agent, when engaged in executing such warrant without said island, shall have all the powers of a marshal of the United States so far as such powers are requisite for the prisoner's safe-keeping and the execution of the warrant.

SEC. 5. That the provisions of sections 5278 and 5279 of the Revised Statutes, so far as applicable, shall apply to said island, which, for the purposes of said sections, shall be deemed a Territory within the meaning thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. QUAY. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. To what do the sections of the Revised Statutes mentioned in the amendment refer?

Mr. FORAKER. Those are the statutes in regard to extradition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill, and it goes over.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts simply wishes the bill to go over to afford an opportunity to examine it, and I do not object to that.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 5th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1672) for the relief of Elisha A. Goodwin, executor of the estate of Alexander W. Goodwin;

An act (S. 5891) to authorize the President to appoint Brig. Gen. H. C. Merriam to the grade of major-general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list;

An act (S. 5724) for the relief of Paymaster James E. Tolfree, United States Navy;

An act (S. 6034) raising the rank of Chief Engineer David Smith on the retired list of the Navy;

An act (S. 3317) authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Robert Platt, United States Navy, to the rank of commander; and

An act (S. 5329) authorizing the President to appoint Lieut. Commander William P. Randall, retired, United States Navy, a commander on the retired list.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 6th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 111) for the relief of William J. Smith and D. M. Wisdom;

An act (S. 1206) for the relief of Frank J. Burrows;

An act (S. 1928) for the relief of G. H. Sowder:

An act (S. 3555) for the relief of William Dugdale;

An act (S. 903) for the relief of William D. Rutan;

An act (S. 3401) for the relief of H. Glafcke;

An act (S. 342) for the relief of the heirs of Aaron Van Camp and Virginius P. Chapin; and

An act (S. 3748) for the relief of M. L. Cobb, administrator of W. W. Cobb, deceased.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. KEAN resumed the speech begun by him on the 4th instant. After having spoken for about one hour,

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

PROPELLER TOW BOAT COMPANY.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 11127) for the relief of the Propeller Tow Boat Company, of Savannah, be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the bill he has named. It will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to the Propeller Tow Boat Company, of Savannah, $2,929.45, for the damage done the steam tugboat Cynthia, belonging to the said company, by the transport ship Chester, belonging to the United States, in the Savannah River on the 30th day of November, 1898, for which the United States is liable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES F. WOODFORD.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from New Jersey to yield to me for a moment to call up a very short bill of the class which was passed this morning.

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8663) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Woodford and grant him an honorable discharge.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, after the word "discharge," at the end of line 7, to insert "as of date May 1, 1862;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to amend the military record of Charles F. Woodford, late a private of Company I, One hundred and first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, so as to remove the charge of desertion and grant him an honorable discharge as of date May 1, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC FOREST RESERVES.

Mr. DEPEW. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7123) for the protection of the public forest reserves and national parks of the United States.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. HOAR. What is the object of the measure, may I inquire from the Senator from New York?

Mr. DEPEW. At present in the national parks the game wardens have no power to make arrests.

Mr. HOAR. It relates only to national parks?

Mr. DEPEW. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all persons employed in the forest reserve and national park service of the United States shall have authority to make arrests for the violation of the laws and regulations relating to the forest reserves and national parks, and any person so arrested shall be taken before the nearest United States commissioner, within whose jurisdiction the reservation or national park is located, for trial; and upon sworn information by any competent person any United States commissioner in the proper jurisdiction shall issue process for the arrest of any person charged with the violation of said laws and regulations; but nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing the arrest by any officer of the United States without process of any person taken in the act of violating said laws and regulations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. KEAN resumed his speech. After having spoken, with interruptions, for half an hour, he said:

Mr. President, I have now concluded my discussion in regard to Mormonism and polygamy. I have some further remarks to submit upon the question of the agriculture of Arizona and New Mexico, but I should much prefer not to finish this evening if there is any other Senator who desires to take the floor. In about half an hour on Monday I think I shall be able to conclude.

[Mr. KEAN's speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] has referred to what I said about polygamy in Mexico. I did not say, and do not now say, that there is not polygamy in Mexico, but I say that I do not believe there is any polygamy there, notwithstanding what has been read by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. I base that opinion upon the fact that the Mormons are not in a sparsely settled section of country, away from the Mexican settlements, but in the heart of one of the old States, one of the settled States of that country, where probably 95 per cent of the people are Catholics. Those that are not Catholics, with the exception of those in that Mormon settlement, are American Protestants. There is quite a large American population in Chihuahua composed of mining men and men of that character. While there ten years ago this last fall I had every opportunity to learn something about this Mormon settlement. They were supplying the town of Chihuahua, a rather flourishing town, composed almost entirely of Mexicans, with vegetables, butter, etc. There was then a good deal of discussion about the Mormon settlement among the American population. I do not believe it is possible for anybody to practice polygamy in a country that is Catholic. If the plain people did not interfere, I am sure the Catholic priesthood would.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator pardon me for a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. Does not the Senator know that the colony at Chihuahua of Mormons and polygamists is fostered by the Mexican Government?

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe that the Mexican Government fosters polygamy. The Mormons were encouraged, of course, to come in there by the Mexican Government——

Mr. KEAN. What were they when they were encouraged to come in there?

Mr. TELLER. And while there they were obeying the laws of Mexico.

Mr. KEAN. There is no law in Mexico against polygamy.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator says there is no law in Mexico against polygamy. Mr. President, there is no law in Colorado against polygamy, and yet if a man should take a second wife whilst his first wife was living we have got a law on bigamy that would put him in the penitentiary for it. They have the same law in Mexico and they have the same law in every other civilized country, so far as I know.

Mr. KEAN. Yes, Mr. President, we had such a law in the United States for a great many years, but it never was enforced in Utah, was it?

Mr. TELLER. We know there was a condition in Utah very different from that existing anywhere else.

Mr. KEAN. And so there is a different condition now in Mexico, as there is wherever there are Mormons.

Mr. TELLER. That is what the Senator is asserting; that is what he is attempting to prove. I said I did not believe it, and I want to repeat that the Senator has not produced anything that is evidence of it to me, although he has produced a statement to that effect, not his own, but sombody's else, and the reason I was trying to give why I did not believe it was that I knew the Mexican people have not tolerated and would not tolerate polygamy in their midst if they knew it. If polygamy is now being practiced there, it is being practiced secretly and not openly. The Senator is asserting that it is practiced openly. If the Senator means to say now that the Government of Mexico has invited those people there and has consented that they shall practice polygamy, he ought to produce some proof of it.

I do not think that this question of polygamy has the slightest thing to do with this discussion, and I want to say, without any offense, I hope, to anybody, that it is dragged in here simply that this debate may be prolonged. That is all there is about it. But I think it would be quite as creditable if Senators would take up and discuss some other phase of opposition which might have some foundation, for this absolutely has none.

Mr. KEAN. That may be the opinion of the Senator from Colorado, but it is not the opinion of everyone else.

Mr. TELLER. I would be willing to abide by the opinion of almost anybody whether the introduction and discussion of this question has not been for the purpose of delay.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I intend to take but a few moments, but I submit to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that what he has just said is a criticism which, on its face, is hardly a just one.

The proposition pending before the Senate for the admission of these Territories is not a trifling one; it is about as important a measure as the Senate was ever called to pass judgment upon.

Mr. TELLER. I agree to that.

Mr. SPOONER. We may make a mistake if we do not admit these Territories at this session of Congress; but if the Senate makes such a mistake as that, it is one which the next session of Congress can correct. Every Senator who stops to think about it realizes that these Territories once admitted into the Union are admitted into the Union forever; and if we make a mistake in that direction it is absolutely irrevocable.

What can be more important in considering the question whether a Territory shall be admitted into the Union as a State, to be represented by a Representative in the other House and represented in the Senate by two Senators, although with less than a population, confessedly, entitling them to a Representative in the House, than for the Senate with the utmost care to consider, as far as the evidence affords information for analysis, the character of the population, small as it is. It is proper for the Senate to consider and give great weight to the question of the illiteracy of the population of a Territory seeking admission into the Union as a State.

It is vitally important to inquire into and to consider the precise question which attracted the attention of the Senate yesterday, and is attracting the attention of the Senate briefly this afternoon—the number of the Mormon population in the Territory; the tenets of the Mormon Church as they exist to-day, whether they violate the laws of the United States or not; whether they shock, by any practices approved by the church, the sense of common decency of civilized mankind; what, in the light of the observations which were made here yesterday, is their obligation to the church. I know not what the fact may be, but no Senator can excuse himself for not stopping long enough to ascertain if it be possible whether the 7,000 Mormons—a large percentage, too, relatively, of the population in New Mexico and Arizona—owe an allegiance——

Mr. TELLER. I beg the Senator's pardon. There are not 7,000 Mormons in New Mexico.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There are in Arizona.

Mr. SPOONER. In Arizona.

Mr. TELLER. There are not to exceed 500 in New Mexico.

Mr. SPOONER. There are 7,000 in Arizona, and they are rapidly increasing, I am informed. It is important to inquire whether they owe an obligation to the church which is inconsistent with unreserved allegiance to the Government. The Senator may think it is a trifling matter and intended only for delay, but with me it is not that; and when we are told here on this floor that the church in a State already admitted controls the State, leading one easily to the conclusion, I think, that that Territory, under the circumstances, was not ripe for admission, although she has contributed able Senators to this body—men of ability and eloquence—but when we are told that one can not become a candidate for the United States Senate if he be an apostle of the church or hold a high office in the church, even if he be the choice of the people of the State and desires to enter the public service, without first obtaining the consent of the hierarchy, it is legitimate to inquire at the threshold of this proceeding how far that domination is to bind the population in a Territory which seeks admission into the Union.

I do not care at this time to enter into a general discussion of this measure. I shall, I trust, have something to say about it before this bill reaches a vote. I never have uttered anything in this Senate in the twelve years I have had the honor to be a member of it for the purpose of obstruction, and I shall not do so now; but I for one feel that the information which has been brought before the Senate to-day, and the information which, in a frank and clear way, was given to the Senate day before yesterday afternoon, is not only information of importance in arriving at a proper conclusion on this subject, but information which ought to challenge the careful thought of members of this body. I shall refer to it hereafter, but I should hate to have my friend from Colorado, who is generally tolerant and charitable to his associates here, attribute to me in what I may hereafter say about that phase of this subject, a disposition to filibuster.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I believe I am quite as capable of appreciating the importance of the question whether these Territories ought to be admitted as States as anybody else. I have not in the slightest degree minimized the importance of it. I did remark—and perhaps it was not entirely justifiable, for I doubt whether anyone has really any right in this body to reflect upon the motives of a Senator—that it seemed to me the debate had drifted on to a feature of it as to which nobody ought to have any particular fear, and as to which I do not have any myself.

Of course if I believed that the system of polygamy was tolerated by the Mormon Church, I should have a different feeling about it. I do not believe that there is any probability that the few thousand Mormons down in Arizona will dominate that State politically, religiously, economically, or in any other way, or that they will adopt any system of plural marriages or anything of that kind that would be offensive to the morals of this country. I will not say that Senators who say they are alarmed about it are not alarmed, because I have no right to say it, but it does not frighten me, Mr. President.

Mr. President, the question of the admission of a State is important. The good faith of this country was pledged fifty-odd years ago to admit the people of New Mexico and Arizona into this Union. It is true, it may be presumed that we reserved to ourselves the right to do it when our judgment said they should come in, but we expected to take these people in. We never indicated to the Mexican Government, when we took that cession, that we were to wait until they were Americanized or until the majority of the population had become Americans. We said to them, "Your people shall be treated as our people. When there are enough of them we will admit them into the Union as we admit our people." Will the Senator deny that that was the spirit?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir; I deny it——

Mr. TELLER. Wait a minute. That is not in the treaty, but will the Senator deny that that was the spirit of the treaty? What are we to do? "We take this cession. We take you in as part of ourselves. We are going to make a State of you." There were no Americans there then at all.

Mr. SPOONER. The treaty differed from the Louisiana treaty and other treaties.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And every treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. And every treaty, in that it provided that they should be admitted into the Union at the proper time, to be judged of by Congress.

Mr. TELLER. Exactly.

Mr. SPOONER. That probably would be implied; it ought to be implied, anyway. We have admitted several States out of the territory that was acquired under the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's own State.

Mr. TELLER. In part.

Mr. SPOONER. In part; Utah, Nevada, California. But, Mr. President, for myself I find no obligation in that treaty, and I certainly would not seek to imply one which binds my conscience to admit New Mexico into the Union as a State, with a population less than that of the unit of representation, especially if the elements which compose that population are not such, in my judgment, considering the general interest, as to entitle them to admission. It has been a great many years since that treaty was made; it has been a long time since it became a Territory, and I do not myself take very kindly to the claim of that portion of the people there who are Mexicans to come into the Union.

If they do not care enough about our institutions to learn the language of the country, if the business of the courts must be carried on through an interpreter, if an interpreter must sometimes go into the jury room in order that Americans and Mexicans may, by the use of interpretation, get at what the judge charged the jury or what the witnesses testified, or to explain the views of one set of jurors to another, I do not know how it may seem to the Senator, but it does not seem to me a good foundation for this everlasting status of statehood, with all the power and responsibility which it involves.

But I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not mean to take his time.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I was saying I thought there was an obligation on us to admit these people as Spaniards and not as Americans. The Senator now intensifies the claim that these people are not to be admitted until they become Americans in the sense that they understand our language. There was nothing of that kind said, and it was not so understood. We admitted California with a large Spanish population, and we admitted the people to all the rights of citizenship.

I want now to say a word or two about those people for fear I may not have another chance, for I do not intend to assist what seems to me an unnecessary debate. On the last day before we adjourned, if I had had an opportunity, I would have made some remarks on the bill. But I am not going to do it now. I wish to say that the report of this committee and the speeches made on this floor have been slanderous and libelous as to that people whom you call the American-Mexican population. They are infinitely better than the people you are admitting from Europe to-day. You admitted more than 100,000 people from Europe last year who can not hold any relation, as a good citizen, to these people. Of the 500,000 people who came from Europe last year I will venture to say not 10 per cent of them are as good citizens as the people of New Mexico are.

I knew these people when there were 25,000 of them in Colorado, and when there were not 25,000 Americans in Colorado. I knew them in the war. I knew them when they had not forgotten the fact that they were a conquered people. I know that nowhere on this continent were men more anxious to preserve the integrity of the Union than the Spanish population of New Mexico and Colorado. They put into the field, in proportion to their population, more men than many of the States which are boasting of their devotion to American institutions. They fought our battles; they kept back the forces from the Confederate States that were invading and attempting to cut off communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans.

Nobody ever appealed to them in a good cause that they did not respond; and if you had an election, you need only to say to those Mexican people, "The Government of the United States thinks it will promote its interest if you do this or that," and they are ready to do it. They are not at any time against the Government in any sense of the term. The tendency of the Mexican people is to be with the Government of the United States, and for the time being they consider very largely the Administration in power as the Government itself.

Mr. President, they have not learned the English language as some people might have done. They were a people having no opportunities of education in the days of Spanish or Mexican domination. We never did a thing for them. With all our boasts of what we have done in the United States for education, what did the General Government do for that dependency there? Those people maintained their language. Did you ever know a race that was worthy the consideration of mankind that did not have an attachment to the tongue which they had in their youth? The very fact that they have adhered to the Spanish tongue shows to me that they are a people who can be attached to principles and to government.

Mr. SPOONER. If my friend will permit me, I did not criticise the Mexicans for being attached to the Spanish tongue.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator said substantially, as I understood him, that if they did not learn the English tongue so that they could discharge the duties of citizenship in that language, he did not care whether they became entitled to full citizenship or not. That is what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. TELLER. If I misunderstood him, he can correct me.

Mr. SPOONER. I never criticised any man, Mexican or Spaniard, or otherwise, for being attached to his native tongue or for being attached to his native land. The United States is filled with men who came from other lands and who learned in their youth a language different from our language. They have made patriotic citizens of the United States. My State is full of them—Germans, Scandinavians, and others. They love the land whence they came, and they love the language of their childhood—the language their parents taught them. But their love of that has not at all deterred them from or delayed them in acquiring the language of the country which they have adopted and of the people among whom they have cast their lot and intend to live; and this inability or indisposition during such a great number of years on the part of the Mexicans to learn the English language has been to me good ground for hesitation in this matter.

Mr. TELLER. Of complaint?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say complaint. It has been to me some ground for hesitation about admitting them to the Union at this time. They have inaugurated there now, it is said, a fairly good system of education. It is to be hoped they will acquire the English language. I hope certainly they will.

Mr. TELLER. They will.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope they will, so that that anomalous thing, which I never heard of until this debate came on, the occasion for an interpreter to go into the jury room in civil and in criminal cases in order to enable the members of the jury to confer with each other, will be unnecessary.

Mr. TELLER. Then the complaint of the Senator is not that——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not complain.

Mr. TELLER. Well, the criticism. The criticism of the Senator from Wisconsin is not, then, that they keep up the Spanish tongue, but that they do not learn ours.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; that is in part it.

Mr. TELLER. Let me explain. Here was a population composed entirely of Spanish-speaking people. I will venture to say that when we took New Mexico there were not 10 Americans in all New Mexico. When I went to Colorado there was a population of 25,000 Mexicans, and I do not think there were 10 American-speaking people in that community. They were poor people. They were on the very inside of the continent. They were agriculturists. They were not miners to any considerable extent. They were cattle growers, sheep growers, and agriculturists in the ordinary sense of the term. They had not the means either of securing teachers in their midst or of sending their children away where they could be educated. The whole community spoke the language.

It is a written language. It is an old language. It is a beautiful language. Any man who can speak it and speak it well can express every sentiment and every thought of which he is capable as beautifully as in any other known language. It is copious; it is soft; and whether it be the forcible declarations of their statesmen or the sweet tones of the lover, it is equal to any other language in the world. And why should they abandon it?

Mr. SPOONER. Nobody has asked them to abandon it.

Mr. TELLER. No; but the Senator said they must learn the English tongue. They are doing it now. They have been doing it ever since we gave them an opportunity, by changing our laws concerning the school lands, by which they might get some benefit from the school lands and get public schools. They are doing it as well as anybody can do it. But now they are to be made to wait.

Mr. President, these people are fit for citizenship and are citizens. They are fit for self-government, if any people anywhere are fit for it, and if it is republican doctrine—I do not speak of it in a political sense, but in the broad sense that we are a Republic—if it is republican doctrine that the people are to govern themselves, then these people are entitled by their numbers and by their ability and by every test that has ever been applied heretofore to govern themselves.

There are Senators sitting upon this floor from communities with less population than these Territories have, with less territory, and with no greater claim than these people can make; and yet you deprive these people of the right to vote, the right to become citizens of a State, and you hold out to them no kind of promise that at any time will they ever be anything more than dependents under a Territorial organization.

Mr. President, I lived fifteen years in a Territory. I know some of the disadvantages of Territorial life. I know the debasing influences on a man living where he does not govern himself. If you want to make citizens and men of these people you should give them their rights. Men who govern themselves grow in manhood and all the essentials and virtues of manhood, and men whom you deprive of those rights depreciate in those high qualities.

Does anybody doubt that they will maintain a good government in New Mexico? Does anybody doubt that they will maintain peace and order? Does anybody doubt for a moment that there will not be as much observance of law there as there is in Wisconsin or Colorado or anywhere else?

Mr. President, let us be fair. These people belong to a section of the country of which it is complained that it is likely to dominate and control. I am not speaking of the Mormons. We are told that the West is getting to have too much influence and to be too dominating, and that you can not admit a State like New Mexico, with 200,000 people, with representation equal to that of New York. I will venture to say that a fair census would make it three hundred and fifty or four hundred thousand.

I do not believe they have had a census which covers half the population. Take my own State, and I will venture to say that a correct census will put a hundred thousand more people on the list than we were credited with. But we are told that the 200,000 people in New Mexico are to offset in representation the State of New York. There are six New England States with less population than the States of New York or Pennsylvania, and they have 12 representatives on this floor.

Are you now, after a hundred years of America's existence, to apply to the people in the West rules that you did not apply in the East? Because a man has gone west of the Mississippi River, has he lost any of his American rights? Is he not just as much an American as if he were in New England? The State which I in part represent is filled with men from New England and New York, and they feel as I feel that we have laid down none of the rights, nor escaped any obligation, that you have, and that we are entitled to all of the consideration that you are.

After this long period of Territorial existence, when the population has reached a point which has justified you in taking in other States, you can not satisfy the American people by saying that you keep these Territories out because they have not a sufficient population. You are keeping them out because you are afraid of their influence. Shall it be maintained that New York is entitled to representation on this floor in proportion to its population? That is not the theory of this Government, and it is not the theory upon which it was established, and if it had been applied when the Government was organized, the union of this Government would never have existed.

You were compelled to give to Delaware, Rhode Island, Vermont, and New Hampshire the same representation in this Chamber that you gave to New York and Pennsylvania, and unless you are prepared to abandon the theory of equality of the States, which has made this country great, and the preservation of which is essential to its greatness and its future glory, you must base your objections on something besides the lack of population, when the Territory has enough to have at least one vote in the House of Representatives, and that is all it will be entitled to under the law.

Mr. President, I did not mean to say a word about this matter. I have said all I have said perhaps in a very crude way, but whatever the Senator may say for himself—and I am not going to impugn his motives nor his object—I can only say I, here, trying to do my duty as an American citizen, feel under an obligation, a constitutional obligation, a moral obligation, to give this people the right of statehood and full American citizenship, for I know what it will do for a struggling community in the West.

I know that when Colorado became a State, with a population not as large as that of New Mexico, every man in the State stood higher in his own estimation, and what was more important, or equally important, higher in the estimation of the rest of the country, than he did under Territorial existence. He had become a full-fledged American. He could participate in every act pertaining to the General Government as well as any citizen of any other section of the county, a privilege which has been denied to him and which you are denying now to a population equally entitled to it, equally capable of discharging the duties of citizenship with anybody in Wisconsin or New York or Massachusetts, or anywhere else.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the discussion. I came accidentally into the debate this afternoon.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has spoken with a great deal of feeling and undoubtedly with absolute sincerity. I congratulate the country on his speech, not so much for what he has said, but for the fact that he has spoken. This bill has been pending here a long time, and I believe the Senator is the first of the solid phalanx which has been behind it, as is asserted, on the other side of the Chamber, to break silence, and to advocate the passage of this bill.

Mr. TELLER. May I ask the Senator if he thinks the advocates of statehood are afraid to debate this question?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, I do not say they are afraid to debate it, but I say they have not debated it. They have sat here for weeks in silence.

Mr. TELLER. I will ask the indulgence that I gave the Senator to let me say a word in his speech.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. We have not debated this subject because we wanted to get a vote.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, I understand.

Mr. TELLER. Because we believe we know enough about it, and we believe that nothing we could say would change the minority in this Chamber, as I believe it is, and induce it to give us a vote.

I have on my table at home the resolutions of convention after convention, national Democratic and Republican. I have the speeches of Senators in this body who are going to vote in the negative here, advocating the admission of these very Territories into the Union as States, and if I should come here and read them and take two hours, it would not, in my judgment, make any difference in the vote, and I do not propose to be drawn into assisting in the delay that seems to me has been preconcerted and prearranged and studiously followed ever since I have been here for a week past.

Mr. McCOMAS. Before asking a question of the Senator from Colorado, I wish to make a statement. I do not impute to the Senator from Colorado any part in this debate except the good of the country and to express his sense of duty in respect to the proposition before the Senate. I assume the same motive applies to every Senator who discusses this proposition.

The Senator from Wisconsin was very much impressed that the Senator from Colorado had spoken. I am in doubt about one feature since the Senator has spoken. Why was he silent as to the absence in the bill for Arizona and New Mexico, and especially as to Arizona, of any restrictions upon bigamy or polygamy? The Senator, I know, desires to guard against such crimes. The Senator, I know, does not justify the violation of morals and the peace in the name even of religion; and while he well appreciates the sturdy qualities of Mormons as citizens, I know he wants to take no risks in that matter.

I should like now to ask the Senator whether he does not think that in respect of New Mexico and Arizona, or at least of Arizona, the time would be well spent in amending the bill by putting in a very strong provision on that subject, or is the Senator satisfied with the single empty line that now is found in the bill?

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. I will answer the Senator. If these people whom we propose to admit into the Union are capable of self-government, that is a question which they are capable of disposing of for themselves. You admit that there are in Arizona at least four men who dissent from the doctrine of polygamy to one who does not, if you insist that every Mormon is in favor of it, and that you will not pretend.

Now, I am one of those who believe that the States have something to do with maintaining government, and I believe that these people should come into the Union just as Wyoming came in. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will bear me out in the statement that they did not have any such provision in the Wyoming constitution. You did not exact anything of that kind from us when we came into the Union. You did not exact it of the various other States that have come into the Union. And now you propose to apply it to these Territories, and you can only excuse yourself upon the theory that when these States shall be admitted the people are incapable of handling that question.

I will trust the people of New Mexico, where there are not, in my judgment, Mormons enough to make any possible difference in the election one way or the other; and if they were all polygamists, they could make no considerable impression on that population. There are there a class of people who have observed the marriage relation in its purity and in its best sense, who have not yet got into the wild way of free and easy divorces, and who believe that the marriage relation once established shall be maintained—one wife and only one wife.

I will venture to say that if there is any attempt to establish polygamy in New Mexico, the New Mexican people will handle it. You do not need to put any bonds on them. The people of Arizona will handle it. You do not need to put any bonds on them. The people of Arizona are largely Americans. There is a population there that is more American in proportion than in New Mexico, and they are as capable and as able to take care of themselves as any other population on the American continent. I do not think there is any necessity of putting any provision against polygamy in these constitutions or any constitutions.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCOMAS. I have not yielded the floor. I will yield for a question.

Mr. LODGE. No; I wish to make a motion to go into executive session.

Mr. McCOMAS. Only a moment, Mr. President.

Then I understand the Senator thinks it is unnecessary to put in even the mild provision already upon the bill?

Mr. TELLER. There need not be any mistake about that; I do.

Mr. McCOMAS. And it seems to be of little weight that, having lived for more than a half century under our institutions, nearly all the population having been born under the American flag, they have not learned our language in addition to their own language, which the Senator assures me is so facile and resourceful in talking serious matters, and love also. I have no doubt that is true. I never tried Spanish. The Mormon creed was established by those who speak English and it is a propaganda by missionaries who speak English. The population of Arizona in a half century, born and raised under this English-speaking Government, have not learned the language of that Government. It is unnecessary to defend or to exclaim the tendency of all men to love the mother tongue, because that is innate; it can not be helped. But the enterprise of citizenship has made the mass of those who have come to us from other fatherlands learn our tongue that they may know our institutions and laws.

These people, who are nearly all speaking Spanish, may not be able to compete with the propaganda of bigamy and polygamy of those Mormons in Mexico, who are so steadily increasing, and are not so small a proportion of the population as the Senator now thinks. A larger and relatively becoming larger and larger portion of that population are the Mormons of Arizona.

It does seem to me that if the mass of those people have not framed an English law to restrict that which under the name of religion is a crime and a sin against public morals, we are short of our duty, we are recreant to our trust, when we take a Territory of the United States and fashion it into statehood, if we fail to engraft upon the organic act that which in plain English prevents these people from being overrun on the north with the Utah settlement of Mormonism, with additions in Idaho and Wyoming, and even in Colorado, and on the south the increasing settlement of Mormons in Mexico, and, between the two, Arizona.

I say, Mr. President, in this matter we can not spend time better, if we are to make States out of such Territory now, first of all to do that which in Spanish they can not enact, but which in English it is our duty to make plain in the organic act when it is passed.

Mr. TELLER. Why can they not enact it in Spanish?

Mr. McCOMAS. Does not the Senator think that the organic law of a State in the American Union will sound better in the tongue of our statutes?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; and they will make their statutes in English, too.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. McCOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 9, 1903, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 7, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. ALEXANDER McDOWELL, who read the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1903.

I hereby designate Hon. JOHN F. LACEY, of Iowa, as Speaker pro tempore for this day.

D. B. HENDERSON, Speaker.

Prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SALARY OF JUDGES OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States courts, to be printed under the rule.

The following is the conference report and statement:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 3287, "An act to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In place of "six" insert "seven;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 10.

JOHN J. JENKINS,
D. H. SMITH,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
GEORGE TURNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

To accompany conference report on S. 3287, "An act to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States."

The Senate conferees agree to all of the amendments of the House with the exception of those relating to the salaries of the chief and associate justices of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.

The bill as it passed the Senate gave the chief justice of this court $8,000 and the associate justices $7,500. The House amended the bill by giving the chief justice $6,500 and his associates $6,000.

The report of the conferees gives the chief justice $7,500 and his associates $7,000 a year.

The bill in all other particulars is as it passed the House.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back from that committee the Senate amendments to House bill 16567, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904. The committee, by unanimous vote, have directed me to ask unanimous consent that the House disagree with all the amendments of the Senate and ask for a free conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, reports that that committee has directed him to report back the bill with Senate amendments and ask that the House disagree with all the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, when the bill was up the other day some objections were made, but I now understand the chairman of the committee to say that the committee has met this morning, and that the minority members agree that the bill shall be put in conference; that the House shall nonconcur in all of the Senate amendments and the bill go to conference.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is there an amendment to this bill increasing the pay and rank of retired officers?

Mr. HULL. There is; and the staff bill also contains that provision. It is on the two bills.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is there any probability that the House will have an opportunity to vote on that amendment?

Mr. HULL. The House will undoubtedly have an opportunity to vote on the amendment. It is the same provision that is in the staff bill, which is already in conference. It is also a part of the Army appropriation bill; but as to saying what action the committee will take, I can not say, nor can any other member say what action the committee will take.

Mr. BARTLETT. Perhaps I did not make myself plain. I intended to ask whether or not the House would have an opportunity to vote upon the amendment without voting up or down the entire conference report.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as I said, it is impossible for any one member of the conference committee to pledge what it is going to do, but the report will go into the RECORD and be printed, and the chances are that there will be no agreement. The Senate may recede or the conferees may report amendments. The House always has it in its power to pass on the question, but the sooner it goes into conference the more time the House will have to consider these questions.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course, we understand the regular routine way of passing conference reports and the power that the majority has over amendments. But frequently in the House the statement has been made that the House would not be deprived from voting upon a particular amendment of the Senate. I ask the gentleman if there is any probability that we may have the conference report come in and vote on that particular amendment?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Georgia realizes that this same provision is on a bill already in conference.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the House, however, that as far as I am concerned, if I shall be a member of the conferees on the part of the House, so far as I can I want to carry out the instructions of the Committee on Military Affairs in its action on these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

By unanimous consent, the Speaker pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HULL, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. HAY.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following changes of reference were made:

The bill (S. 5993) granting an increase of pension to James G. Davis—from the Committee on Pensions to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

An act (S. 1631) granting an increase of pension to Edna K. Hoyt—from the Committee on Pensions to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

TRUSTS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In pursuance of the special order, the House now resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17. Under the rule adopted, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the substitute.

The first section of the committee substitute was read, as follows:

That every corporation which may be hereafter organized shall, at the time of engaging in interstate or foreign commerce, file the return hereinafter provided for, and every corporation, whenever organized, and engaged in interstate and foreign commerce shall file a return with the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending December 31, whenever, and at such time, as requested by said Commission, stating its name, date of organization, where and when organized, giving statutes under which it is organized, and all amendments thereof; if consolidated, naming constituent companies and where and when organized, with the same information as to such constituent companies, so far as applicable, as is herein required of such corporation; if reorganized, name of original corporation or corporations, with full reference to laws under which all the reorganizations have taken place, with the same information as to all prior companies in the chain of reorganization, so far as applicable, as is herein required of such corporation; amount of bonds issued and outstanding; amount of authorized capital stock, shares into which it is divided, par value, whether common or preferred, and distinction between each; amount issued and outstanding; amount paid in; how much, if any, paid in cash, and how much, if any, in property; if any part in property, describing in detail the kind, character, and location, with its cash market value at the time it was received in payment, giving the elements upon which said market value is based, and especially whether in whole or in part upon the capitalization of earnings, earning capacity, or economies, with the date and the cash price paid therefor at its last sale; the name and address of each officer, managing agent, and director; a true and correct copy of its articles of incorporation; a full, true, and correct copy of any and all rules, regulations, and by-laws adopted for the management and control of its business and the direction of its officers, managing agents, and directors. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as relieving any corporation from making, in addition to the foregoing, such returns as are now required by the "Act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all amendments thereof; but the provisions of this act, as to signing and making oath to returns and making answers on oath to written inquiries, shall be applicable to returns and such answers made under said act and amendments thereof.

So far as any return may be a duplicate of one already filed, that fact may be stated, and the details, which are in such case duplicates, need not be repeated. Upon its being made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commission that without fault on its part it is impracticable for such corporation to furnish any of the items aforesaid, it may, by a written order of said Commission, be excused from furnishing such item or items.

Said Commission shall cause to be prepared a blank return for the use of such corporations, containing the foregoing requirements, and shall make such rules and regulations as may, in its judgment, be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The president, treasurer, and a majority of the directors of such corporation shall make oath in writing on said return that said return is true. The treasurer or other officer of such corporation, having the requisite knowledge, shall answer on oath all inquiries that may be made in writing on the direction of said Commission in relation to said return. Any corporation failing to make such return, or whose treasurer or other officer shall fail to make the answers aforesaid, may be restrained, on the suit of the United States, from engaging in interstate commerce until such return is made. Suit may be brought in any district of the United States at the election of the Attorney-General.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I offer the following committee amendment:

Amend section 1, on page 7, in line 18, by inserting after the word "States" the words "where such corporations have a place of business:" so that it will read: "Suit may be brought in any district of the United States where such corporation has a place of business, at the election of the Attorney-General."

The amendment of Mr. LITTLEFIELD was read by the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the following words at the beginning of the substitute, to wit:

"That every corporation which may be hereafter organized shall, at the time of engaging in interstate or foreign commerce, file the return hereinafter provided for, and every corporation whenever organized and engaged in interstate or foreign commerce shall file a return with the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending December 31, whenever and at such time as requested by said Commission."

And insert the following in lieu thereof:

"That every corporation, whether now or hereafter organized and engaged or that may engage in interstate or foreign commerce, and having a capital of $100,000 or more, shall annually, during the month of January of each year, unless the Interstate Commerce Commission from time to time substitute another date, make and file with said Commission for the preceding year a return and report."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment, as is apparent from the reading of it, is to require that corporations now in existence, as well as those that may hereafter be formed, shall be required to make the returns provided in section 1. The reasons pro and con upon this subject were, I suppose, gone into sufficiently in the general discussion of the bill. I think myself that there is no reason for requiring of future corporations something not required of those now in existence. I believe that the whole reason for legislation on this subject is with reference to trusts now in being; that so far as the trusts of the future may be concerned, if we had none in the present there would certainly be no urgent occasion, if any occasion at all at this time, for legislation on this subject.

This provision also, in order to exempt the smaller corporations, places the limitation of $100,000 on the capitalization. That is not a necessary thing in the amendment nor a necessary thing in this proposed legislation. But it has been suggested that to make the requirement of all existing corporations might entail upon some of the smaller ones needless hardship, without any corresponding benefit to the public or to any individual. Trying to respect this judgment or sentiment of a number of gentlemen, and trying at the same time to frame the provision so that the great corporations of the day, more particularly the great trusts of the day, shall be required to make the returns which are to be exacted, under this section 1, of all corporations of the future, great or small, this amendment has been offered. I care to say nothing further about it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the clear purpose of the amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Missouri, is to compel a report in January of each year from every corporation in the United States doing an interstate-commerce business, regardless of the aggregate amount of such business. The purpose of the framers of this section was to steer between the two extremes of sentiment from which emanates the demand for this kind of legislation. On the one hand, there are those who think that nothing should be done; on the other, those who think, as thinks the gentleman from Missouri, that all corporations should be obliged to make annual reports setting forth the character and methods of their business.

We who framed this provision seek a more conservative avenue. We believe that the hundreds of thousands of corporations in this country doing a straightforward, legitimate business should not be antagonized, annoyed, and vexed by a requirement on the part of Congress that they make detailed reports of their business annually to anybody. We are opposed—certainly I am—to requiring by Congressional enactment the establishment of a bureau of information, which information should be left to commercial bodies to organize and distribute for the benefit of those who may desire the kind of information which such reports would bring. We believe that some power of discretion should be lodged in a properly authorized commission, which, when exercised, would bring forth a line of information that would disclose the proper basis of valuation for the capital stock of large corporations.

But we are just as earnestly opposed to exacting from smaller organizations such information as would either entail upon them disadvantages or give into the hands of their stronger competitors that kind of information which would enable them to crush smaller corporations out of existence.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Is it not the purpose rather of an amendment of this kind to place existing corporations upon the same footing as corporations that are to be hereafter organized?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The same footing is recognized in the language of the proposed substitute, which is that if this bill should become a law the commerce commission could require at its option the reports specified in the first section of the bill, but it could recognize a reasonable discretion as to how far those reports should be exacted of all corporations. However, in order to discriminate against overcapitalization in the future, to repress as far as possible and check the effort to float stocks and bonds which are not based upon true valuations, we exact an initial report of corporations yet to be organized. The initial report will be the only report which will be so exacted of organizations yet to be organized, except that after they have entered interstate commerce they will be upon the same basis as existing corporations and subject to calls for reports upon request of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Just for a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did not the gentleman in his report to the Fifty-sixth Congress denounce "all corporations restraining interstate trade?"

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, I can not go back that far.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is the gentleman running away from what he said last Congress?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; I am running away from nothing, not even the gentleman from Tennessee. [Laughter].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly; the gentleman is running from the Democrats and running with the trusts, as proved by what the gentleman said—swallowing literally what he said in the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The requirement for an initial report from corporations yet to be organized is to serve but one purpose, which is that they will by such report disclose the true basis of valuation of their capital stock. If they are unable to demonstrate by that initial report that such stock is based upon true value, they will be unable to float their stock upon an innocent public when it is not of proper valuation. The exaction of such a report will serve as a check against the organization of overcapitalized corporations.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is not the purpose of this publicity clause to reach existing trusts?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, both.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why should not corporations——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to ask the question.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules debate on amendments is limited to five minutes debate on each side.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order under the rules, except by unanimous consent. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND) there were—ayes 70, noes 96.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following amendment, which I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4, page 5, the words "whenever organized, and" and insert the following:

"Heretofore organized and engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and continuing therein, shall file such return with the Interstate Commerce Commission on or before the 31st day of December, 1903, and thereafter every corporation."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment, that it is practically the same as the one just voted on.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think it is entirely different.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMAS] has the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the reading of the first ten lines of the section, with the amendment, so that we can get the context and understand the meaning of the bill with the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to discuss it. I think it is easier to defeat the amendment than to discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I repeat my request—that the first ten lines of the section with the amendment be read, so that the bill with the amendment will be understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment, as requested.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 4, page 5, the words "whenever organized and" and insert the following:

"Heretofore organized and engaged in interstate and foreign commerce and continuing therein shall file such return with the Interstate Commerce Commission on or before the 31st day of December, 1903, and thereafter every corporation."

So that it will read:

"That every corporation which may be hereafter organized shall, at the time of engaging in interstate and foreign commerce, file the return hereinafter provided for, and every corporation heretofore organized and engaged in interstate and foreign commerce and continuing therein shall file such return with the Interstate Commerce Commission on or before the 31st day of December, 1903, and thereafter every corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce shall file a return with the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending December 31," etc.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the bill as reported and now before this committee provides in the first clause that every corporation hereafter organized and engaged in interstate and foreign commerce shall file the reports giving publicity to its organization and operations, as provided for by the bill. The purpose of this amendment is simply to place corporations engaged in interstate and foreign commerce heretofore organized in the same position as respects the giving of publicity, requiring existing corporations to file these reports on or before the 31st day of December, 1903.

I can see no just reason why in this legislation we should make a discrimination against corporations that are to be organized in the future. I believe it should be the policy rather to encourage the organization of new corporations to rise up in competition with those already established than to impose an impediment against them, as provided or proposed by the provisions of the pending measure as it now stands. The only purpose of this amendment is to place all corporations in the same category. If we should give a preference to any, I believe it should be a preference to encourage the organization of new corporations that will be built up and come in competition with those already formed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does this apply to corporations heretofore organized?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. This amendment applies entirely to corporations heretofore organized and aims to impose upon them the same obligations to give publicity to their operations that are required of corporations that are to engage in commerce in the future. In all other matters the amendment adopts the theory of the bill and requires all corporations hereafter engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, whether so engaged prior to or subsequent to the proposed act, to file their reports whenever demanded by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This removes the objections urged to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] requiring them to file such reports annually. This amendment requires them to file subsequent reports only when demanded by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this imposes no unnecessary hardship or burden on any existing organization of this kind. It simply makes the provisions of the bill harmonious and enlarges its provisions so as to apply to all corporations engaged in interstate and foreign commerce alike. I can not conceive that there is any injustice in such requirement.

I feel justified in the assertion that no adequate reason has been presented for the discrimination made in the bill.

The demand in this country for trust legislation has grown up and crystallized into public opinion on account of the methods adopted by existing corporations, and not so much from the fear of those that are to come in the future. It is the purpose of this legislation to deal with existing combinations as they affect existing conditions, rather than to deal with matters that are still in anticipation.

By exercising proper control over them in their present purposes, we pave the way for such future control as the exigencies of the situation may require and as general experience in the unfolding of future conditions may point out.

The urgent necessity of the times is to adopt measures that will curb the growing power of corporate influence as we find it now to exist. When that is done the future will be easily taken care of.

Do the necessities growing out of our present conditions require that the search-light of publicity be turned on every infant industry that may, through corporate organization, attempt in the future to engage in interstate or foreign commerce, and at the same time keep the windows darkened with blinds down to prevent the sunlight from shedding a ray on the trusts and combines now in existence, except as it may be called for by the grace of the Interstate Commerce Commission? Consistency, it seems to me, would demand that the arrows be driven the other way, so that they might pierce and lay open to public view the condition and methods of the close and powerful corporations now in existence, rather than against those that may come in the future and attempt to establish themselves in competition with those already established.

I am ready to acknowledge that, as a principle of political economy in the enactment of measures for the suppression or control of trusts, when the objects to be attained are the destruction of existing monopolies and the fostering of competition, I am unable to discover the logic in a measure that in its operation may leave such combinations as the Standard Oil trust, the sugar trust, the steel trust, and like existing corporations in the dark and under cover and require every new corporation that may organize and attempt to establish a business in the future to come in competition with them to step out into the full light and make disclosure of all their affairs and subject them to the inspection of their powerful rivals already established in business. If that is logical ground, I am unable to comprehend it. If that is just to the new, struggling industry, I am unable to perceive it.

What the people want is competition and the suppression of monopoly. In all legislation of this kind it should be the especial object of Congress to enact such measures as will tend as much as possible to encourage and foster new enterprises to build up, and in doing so to give them at least an equal chance in every particular with those already established, and no impediment should be placed in their way that does not apply with equal force to those with whom they may be brought in competition. Prompted by these reasons and looking to the purposes that I have outlined, I have submitted the amendment that has just been read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that although this motion comes from my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. THOMAS], this amendment does not have the approval of the committee. It is substantially the proposition that the committee has already voted down by a large majority, except that it is vastly more drastic. The amendment that the House just voted down exempted all corporations of $100,000 of capital and less. This includes them all. Now, I do not desire to reargue a question that the House has already decided adversely to the contention and suggestion of my distinguished colleague upon the committee; and as this exhausts debate upon this amendment, I call for the question.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to his colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. FLEMING. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And I make the point of order that that is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, as it would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; I do not yield at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman approve this amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMAS]?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I approve it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You; yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I say I do not. Has not the gentleman heard me make my statement?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to be certain.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have not had any difficulty heretofore in the use of the English language for the purpose of conveying my meaning.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, but we want to hear it when you speak plainly; then we will know exactly how you stand, whether you are a "trust buster" or a trust lover.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman ought not to get disturbed so early in the game.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why does the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. "The gentleman from Maine" declines to yield to a question from the gentleman from New York. I have already suggested that debate is closed on this amendment, and I call for the question. That is the answer of "the gentleman from Maine."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMAS].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 91.

Accordingly the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. FLEMING. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 4, page 5, the words "whenever organized and," and insert the following:

"Heretofore organized and engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, and continuing therein, having a capital of $100,000 or more, shall file such returns with the Interstate Commerce Commission on or before the 31st day of December, 1903, and thereafter every corporation——"

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that that is in every essential particular the first amendment voted down by the committee, and therefore a repetition and not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] is recognized.

Mr. FLEMING. Do I understand the Chair to overrule the point of order? I suppose the Chair would. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Now the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FLEMING. I wish to be heard on the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. FLEMING. Now, Mr. Chairman, here is an opportunity for the House to vote upon the issue clear and distinct whether or not we intend to require corporations now in existence to make the same contributions to this much-vaunted publicity as we require of corporations hereafter formed. The gentleman from Maine argued, and with a great deal of force, that it would not be practicable to require all corporations of the United States to file such returns. In the manufacturing industries alone there are 40,743 of such corporations returned by the census for the last decade.

There are doubtless a hundred thousand corporations that would be embraced in the bill, and therefore, according to the gentleman from Maine, it would not be wise or practicable to require every one of these corporations, with small capitalization as well as large, to make returns; and that is what the House voted down a moment ago. The amendment now pending confines these returns to corporations having a capital stock of $100,000 or more. If it is the purpose of the House to deal fairly with the people on this question of competition, it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is no excuse for voting against this amendment. The whole theory of the bill is based upon the desire supposed to exist in Congress to restore competition and to maintain competition. It has no other foundation in logic or political economy but that.

Now, it is admitted that there are corporations in existence today exercising monopolistic power in certain branches of industry. You propose to stop it. But you require burdens to be placed upon all competitors that hereafter go into any line of business which you do not require for those already monopolizing the field. If there is a fearless and sincere desire to give competition, you should not put a burden upon the new corporation entering the field to compete with the trust already here. Gentlemen, you hold out hope, and then you blast it. You say that you want competition and publicity, and you put certain obstacles on the new corporation coming into the field. How are you to get competition if you do not put another combination of capital into the field? And if you wish to induce this other combination of capital to go into the field, why put burdens on its back which you will not put on the biggest trust already in existence?

Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that in the perfecting of this bill we might lay aside mere party politics. It must be a matter of intense regret to any patriotic man, whether on the floor or elsewhere, to see an amendment of this character, intended to perfect the bill, voted down by a mere party vote, when there are men on that side who I know are interested in perfecting the bill. I hope that men on the other side of the House who heretofore on some occasions have acted upon their own individual judgment will do so now. There is nothing sacred about the report of this committee; no party issue is involved in it. I can see nothing but false pride in the effort of men who have signed their names to the majority report in insisting upon their colleagues voting against an amendment of this character.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the members on both sides of the House, without any reference to this aisle, will vote their convictions: and if there is a man over here who does not believe the amendment will perfect this bill, let him stand up and vote against it, and he will have my commendation at least.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I hope I shall not be held responsible for what the gentleman from Georgia does or does not understand in relation to this or any other question. Now, this speech he has addressed to the House this morning is a very good speech, and I have heard it four times. I heard it three or four times in the committee, and he suggested these same plausible and very wise suggestions about perfecting this bill in the Judiciary Committee, and he did not succeed, although he is very eloquent and ingenious and able and distinguished, in impregnating that committee with the necessity for this amendment. Now, I do not know how he may have succeeded this morning. I just want to call attention to this fact, that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri is as follows:

That every corporation which may be hereafter organized shall, at the time of engaging in interstate or foreign commerce, file the return hereinafter provided for, and every corporation whenever organized and engaged in interstate or foreign commerce shall file a return with the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending December 31, whenever and at such time as requested by said Commission.

The pith of that proposition is that existing corporations shall file returns. Now, what does the gentleman from Georgia propose in the amendment offered here? He proposes to amend the bill so that it shall read:

Corporations heretofore organized and engaged in interstate and foreign commerce and continuing therein, having a capital of $100,000 or more, shall file such return with the Interstate Commerce Commission, on or before the 31st day of December, 1903, and thereafter every corporation.

In essence exactly the same proposition.

Mr. FLEMING rose.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will not yield.

Mr. FLEMING. Will not the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have only five minutes. I want to state to the House just exactly what it is that disturbs my patriotic friend clear down to the end of his toes when he states that the bill must be perfected. The bill provides two things in relation to returns. As to existing corporations it vests the power to require returns, to be made at their discretion, in the Interstate Commerce Commission. They can call for returns from all corporations under the terms of this bill if they see fit. The majority of the committee assumed that that Commission will discharge its duties faithfully under this bill. If they do, we will have all the returns from existing corporations that are necessary for any and every legitimate purpose under the bill. Our Democratic friends desire to make this more drastic in this respect. This provision of the bill as it stands now, without any amendment, is exciting more opposition of those who are opposed to legislation regulating trusts or industrial combinations than all the other provisions of the bill put together. They are pouring out their vials of wrath on the bill as it reads, with the discretion vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Now, the committee have heard this speech of the gentleman from Georgia over and over again, line upon line and precept upon precept, without the change of a jot or a tittle. The committee feel that they have given the House in this respect reasonable and conservative provisions. Now, I think the debate may be ended on this amendment until we get another one of the same character to discuss right away, over again.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to debate the amendment in opposition. If it is in order, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I doubt if it is. The gentleman from Georgia has been heard in its favor and I have been heard against it. I do not wish to cut off any debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that that would not be in order under the rule without unanimous consent.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Georgia. I want to ask the gentleman from Georgia if he would not be willing to amend his amendment by substituting $1,000,000 for $100,000 wherever it occurs?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is called for, which is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FLEMING) there were 74 ayes and 91 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, all right-minded men who have given the subject any special thought are agreed that some legislation as that now pending is now, and right now, necessary for the regulation, control, and exposure of the great corporations commonly known as trusts. Perhaps I ought to exclude from this statement politicians who are forcibly reminded of the necessity of the sinews of war for carrying on national and State elections, and of the sources from which, during the last ten or twelve years, these sinews have come. Granted, then, that there is a general demand for action, and who will deny that there is when we remember that both political parties have time and again for these many years declared in their national and State conventions that something must be done, and done along this line?

Each party has endeavored to outdo the other in the promises made to the people and in the assurances contained in the resolutions solemnly passed at their various conventions. The only practical difference between the two great parties has been and is that one party means what it says, while the other does not, as is evidenced by the nonaction of the party in power these many years; but now, goaded to action by an outraged and long-suffering people, it is about making a feint of doing something, but only a feint. Nothing serious is intended, and no harm will come to the trusts—those supporters of the Republican party and the Republican machine. Nobody knows this better than the trusts themselves, otherwise the corridors of this Capitol would swarm with the representatives demanding that even this wee, homeopathic application should die "a-bornin'." But they are not here as they were in the last Congress, when there was some danger that legislation affecting trade with poor little Porto Rico might be enacted and that the Congress of the United States would follow the recommendation of the late President McKinley when he declared that it was "our plain duty" to establish free-trade relations with Porto Rico.

The great trusts are usually good financiers. They spend no time, effort, or money when it is not necessary. They are entirely contented and satisfied that their interests will not be jeopardized or their business interfered with so long as they have "friends at court." Their well-recognized friend and apologist in the Senate has already announced that neither this bill nor any other antitrust bill will pass the Senate, save a little innocent, soothing lotion, soft and velvety as down itself, which may be attached to the commerce and labor bill just to take the "cuss" off the strenuous situation the Republicans find themselves in at the present time and to enable the trust-protected Republicans to claim that this little fatherless and motherless foundling was all that the Senate had time to rear at this session, as it had worn itself and tired itself out in talking against time for three whole months in its purpose to kill the statehood bill, to which, by the way, the party was unanimously committed in the last national convention. For these many months the mountains have been in travail, and only this little ridiculous mus is brought forth.

The President of the United States has declared to every listening throng he has addressed from platform and railroad station, from Massachusetts to Michigan, that these trusts must and should be controlled, regulated, and pinched.

The Attorney-General, in carefully prepared speeches delivered in the great business centers of the country, from Pittsburg to New York, assured the people that it was perfectly feasible and highly proper that restrictions should be placed upon these trusts which, in some measure, would control and tame them; and the Republican press, from Rockland to San Francisco, has proclaimed assurances that the illustrious son of Maine, that indomitable, rapid-firing Representative from the Pine Tree State, was to present to Congress a second Magna Charta, which should be in the form of an antitrust bill, and which would cure all the ills from which we are now suffering and have been suffering for the last ten years, which would cause the trust magnates to pause, to tremble, and repent. It was this masterpiece of thought and study that was to bring contentment to an anxious and long-suffering people. LITTLEFIELD was to bust the trusts.

I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that my heart failed me when I read this much-heralded bill, the product of the ingenuity, skill, and thought of the member from Maine. But disappointing and insufficient as it was to accomplish the purpose for which it was intended, it is after all a far better bill than the one which he was forced to substitute for it and which we are now considering. How it ever happened that the vigorous and indomitable gentleman ever became reconciled to the substitution of this bill for what we have been promised and have been waiting for all this time will, I presume, remain forever a state secret.

The original bill introduced by the gentleman from Maine made provision that all corporations should make returns, etc. This bill only provides that those corporations which shall hereafter be formed shall be required to make these returns unless the Interstate Commerce Commission requires them to do so. The steel trust is to go free, and any and all corporations hereafter formed must make the returns. Is not this a discrimination in favor of the gigantic trusts and against the little, honest ones yet to be formed? A little corporation formed to conduct a laundry business, for instance, must expose its every feature; yet the great sugar and oil trusts sail on undisturbed. Does anyone claim there is right and justice in this? The most conspicuously noxious feature of the trusts is overcapitalization. Lack of publicity for their operation and discrimination in prices to destroy competition are bad enough, but to my mind they do not approach the evil of overcapitalization. It is through and by reason of overcapitalization that these other evils come. This furnishes the temptation and necessity requires high prices for products. Otherwise how can dividends be declared on the watered stock?

The cry has gone forth all over the land seeking to restrain and expose the trusts, "Stop overcapitalization." Compel all corporations to do what they are obliged to do in Massachusetts—pay in, in money or property, every cent for which the corporation is capitalized. We expected this provision of all provisions would be contained in this bill, but the bill is most conspicuous by the absence of any such provision. This bill is a poor little weakling, shorn of the strength and power we expected it to contain, impotent to secure any good to the people, and harmless in in inflicting any practical restraint upon the trusts. The provision prohibiting rebates is the only one which will have any practical effect, and without this provision the entire bill would not rise to the dignity of a respectable protest against trusts.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the first section of the substitute by inserting, just after the word "sale," in the fifth line, sixth page, the words "the amount of taxes paid for the preceding year."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the Clerk give me the line and page that amendment refers to?

The CLERK. Page 6, line 5.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the only purpose of this amendment is to require the corporations that make reports under the first section of this bill to report, among other things, the amount of taxes paid the preceding year. For myself I can not conceive of more important information concerning these organizations for the people and the public officials to have than to know how well they are bearing their part of the public burdens of the country. I believe it is important, and I trust that there will be no opposition to the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I ought to state to the committee the reasons why this amendment was not adopted by the Judiciary Committee. My idea of the elements to be required in these returns were elements that would disclose the financial condition of the corporation, determine its property, the value of its securities, and the amount that might be behind the capitalization. We could not see how the taxes paid by corporations had any legitimate connection with the question of its property, or its amount, or its character, or the amount behind the capital stock. Inasmuch as we did not feel like having anything in it not absolutely required that did not relate to that subject-matter we voted it down in committee. I do not think it is a very material proposition. Another thing, so far as they are taxed, that is public information anyway, and can be obtained by the inspection of the tax lists.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I should like to ask the gentleman a question. If the taxes are paid either upon the cash value of the property or a given per cent of the cash value, this would be a most excellent way to ascertain what these concerns think their property worth?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not think there is any uniform rule in that respect. Upon some of the corporations in some of the States there is such a tax; in other States there is not. In some States the stock is taxed; in others they divide the property into different kinds for taxing purposes. In some States the franchise is taxed. I think my friend from Kentucky will be satisfied that there is no uniform information that can be obtained from the various States in this connection. That was one of the reasons on the part of the committee for drawing this provision as it is.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The object of this provision is to make the information uniform by requiring these corporations to furnish reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the gentleman must realize that this bill does not impose any taxes, and we can not impose taxes of this kind. These taxes are imposed by the various States.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I do not know any better way to ascertain the real valuation of the property of corporations than by ascertaining the amount of taxes that they pay.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That would be true provided the tax assessed upon real property and personal property were uniform everywhere, but the gentleman from Kentucky knows that such is not the case. I therefore feel inclined to ask the Committee of the Whole to vote it down.

[Mr. WOOTEN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, monopoly has sought control of the business interests from the early dawn of civilization and will probably strive for the mastery as long as there is trade amongst men. Human greed has been a forceful factor since Cain slew Abel and Esau, by fraud and deception, secured his brother's heritage. It does not follow that because there has ever been monopoly the people must to-day bow to its will and yield a submissive obedience to its power. Its known historic tyranny amongst all nations and in all times should serve as an incentive to this generation to repel its onward march and prevent its dominion.

Nothing is more humiliating than the apparent truckling disposition of the dominant party. The spirit of surrender to monopolistic influence is too plainly observed. The great speech of the gentleman from Maine is far different in tone and sentiment from that which he delivered in June, 1900, when another and much stronger trust bill was before the House for its consideration and he was advocating its passage. His speech now compared with that one is apologetic, as he terms it, conservative, and replete with the thought of trade supremacy and the necessity of avoiding any interference with it. He properly expresses concern for the great business interests of the country, but then insists that nothing should be done that would in any particular disturb its equilibrium or interfere with its methods. This kind of policy means little in the way of relief to the burdened masses. How can monopolistic control be overcome without interfering with the business of the monopoly? Just as well talk of punishing the highway robber without taking his liberty or the murderer without personal restraint. The trade combination which injuriously affects the public must be broken up. Such laws must be enacted and enforced as will prevent their existence and drive out of business those associations or corporations engaged in the oppression of the people. I see no ground for apology for this course. The legitimate industry, thriving as much as may be, should applaud such action. Dishonest men are opposed to criminal statutes, the oppressor of mankind would have no punishment for tyranny, and the trade monopolist who injuriously affects his fellows would have no remedy for such action.

I appreciate the fact that the question of what shall be the remedy for trusts and how it shall be applied is not an easy one to answer. This has been a long-drawn contest, but the forces of monopoly have as nearly the mastery as ever before. This monstrosity of trade may, by certain methods, be restrained to-day, but to-morrow it may appear under a different guise, and another weapon of defense may be needed to overcome it. Shall gentlemen avoid the issue because of the difficulties of success? The more determined and concentrated effort should be made that the conflict may be the more decisive and the victory over the enemy of free people and equal opportunity may be more nearly complete.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee asserted in his able address during this debate that—

> While there is intense feeling existing in the mind of our people to-day against monopolies I do not believe it to be my duty to denounce them or add to the present excitement. As I have said, these people are pursuing a lawful course, created and protected by the law.

A little later in the course of his address, when interrogated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] in regard to the existence of trusts, he made this statement in reply:

> I reiterate, for the benefit of the gentleman from New York, that there are no trusts in this country and that these great corporations are acting in a lawful manner, doing just exactly what every one of us would do.

This sentiment has been repeatedly expressed by the chairman of the national Republican committee, Mr. HANNA. Can anyone doubt that this is the real position of the Republican leaders to-day? Anything else is deceptive and hypocritical. I do not mean to say that every colleague across the aisle indorses their statement, nor that the masses of the party accept their position as correct, but the counselors of the organization, the directors of party action, fully concur in the view of this distinguished gentleman. The versatile statesman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] says:

> The day of individualism is past. Competition is destructive; it is war. Corporation of force is peace and the guaranty of greater prosperity.

If these forceful utterances are true, the people are wrong in their opposition to monopoly. They should turn their faces toward the giant industrial combinations and bid them God speed in their onward march until every business competitor shall be overcome, the power to fix the price both of labor and the commodities of life shall be absolute, and until there shall be complete subjection to their demand of capitalistic greed. If it be true that there is to be complete surrender to monopoly, then the language of Thomas Jefferson with reference to other nations would be equally applicable to our own people:

> This world is full of timid souls who prefer the calm of despotism to the tumult of liberty.

Mr. Chairman, what is needed at this hour is the "tumult of liberty," and an aroused and determined public sentiment, a forceful and defiant legislative body and Executive bent on the destruction of monopolistic greed, even if some giant corporate enterprise in open and persistent hostility to law, trampling upon the statutes, civil and criminal, with the greatest impunity, shall be made to suffer; yes, to close its doors, if need be.

If it be true that the day of individualism is past, then no longer can the mother look upon the bright urchin in whom her hopes are concentered and expect for him an equal chance in the race of preferment. She should realize that as an individual her boy shall never exist; that his ambitions must be subservient to the will of corporate influence; he must be the tool of their wielding and such factor in their upbuilding as his ability and usefulness to them will dictate. The sweetest hopes of the home of poverty and privation are to be blasted. The patriotic devotion to country and its institutions is to be set aside, and the teachings of such men as Washington and Madison are to be considered as the foolish vaporings of the past; but the new era of advanced thought and recognition of the monopolistic capital shall have full sway and government must be recognized as its pliant tool. Shall this monarchialistic doctrine triumph? Not while the people are citizens of a free Republic, nor labor recognizes that it is a part of the free manhood whose rights are vouchsafed under the Constitution, nor the power of resistance wells in the human breast, and the great masses are the producers of all that the monopoly controls.

I am not in sympathy with the timid conservatism which asserts itself in high places, parades the weakness of the Sherman antitrust law, refuses to enforce its provisions, and then declares the impotence of the Government to make it stronger. That the law should be improved and strengthened by legal enactment there is no question, but from the standpoint of the Executive it should be rigidly and determinately enforced in all of its provisions. If the criminal features as well as the civil remedies were applied and the oppressor of human rights punished as any other lawbreakers, then monopoly would call a halt and ask the terms of surrender. If this course were earnestly and vigorously pursued the defects in existing law would be plainly seen; the remedial legislation necessary to perfect the law would become apparent.

When gentlemen insist that the dominant party is winking at monopolistic domination and determined to do nothing that will seriously affect trusts, that party tries to shield itself behind some alleged Democratic weakness that may sometime or somewhere have asserted itself. This is no excuse for trifling. The Republican party is in complete control and has been for six years. It is responsible for the legislation and conditions existing, and any mistakes of Democracy in days gone by do not lessen the responsibility. It can not now complain because Democrats have urged each step that has been taken and has supported every proposition for immediate relief that has been voted upon in either branch of Congress during that period. Democrats insist that an opportunity should be given to pass a strong, forceful, and effective bill. Every man on that side of the Chamber knows full well that the minority will go as far as Republicans dare go in legislation to destroy the trusts and overcome their evil effects.

It is child's play to try to shift this burden. The dominant party has pledged itself in its platform and on the hustings to pass remedial legislation which will result in removing this oppression from the people. Never was a party more fortunate than the Republican party is now in having the power to carry into effect its pledges, because the opposite party will throw no impediments in the way, but will assist by voice and vote to uphold the majority in this reformatory work. But why this halting, doubting, uncertain, unstable position? Why do not Republicans act? The reason is plain. The cause is known to all. The Republican party is in league with the monopolists and is retained in power by their contributions. Can you expect relief from monopoly when those who are its beneficiaries are to control the legislation?

There may be a continuation of deceptive policy; but if so, the time will come when the people will rise in their sovereign power and place such persons at the helm of legislative and executive position as can be relied on to remember them when the city of Washington is reached.

What is the ground of complaint that the American people make? They say that monopolistic organization have fixed the prices of the products of toil and have control of those prices to-day; that they have fixed the compensation to labor, and that in addition to this they control the prices of articles of consumption. If this indictment be true, monopoly now has the reins of power.

The farmer and stock raiser places the fruits of his labor upon the market, whether of stock or grain, and receives the price fixed by monopoly, or nothing. He has no voice in determining the price. He takes the money which the syndicate gives him for his products and seeks to buy articles of consumption to meet the needs of the home, and again he is faced by the fixed price, not so much of the retail dealer as the few who have the monopoly and say what shall be the price to the public. The laborers in the mine and factory receive such wages as capital fixes, and then if labor combines to protect itself it is declared to be a monopoly and frowned upon with the utmost contempt.

When the laborer undertakes to buy the articles of daily consumption he meets the same fixed price as the farmer, and is forced to buy at that sum or do without. There is something wrong somewhere which permits monopolies to fix the selling price of nature's products, the wages of labor which produces wealth, and the price of the articles for consumption which enter into daily use. It may be claimed that the laws of trade and commercial intercourse demand that these conditions remain; that no system could be devised which would permit the producer to fix his own prices, the laborer to name the amount of his compensation, or the consumer to control the price of the commodities which he might buy. This may be, but if such is the fact, the necessity for fair and honest treatment from the power that does determine the rates of compensation is the more apparent. Human nature is the same everywhere. The monopolists of the United States are what many of us would be if we occupied their places. Having the control of any article, they will make out of it whatever can be made. Here is the necessity for law.

It is the duty of Congress, so far as it may do so, to prevent any encroachments on the rights of the people. The products of the farm and mine should receive liberal consideration. Labor should be fully rewarded and consumption should not be compelled to pay tribute to greed. There is quite a disposition on the part of many to accept the proposition that combinations lower the price to the consumer, and therefore are beneficial to the masses. I am willing to concede that the monopolistic organizations could sell to the consumer at a less price than if such organizations were not in existence; but I certainly deny that any benefit accrues to the masses on account of the monopolies in existence. An investigation might give some light on this subject. Take, for example, the great beef monopoly, of which we have heard so much, that has so greatly increased the cost of living in the extraordinary price of beef to the consumer.

On January 2, 1902, according to the statistics set out by the Treasury Department, the price of family beef was $12.50 per barrel. On January 2, 1903, it was $17.50 per barrel, or an advance of 40 per cent in one year. The monopolistic advocate in explanation of this condition may say that cattle are scarce, and the prices higher than they were one year previously. But the same Government statistics give the price of cattle in the Chicago market January 4, 1902, as follows:

	Per 100 pounds.
Native steers	$7.75
Texas steers	4.95

while on January 3, 1903, the prices for the same classes of cattle were as follows:

	Per 100 pounds.
Native steers	$6.65
Texas steers	4.75

a marked decline in all grades of cattle and in the price of native steers of more than 14 per cent.

Let us take another monopoly which is often referred to as lowering the price of consumption to the world. I have reference to the Standard Oil Trust. The Government monthly statement to which I have referred furnishes the information that refined petroleum increased in price from 8.3 cents per gallon to 10.5 cents per gallon between January 1, 1902, and January 1, 1903, or an advance of nearly 5 per cent in one year. Examination will show that this grasping, overmastering power of monopoly is shown in nearly every trust organization which has been established. The more powerful the monopoly becomes the more exacting its demands will be, and the greater necessity exists for drastic legislation. If Congress would take hold of the monopolistic conditions with the same spirit as Emperor Zeno did in A. D. 483 this evil would soon be wiped out. The edict to which I refer was as follows:

> If anyone shall presume to practice a monopoly, let his property be forfeited and himself condemned to perpetual exile. And in regard to the principles of other professions, if they shall venture in the future to fix the price upon their merchandise and to bind themselves by agreements not to sell at a lower price, let them be condemned to pay 40 pounds of gold. Your court shall be condemned to pay 50 pounds of gold if it shall happen through avarice, negligence, or any other misconduct the provisions of this salutary constitution for the prohibition of monopolies and agreements among the different bodies of merchants shall not be carried into effect.

I do not believe that such extreme penalties need be fixed and enforced as were resorted to in that time, but that decree was a forceful illustration of what may be done to overcome the power of monopoly and to break down trust organizations.

I shall not take the time to analyze the provisions of the pending bill, but will call attention to the first section of it, which provides for the publication of the conditions of the corporations engaged in interstate and foreign commerce with reference to capital, stocks, bonds issued, and methods of business. Strange as it would appear to those concerned for effective legislation, this publicity feature is made to apply only to corporations or monopolies hereafter organized or created. Not only does this fail to require information as to existing corporations but it serves to protect them against those hereafter to be created. How farcical is this kind of publication! What a complete surrender to existing trusts in its framing! Whatever of good there might be in publication has been overcome by its limitation which makes application only to future corporations. The bill otherwise has a few features that tend to the benefit of the people, but nothing in it is a remedy for existing evils, and when enacted into law will only have the effect to slightly regulate the power of trusts.

Labor is the mainspring of commercial action. Labor in the sweat of the face tills the soil which produces a mighty volume of trade and sends the articles of commerce into every country and into every clime. Labor transports the products of farm to the market place. It may be drawn upon the greatest railways with the mightiest engines, but at the helm is a laborer holding the throttle and directing its movement. Labor in the manufacturing establishment, mill, or other place of transformation of these articles into those of consumption and use is indispensable. Wherever capital has been gathered it is the result of human labor. Around the festal board money may be lavishly spent, but in its spending is disseminated the sweat and brain of labor. Piled up in yonder Federal Treasury are hundreds of millions of dollars which are the result of labor's application. The young American with the profligacy of dissipation may throw to the winds the thousands which result from ancestral heritage, but every nickel thus expended is stamped with the monogram of labor and the sacrifice of the toiler.

Who should receive legislative favor—the laborers who have produced by their brain and brawn the prosperity of which Americans so proudly boast or those who are the holders of wealth and the recipients of labor's achievement? As for myself, I am concerned for the toiler. Capital cares for itself. It enters the secret councils of the committee rooms, confers with the legislator and insists upon recognition and consideration, brings the power of its influence in various ways, and forces its demands upon Congress. But in the shop, in the bowels of the earth, on the prairies and hillsides, at the post of duty everywhere, labor is engaged in forging the daily round that subsistence may be assured for those dependent upon his exertions. These in the garb of toil, with the dust, the smoke, and unpleasant environment of their vocations, with the patriotic devotion of the fathers, are dependent upon the honesty, integrity, and fairness of their representatives in Congress to see to it that their rights are protected and that they may have an equal opportunity before the law. But shall that constituency meet the increased price of consumption fixed by monopoly with the denial of a corresponding increase in the wages of labor and the price of nature's product without complaint? Must they see the monopolist lionized and toasted while he is oppressing labor and making its burdens more grievous? Must they see the real profits of their energy accepted as the gift of philanthropy and devotion to the best interests of mankind and the donor applauded for his generosity? Shall they observe Carnegie libraries and Rockefeller colleges and not complain that law has permitted, or by its provisions encouraged, the aggregate of such colossal fortunes as that such donations can be made out of annual income, when those whose labor produced them or purchases made them have no part or lot in their enjoyment?

While I shall support the pending bill, and every other measure that tends to bring relief from the oppression of monopoly which may be submitted by the majority, I condemn in the most positive way the rule forced upon this House which makes amendment impossible and prevents a record of any vote upon the various amendments presented. This rule is another of those deceptive steps to hide the perfidy of men to their constituents and to prevent an open and fair discussion of the necessary remedial legislation and a vote showing to the country the individual action on amendments proposed.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Kentucky, there were on a division (called for by Mr. SMITH of Kentucky)—ayes 73, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that——

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word of the section.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SULZER. I hope that this will not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. My parliamentary inquiry is this: I wish to offer a substitute for this section, and I want to know whether that motion will be in order after the pending motion is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Tennessee wishes to offer a substitute for the entire section?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The offering of a substitute for the entire section will be in order after all members have had an opportunity to first perfect the section.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I want to give notice of that intention now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer his proposed substitute now and have it pending.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I will send it to the Clerk's desk for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] will proceed. The proposed substitute of the gentleman from Tennessee will be read after the remarks of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this so-called and much-heralded antitrust bill, stripped of all its tautology, pruned of its crudeness, and separated from its extraneous verbiage, seems to an uninitiated and unsophisticated individual like myself to be a very good bill to give the trusts the right to continue business at the old stand and keep on robbing the people all the time without let or hindrance unless, in their magnanimity, they see fit to tell the people the method of their scientific system of taking from the many for the benefit of the few and make such returns to the Government—true or false—regarding their affairs as they desire. It is an antitrust bill only in name. The friends of the trusts can vote for it with as much pleasure as the foes of monopoly. It will do no great good, and it will do no great harm. It may please some, especially those who say there are good and bad trusts and that we must go slow for fear of injuring a good monopoly.

Mr. Chairman, before the last election the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], in all the glory of his greatness, perambulated around the country making speeches and posing as the great and only and original and simon-pure trust buster. He had introduced in this House a bill which to some extent would curb the power and the sway of the trusts, and it was entitled "A bill requiring all corporations engaged in interstate commerce to file returns with the Secretary of the Treasury, disclosing their true financial condition, and of their capital stock, and imposing a tax upon such as have outstanding capital stock unpaid in whole or in part."

That was a good title, and the bill, so far as it went, was a fairly effective measure. Now, sir, I notice that in the bill which the gentleman from Maine has reported from the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for his original bill he has struck out that title and practically presents to the House an entirely different bill from the bill which he introduced on December 2, 1901, before the last Congressional election. It is for all remedial purposes a new bill—a bill which, if it were enacted into law, would not do any harm to the trusts, and in my humble opinion would not remedy a single trust evil that the people complain about to-day.

The new title to the new bill is as follows: "A bill requiring corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, prohibiting rebates and discriminations and the use of interstate commerce in attempts to destroy competition, and for other purposes."

That tells the story. This new bill does not require "all" corporations to make returns; only some; only those to be hereafter organized, and the word "true" is also eliminated, so that the next growth of monopolies can simply make such returns as they see fit—true or false, good, bad, or indifferent. And the new bill, too, if you will compare it with the original, is just as flimsy, just as insincere, and just as hypocritical; but, in my opinion, it goes a great way to change the law now on the statute books known as the antitrust law of 1890 in repealing by implication the civil and criminal penalties provided in that law.

I do not stand alone in this opinion. Several distinguished lawyers who have carefully investigated this proposed bill believe that if it should be enacted into law the Attorney-General of the United States and the United States district attorneys would be absolutely powerless to enforce the civil and criminal penalties under the antitrust act of 1890. If this be so the bill, weak and impotent as it is, may become the agency of nullifying the provisions of the only law we now have to prosecute and punish criminal monopolists and trust conspirators.

The bill is defective, but perhaps it was intended to be so for this very reason, and instead of being against the trusts is intended under the surface to really be for the trusts. This is a very serious matter, and this bill should not pass this House without a proviso that nothing contained in its provisions should be construed as amending or changing any of the provisions of the antitrust law of 1890.

The criminal trusts of the land are more opposed to the penal penalties of the act of 1890 than to any provisions contained in this bill. And in this respect I might say it seems strange that no Attorney-General since 1890 has ever had the temerity to enforce the criminal provisions of the act of 1890 against any violator of the law. Why? You all know the reason why. The trust magnates are too powerful.

And this new bill, so cleverly drawn, so cleverly worded, and so cleverly devised, not so much by the gentleman from Maine as by some distinguished trust lawyers, may have for its sole purpose the elimination of the criminal provisions of the statute of 1890. If that is so—if that is the latent intent of this new bill—then I can understand why the trusts are not opposed to it, and why every friend of the trusts here is in favor of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is too bad that under the rule adopted a member can not amend this new bill, and I regret my friend from Maine did not stick to his original bill; but somehow, Mr. Chairman, these trust lawyers succeeded in changing the opinion of the great "trust buster" from Maine, so that he stands here to-day revealed in his true colors [laughter], not as a great "trust buster," but as a great trust advocate. [Laughter.]

I thought my friend from Maine was a true friend of the people and a real enemy of the criminal trusts; but alas! it seems otherwise. I am sorry for it; I am sorry for him and for myself, because my simple faith has been rudely shaken. [Laughter.] I thought the gentleman was sincere; that he meant all he said on the hustings; that he really was to be the agency through whom the overtaxed, hoodwinked, and oppressed people would secure their rights against the trusts and monopolies; but I was mistaken. [Laughter.]

I thought the gentleman was honest in all he said against the trusts and that the trust-owned and trust-controlled newspapers meant all they said about his heroic efforts to crush the trusts. I looked up to him; I wanted to follow him wherever he went to grapple with monopolies. I thought he would be bold and audacious as he pursued the octopus, but I am disappointed.

The gentleman does not go far; he does not rage against the iniquity of the monopolies; but, on the contrary, he seems very mild and rather apologetic, and even goes so far as to inform us that there were monopolies before the tariff, and before the Republican party, and before Christ, and before the Flood. It is all no doubt very wonderful—but quite beyond me.

The gentleman's new trust bill, so different from the gentleman's original antitrust bill, his remarkable speech yesterday, and his attitude here to-day have disconcerted his antitrust friends, mystified every foe of monopoly, and put every one of his true followers all at sea. Even his friend, the President, must stand aghast when he contemplates the gentleman's sudden change of front on this important question, and I hardly know what the President will do with this new bill if it ever passes the Senate and goes to the White House. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we should be careful not to nullify any part of the antitrust law of 1890. That is a good law, and if it were enforced it would remedy most of the trust evils. In regard to that law and in this connection I want to read a letter recently written by former Senator George F. Edmunds, which confirms the position I maintain. The letter is as follows:

AIKEN, S. C., January 2, 1903.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 27th ultimo has reached me here. The statement of Senator Vest contained in the slip you inclose is correct. I have not the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or the Senate files to refer to, but I am sure on looking them up you will find that the bill reported by Mr. Sherman from the Finance Committee was not the one passed by Congress, but that the one passed by Congress was reported by the Judiciary Committee to which the Sherman bill, after it was reported from the Finance Committee and discussed and probably more or less amended, was referred for consideration; and that the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee and passed was in every essential respect entirely different from the Sherman bill, and was purely a substitute for it.

The Judiciary Committee was, I think, unanimously of the opinion that the bill it reported was, in respect of its general scope, an exercise of the whole constitutional power of Congress, which could only legislate for the freedom and regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; and I am of the same opinion still. The only difficulty with the bill we reported and which became law was the want of administration, that is to say, that the law was and is entirely capable of putting an end to such so-called trusts and such combinations as interfere with or restrain commerce among the States, etc., if the officers of the Government having charge of the enforcement of law understand their duty and are willing to do it, being, of course, supplied with sufficient means to put it into force.

If the famous Knight case had been instituted and carried forward with suitable allegations of the precise nature and history of the Knight affair, and had been supported, as it could have been, by adequate proof of the facts it set forth, I believe the Supreme Court of the United States would not have had the least difficulty in preventing the carrying on of the combination under consideration, and putting an end to it, as it can still do with similar ones. The bill of complaint in that case was unhappily not drawn in such a way as to present the question which now so much commands just public concern.

What is needed is not, so much, more legislation as competent and earnest administration of the laws that exist. I have no doubt that the present Attorney-General and his very able assistant will find easy means, if supplied with the necessary funds, to arrest the progress and undo the mischievous work of such great and injurious combinations as have so largely come into recent existence.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

JOHN A. SLEICHER, Esq.,
110 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I have not had and I could not get an opportunity during the general debate to say a word in regard to this bill, and I now ask unanimous consent that my time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may proceed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. I thank the House for its courtesy. As I have said before, and it can not be successfully denied, the law on the statute books against trusts is clear and plain, and the highest court in the land has passed on its validity and sustained the constitutionality of its provisions. The antitrust act of 1890 declares that every contract or combination in the nature of a trust in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States and Territories or with foreign nations is a conspiracy, illegal and void, and punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Under the law of our country trusts are criminal, and there is no distinction between a so-called good trust and a so-called bad trust, between a big trust and a little trust. Every trust is contrary to both the spirit and the letter of the law. To seriously contend otherwise as a legal proposition would be preposterous. If we did so, by analogy we might as consistently assert that there were good pirates and bad pirates. If robbery is criminal, it is immaterial, so far as the crime is concerned, whether the robbery is a big one or a little one. The violation of law is the same.

Under this antitrust act it seems to me every trust in the United States can be prosecuted for violation of law, the charter annulled, and the men behind it punished for conspiracy. Every trust by its very nature is in restraint of trade and commerce and in violation of this law.

If you will read the antitrust act of 1890 and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the trans-Missouri freight case and the Addyston Pipe Line case, the conclusion will be irresistible to the logical mind that the fault is not so much with the law as it is with the men who are sworn to enforce the law. The law so far as it goes is all right—the do-nothing Attorney-General is all wrong. The imperative mandate of the day is "Enforce the law, and every trust in the country will dissolve." Whenever the trusts have been brought before the courts, and their true character shown, they have been declared illegal.

In my opinion—and I say so advisedly—the Department of Justice under the present law can institute and successfully maintain actions against every trust doing business in the United States.

Nothing would be more welcome to the trusts than to change this law—especially its criminal penalties. These, it is true, have never been enforced, but some day the people may get an Attorney-General who will enforce them and if they are enforced a few trust magnates may have to go to jail, and that will be the end of the criminal trusts. One trust magnate behind the bars will be an object lesson that will do more good than all the speeches ever delivered here against the trusts.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] seems to me to be in an embarrassing position. He changed the title to his bill—he gave up his original bill—and substituted for it a weak, apologetic makeshift that will accomplish nothing or do great harm. Now, I want the members of this House to see how cleverly the trust lawyers amended the title of the original bill. If you will take the title of the original bill introduced by my friend from Maine, you will find it required "all" corporations to make "true" returns, and the trust lawyers some way or other induced the great trust buster from Maine to amend his bill so that it leaves out entirely "all" corporations and "true" returns. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] The entire bill—I mean the new trust bill—now before us is a hollow sham.

Mr. Chairman, I had an idea at one time that amounted to almost a conviction that my good-natured friend from Maine was as earnest, as honest, and as sincere a friend of the people and as bitter a foe and as intense an opponent of the trusts and monopolies as I am. [Laughter.] But I am compelled, reluctantly compelled, I regret to say, to be constrained to stand here to-day, after having carefully read the bill originally introduced into this House by the gentleman from Maine and the substitute bill prepared by the trust lawyers, which the gentleman from Maine substituted for his bill, and which he now offers us and stands sponsor for—I am reluctlantly constrained, I must confess, to say that this substitute, as a remedy to more effectually curb the power and the sway of the criminal trusts and monopolies, is seven pounds lighter than a straw hat. [Prolonged laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, now, another matter in this connection, somewhat personal, and I dislike exceedingly to refer to myself, but I must. [Laughter] I introduced a bill, an antitrust bill—a real antitrust bill—a bill that would do something and that meant something—a genuine trust-busting antitrust bill, in December, 1902, more than a year ago. I thought my bill, in my modest and humble way, was a better bill than the bill originally introduced by the gentleman from Maine. It was referred to the gentleman's committee. I went before the gentleman's committee and made a strong and, if I say it myself, I believe, an eloquent argument in favor of it. I thought at that time the gentleman from Maine liked my bill, perhaps not so much as he did his own creation, but I got the idea that we nearly agreed as to the necessary remedy.

A great many distinguished gentlemen who are opposed to trusts, representing labor organizations, representing the American Antitrust League, representing commercial bodies and other industrial enterprises, also went before the gentleman's committee and spoke long and earnestly and eloquently in favor of my genuine antitrust bill. The gentleman from Maine intimated substantially that my bill was a most excellent bill, but that he was just a little afraid that it went too far, perhaps, and might hurt the trusts just a little too much, but he in substance suggested that there were features in my bill regarding "publicity" which he thought ought to be incorporated in any bill which the committee reported. That was all very nice—and I thought so then.

And, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to stand up here and say that the gentleman from Maine, my friend, the erstwhile trust buster, did put into his bill some of the provisions of my bill, but they were the mild provisions of my bill which amount to little or nothing. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Maine studiously left out of this bill everything in my bill which would do something, which would amount to something, which would check and cure the trust evil, and which would more effectually curb the potential power and the autocratic sway of the trusts.

Now, another thing—and this is a good time to say it again, and I want to repeat it every chance I get, on behalf of my Democratic colleagues—that when the department of commerce bill was pending in this House I offered my antitrust bill as an amendment to one of the sections of that department of commerce bill, and every Democrat in this House voted for it, and every Republican in this House, including the great, the only, and the original trust buster, my good friend from Maine, voted against it. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I have noticed, however, that since the department of commerce bill has been pending in the Senate a farseeing and sagacious Senator contemplates amending that bill by incorporating in it an antitrust provision very similar to mine.

I hope the Senator will do so. He can have my antitrust bill in toto; and I believe it is the best bill ever introduced in this House to establish "publicity" regarding the trusts. I have no personal vanity in this matter. I am only a humble servant of the people, with mediocre ability; and being in the minority, I can not hope to do more than construct legislation. I can only prepare good bills; I can not pass them. Only Republicans can make laws nowadays. But I care not for the glory; all I want is to secure results for the people. [Laughter.]

Yes, Mr. Chairman, we witness quite a spectacle to-day. We see the eloquent former trust buster from Maine now the advocate of the octopus, the historian of monopolies, and the special pleader of the trusts. Perhaps it may be unconscious, but the fact can not be overlooked. And the Republican party, as represented on the floor of this House, has changed its position very materially on this question if you compare the promises made with the meager bill presented. My friends on the other side seem to be running away from the President. I believe the President is honest in his antagonism to the criminal trusts of the country. I believe he is sincere in his recommendations to check their apparent evils. I know he is a true American, and I believe the President wants this Congress to do something to curb the power of the trusts in the interest of the people.

The Republicans pretend that they do also, but you do not carry out your promises or the recommendations of your President. You wink at the exactions of the trusts while you throw a sop to the people in the nature of a futile bill like this that will be just about as effectual to remedy trust evils as a last year's bird's nest. It is apparent you are fooling the people again. You seem to glory in it, and they seem to like it. If it were not for the sadness of it all—the misery, the woe, the want, the poverty of it all—it would be to laugh. Every time I see the Republican elephant at his old tricks I am reminded of what P. T. Barnum facetiously said: "The people like to be humbugged." The Republican party has evidently copyrighted that remark, and on every occasion religiously lives up to it.

When will the people open their eyes and wake up? How much longer do they want to be humbugged? The President asks for and recommends antitrust legislation, the people all over the land plead for relief from the exactions of the trusts, and the sad experience of the past and the urgent exigencies of the present demand drastic legislation against monopolies and the rigid enforcement of existing laws. But what do you do? What you always do. Fool the people some more. When they ask for bread, you give them something you call bread, but which is really only a stone.

This bill now under discussion will accomplish nothing. It is a misfit, a makeshift, a miscarriage. Its ostensible purpose is to please the people and not displease the trusts. Its hidden object is to strike a deadly blow against the penal penalties of the antitrust act of 1890; and I believe, and I say, that if this bill, with all due respect to the legal ability of my friend from Maine, should become a law in its present shape, it will go far to repeal, by implication, the criminal provisions of the antitrust law of 1890. Why not allow me or some one to amend the bill so that there will be no question about it?

Let me say in this connection that it is remarkable that no Attorney-General, under the provisions of the antitrust law of 1890, has ever instituted a single prosecution to enforce the criminal penalties of that act, and I believe, and I stand up here and assert and defy successful contradiction, that if the Attorney-General would enforce in one prosecution the criminal provisions of the antitrust act of 1890 and put one trust magnate behind prison bars for violation of law it would do more to effectually curb the power and the sway of the trusts than all of the oratory and all of the little pop-gun bills will ever be able to do.

I do not believe this bill that is now before this House, this so-called substitute bill, this bill which really does nothing, will be any more effectual, so far as the enforcement of any remedy is concerned, than if the gentleman from Maine should try to stop the progress of a mad elephant on the rampage with a putty blower. I do not believe this bill is going to accomplish what the country demands. I believe it is really liable to accomplish harm.

I think there ought to be some provision in this bill similar to that which the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] put in his bill—that nothing in this bill should in any way repeal any law now on the statute books against the trusts, so that no matter how the courts may construe this bill, if it becomes a law, there shall be nothing in it by which any part of the civil penalties or the criminal penalties of the act of 1890 shall be repealed or eliminated.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill is a mere makeshift. It is a mere sop to the people. It is what the Republicans always do. They talk all right at the moment. They talk all right during the crisis. They talk all right before the election, but after the crisis is passed, after the election is over, when they begin to legislate they legislate so as to do no injury to those who sustain them, to those who aid them, to those who make large contributions to their campaign fund in every political campaign. It can not be successfully denied, and it will not be truthfully denied, that every trust in this country, from the greatest to the smallest, in every Congressional, State, and national campaign, makes contributions, some great, some small, to the Republican campaign fund.

I want to say that on account of that fact the intelligent people of this country know that there will never be enacted into law by the Republican party any legislation that will do material harm or substantial injury to the great monopolies, to the great criminal trusts, and to the great corporate wealth of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SULZER. I can only yield a moment—only for a question.

Mr. SIMS. In view of the characterization which you have given this bill, why should any Democrat vote for it?

Mr. SULZER. In my opinion, and I speak only for myself, I care not whether the Democrats vote for this bill or against it. I think it is the poorest apology for antitrust legislation that the mighty legal mind of the gentleman from Maine could possibly devise, and I think it has made a great giant—a valiant trust fighter—look exceedingly small, almost a pigmy. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, it is now in order for me to say that I very profoundly regret that I am obliged to subsist hereafter, both from a physical, material, mental, and political standpoint, under the supreme displeasure of my distinguished friend who represents Tammany on the floor of this House—not a trust buster, but a trust annihilator.

Now, it was suggested to me by a distinguished gentleman on the floor of this House that in the course of the speech I made yesterday, if I could find time, that I make a complimentary reference to a certain bill introduced here by a gentleman by the name of SULZER, of New York, on the 11th day of December, 1902. Well, now, having only one hour and twenty-one minutes, and being frequently interrupted, I did not reach that stage in my speech where I intended to make the complimentary reference to that bill offered by this gentleman.

Mr. SULZER. Do it now. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. So that its author found it necessary this morning to make, himself, the complimentary reference to that bill. [Laughter.]

Now, I have a word or two to say about that bill, because I was obliged in all good faith to say to the gentleman that while I was willing to suggest that he had introduced that bill, and that it contained some of the provisions contained in the bill introduced by myself at the first of the last session of Congress, about one year anterior to the time when he introduced his bill, but that there were some provisions in that bill to which I could not give my absolutely hearty assent.

Now, I very much regret that. The gentleman from New York this morning takes up this bill, which assumes that there is a trust somewhere. This makes it incumbent on me to make some reference to it, though I can not go fully into the details of it in five minutes. I suggest, in relation to the salient provisions of this measure, that it was drawn, as I understand, by an eminent antitrust lawyer and indorsed by a leading lawyer of the bar of New York. Now, that being the case, I am going to read a legal proposition in this bill which has been voted for twice on this floor by every one of our Democratic friends—I take it without reading it. Now I will read a paragraph of this bill.

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any civil suit or criminal proceedings.

What does that mean?

Mr. SULZER. I will tell the gentleman, if he will yield to me.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. One moment. That is not even common sense. It is not even common nonsense.

The "claim" that testimony would incriminate should not be used against the party testifying.

That provision in the bill simply discloses the fact that the man who drew it did not know how to use language to express a coherent idea. [Laughter.] It is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing. That is all I have to say in reply to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER rose.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, wait a moment.

Mr. SULZER. I thought you had concluded.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is all I have to say so far as that section of the bill is concerned.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think the distinguished lawyer who drew it and the distinguished gentleman from New York, eminent as a legal luminary, had embraced an idea which he might have had in his mind and might think he thought, or that he thought. He probably intended to provide that the evidence given should not be used against the party giving it in any civil trial or criminal proceeding, and the witness should not, therefore, be excused from testifying. That would not have been worthy of a student in a law school, it would be so clearly unconstitutional, and I have here the authorities to establish the proposition. There are other provisions demonstrating that it is the most utterly preposterous and hysterical piece of legislation ever suggested in this or any other body. I can not go into the details.

Mr. MORRIS. Are these the complimentary remarks you referred to?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. These are the complimentary references I intended to make. Now, a man that has brought in that kind of a bill, who brought it before the subcommittee, and made a speech upon and urged it, is pretty much like the young man that Lincoln spoke of when he described a speech a young man brought to him which he could not very well eulogize, and when the young man asked him what he thought about it he said that he "thought that for a man who liked that kind of a speech that was about the kind of a speech he would like." [Great laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And the man that likes that kind of a bill, it is about the kind of a bill he would like. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to reply to the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. One amendment is pending, on which debate has been exhausted.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire five minutes, and I ask unanimous consent for five minutes to reply to the gentleman from Maine.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, to strike out the last word.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that amendment, and move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a few words in reply to the gentleman from Maine. In referring to my antitrust bill, the gentleman from Maine, it appears to me, makes an argument exactly like a trust lawyer. He seems to have changed his mind in regard to it. I do not think his argument was very sound or very logical, and it even lacked the merit of being original.

But that is to be expected from the gentleman from Maine. He has flopped on the trust question, and we may now and hereafter look for all kinds of vagaries regarding this matter from the once great and only and original trust buster. [Laughter.]

The gentleman has pointed out in my antitrust bill only one defect, and that defect is in this provision: "The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceedings." The gentleman claims, as I understand him, that that provision is unconstitutional.

I know the gentleman is learned in the law, but with all due respect I take issue with him on that point. As a matter of fact, that provision is taken verbatim from law now on the statute book and it has been held constitional. It has been held over and over again that where a witness gives testimony incriminating himself as well as others, by the way of information or confession, that the district attorney representing the Government can extend the witness immunity. In many States the law does it. That is exactly what this provision does; so there is nothing to that objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SULZER. Yes. I have only a few minutes—it must be brief.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I only want to ask the gentleman one question. Is it not a fact that the bill as drawn now, with reference to the section you are discussing, nullifies the entire bill, and that all the trust magnates need to do is to let one of their coconfederates go upon the stand, and immediately upon his taking the stand he is absolved from all penalties?

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is referring to the bill of the gentleman from Maine. Mr. Chairman, if that is the only provision of my antitrust bill that the gentleman from Maine can criticise, then his criticism is very weak, and very lame, and very impotent. I undertake to say that this antitrust bill introduced by me has been pending before this House for over a year, and no Republican has ever criticised it in any way, except to say that it was too drastic, or that the penalties were too severe. And why should not the penalties be severe?

If you are going to curb the power of the trusts and monopolies, if you want to stop their sway, if you want to regulate them, you have got to make the penalties fit the crime. This bill of mine makes the penalties fit the crime. Under the terms of the bill proposed here in this substitute so-called antitrust bill the penalties do not fit the crime; and if the bill were a law they are so impotent that if they were enforced they would not check one iota the criminal sway of the trusts.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], when my bill was offered as an amendment to the department of commerce bill, said it was crude, and subsequently admitted he had not read it, and the gentleman from Maine simply reiterates what the gentleman from Illinois said before in that respect.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SULZER. I can not yield. The gentleman from Maine simply reiterated what the gentleman from Illinois said several weeks ago. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that in my judgment, so far as this proposed substitute will prove to be an effectual remedy against the trusts, it amounts to nothing. It is throwing dust in the eyes of the people. Every trust lawyer in the country is laughing in his sleeve at our spending days here discussing this bill to curb the power of the trusts when they know that it will be absolutely impotent to do a single thing against the trusts.

If you want to do something against the trusts why did you not adopt the bill introduced by the gentleman from Maine originally? That would have done some good. That at least was a step in the right direction. Why did you take out the words "all corporations?" Why did you take out the words "true report?" No one on this floor has answered that question, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine when he takes the floor again to say why he struck out those words.

In conclusion, I want to say that as a trust buster the gentleman from Maine is a failure. He does not now seem to be a bit bigger than his party, and everybody knows his party is owned and controlled by the trusts. The gentleman from Maine talked much against the trusts, he labored hard for a long time, but, different from the mountain that labored, he did not even bring forth a small antitrust mouse. It is a pitiable case—a sad, sad ending of all his greatness. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment at the end of section 1——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Georgia to suspend while the Chair makes a statement. The Chair would like to ask the cooperation of the members of the committee in carrying out the spirit of the rule to give all members of the committee an opportunity to offer and discuss their amendments. The parliamentary situation, as the Chair understands it, is this: The substitute is in the nature of an amendment to the original bill. All amendments, therefore, are amendments in the second degree. No amendment to an amendment which would be in the third degree is in order. All amendments are entitled to one argument by the member proposing the amendment and to one argument in opposition. All other arguments or amendments to amendments are out of order. Formal amendments are in order and the same rule applies. The Chair will endeavor to recognize members according to the custom of the House, recognizing the members of the committee according to their seniority on the committee. After the members of the committee have been recognized for amendment, all other members will be recognized, alternating from one side of the House to the other, and each section when perfected by these amendments is then subject to a motion for a substitute. The Chair makes this statement in order that the business of the House may be expedited.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask whether the proposition just read has been offered in the nature of a substitute, or as an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has offered an amendment to section 1, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The reason for asking this question is because I wished to be recognized for an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The present order is the perfection of section 1. The gentleman from Tennessee has sent to the Clerk's desk a substitute for the entire section, which will be voted upon when the section has been perfected by amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding:
"Any corporation which shall neglect or refuse to make such returns shall be deemed guilty of an offense against the United States, and, upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000."

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, may I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at the end of section 4, page 9, in the last paragraph of that section, he will find the penal provisions of this bill. I have an amendment which I propose to offer at that point which, I think, substantially covers the gentleman's idea. Will the gentleman be kind enough to look at the provision at the top of page 9?

Mr. FLEMING. I have glanced at that, and I have offered my amendment in the fear that this Committee of the Whole may never reach page 9.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I will ask unanimous consent to introduce such a provision.

Mr. FLEMING. All I desire is that the substance of that amendment shall go into the bill, and if the gentleman in charge of the bill will agree——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will do my best to reach it.

Mr. FLEMING. To accept the amendment, there is no reason why it should not come in right here. I have copied the language of the committee as it appears in section 9, but so as to apply to persons as well as corporations. Evidently the penalty ought to apply to corporations as well as persons; otherwise, my amendment follows the language used at the end of the fourth section.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the gentleman will appreciate this fact, that the provision more properly appears in the portion of the bill defining the punishment of various offenses under the bill.

Mr. FLEMING. Suppose we should never reach section 4?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will ask unanimous consent of the House before the committee rises to perfect that part of the section. That is the best I can do.

A MEMBER. Some one may object.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will ask unanimous consent now for an amendment to go in at the point I have indicated.

Mr. FLEMING. I yield for that purpose. The gentleman's purpose is all right.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then, if the committee please, I will ask unanimous consent to strike out, on page 9 of the bill, in line 1, the words "person who" and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporation which," and to insert, after the word "returns," at the end of the line, the words "any person who shall neglect or refuse to."

Mr. FLEMING. That will cover the purpose completely.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to have that amendment made now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that section 4, on page 9, may be amended as he has stated.

Mr. FLEMING. I hope that consent will be given.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. FLEMING] has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. FLEMING. I do not.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not think the gentleman intends to object.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent, and I hope I shall not be placed in the position of objecting. I desired to ask a question of the gentleman this morning, and he three times declined to yield.

Mr. FLEMING. I will yield for a question if the gentleman wishes to ask one of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will ask it of the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman from Maine said that he would consent to strike out the word "person," in line 1, page 9, and insert "corporation." Now, I want to know whether the gentleman will accept as a substitute for his amendment an amendment inserting the words "any corporation or person?"

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is the effect of my proposition.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; the gentleman said he would strike out the word "person" and insert "corporation." I wish to have inserted the words "corporation or person."

Mr. FLEMING. That would not make good grammatical sense in that connection. The gentleman from Maine has the amendment now in proper form.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think I can explain to the gentleman from New York the effect of my proposed amendment. The section now reads:

Any person who shall neglect or refuse to make returns, etc.

The fact is that under the bill returns are not required of persons. Therefore I propose to strike out "person who" and to insert "corporation which," and then to insert after the word "returns" the words "any person who shall neglect or refuse to."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why not say, then, "any corporation or officer thereof who shall refuse to make returns," so that we may either prosecute the corporation as a corporation or may prosecute the officers charged with the duty of making these returns?

Mr. FLEMING. Either the person or the corporation can be prosecuted under this bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not know that I have any objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York to insert the words "corporation or officer thereof."

Mr. FLEMING. The language first proposed by the gentleman from Maine is correct, and it would be best to leave it in that form.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have no particular objection to the language "any corporation or officer thereof."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Why not say "any corporation which, or officer or agent thereof who, shall neglect or refuse," etc.? I want the language broad enough to reach anyone who may be required to make these returns and may fail to do so.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I can not agree to that. We do not require the agent of the corporation to make returns under the bill. The corporation, as a matter of fact, is the only entity upon whom the duty of making returns devolves, and it is the corporation only that can be in default, as a matter of fact.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. There are officers and agents required by this bill to make certain returns and answer certain inquiries, and my purpose is to reach not only the corporations as an entity, but to reach the officers or agents who are required to attend upon the Commission or to make returns, or to make any other statements required by this bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, the language that I suggest for the amendment covers exactly the ground desired by the gentleman from New York. I drew it carefully for that specific purpose.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What can be the objection to inserting the word "agent?"

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not think the word "agents" ought to go in there.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend permit me? I think the word "notwithstanding" would be good to put in the bill, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And also add the words "and to the contrary." Mr. Chairman, I am entirely frank with the gentleman from New York. If the gentleman will take my copy of the bill, with the amendment I suggest, and read it over carefully, I have no question that he will be satisfied with that result.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I will do that with pleasure.

Mr. FLEMING. This section is open to amendment when we reach it, and if there is any trouble about it it can be arranged then, if we ever reach it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from New York if that is satisfactory?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But the gentleman before suggested "any corporation or officer thereof who shall"—that is the amendment he suggested.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The amendment I suggest is "any corporation which," because it is the corporation. The duty is not imposed on any officer. It is the corporation. The corporation files the return and I impose the penalty upon the party upon whom the duty rests. There is no question about the legal scope of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia may be incorporated into section 4, on page 9.

Mr. FLEMING. No, Mr. Chairman; not precisely as offered by me. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendment read by himself should now be incorporated in that section.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The one sent by me to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that section 4 on page 9 may be amended as the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, line 1, strike out the words "person who" and insert in lieu thereof the words "corporation which;" and insert after the word "return," in said line 1, the words "and any person who shall neglect or refuse to."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to the omission of the words "or officer thereof." He agreed to accept those words and to insert them.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent made by the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know from the gentleman from Maine whether the words that we agreed to shall be inserted, namely, "or officer thereof."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No. I tried to make myself plain. I do not think the words "or officer thereof" ought to go in there. It disturbs the legislative draft; they are unnecessary and would be pure surplusage. The section is absolutely complete from a legal standpoint to accomplish the purpose the gentleman has in his mind.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from New York will not raise any objection at this stage, but will let that much go in anyway.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But I can not see any objection to inserting the words I suggest.

Mr. FLEMING. But the gentleman from Maine sees no necessity for it. The gentleman from New York can offer an amendment when we reach the section, if we ever get there.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not want to discuss the amendment or to take up the time of the committee, but I understood the gentleman from Maine before to accept those words.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. At first I took that suggestion, but on looking the section over, to be entirely frank with the gentleman from New York, I find they are entirely unnecessary. They add nothing to it except to import an element of confusion into the section. "Corporation" covers everything that can possibly be covered and it accomplishes the purpose of the gentleman from New York, and that is all I ought to be asked to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment offered by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute by adding the following:

SEC. —. That hereafter the following articles may be imported into the United States free of all duty:

"1. Steel rails, structural steel, tin plate, iron pipe, and other metal tubular goods; wire nails, cut nails, horseshoe nails, barb wire, and all other wire; cotton ties, plows, and all other agricultural tools and implements.

"2. Borax, borate of lime, and boracic acid.

"3. Paris green.

"4. Paper and pulp for the manufacture of paper.

"5. Salt.

"6. Plate glass and window glass."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CLAYTON. I move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is recognized.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I make the point of order that the proposed section is not in order. It is not germane to the section nor germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine wish to be heard?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not care to discuss it. There is not a suggestion in it that relates to anything except the revenue power of the Government, purely a taxing proposition. The amendment does not either directly or indirectly, by word or otherwise, refer even to a corporation, to the filing of a return, to publicity, or anything of that sort. This is an amendment to this section. This section relates entirely to publicity on the part of corporations, entirely independent of the question of the kind of business they are engaged in, and is based upon the commerce clause of the Constitution, and this proposed section is simply a proposition to amend the revenue law tacked onto this section.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I offer the amendment in the form of a new section. The original bill had a tax provision in it, and this is a regulation of commerce between the States. This bill is supposed to operate under that provision of the Constitution. Commerce can be regulated by the exercise of the taxing power, and inasmuch as we are undertaking to regulate interstate commerce I think the amendment is entirely germane.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman accept an amendment to put beef and coal on the free list?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will let the amendment stand as it is. I do not wish to disturb it. Coal is already on the free list.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I mean beef and cattle.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We are on the point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this being a new section, the first business before the committee is the perfecting of section 1.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask that it be considered as pending subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that it may be considered as pending.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I reserve the point of order and I object to its being considered as pending. We will take this in accordance with its parliamentary rights, whatever they may be. I reserve all my rights under this proposed amendment, whatever they may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment, being in the nature of a separate section, will come up after the perfection of this section.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I now call up my amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to offer an amendment to this section before we leave it.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. THAYER. I understood the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine yielded the floor.

Mr. THAYER. I did not understand that he yielded.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the words "at the election of the Attorney-General," in line 18, page 7, and insert the language which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 18, strike out the words "at the election of the Attorney-General" and insert "by any person, firm, corporation, or association, or by the Attorney-General of the United States in the name of and in behalf of the United States."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this language is taken almost literally from section 13 of the antitrust bill which passed the House of the Fifty-sixth Congress, June, 1900, and met an anticipated death at the hands of a Republican Senate; albeit that body had plenty time to have considered and passed that or some other similar bill if the Republicans had desired or dared to fight or outlaw their allies, the trusts.

Facing an election—the Presidential campaign of 1900—that bill was killed and the trusts continued the Republicans in power. "Existing" trusts are not to be molested in this pending bill. Only those "hereafter" organized are covered by this bill, that the "existing" trusts may not desert the Republicans next election.

Section 13 of this antitrust bill reported to the House May 19, 1900, and passed by the House in June, 1900, reads as follows:

SEC. 13. That any civil or criminal proceeding or prosecution authorized under this act in the name of or in behalf of the United States, or otherwise, may be begun and prosecuted by any person, firm, corporation, or association or by any officer of the United States, in the name of and on behalf of the United States.

You can easily see that my amendment is practically the same as this section, omitting the words covering "criminal proceedings or prosecutions," which that bill provided for, but which this bill in this section omits, as its friends do not want to hurt the trusts in that way. The report of the Judiciary Committee on the bill which passed the House in June, 1900, very correctly and truly sets forth the reason for section 13 of that bill, which changed the existing law—the antitrust act of June 2, 1890—which puts in the hands of the Attorney-General of the United States—then Mr. Griggs—the exclusive right to say when such suits can and can not be filed, though the people may differ with him in either event.

This I have always contended was wrong, a fatal defect and real weakness in this law. The people, I insist, and have always insisted, should have the right to enjoin or indict, without waiting to ask anyone, high or low, and in substance this report of May 19, 1900, so reads, as follows:

Complaint has been made that the right to enforce the provisions of the Sherman Act (June 2, 1890) was confined to the Department of Justice. As the end desired is thorough and effective enforcement of the law, irrespective of the source from which complaint comes, it has been thought proper to authorize any person, firm, corporation, or association to begin and prosecute proceedings thereunder. To accomplish this, section 13 is inserted in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have already read section 13, here alluded to. You can see I use in my amendment words of that section—to wit, "any person, firm, corporation, or association," etc.—and add "the Attorney-General of the United States," so as to cover the case as fully in this bill as did the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], who wrote this report in May, 1900, ably assisted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD].

If it was right and proper to have this section 13 in the antitrust bill in May and June, 1900, it is right and proper now to have it in this bill in substance, for the salient reasons then given still exist. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another and important reason why the "people" should be given the right to enforce this law.

This bill proposes to give the Attorney-General of the United States a great deal of new and heavy work to do; a great deal more than he has had heretofore, and certainly much more than he has done heretofore.

Give the people a chance. They will take the laboring oar in their own hands, and gladly, and thus do much of the work that will otherwise fall on the shoulders of the Attorney-General.

This bill, however, does not propose to burden the Attorney-General as much as the bill of May 19, 1900.

The pending measure provides—

That every corporation which may be hereafter organized shall, at the time of engaging in interstate commerce—

do so and so. It does not apply to any one or "all" existing corporations doing interstate business, but to corporations to be "hereafter" organized—"hereafter"—whereas the Overstreet bill, I will call it, reported May 19, 1900, provided—

SEC. 9. That every corporation, association, joint stock company, or partnership doing business in any State in the United States—shall do so and so.

On this section 9 the report of the committee, at pages 1, 2, and 3, prepared by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], says:

To-day [May 19, 1900] combinations exist and control production and prices in many industries. Labor is affected, competition prevented, and industrial enterprise seriously injured.

The evil effects of trusts, monopolies, and combinations are most apparent and most disastrous where competition is destroyed and the field of trade and commerce left to the control of the concerns which by such illegal conduct have made themselves masters of production and price. To properly protect the field of competition against the ravages of monopolistic greed without obstructing the growth incident to honest energy, intelligence, and economy, as evidenced in the management of legitimate enterprises, the committee recommend an extension of the provisions of the act of July 2, 1890.

Section 9, for the purposes of interstate commerce, declares illegal all corporations, associations, joint stock companies, and partnerships when organized, owned, managed, or carrying on business for purposes declared illegal by the common law; that they may be perpetually enjoined and restrained from carrying on interstate commerce; they and their officers forbidden the use of the mails in furtherance of their illegal purposes, and their products forbidden interstate transportation.

By section 9 then "all" these concerns were to be outlawed; but by this bill, section 1, only those concerns not yet in existence—"hereafter organized"—are to be regulated; "all existing concerns doing the unholy work against the masses "should pass" unmolested under the present or Littlefield bill, but were outlawed under the Overstreet or Littlefield bill of May, 1900.

Were "all" these concerns "bad things" in 1900?

Are all these concerns "good things" in 1903?

The Republican party says "yes" to both questions, while the Democrats say "no," and still want "all" such trusts regulated.

Mr. Chairman, there is another and better reason why the people should have a chance to enforce this law. Attorney-General Knox, in a recent report, shows that he has filed only three suits under the act of June 21, 1890—one March 10, one May 10, and one October 15, 1902—just in front of an election, when "trusts" were in issue before the people. He has permitted three suits to be filed in the United States under the antitrust law of 1890, while he filed none under the law incorporated in the Wilson tariff law reenacted by the Dingley tariff law—not a single case.

Under Attorney-General Griggs, General Knox shows there were three injunction suits filed—one June 7, 1897; one December 16, 1897, and one May 8, 1897.

General Knox does not state that a single indictment was had in any of these six cases, not one. Here is his report, gentlemen; read it for yourselves.

I am not going outside of the record the Attorney-General has sent to Congress. I am sticking to the four corners of it. This is a poor showing, gentlemen, for the "Department of Justice"—out of "131 or 141 interstate trusts or combines in the United States," as found by the late Industrial Commission—and argues eloquently for my amendment that the people may be allowed to enforce this law, and that the labors of the Attorney-General of the United States be not unnecessarily increased.

I am talking for the sufferers of this country, the people of this country, the people who are to-day without food to eat, without coal to cook it, without coal to warm their little babes. Give the people, who suffer, the right to go into the court; give the people in California, in Maryland, in Tennessee, or in Maine—everywhere—who suffer, the right to go into the court to enjoin, indict, or sue for damages; have punishment meted out to the man who fails to obey the provisions of this act.

The Attorney-General may not want to go into court to prosecute. He may refuse to go into the court and enjoin or indict, and that clogs the machinery, blocks the people. He may do as he is doing now—nothing. There are many cases with a great many facts before him now, but he acts not. We should not permit him to go on in this way.

Now, the language of my amendment is taken from the language of the bill brought into this House and reported on by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], and will do that very thing. I want to give the people a chance in this bill to act when they want to act. I want to put it in the power of the Attorney-General of the United States regardless of who he is, whether Republican or Democrat, the right to do the same thing. That is all this amendment does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment that the gentleman from Tennessee suggests may perhaps in terms be included in a section reported in a bill during last Congress. That bill was reported by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], from whose report the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee has read. I have not had the pleasure this morning of examining with care that section of that bill or the report. My recollection of it, however, is that the provision to which my distinguished friend refers relates more particularly to suits for damages and penalties.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. "Civil or criminal proceeding or prosecution" is the language.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That all may be true. This provision which was reported in that bill was not suggested or urged by any gentleman upon the other side of the House as one which might well be a part of this measure. It is perhaps due to my Democratic colleagues on the committee to say that they did not feel called upon to urge the adoption of any such proposition. The committee had all these various bills, propositions, and suggestions against trusts under consideration, and on mature deliberation, at least at this session, on this bill we thought that this provision was not necessary.

In reference to my friend's suggestion about overloading the Department of Justice, it may be proper and fair to say this, that there are now pending before at least one or two committees propositions that will increase the personnel of the Department of Justice, and to place within its control much larger sums of money than they heretofore have had for the purpose of enforcing this particular legislation; so that I think no apprehension need be entertained on the part of anybody that there will be any difficulty in collecting these penalties. This is simply a penalty imposed upon officers and agents who are required to testify but do not answer the questions, and corporations where they do not make returns. It is clearly a criminal penalty, and for these reasons the committee did not feel, and it was not suggested to them that this provision, somewhat unusual in its character, was necessary to be adopted as a part of this bill. Therefore, I feel obliged, with all respect to my friend from Tennessee, to object to it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend let me read the language?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; I do not think that will illuminate the situation. I understand the gentleman's proposition, and I have no doubt he suggested it in perfect good faith. I have been trying to give in a candid way the reasons the committee had for not incorporating any such provision in the bill. Therefore I think the committee ought to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. Now does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to ask me a question?

Mr. THAYER. I did. I did not fully understand the amendment that was adopted on page 9. I understood the first part of it, but the last part of it I did not catch. I ask the gentleman from Maine if he thought what the effect would be to place a penalty on a corporation that refuses to testify——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to cut my friend from Massachusetts off.

Mr. THAYER. Then do not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee (continuing). But I believe debate on this amendment is exhausted. I want to hurry along.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts to ask a question in good faith.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. We will reach that in regular order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts, and it is a question between the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. THAYER. I do this in the best of good faith, because I am in favor of the spirit of the amendment. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether he has considered whether that would go into operation by the language he has used. It may be the latter part of the amendment cures it, but I have not it at hand, so as to read it. You say any corporation which shall neglect to make return and attend and testify. Now, who is to be convicted?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I put in two amendments. I put in "corporation which," and then after the word "returns" I say "any person who shall neglect or refuse to attend or testify."

Mr. THAYER. Very well.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. GILBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1 the following:

"Every act or transaction or contract made or entered into by any corporation, company, or association now or hereafter engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, which is or may be unlawful by the laws of the State which created the corporation or under whose laws such company or association may be organized, shall be unlawful in every other State or Territory, and such illegality may be pleaded in bar of any right or remedy sought by such corporation, company, or association in any of the courts of the United States."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that that amendment is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. GILBERT. One moment, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to take the attitude of usurping the functions of any members of the committee. Since I have prepared and sent that amendment to the desk I am informed that some members of the minority of the Judiciary Committee have prepared substantially the same amendment. But while I have the floor I want to take the privilege of saying that the gentleman from Maine yesterday in a very entertaining, but very unsound argument undertook to give the impression that trusts and monopolies were necessary incidents to civilization and that they had been found in the history of every age and of every country.

We all know perfectly well that during the reign of the Tudors and the Stuarts there were hundreds of monopolies created in England, but they were in every instance created by letters patent granted by the Crown, and were subsequently destroyed by law. I understand the corporations in this country now, and the monopolies that are denominated as trusts, are creatures of the law, and can be destroyed by the repeal of the pernicious laws under which they have been fostered. Several States of the Union, notably New Jersey and West Virginia, grant charters to corporations and insert in the charter that certain rights and franchises shall not be exercised within the State where they are chartered, and thus they are licensed as brigands to go abroad and depredate upon society in other States and communities.

The purpose of this amendment, if incorporated into the bill, will make every act and contract, and every transaction which is illegal by and under the law of the State which creates the charter, illegal everywhere in the United States. And it provides that that illegality may be pleaded in any of the courts of the United States in bar of any right or any remedy that the trusts may seek to enforce in any of these courts. Therefore I say that this amendment can not be objected to by a member upon this floor who in good faith means to control these trusts. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I understood that the gentleman withdrew the amendment.

Mr. GILBERT. Yes; I withdrew the amendment with the understanding that it would be offered in substance by some member of the committee.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That, of course, I do not know about.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon section 1 and amendments and substitutes therefor be closed in five minutes.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I have a substitute pending, on which I should like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] moves that all debate on the section and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has the gentleman taken charge of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has a perfect right to make that motion.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I will say to the gentleman from Maine that I do not think there is any suggestion that anybody is "taking charge of the bill," and there might be some reasons to suggest that not very much of anybody has had "charge of the bill." I wish to reach a point where amendments that we have prepared will be voted on, and I do not care to play into the hands of the gentleman from Maine or anybody else who may be disposed to fritter away time on this occasion.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me ask the gentleman, Does he undertake to intimate that "the gentleman from Maine" has been responsible for any of these delays?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I undertake to say that the suggestion of the gentleman that somebody was trying to "take charge of this bill" is entirely gratuitous, and the better sense of the gentleman from Maine and the better manners of the gentleman from Maine ought to make him aware of that fact.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I trust the gentleman knows that "the gentleman from Maine" did not intend to be personally offensive to the gentleman from Missouri. At, least if he does not appreciate that fact, the "gentleman from Maine" desires to so state.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the motion to close debate is not debatable.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I want an opportunity to offer and explain my substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to close debate takes precedence for the present.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I did not understand that my motion would prevent the gentleman from Tennessee from being heard on his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the motion of the gentleman from Missouri was to cut off all debate on amendments——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Except the five minutes the gentleman from Tennessee would be entitled to on his substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that debate on section 1 and all pending amendments and the substitute shall be closed in five minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will that cut off an opportunity to reply to the argument about to be made by the gentleman from Tennessee?

The CHAIRMAN. It will cut off everything but the five minutes' debate.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Have I the floor for those five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the question has been put on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I understood that the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to call up his substitute. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that all debate on section 1 and on pending amendments and on the proposed substitute be closed in five minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri that he extend the time to ten minutes. I do not know what the amendment may be.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I have no objection; let that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, as modified, that debate on section 1 and the pending amendments and the proposed substitute be closed in ten minutes.

The motion of Mr. DE ARMOND was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I now call up the substitute, which I have already sent to the desk, for section 1.

The proposed substitute of Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee was read, as follows:

That every corporation, joint stock company, or association, whose stockholders are not personally liable for its debts, which may hereafter be organized shall, as a condition precedent to engaging in interstate and foreign commerce, make and file with the Interstate Commerce Commission a report, under oath of its president, secretary, and treasurer, stating its name, date of organization, where and when organized, giving statutes under which it is organized and all amendments thereof; if consolidated, naming constituent companies and where and when organized, with the same information as to such constituent companies, so far as applicable, as is herein required of such corporation; if reorganized, name of original corporation or corporations, with full reference to laws under which all the reorganizations have taken place, with the same information as to all prior companies in the chain of reorganization, so far as applicable, as is herein required of such corporation; amount of bonds issued and outstanding; amount of authorized capital stock, shares into which it is divided, par value, whether common or preferred, and distinction between each; amount issued and outstanding; amount paid in; how much, if any, paid in in cash, and how much, if any, in property; if any part in property, describing in detail the kind, character, and location, with its cash market value at the time it was received in payment, giving the elements upon which said market value is based, and especially whether in whole or in part upon the capitalization of earnings, earning capacity, or economies, with the date and the cash price paid therefor at its last sale; the name and address of each officer, managing agent, and director; a true and correct copy of its articles of incorporation; a full, true, and correct copy of any and all rules, regulations, and by-laws adopted for the management and control of its business and the direction of its officers, managing agents, and directors.

Nothing herein contained shall be construed as relieving any corporation from making, in addition to the foregoing, such returns as are now required by the "Act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all amendments thereof; but the provisions of this act as to signing and making oath to returns and making answers on oath to written inquiries shall be applicable to returns and such answers made under said act and amendments thereof.

So far as any return may be a duplicate of one already filed, that fact may be stated, and the details which are in such case duplicates need not be repeated. Upon its being made to appear to the satisfaction of the Interstate Commerce Commission that without fault on its part it is impracticable for such corporation to furnish any of the items aforesaid, it may, by a written order of said Interstate Commerce Commission, be excused from furnishing such item or items.

Said Interstate Commerce Commission shall cause to be prepared a blank return for the use of such corporations, containing the foregoing requirements, and shall make such rules and regulations as may, in its judgment, be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The president, treasurer, and a majority of the directors of such corporation shall make oath in writing on said return that said return is true. The treasurer, or other officer of such corporation having the requisite knowledge, shall answer on oath all inquiries that may be made in writing on the direction of said Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to said return. Wherever the word "corporation" is used in this bill it shall include joint stock companies and associations where stockholders are not personally liable for its debts.

That if such corporation, joint-stock company, or association shall engage in interstate or foreign commerce without first complying with the terms and conditions above recited, or if any corporation now organized shall fail or refuse to make such report on the 31st day of July, 1908, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, then the interstate or foreign commerce in which these corporations or associations may hereafter engage shall be, and is hereby, declared unlawful.

And,

If it shall appear from the returns made to the Interstate Commerce Commission or from any information it may otherwise receive under the terms of this act that any corporation hereafter organized is overcapitalized, that the purpose of the organization is to control in the exercise of interstate commerce the prices of articles of common use, necessity, or consumption, then such corporation is forbidden to engage in interstate or foreign commerce, and all such business in which it may engage is hereby declared unlawful.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make publicity mandatory upon the part of corporations doing an interstate business. As this bill was originally drawn publicity was mandatory. Now publicity can only be had when the Interstate Commerce Commission requests the returns to be made by a corporation, and no penalty whatever is attached for the failure to make such returns.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman excuse me just a moment? Is that the impression which the gentleman has of the pending bill, that there is no penalty imposed for failure to file a return?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Let me get through, please. I decline now to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee prefers not to be interrupted.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. The penalty in the bill is, of course, that the Attorney-General may restrain these corporations after they are requested by the Interstate Commerce Commission to make these returns, and fail to do so; but there is nothing in the bill, from one end of it to the other, which is mandatory upon the question of publicity. If publicity is right, if publicity is a good thing, if publicity is the first step to trust regulation, then why not in the interests of the people make publicity mandatory upon the part of corporations doing an interstate business?

Now, Mr. Chairman, the second feature of this substitute is in relation to overcapitalization. On yesterday when the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] was making his speech, I asked him, when he was speaking of the evils of overcapitalization, what remedy he had to offer, and that question the gentleman from Maine never answered. Now, I want to read from a speech by Attorney-General Knox at the Chamber of Commerce at Pittsburg, the speech being made on the commerce clause of the Constitution, and I want to say it is the most valuable contribution to the literature on the trust question that has yet been made in this country by any man. He says:

The conspicuous noxious features of trusts existent and possible are these: Overcapitalization, lack of publicity of operation, discrimination in prices to destroy competition, insufficient personal responsibility of officers and directors for corporate management, tendency to monopoly, and lack of appreciation in their management of their relations to the people, for whose benefit they are permitted to exist.

Overcapitalization is the chief of these, and the source from which the minor ones flow. It is the possibility of overcapitalization that furnishes the temptations and opportunities for most of the others. Overcapitalization does not mean large capitalization or capitalization adequate for the greatest undertakings. It is the imposition upon an undertaking of a liability without a corresponding asset to represent it. Therefore overcapitalization is a fraud upon those who contribute the real capital, either originally or by purchase, and the efforts to realize dividends thereon from operations is a fraudulent imposition of a burden upon the public. When a property worth a million dollars upon all the sober tests of value is capitalized at five millions and sold to the public, it is rational to assume that its purchasers will exert every effort to keep its earnings up to the basis of their capitalization. When the inevitable depression comes, wages must be reduced, prices enhanced, or dividends foregone. As prices are naturally not increased but lowered in dull periods, it usually resolves itself into a question of wages or dividends.

While this condition may exist under any circumstances, it is exaggerated by overcapitalization in the illustrating case five to one. The overcapitalized securities enter into the general budget of the country, are bought and sold, rise and fall, and they fluctuate between wider ranges and are more sensitive in proportion as they are further removed from intrinsic values, and, in short, are liable to be storm centers of financial disturbance of far-reaching consequence. They also, in the same proportion, increase the temptation to mismanagement and manipulation by corporate administrators.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Maine what objection he has to a provision which will require all corporations hereafter organized that shall appear from the returns to be overcapitalized not to engage in interstate-commerce business? What objection can the gentleman have to that?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman wish an answer now, or will he wait and permit me to answer in my own time?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I would prefer to have the gentleman answer in his own time.

That would interfere with no vested right of any stockholder or any right that a corporation may have in fraudulent stock. I think, however, Mr. Chairman, it ought to go further than that and apply to all corporations now organized, because there can be no vested right in fraud, and overcapitalization is fraud, according to the gentleman's own contention and the report of the Attorney-General. However, I limit this, so as to relieve it from the question of interference with vested rights, by having it apply only to those corporations which may hereafter be organized, so that if it should appear they are overcapitalized they shall not engage in interstate business.

Mr. Chairman, it would prevent a great corporation having no previous business from organizing, as the United States steel trust did, for the only purpose and for the express purpose of merging, combining, and coalescing kindred and rival industries into one mighty industrial unit. So I say in the interests of wise regulation, no vested right being involved at all, it is fair and just on behalf of the people to prevent these frauds that this provision relating to overcapitalization be passed into a law. Now, I know the committee have many amendments, and I do not want to take up the time that properly belongs to it in the discussion of this question, except to make the suggestions which I have.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have only a word with reference to prohibiting corporations overcapitalized from engaging in interstate commerce. I can simply repeat in substance——

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I say hereafter organized.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The question the gentleman asked me yesterday, as I remember it, was as to corporations overcapitalized engaging in interstate commerce.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. The question I asked was: "Hereafter organized?"

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It may be that the gentleman used that expression; I do not remember that he did; it may be that he did. Well, then, I will make in substance the same reply that I made to my distinguished friend yesterday; that is, that this bill does not undertake to be to that degree drastic. Now, we fully well understand that if our friends on the other side had their way, they would make this bill so drastic in all of its features that no responsible persons would be willing to accept or approve of it, though I do not mean to say that my friend from Tennessee is not sincere and conscientious in his amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I want to ask you this question, if you will permit it: What vested right would be interfered with by passing a law forbidding overcapitalization by corporations hereafter to be organized?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. There would not be any vested right; but let me give my friend this suggestion: From distinguished colleagues of the gentleman came the suggestion that when you undertook even to have publicity on the part of corporations hereafter organized, in a sense it was discriminating in favor of the existing corporations and rather tended to prevent the competition that they ought to receive.

Now, that may be entitled to some weight in connection with your suggestion. I do not make it. It came from good Democratic lawyers and good men, and it applies with vastly greater force to this suggestion you make here in this bill. Now, my friend's bill is in substance the same proposition that the House has voted down three or four times. I do not mean to say it is legally identical, but I mean in its essential purpose it is practically the same thing.

My friend is entirely in error when he says that this bill that is pending before the House does not impose any penalties upon corporations that fail to make returns. It may be that he was not present when, by unanimous consent this morning, a verbal amendment was made that accomplished that specific and precise purpose, so that the gentleman may, perhaps, not have known that fact. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, without further taking the time of the committee, I see no reason why the debate should not now close upon this amendment and the question be taken. I hope the committee will vote down the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14837. An act granting a pension to John H. Roberts.

On February 6, 1903:

H. R. 10350. An act granting a pension to Rebecca Piper; and
H. R. 8238. An act for the relief of the heirs of Mary Clark and Francis or Jenny Clark, deceased, and for other purposes.

TRUSTS.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute for section 1 of the bill, offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question being taken, the substitute was rejected.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I offer my amendment, which is on the Clerk's desk, as an independent section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers his amendment in the nature of a separate section, to follow section 1.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. To be section 2.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And I raise the point of order which I have already suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The section has already been read. The gentleman from Maine makes the point of order against the section that it is not germane.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is not in order until section 1 has been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that section 1 has already been disposed of.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; it has been disposed of.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, for the reason that I stated to the Chair, and I should like the ruling of the Chair upon that point.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the time is too short to discuss the point of order if these amendments are to be voted on. More than two-thirds of the time devoted to the five-minute rule and to amendments under that rule have already elapsed. We believe the amendment is in order, but for lack of time to discuss the pros and cons of it will have to submit it to the Chair in the way it is now presented, and ask for a prompt ruling upon it.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts rises to a parliamentary inquiry and will state it.

Mr. THAYER. I want to know how it is that we have passed section 1? I have an amendment here which I wish to propose, and which I have been endeavoring to present.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts has an amendment to section 1, we can recur to that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. By unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman from Massachusetts can return by right to section 1. The Chair has stated that section 1 would be perfected by all gentlemen wishing to present amendments.

The Chair will first rule upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine to the new section offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY]. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] makes the point of order that the section is not germane. The test which we must apply to determine whether this section is or is not germane is to be found in the second paragraph of section 7 of Rule XVI of the House:

> And no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

Now, as the time is short, the Chair will endeavor to give the reasons for his ruling very briefly.

The Chair understands that the two principal reasons for this rule are, first, to secure an orderly, logical, and serious consideration of measures pending before the committee. Second—and of still greater importance is this reason—the mover or author of a bill is entitled to have the subject presented in his bill considered in its logical entirety. Without this rule wholly irrelevant matter could be added to a bill by way of amendment, for it would oftentimes happen that an irrelevant amendment would be considered by members of the committee as of even greater importance than the subject-matter of the bill itself. This rule, as the Chair understands it, was adopted originally by parliamentary bodies especially to secure to the author or mover of a bill the logical consideration of the one subject, and the one subject alone, which he presents.

Now, the scope of the bill before the House is very plain and is set forth in the title to the original bill, which is as follows:

> Requiring all corporations engaged in interstate commerce to file returns with the Secretary of the Treasury, disclosing their true financial condition, and of their capital stock, and imposing a tax upon such as have outstanding capital stock unpaid in whole or in part.

A simple reading of the original bill and the substitute discloses that the bill and the substitute alike deal exclusively with the regulation of corporations engaged in interstate commerce.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is a plain, clear amendment of our revenue laws, having for its object the removal of the present duties on imports.

Now, it is not for the Chair to consider reasons which are solely argumentative in coming to a conclusion upon a question of this kind. It is not for the Chair to determine what would or what would not be the ultimate effect of this measure or of an amendment proposed to this measure. It is for the Chair simply to determine whether this amendment, repealing a portion of our revenue laws, is, under the language of the rule, a subject differing from that under consideration. Let us consider for a moment what would be the effect of holding in principle that this amendment is germane. If this amendment were germane, then any amendment adding to the import duty on any article would be germane. An amendment placing a tax on an article now on the free list would be germane; and in the same way the repeal of any portion of the internal-revenue taxes would be germane. The inclusion of other articles in the internal-revenue tax would be germane. So if we should open up this measure, which is a measure to regulate corporations engaged in interstate commerce, to an amendment of this nature, there would be no end to the variety of subjects which could be included in this bill.

The Chair is therefore of the opinion, from the general principles applicable to the question, that this amendment is not germane. If the Chair, however, had any doubt upon the subject, which it has not, that doubt would be removed by a decision upon a similar question, decided in the Fifty-first Congress by the late Speaker Reed. On May 1, 1890, Mr. David B. Culberson, of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, called up and the House proceeded to the consideration of the Senate bill (S. 1) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies. The House having proceeded to its consideration, Mr. Joseph D. Sayers, of Texas, moved to amend the bill by adding as section 9, the following, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That whenever the President of the United States shall be advised that a trust has been or is about to be organized for either of the purposes named in the first section of this act, and that a like product or commodity covered or proposed to be covered or handled by such trust, when produced out of the United States, is liable to an import duty when imported into the United States, he shall be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to suspend the operation of so much of the laws as impose a duty upon such product, commodity, or merchandise for such time as he may deem proper.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be observed that this was an amendment giving to the President of the United States power to suspend the import duties on certain articles of merchandise. It will be further observed that this was an amendment to the Sherman antitrust law, so called. Mr. Ezra B. Taylor, of Ohio, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane to the bill, relating as it did to the subject of revenue. Speaker Reed sustained the point of order, and the amendment was not received.

In accordance with these principles, which the Chair understands to be the fundamental principles underlying section 7 of Rule XVI, and in accordance with this decision of the late Speaker Reed, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, of course in view of the rapidity of the flight of time, and as there are many amendments which we think ought to be considered, and in view of the fact that the Chair has not decided exactly as those on this side would like, we regret that there is a limitation upon the general leave to print, so that it did not extend to the Chair as well as the House. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] In view of the number of amendments offered by the minority of the committee, and in order that they may be considered, I ask that the debate upon each amendment shall be limited to five minutes, two and a half minutes for and two and a half minutes against it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. DE ARMOND. My motion is that we now call up the amendments suggested by the minority, one after the other, that debate upon each be limited to five minutes, two and a half minutes for, and two and a half minutes against. We would like to have a vote upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the committee amendments may be taken up in their order——

Mr. DE ARMOND. The minority amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments offered by the minority be taken up in order, that the debate on each amendment be limited to two and a half minutes on a side. Is there objection?

Mr. OLMSTED. I object.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I move, Mr. Chairman, that that be the order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have to hold that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri would not be in order, altering the order of business of the House, according to the rules of the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate section:

Amend the substitute by inserting the following:

"SEC. —. The President is hereby authorized, and it shall be his duty, whenever it shall be shown to his satisfaction that by reason, wholly or materially, of the existence of the tariff or customs duty upon any article, such article, or articles of its class and kind, are monopolized or controlled by any person, organization, or combination to the detriment of the public, by proclamation to remove or suspend such duty, in whole or in part, until the next assembling of Congress, or until the abuse prompting him to such action shall have ceased."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this is clearly subject to the same point of order, I raise the point of order with reference to this amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to debate the point of order. If gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber want to perfect the bill to make effective legislation in dealing with monopolies, this amendment would go far in that direction; but I recognize the fact that the majority can uphold the ruling of the Chair, and I apprehend the Chair will rule as the Chair has before ruled, although I hope he will take back the ruling and overrule the point of order, so that we may do something to restrain the trusts.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield to me for a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Do I understand that it is the policy of the minority that the only effective way to regulate the so-called trusts is by modifying or repealing the tariff?

Mr. CLAYTON. Not by any means.

Mr. OVERSTREET. By what other method do you propose to regulate them?

Mr. CLAYTON. You go a step in that direction by sections 5, 6, 7, and 11 of this bill. You take such an effective step in that direction by these sections that I repeat the prediction here that your Republican Senate will never pass this bill with those provisions in it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman means by perfecting the bill, perfecting it in the line of his proposed amendment, to strike down a portion of the present tariff law?

Mr. CLAYTON. To enact effective legislation against the trusts.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And your idea is that to proceed in the most effective line is to strike down a portion of the present tariff law?

Mr. CLAYTON. In other words, we use the interstate-commerce power——

Mr. OVERSTREET. And the only proper legislation would be in the line you have suggested?

Mr. CLAYTON. Not the only legislation; the gentleman must not put that word into my mouth. We will use both.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman answer this question? Is it the policy of the minority that it is not necessary to modify or repeal the present tariff law in regard to the regulation of the so-called trusts?

Mr. CLAYTON. I don't quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it the policy of the minority that it is not necessary to attack the tariff law in order to reach some trusts?

Mr. CLAYTON. I think some of the trusts can be reached very effectively by a modification of the tariff law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman does not agree with some of his colleagues on that side of the Chamber.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am not responsible for you or for some gentlemen on this side. I certainly do not agree with the statements by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] this morning that there is nothing in this bill. I say there is merit in this bill, and I congratulate the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS] for putting into this bill sections 5, 6, 7, and 11. The first sections named penalized freight discriminations, and section 11 opens the courts of the country to anybody who has been discriminated against by the railroads, and authorizes him to go into the court and bring an action and recover all costs, threefold damages, and reasonable attorney's fees.

If the district attorney or the Attorney-General does not inaugurate the prosecution, the citizen can do it on his own motion. I say to you Republicans here and now that there is so much good in this bill that your party will never enact it into law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to say anything more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. In accordance with the ruling of the Chair heretofore made, the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following as an independent section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of sections 5, 6, and 7 the following:

"Each day's violation of this act shall constitute a separate and distinct offense."

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state under the bill as reported by the committee a corporation may violate this act for a day, or a month, or a year, or any number of years, and be punished only once. The amendment provides that each violation of the act shall constitute a separate and distinct offense, and that offenders shall be punishable for each day's violation. This is a provision which is almost universally inserted in penal statutes and acts of this character. I think that clearly it should be incorporated in this act—that where the corporation has violated the same it should be punished for each day during which it violates the law. I think the committee should amend this bill to that extent, and I ask the gentleman from Maine to accept the amendment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I can not agree to do that, Mr. Chairman, because in the first place there are several sections to this act. So far as many of the sections of this bill are concerned—particularly sections 6 and 7—they provide simply what is the law today, and the language of the bill is superfluous. So far as section 1 is concerned we think that we have provided already most sufficient penalties. I do not think my friend from Texas would want to have each day's failure to file returns constitute a separate offense. If that is his conception of the matter, I am not able to agree with him.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will consent, I will offer the amendment to sections 5, 6, and 7.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As to section 5, the provision would not be appropriate at all, because that applies to a continuing offense; every single rebate accepted is a separate offense.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I beg leave to differ with the gentleman. I think that the amendment would be appropriate to section 5; but, if the gentleman assents, I will offer it only to sections 6 and 7.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Section 6 is of universal application. Let me remind the gentleman of the law in regard to prosecutions for nuisance, an analogous matter, I think, to such offenses as we are now considering. Never in any law prohibiting a nuisance—at least never in my section of the country—has it been provided that every separate day during which the nuisance continued should be regarded as a separate offense, because the prosecuting officer, if he sees fit, can lay the offense for each seperate day and accomplish the result. The committee does not think this amendment would be appropriate to some of these sections, and as to others it is entirely unnecessary. For this reason I do not feel at liberty to agree to it. The committee voted it down, and I hope the House will vote it down.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HENRY of Texas, it was rejected, there being on a division (called for by Mr. HENRY of Texas)—ayes 67, noes 75.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment to come in as a separate section, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following section:

"SEC. —. Every corporation engaged in interstate commerce, wherever organized, shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of any State in which it shall carry on business as it would be if created by such State, or as citizens thereof are subject to such jurisdiction."

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think it most important for us to give jurisdiction to the State court of any State in which these corporations may be engaged in interstate commerce; and in this view of the case I think the proposed amendment ought to be adopted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to get along with this bill, I move that the debate upon this proposed section close in two minutes, and that the opposition to the amendment have those two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that on this amendment debate be closed in two minutes.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] for two minutes. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I shall not occupy half a minute. I hope that the Committee of the Whole will vote this amendment down.

The amendment of Mr. SMITH of Kentucky was rejected.

Mr. TAWNEY. I offer as a new section the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That when two or more persons, firms, or corporations engaged in the production of articles or products and the sale of the same in States other than the State in which such products or articles are produced enter into an association, combination, or agreement fixing the price at which their products, or any of them, shall be sold, and offering to purchasers of such products a rebate or premium on the amount of their purchases from such persons, firms, or corporations on condition that all of the purchases of such purchasers for a given period shall be of the products specified by such persons, firms, or corporations, members of such association or combination or parties to such agreement, then and in such case such persons, firms, or corporations shall be deemed to have formed a conspiracy against trade, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5,000.

[Mr. TAWNEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate the practical difficulties disclosed in the suggestions made by the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota. I have examined the amendment submitted by him, and while I would not undertake to state with absolute positiveness as to the legal effect of a proposition which is submitted with opportunity for only five or ten minutes' consideration on a subject so complex as this, my judgment is that the section as he has it drawn would not be constitutional. I do not think it includes the interstate-commerce feature, under which we are obliged to operate.

Now, while I would not want to be bound by any suggestion I might make on the spur of the moment as to the legal situation disclosed by my friend's suggestion, I have very little doubt but that these conditions of which he speaks and which it seems to me, in substance, amount to an agreement or contract for the purpose of creating a monopoly in that particular line of trade, is such an agreement or contract as is now within the limitations and provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. Under these circumstances I feel that I am obliged to ask the committee to decline to adopt the amendment. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. TAYLER.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the text of the amendment offered by my friend from Minnesota, but I gather from the statement made by the gentleman from Maine something of its character. Nor did I ever hear, read, or see the communications which have just been read in the hearing of the committee. I have heard that such propositions have been made, and I only arise here in my place because it might be thought strange if I say nothing when an industry which is more largely concentrated in my district than in any other part of the country is attacked. I have no relation, professional or otherwise, with this association, and have no knowledge of this agreement or proposal save as I have received it from my friend Mr. TAWNEY.

I entirely agree with what has been said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]. Whatever the character of this agreement is, it is such an agreement as is entered into and promulgated by many voluntary associations of producers in this country. It is not of the character of a trust, at which this legislation is directed. Concerns interested in it are themselves entirely independent of each other, and this is but one of the many perhaps futile efforts which from time to time are made by various industries in this country to secure unity or uniformity of prices. Whatever infirmity there is in this agreement or proposition as a matter of law, whatever injustice it may do, whatever impropriety there may be in it, can be attacked and overthrown by virtue either of the common law or of the Sherman antitrust statute.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then why has it not been done?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. If it is a violation of the State law, then under the common law and under the laws of the several States it can be reached, and if in restraint of trade among the States, it can undoubtedly be reached by invoking the provisions of the Sherman antitrust act. It may be, as here contended, monopolistic in its character and tendency, but it does not in any sense present the difficulties that the questions now before this committee have presented to us and to the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following:

"SEC. —. That in addition to the grounds of bankruptcy now existing by law, a corporation shall have committed an act of bankruptcy, and shall accordingly be subject to proceedings to adjudge it an involuntary bankrupt and wind up its affairs and distribute its assets, first, whenever it shall have issued stock in excess of the fair, reasonable value of its property; or, second, whenever it shall have given or offered to any person, association, or corporation any privilege, preference, advantage, facilities, discount, or rebate denied to or withheld from any other person, association, or corporation; or, third, whenever directly or indirectly it shall have engaged in any conspiracy or entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding to monopolize or aid in monopolizing any product of general utility, or so much thereof as to affect injuriously the general welfare, or to stifle lawful competition, or to control or affect injuriously the price of or the market for any commodity in general use or demand; or, fourth, whenever it shall have effected or attempted to effect any consolidation, combination, cooperation, undertaking, or agreement with any other corporation, association, or person, contrary to any law of the United States or of any State in which it shall do or offer to do any business."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I think that amendment ought to be adopted, but, of course, I can take no time in its discussion. I move that all debate upon that amendment be limited to one minute to those who may choose to oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment be limited to one minute.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I suppose the gentleman does not want any debate upon it, then, but simply a vote upon it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes; that is all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If that is the gentleman's wish, I will simply say this in the minute allowed—well, I will not make any suggestion on it. Of course, this is the gentleman's proposition, and all he wants is simply a vote upon it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. There is no time to debate it, of course, now.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That depends on whether you want to take the time.

Mr. DE ARMOND. We have not got it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have one minute.

A MEMBER. A half minute now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not submit the request. Is there objection to the request, that debate be limited to one minute?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have a whole minute now. I thought it was only half a minute. In that minute I simply wish to say this, that I have the most profound respect and admiration for the legal ability of my friend from Missouri, and the fact that he presents this amendment, which, in my judgment, is absolutely unconstitutional, does not in the slightest degree detract from that opinion that I entertain of his legal ability, for this reason: I have read his report, and I heard his speech yesterday. The report and the speech are both couched in that immaculate English that he always uses; but in his report and in his speech in no spot or place does he get himself up to the position of asserting that he even thinks this is constitutional. Now, for that reason I still entertain my respect for his legal opinion, and I am ready for a vote. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That any property owned or manufactured under any contract or by any trust or combination or pursuant to any conspiracy forbidden by the laws of a State, and being in the course of transportation from such State to another State, the District of Columbia, a Territory, or a foreign country, or to such State from another State, the District of Columbia, a Territory, or a foreign country, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as are provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law; and every person who shall, knowing that any property to be owned or manufactured in any of the ways above described, transport it, or cause or order, or contract for its transportation as above described, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $20,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to interfere with any proceedings in a State court for the violations of any law thereof.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad if there could be a vote upon that now without any discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding as a new section: "The facilities and instrumentalities of interstate commerce, as the terms are employed in this act, shall embrace the mails, the telegraph, and the telephone."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I hope there may be a vote upon that without discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the adoption of this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following:

"SEC. —. There is hereby levied and shall be assessed and collected annually the following taxes on all corporations, whether domestic or foreign, doing business in the United States for profit or gain, and having a capital stock of $200,000 or more, at the rate of 10 per cent on its capital stock. The amount of the capital stock of any taxable corporation for the purposes of taxation shall be estimated according to its par value fixed by the charter, or by resolution of its board of stockholders or directors, and shall include all assets owned by such corporation which are reserved or funded or set aside for the benefit of its stockholders.

"SEC. —. Those corporations are exempt from taxation under this act whose income (or profits), after the payment of necessary expenses of operations and administration thereof, is devoted exclusively to purposes of charity or religion or benevolence, or to hospital, medical, surgical, or hygienic purposes; or to education, or the promotion of the useful arts; or to scientific purposes; or to literary or musical purposes; or to public entertainment.

"SEC. —. If any corporation liable to taxation under this act shall establish to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by competent proof, under oath, that it is not engaged or about to be engaged in any way with any other corporation or person in any of the acts or combinations, conspiracies, agreements, or in any act or conduct that is prohibited in the act entitled 'An act to protect trade against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' approved July 2, 1890, or in the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States,' approved July 24, 1897, or an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, or this act, or any amendment of any of said acts, the said taxes of said corporation shall be remitted, except 1 per centum thereof, which shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. —. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, is charged with and is empowered to direct and enforce the execution of this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall make such regulations as are needful for such purpose. All laws applicable to the collection of internal-revenue taxes by the United States, whether civil or criminal, shall apply to corporations that are taxable under this act and to their officers and directors, and to the enforcing of the provisions hereof."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend ment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask for a vote on it now.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To take no time in debate?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not want any time whatever. We have other amendments that we want to offer.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is it not too late, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had arisen, and in the colloquy between the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Maine he was not heard.

Mr. OLMSTED. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. Section 7 of Rule XVI makes it out of order to introduce an entirely new subject into a bill under color of an amendment.

The original bill proposes a tax upon corporations engaged in interstate commerce having unpaid capital stock outstanding. This bill relates entirely to corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and prohibits them from making unlawful discriminations or entering into unlawful or injurious combinations to control prices, etc. That is all right. It is also proper to control such corporations or trusts by way of taxation. But the gentleman from Alabama introduces an entirely new subject. This proposed amendment imposes a tax of 10 per cent on the entire capital stock of every corporation, big and little, in the United States, whether engaged in interstate commerce or not. It imposes an annual tax of 10 per cent upon the capital stock of every gas company, every street-railway company, every electric-light company, every water company, savings institution, bank, insurance company, newspaper printing corporation, and every other form of corporation, though not engaged in interstate commerce nor constituting a trust nor in any way violating the provisions of this act. Every little incorporated shoe factory, or cheese factory, or furniture or carriage factory would be called upon under the gentleman's amendment to pay this tax.

Little companies that are not trusts, but are trying to do business in competition with trusts, must, under this amendment, pay 10 per cent tax. Very few of the corporations I have named earn as much as 10 per cent per annum. This proposed tax would ruin them. It would bankrupt 50 small corporations in my district, not one of which has any relation to a trust. If the gentleman wishes to tax trusts only, let him offer an amendment to that effect, but this goes away beyond that and would practically dry up business done in opposition to trusts, as well as much that does not concern them at all. His proposition is too broad to be considered as an amendment, where debate is limited to five minutes upon either side. Let him offer it as an independent bill, so that full discussion may be had. As an amendment it is not germane to the pending bill, because it introduces a new subject affecting corporations not engaged in interstate commerce. The taxation of corporations which are not, in any sense of the word, trusts is not in order as an amendment to a purely antitrust bill.

The CHAIRMAN. In accordance with the principles heretofore laid down, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. I call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill and say to him if he will consent to insert the word "person" after the word "corporation" in the section I will withdraw the amendment and save the time of the Clerk in reading, and then we can get a vote. Insert the word "person" before the word "corporation." That is all this amendment does. I copied the language from the bill and make it apply to persons as well as corporations.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, of course I think the gentleman from Georgia fully well understands, taking into account the action of the committee upon this very section and amendment, that he would hardly expect me to take the responsibility on the part of the committee of accepting this amendment. Of course the gentleman from Georgia well knows what my individual views are.

Mr. FLEMING. We have only four minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Shall I answer your suggestion? The gentleman knows what my individual views are in relation to this proposition. This amendment was handed by me to the committee and discussed in the committee, and after a full discussion the committee declined to insert the word "person" in section 6; and with this situation in the committee the gentleman can see that I could not feel at liberty at this stage of the proceedings to agree to that amendment.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, it being understood from the statement of the gentleman from Maine and myself that the only effect of the amendment which I have offered is to insert the word "person" after the word "corporation" in section 6, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be considered as read, in order that we may have a vote.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The amendment has not been read.

Mr. PAYNE. We surely can not vote on an amendment which has not been read.

Mr. FLEMING. I am asking unanimous consent that it be considered as read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the following just after section 6:

"SEC. 7. That no person engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article of commerce, or violating any of the provisions of section 5 of this act, or attempting to monopolize or control the production, manufacture, or sale thereof by driving out competition in any particular locality by discrimination in prices or by giving special privileges or rebates or otherwise in order to destroy competition therein in such locality, shall use, either directly or indirectly, any of the facilities or instrumentalities of interstate commerce, or in any way engage in interstate commerce for the purpose of aiding or facilitating, either directly or indirectly, such production, manufacture, or sale with such intent; nor shall any other person or corporation use any of the facilities or instrumentalities of interstate commerce or in any way engage in interstate commerce in buying, selling, or disposing of any such article of commerce for the purpose of enabling such first-mentioned corporation to engage or to continue to engage in such production, manufacture, or sale or control with such intent. Every person violating any of the provisions of this section shall be punished, on conviction, by a fine of not less than five hundred and not exceeding five thousand dollars."

Mr. FLEMING. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new section:

The Clerk read as follows:

That if any corporation engaged in foreign or interstate commerce at the passage of this act, or which may be organized subsequent to its passage, shall thereafter issue any stocks, bonds, or certificates of capitalization in excess of the actual cash value of the money or property or property rights owned by the said corporation, the above facts to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission, all such stocks, bonds, or evidences of capitalization issued in excess of actual values in possession of the aforesaid corporation shall be subject to an annual tax of 10 per cent of their face value, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States on the 30th day of June in each year, so long as the same shall remain issued and outstanding. If the taxes enumerated in this section shall remain unpaid for a period of sixty days after the same shall become due as herein provided, an action of debt may be maintained in the name of the United States against any corporation for the recovery thereof in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction. The said tax is hereby made a first lien on all the property and estate of any corporation subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, in the time remaining to the committee I can not discuss this amendment in detail. I will state briefly that the amendment offered has for its object the preventing of fraudulent capitalization upon the part of corporations engaged in foreign or interstate commerce which may be hereafter organized. It places no charge or penalty upon any existing property right or business, but seeks to prevent the further loading of the back of labor by the issuance of fictitious and fraudulent stocks and bonds which, in my judgment, is the gravest menace to the continued prosperity of our people.

The distinguished and learned Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. HOAR, in a speech which he delivered in October last, said that there were a number of evils which surrounded and supported the trusts, but that the three cardinal sins of which the system is guilty are: Secrecy, destruction of competition, and fraudulent capitalization. Of course, the fundamental evil in the trust system is the exorbitant and unfair price which monopoly compels the public to pay for the products of labor or for the transportation thereof.

I believe that this evil rests for its support and is made possible because of the possession by monopoly of three special privileges which is in the province of the law of the land to take away from it. The first is the favoritism of the railroads, the second is an exorbitant tariff tax which destroys competition, and the third is the right which combinations in restraint of trade are permitted to exercise of issuing an unlimited amount of stocks and bonds, which have only value in them as the same shall be wrung from the consumer or from labor. This bill which we are considering proposes to correct the evil of secrecy by promoting publicity; it attempts to destroy the evil of railroad favoritism by prohibiting the giving or taking of rebates. But it makes no attempt whatever to prevent the fraudulent capitalization of corporations, which process of inflation has in recent years piled up more than $5,000,000,000 of debt which are in effect a mortgage upon the possibilities of the future under the most favorable conditions for extortion from the public, and which has accumulated in this country in the last five years more monopolistic corporations than in all the preceding history of the nation.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee in his remarks yesterday stated that the overcapitalization of corporations was a grievous load and burden upon the interests of the country, but he makes no effort in this bill to remedy that evil. The modern trust is formed not so much for the purpose of earning profits in their operation. Waiting for labor to slowly earn and accumlate wealth is too slow a procedure for the modern millionaire. Trusts are builded by promoters and makers of such combinations for the immediate profit that may be made in unloading upon the investing public the millions upon millions of stocks and bonds which have no value except that they are able to convince the investor that under monopolistic conditions they can compel labor or capital to pay the interest and dividends upon them.

The problem of the future for this country is to properly adjust the rights of capital, of labor, and the consumer in the distribution of the wealth which labor alone produces, but when once the law permits the capitalizing of the utmost possibilities of profits which monopolistic extortion can wring from the public and permits the same to be sold to the public it prevents any regulation or reduction in the extortionate price for the products of labor or their transportation by the railroad companies. The moment you assail the special privilege of the tariff you are met with the cry that those privileges have been capitalized into profit and that labor is dependent upon them, and if the public protects itself then the managers must take the necessary earnings to pay interest upon the watered stock from the portion of labor. If you attempt to reduce railroad rates you are met with the cry at once that the profits of transportation under existing rates have been fully capitalized, and that to relieve the public means a grievous loss to the laborers who operate the railroads.

The greatest menace to the continuance of the prosperity of the country is the inflated securities which wind-blown and water-soaked corporations have unloaded upon the country, and whenever the inevitable readjustment comes, whether by protecting the interests of the consumer by legislation or by the natural evolution of business which always sooner or later lets out the inflation which monopoly has imposed by reason of its power, and an industrial panic takes place, the consumer will get the benefit thereof by reason of a reduction of the prices to their natural level, but labor will have to pay the price and penalty of it all.

There will never be any equitable adjustment of the rights of the consumer, of labor, and of capital so long as it is possible for monopoly to capitalize the possibilities of profit in plundering the public by the power of special privilege and under the shadow of law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote upon the amendment as offered.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What is the proposed amendment to—what section?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It is a new section, to come after section 1 and be numbered section 2.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But we have passed section 1 some time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Am I precluded, Mr. Chairman, from debate on this amendment?

A MEMBER. The time is up.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, if the time is up, then I am content.

The question was taken; and the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. In accordance with the provision of the special order heretofore adopted, the time for the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule has expired, and therefore the committee will rise in accordance with the provision of the rule.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17) requiring all corporations engaged in interstate commerce to file returns with the Secretary of the Treasury, disclosing their true financial condition, and of their capital stock, and imposing a tax upon such as have outstanding capital stock unpaid in whole or in part and, in accordance with the terms of the special order, he reported the same back with a pending amendment in the nature of a substitute to the bill, with the recommendation that it be adopted and that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee has had under consideration House bill 17, and reports the same back with an amendment by way of a substitute. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 246, nays 0, answered "present" 6, not voting 99; as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

On motion of Mr. LITTLEFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment to the title of this bill as proposed by the committee will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4980. An act to incorporate the American Academy in Rome;

S. 5918. An act to amend section 1225 of the Revised Statutes, so as to provide for detail of retired officers of the Army and Navy to assist in military instruction in schools;

S. 6535. An act providing for the construction of light-house and fog-signal stations in Alaskan waters;

S. 6680. An act authorizing the President to reinstate Alexander G. Pendleton, jr., as a cadet in the United States Military Academy;

S. 6961. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota;

S. 7159. An act authorizing the Memphis, Helena and Louisiana

Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas; and

S. 7226. An act to authorize the Pittsburg, Carnegie and Western Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4850) to increase the pension of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States, or are totally disabled in the same.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6773) to expedite the hearing and determination of suits in equity pending or hereafter brought under the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and regulate commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, or any other acts having a like purpose that may be hereafter enacted.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to cause to be erected monuments and markers on the battlefield of Gettysburg, Pa., to commemorate the valorous deeds of certain regiments and batteries of the United States Army;

H. R. 2422. An act for the relief of Edward S. Crill;

H. R. 3502. An act for the relief of the estate of M. J. Grealish, deceased;

H. R. 14512. An act to amend an act to add certain counties into two divisions, and to prescribe the times and places for holding courts therein, and for other purposes, approved May 2, 1884;

H. R. 16646. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Bogue Chitto, in the State of Louisiana;

H. R. 16975. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Eastern Railroad Company;

H. R. 12064. An act for the relief of Lebbeus H. Rogers and the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased; and

H. R. 14047. An act for the relief of the clerks of circuit and district courts of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference and had further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4850) to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs in the military or naval service of the United States, or are totally disabled in the same, numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, and 8, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. JAMES M. MOODY, late a Representative from the State of North Carolina.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore, to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the President pro tempore had appointed as said committee Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. DIETRICH, and Mr. HEITFELD.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 11544. An act to correct the military record of Thomas J. Morman.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 7145. An act granting an increase of pension to Rosetta E. Rafferty—to the Committee on Pensions.

THOMAS J. MORMAN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 11544) to correct the military record of Thomas J. Morman.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ELLIOTT indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PRINCE for ten days, on account of sickness.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 8, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, Chief Clerk, called the House to order and read the following communication:

FEBRUARY 8, 1903.

I hereby designate as Speaker pro tempore for this day Hon. RICHARD WAYNE PARKER, of New Jersey.

D. B. HENDERSON, Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, whose spirit is everywhere present to uphold, strengthen, and guide Thy children in the discharge of the cares and responsibilities which must needs come to us in this earthly existence. We thank Thee for the holy Sabbath day, which takes us, if we will, out of the busy whirl and turmoil of life's activities, not only to quiet and rest, but to a contemplation of the larger relationships of life with Thee and our fellow-men. We thank Thee for whatever is great in men as financiers, as discoverers, as statesmen, as scholars or teachers of truth and righteousness, but above all we thank Thee for that full rounded-out character in men which lifts them above self in poise and nobility of soul. We bless Thee for all whom Thou hast raised up to be leaders of men, especially for the men of America who have wrought and woven into the fibers of our nation their characters, which make it strong and great; and as we gather here to-day, help us to call to mind whatever was noble and pure and lofty in those whom we would honor by this sacred service, and let Thy loving arms be about those who are near and dear to them in the ties of kinship, to comfort and sustain them in that blessed hope of the immortality of the soul, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE FOR THIS DAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the proceedings of this day will be governed.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. GARDNER, of New Jersey, by unanimous consent,

Resolved, That the House meet on Sunday, the 8th day of February, 1903, at 12 o'clock noon, for the consideration of resolutions commemorative of the life, character, and services of the late Gen. WILLIAM J. SEWELL, a Senator of the United States from the State of New Jersey.

On motion of Mr. FLANAGAN, by unanimous consent, it was

Resolved, That when the House meets on Sunday, the 8th day of February, 1903, it shall consider appropriate resolutions memorial of the public services and life of Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, late a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of New Jersey.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR SEWELL.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with sincere regret the announcement of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM JOYCE SEWELL, late a Senator of the United States from the State of New Jersey, and tenders to the family of the deceased the assurance of its profound sympathy with them in the bereavement they have been called upon to sustain, and the further assurance that this House recognizes the lofty patriotism and eminent abilities of the deceased and the value of his long and distinguished public service to his country.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. SEWELL a certified copy of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding, I desire to ask unanimous consent for general leave to print on this resolution. It so comes about that at least five distinguished gentlemen who were to speak here to-day, Mr. DALZELL of Pennsylvania, Mr. GROSVENOR of Ohio, Mr. BINGHAM and Mr. ADAMS, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. MCDERMOTT of New Jersey, are either confined to their homes by sickness or are unavoidably absent. It is desirable that they, at least, should be able to place their tributes of respect upon the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that general leave to print may be granted upon the resolution just read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, many years ago, when a little boy, I was taken by my father to a session of the senate of the State of New Jersey. What particularly impressed my childish mind was the presence of the presiding officer. I can remember the respect and admiration I felt for him. I thought he was one whose example all might follow. A quarter of a century has passed since then, and during that time my first impression of WILLIAM J. SEWELL has grown stronger with the years. Although my lot has been cast in another State, I have always felt a Jerseyman's pride in her strong men, and a Jerseyman's love for those who have made her famous.

SEWELL occupied the seat of Jonathan Elmer, of John Rutherford, of Richard Stockton, and Jonathan Dayton. With such a parliamentary ancestry it would not have been surprising had he been lost in the shadow of his forebears; yet SEWELL stands out as the representative of all that has made New Jersey and that has made this great nation of ours what they are to-day.

Honesty and ability are the presupposed possessions of every man who enters the Senate, but in addition to these essentials SEWELL possessed a manhood and a manliness that were worthy of the best traditions of our history. A gallant soldier in the Army of the Potomac, with a dash and daring that came of his Irish blood, a masterful ruler of men in politics, he achieved success and fame through his own exertions and because he never compromised with his sense of right.

Although he was a militant partisan, he never permitted party prejudice to swerve him from the path of righteousness. No more splendid page is written in our history than that which contains the story of SEWELL'S moral courage in the Fitz-John Porter case. Undeterred by the fact that it had become a party issue, undaunted by the pressure of social and political friends, it was enough for him to believe that a great wrong had been done to a gallant soldier, and, taking his very political life in his hands, he fought the good fight through to victory. Those who knew the man expected nothing other from him. His fight in this particular case was but an incident in the battle he waged through life—a constant struggle of all that was just and honest and true—a struggle that is crowned to-day with the victory of the love and respect of all who knew him.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, it was not my good fortune to know General SEWELL previous to my entrance into Congress. While I had met him at great conventions, it was in such manner as to only acquire a casual knowledge of the man; but when I came here and he entered the Senate the lines of legislation threw us together so closely that I learned to know him well, to have a profound respect for his judgment, and to have an admiration and love for the man. The life and achievements of Senator SEWELL, as outlined by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] this morning, are the greatest tribute that can be paid to the genius of American institutions in affording such men from any country the opportunity to work out their own great destinies, as well as the greatest tribute to the Senator himself.

Coming to this country, as stated, a poor, unknown boy, entering the Army of the Union to battle for the life of the Republic and the perpetuation of free institutions, fighting his way up without any fictitious aids, rank by rank, step by step until, as stated, he left the Army of the United States at the close of the civil war with the high rank of brevet major-general—he achieved much of military glory. Then, turning to civil life with the same energy, the same integrity, the same courage, the same intelligence and high purpose, he carved for himself a place both in business and in politics that makes him stand unrivaled among the sons of New Jersey.

His life and his achievements, his accomplishments, his character, all leave an inspiration for the future, not only to the sons of New Jersey, but to the young men of the Republic wherever the history of the country is studied. To the Senate of the United States he brought a trained intellect, a thorough knowledge of politics and Government, and when he was on committees of conference, his judgment almost invariably was of such character, backed by such reason, that the conferees associated with him, almost without exception, yielded to his desires, his wishes, or his arguments.

Mr. Speaker, during this busy life in the Senate of the United States, at the head of a great railroad corporation, looking after multitudinous questions that affected those associated with him, both in politics and business, there never was a time when this great hearted Scotch-Irish American was not ready to turn aside from his busy pursuits to look after the interests of those who served their country with him during the days of the civil war. Most men in his position would have had enough to do to occupy them fully, either as president of that great corporation or as a Senator of the United States. Mr. SEWELL, however, attended to both, and then gave enough time to see to it that in the great homes that are built up by this generous Government to care for those who battled for the flag during the days of the rebellion their inmates were cared for, their wants supplied, and the best interests of the homes at all times advanced.

I regret that it was not my privilege to know him more in his home life. One evening I was a guest at his home for a short time, and I found there that the people of his neighborhood, the statesmen who were visiting his locality on that occasion, went to his house to spend of the evening the hours that were left in converse with this sage of New Jersey. There, too, through that gentleness, that hospitality, courtesy, and kindness which so pervaded his nature, as well as the ability with which he presented the different questions that came before us in our conversation, I learned to admire him in that place as I had learned to love and admire him in his public life. It is a great tribute to any American to say that his home life is perfect, and that is all that was needed, to my mind, to round out the splendid career of this great man. I am glad to be here to-day to listen to that part of the tribute of my friend from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] and to pay my tribute of respect, feeble as it may be, to this man who adopted our country and added renown and glory to her citizenship.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to know Senator WILLIAM J. SEWELL well, the acquaintance beginning during the session of the Forty-seventh Congress, while he was serving as Senator and as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and I was a member of the House on the same committee, where we were thrown together quite frequently. It was only necessary to be with Senator SEWELL a very short time in order to be impressed with his superb qualifications as a business man. I came to know him better on account of our association as members of the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Homes from 1891 until his death. To those who did know him well it is not surprising to learn from his biography that, although he came to this country from another as a poor boy, he succeeded in every undertaking to the satisfaction of his friends and, no doubt, of himself.

He shipped as a boy, bound for the Pacific, and became the first officer before the end of the voyage. He enlisted as a private at the outbreak of the civil war, and closed his military career as a major-general. Whether in military life or in business life, it was always the same with him; he landed at the head of every enterprise in which he was engaged, without regard to where he started. He was three times president of the senate of his State, and elected three times as a Senator of the United States. Six times was he chairman of the State delegation to the national conventions. He was one of the oldest members in continuous service of the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Homes at the time of his death. He served one year as its president, utterly refusing further election to this important office on account of pressing business engagements too numerously made to become a member of the board, notwithstanding the earnest desire of his fellow-members that he should do so. He showed great interest, in fact, unusual interest, in the philanthropic business of the board.

Senator SEWELL was a quiet, modest, and unobtrusive man, able, forceful, honest, and strong. He was held in the highest esteem by all whose fortune it was to know him. He was a faithful, loyal, and affectionate husband and father. He was loved and revered by his family. I attended his funeral and was not surprised to learn in what high esteem he was held by the citizens of New Jersey, and especially of those of the city of Camden, in which he lived, every business house, large or small, of whatever character, being absolutely closed. The memory of such men truly live after them.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, death is regarded in the religions and poetry of all nations both as a destroyer and deliverer; as a sting as well as a blessing; as a consummation, and a sad interruption; as a curse and a benediction.

It requires faith unquestioned and profound to believe that death is other than a curse when it takes a beloved one in the heyday of youth, in the roseate hour of hope and promise; but we are in a measure satisfied when the grim messenger takes one from our ranks whose life work has been crowned, whose career ended, is brilliant and replete. Life then prolonged is but repetition, cumulative, and oftentimes monotonous.

The life of Senator SEWELL was complete, was crowned, was finished, full of useful labor and distinguished success.

Born in Ireland in lowly, middle rank, he succeeded by sheer merit and ability to reach the highest office in the nation eligible to the foreign born.

He was a commanding figure and power in his State, and a United States Senator of wonderful influence and prestige. In his adopted State he was a man of large affairs and influence, and his strength was always directed to increase its commercial, manufacturing, and agricultural interests, and New Jersey properly appreciates the efforts of Senator SEWELL in the development of her interests along these lines.

But it is as a soldier, courageous, daring, ever intrepid, that General SEWELL's enduring fame will largely rest.

The story of his soldier life, and his deeds of heroism read like a romance. Who will ever forget SEWELL at Chancellorsville and his brilliant achievements in that great battle?

General Sickles in his official report of the battle says:

> Charge after charge was made by this gallant brigade under Colonel SEWELL, Fifth New Jersey, upon whom the command devolved (after the loss of General Mott and Colonel Park, Second New York Volunteers, wounded) before it was withdrawn, terribly reduced and mutilated, from the part assigned it. Its stern resistance to the impulsive assaults of the enemy and the brilliant charges made in return were worthy of the "Old Guard." No soldier could refuse a tribute of admiration in remembrance of the last charge made. A small body, for a regiment, drove the enemy out of the rifle pits near Fairview before withdrawing and returned with 40 men, whose sole reliance in this charge was in the bayonet, every cartridge having been exploded moments before.

Such was SEWELL, the soldier.

SEWELL in appearance was essentially military, and his mind was in the mold of the hero. Always taciturn, his silence was as significant and sometimes as ominous as the sphinx, and filled you with apprehension that what he would do next might "make or unmake him quite."

His purpose was always lofty, never trivial; he loved his adopted country with a chivalrous and courtly devotion, and was always ready to immolate his services, his means, yes, life itself, on its altars.

General SEWELL was a polished gentleman, withal, not demonstrative but strongly and warmly attached to his friends, and as constant in his friendship as destiny. He believed friendship to be the "sweetener of life, the cement of the soul, the solder of society," nor was he unforgiving toward his enemies; his soul harbored no bitterness; it was gentle and kind and his whole bearing and conversation toward those he came in social or official contact tended to encourage and help.

SEWELL as has been said was a silent man, but when he spoke a kindly smile would often irradiate his stern face and his words would be low and sweet and full of friendly interest.

His memory comes to us not in a "robe of mourning and in a faded light," but in brilliant colors and colossal figures as a dignified statesman, a heroic soldier, a stately citizen, and a constant friend.

We are satisfied that time will add to the estimate of SEWELL's worth and services, and that a just posterity will regard his military exploits and civic employments at a much higher standard even than is so generously accorded by his contemporaries.

In these memorial services we note in halting words the life of those we think we know sufficiently to testify concerning.

Our lives are involved, too, most of us in a less conspicuous sense, but all amply within their limitations. We alone know surely our purpose and inspiration, but let us all sincerely hope that each of us in our public efforts, and in our private concerns and friendships, will be guided by the spirit General SEWELL was controlled by—a lofty and generous patriotism and unselfish devotion to duty, and a magnificent and enduring love of mankind.

In parting we salute the splendid and distinguished dead, while we abide a while in the shadow of the Great Mystery with the waiting and anxious living.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, now neither the birthplace nor the parentage of WILLIAM J. SEWELL interests us or those who shall come after us, beyond the simple matter of history.

But what he aspired to be, what he did, and what he was are matters of vast importance, since his life is a priceless heritage. Ours is an age of true hero worship in the largest and best sense of the term; and the life of WILLIAM J. SEWELL will long be an inspiration to every lad of New Jersey, where the potentiality of his personal influence will never cease if the secondary or reflected power of his soul shall be taken into the range of our contemplation.

What WILLIAM J. SEWELL did has been recounted elsewhere, and his achievements have also been reviewed here to-day; therefore, I shall pay my tribute of respect to this natural leader and chieftain of men by recalling those qualities and characteristics which, combining, it seems to me, made him what he was.

His purpose never slept. He knew as well as any man I ever met that one of the most striking differences between men in the race of life is the measure of determination. His determination was invincible. His energy was measured by his heart beats. He died like a warrior in the fury of battle, restless because he must rest.

Buoyed up and borne along by a God-like will, he clearly saw that—

> True ambition there alone resides
> Where Justice vindicates and Wisdom guides.
> Wouldst thou be famed? Have those high acts in view
> Brave men would act.

He clearly saw that all work is noble if nobly done, and every task was so nobly wrought by him that it was turned into a stepping-stone to a higher and broader plane of action, where duties multiplied and burdens heavier grew, only to bring new opportunities to his aspiring soul. Through well doing, from round to round, he mounted the ladder of fame and held his place with equal poise. As step by step he gained his vantage ground, he left no doubt in any mind that his "words were bonds." Indeed, there were those—

> Who scanned the actions of his daily life
> With all the industrious malice of a foe,
> And nothing met their eyes but deeds of honor.

Nor was his the honor, confined and measured by subtle speech whose terms fixed narrow bounds for his interpretation, but rather that which sounds in wisdom and knows no limitation except what justice makes. By every instinct he seemed to know that honor, indeed, is the finest sense of justice the human mind can frame; and being so happily and fortunately constituted he could—

> Poise the cause in justice's equal scale,
> Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.

Herein lay the wisdom of his party leadership more than in practice and experience, for the former was absolutely essential, while the latter could only be a helpful incident in such consummate success as his.

His life was one of many relationships, and he almost invariably, with unerring discernment, could detect the false and discover the true, and, realizing that a false friendship, like clambering vines, shades and rots the walls it covers, while true friendship brings to life the brightest sunshine and sweetest pleasures, he recognized and held as friends only tried and transparent characters.

No one ever charged him with disloyalty nor placed a limit to the measure of the support to which he was justly entitled. He never forgot a friend, and he requited every favor fourfold.

He was a stranger to the sense of ingratitude, and though he almost personified reserve in his military mien his heart was as tender as a child's.

These were the qualities which, uniting in his soul, made him a patriot of heroic mold.

Never shall I forget his patriotic words when his heart had been touched by the presentation of a token of friendship, upon which he discovered the name of his wife interwrought with his own.

Alluding to his love for that country which had made it possible for him to do so much for himself, with an emotion he only with the greatest difficulty could partly conceal, he expressed a profound regret, evidently most sincere, that it had not been his glorious fortune to fall in battle fighting for her cause. He said that this had been the one earnest desire of his life, and that when from political considerations, urged by his colleagues in the United States Senate, he could not accept the commission tendered him by President McKinley, he willingly and gladly laid both of his boys upon the altar of his country.

Of him it can be truly said:

My country claims me all, claims every passion,
Her liberty henceforth be all my thought,
Though with a brother's life cheaply bought,
For her mine own I'd willingly resign,
And say with transport that the gain was mine.

WILLIAM J. SEWELL possessed the will of a god, and was inspired by a noble ambition. He was wise, he was grateful, he was loyal, he was brave. "His integrity was as spotless as a star." His life was as pure as a bar of light. He loved his country, and the full measure of his devotion to her was not found in his own life nor in the priceless lives of his two sons which he gladly proffered, but in an earnest desire that his blood might be poured out on the battlefield in defense of her flag.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the life of WILLIAM JOYCE SEWELL was a romance. He was a little boy in an Irish town, where his father, an Englishman, held some office, I believe, in the internal revenue. His mother was one of the Irish gentry, but that boyhood was spent in poverty. As a youth he became a sailor amid the islands of the Pacific. Then he came here and was a soldier for the Union, decorated for bravery with a medal of honor, retired after four years as brigadier-general and brevet major-general, and still in his early manhood.

He began life anew as the captain of a freight yard. He rose in the same quick fashion to be superintendent and president of a railroad that was one of the great branches of the Pennsylvania system. Then, as a politician, first as State senator, he suddenly came into command of the political circles of his State—a command that was almost as military as that which he had exercised in the Army. Elected Senator of the United States amid a storm of opposition, defeated for his second term, he was finally reelected by acclamation, taking a place here at the head of the nation, where he was the trusted adviser of our wisest Presidents and carried the weight and strength of the man who is born to rule.

One fact alone will show this. The President wished to make him a major-general in the Spanish war. His associates could not spare him from the Senate and begged him to remain.

Such a life is a romance, but it is one that is not easy to tell. His nearest friends know how deeply he loved them, how thoroughly he trusted them, how loyal he was to them, how fully he felt for them, how eager he was to advance all those in whom he believed. But his nearest friends heard very little about himself. He was the lifelong soldier, who acted instead of talking, who decided instead of remembering, and who thought only for a purpose.

And yet all this kind of description tells very little about him, either to friends or to strangers. It tells very much more of his heart to know that in manhood he went back to the little Irish town where he had spent his boyhood, in order to go past and look at the house where his mother had lived, but without the heart to go in, because it was occupied by strangers. It tells something more to remember the more than brotherly affection which always prevailed between himself and his brother, Robert Sewell, the lawyer of New York, who had come here almost with him, where the two brothers had helped each other in their new country in the New World.

At the battle of Williamsburg he was a young captain of infantry. I think it was his first field. A fieldpiece and some ammunition had been captured from the other side. He took possession of it, like the sailor that he was—ready for everything—and with two or three men to help him was serving the piece against its former owners. At this time General Kearney rode up and asked him his name and his regiment. He said, "Do you belong to the artillery?" "No; to the infantry." "How did you come to serve the gun?" And when it was explained, he said, "Be kind enough to give General Kearney's compliments to your colonel and say to him that you are a gallant and efficient young officer whose conduct ought to be commended."

General SEWELL was prouder of this, his first commendation in his first battle, than perhaps of any other. The military phase of his character remained throughout his life. It was almost as a chief that he always received his friends in the receptions which were held by him, crowding his rooms at Trenton, whenever he went to the State capital. Within what he deemed to be his own sphere he disposed of all matters with military promptness and precision, and yet no one could be more regardful of the sphere of influence of others. His delicate deference to the wishes of representatives whose opinions differed from his own was as marked as his autocratic rule where he had the right. His sensitive honor was shown by the fact that as ex-senator of the State, and at one time ex-Senator of the United States, he always refused to exercise the privilege of going upon the floor.

He began his political career in New Jersey amid the most bitter opposition. Before his death he had conquered the respect and love of those who had been most opposed to him. He lived simply. He made no display. He was a magnate in railroad circles, but no one would have known it from his ways. He did his duty through life, never fearing to assume new work, until what he had to do in business, in statecraft, in charity among the old soldiers and elsewhere, finally overwhelmed him.

When he died the whole State went into mourning. His funeral was a spontaneous outburst of grief. For courage, loyalty, truth, and courtesy, whether as soldier, statesman, citizen, or man, the memory of WILLIAM JOYCE SEWELL is dear to his friends, who are found wherever his work was done, whether in war, in government, or in the pursuits of peace. Let us keep such memories green.

Blest is the land whose heroes still have life
Within the heart-world of their countrymen,
Inspiriting its youth to noble deeds
And love of what has made it free and great.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are there any further remarks? The question is upon the adoption of the resolutions.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report, in order that it may be printed in the RECORD, upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate bill 569, to establish the department of commerce and labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, presents a conference report and asks that it may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 569) "to establish the department of commerce and labor," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Page 2, line 8 of the amendment, strike out all after the word "Congress" to the end of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Auditor for the State and other Departments shall receive and examine all accounts of salaries and incidental expenses of the office of the secretary of commerce and labor, and of all bureaus and offices under his direction, all accounts relating to the Light-House Board, Steamboat-Inspection Service, Immigration, Navigation, Alaskan fur-seal fisheries, the National Bureau of Standards, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Census, Department of Labor, Fish Commission, and to all other business within the jurisdiction of the department of commerce and labor, and certify the balances arising thereon to the division of bookkeeping and warrants and send forthwith a copy of each certificate to the secretary of commerce and labor."

Page 4, line 3 of the amendment, strike out the word "Commissioner" and insert in lieu the word "Commission."

Strike out all of section 6 and insert in lieu the following:

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and a commissioner of corporations who shall be the head of said bureau, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner, who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum and who shall in the absence of the commissioner act as and perform the duties of the commissioner of corporations, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the secretary of commerce and labor or by the said commissioner. There shall also be in the said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law.

"The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the secretary of commerce and labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint-stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, excepting common carriers subject to 'an act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require; and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct shall be made public.

"In order to accomplish the purposes declared in the foregoing part of this section, the said commissioner shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations, joint-stock companies, and combinations subject to the provisions hereof as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said 'act to regulate commerce' and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths. All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said 'act to regulate commerce' and by 'an act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission,' etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplemental to said 'act to regulate commerce,' shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

"It shall also be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, including corporations engaged in insurance, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law."

Page 6, line 8, of the amendment, after the word "required," insert the words "by the secretary of commerce and labor."

Page 7, line 7, of the amendment, after the word "labor," insert the following: "Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the method of collecting and accounting for the head tax prescribed by section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate immigration,' approved August 3, 1882."

Page 8, line 2, of the amendment, after the word "in," insert the words "or by."

In lieu of section 10 of the amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. That all duties performed and all power and authority now possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department in and over any bureau, office, officer, board, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, or in relation to the duties performed by and authority conferred by law upon such bureau, officer, office, board, branch, or division of the public service, whether of an appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor.

"All duties, power, authority, and jurisdiction, whether supervisory, appellate, or otherwise, now imposed or conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by acts of Congress relating to merchant vessels or yachts, their measurement, numbers, names, registers, enrollments, licenses, commissions, records, mortgages, bills of sale, transfers, entry, clearance, movements, and transportation of their cargoes and passengers, owners, officers, seamen, passengers, fees, inspection, equipment for the better security of life, and by acts of Congress relating to tonnage tax, boilers on steam vessels, the carrying of inflammable, explosive, or dangerous cargo on vessels, the use of petroleum or other similar substances to produce motive power, and relating to the remission or refund of fines, penalties, forfeitures, exactions, or charges incurred for violating any provision of law relating to vessels or seamen or to informer's shares of such fines, and by acts of Congress relating to the Commissioner and Bureau of Navigation, shipping commissioners, their officers and employees, Steamboat-Inspection Service and any of the officials thereof, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to and imposed and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor from and after the time of the transfer of the Bureau of Navigation, the shipping commissioners, and the Steamboat-Inspection Service to the department of commerce and labor, and shall not thereafter be imposed upon or exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as inconsistent, hereby repealed."

Page 10, line 12 of the amendment, strike out the words "or the Interstate Commerce Commission," and insert the following: "from the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post-Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior."

Page 11, line 6 of the amendment, after the word "act," insert the words "other than those of section 12."

And the House agree to the same.

W. P. HEPBURN,
JAMES R. MANN,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

M. A. HANNA,
KNUTE NELSON,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The substitute amendment of the House is agreed to with various amendments.

The first of these amendments is to strike out the provision in the House substitute in reference to the auditing of accounts and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Auditor for the State and other departments shall receive and examine all accounts of salaries and incidental expenses of the office of the secretary of commerce and labor, and of all bureaus and offices under his direction, all accounts relating to the Light-House Board, Steamboat-Inspection Service, immigration, navigation, Alaskan fur-seal fisheries, the National Bureau of Standards, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Census, Department of Labor, Fish Commission, and to all other business within the jurisdiction of the department of commerce and labor, and certify the balances arising thereon to the division of bookkeeping and warrants, and send forthwith a copy of each certificate to the secretary of commerce and labor."

This language more nearly conforms with the present law upon the subject of auditing accounts.

The second amendment to the House substitute provides for the transfer from the Treasury Department to the department of commerce and labor of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, the Bureau of Navigation, and the United States shipping commissioners.

The third amendment agreed to is to insert the word "commission," instead of the word "commissioner," in the description "Fish Commission," the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries being already included.

The fourth amendment agreed to inserts, after the word "required," in section 5, the words "by the secretary of commerce and labor," so as to provide that consular officers shall send reports, under the direction of the Secretary of State, as often as required by the secretary of commerce and labor.

The fifth amendment agreed to is to strike out all of section 6 of the House substitute and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and a commissioner of corporations who shall be the head of said bureau, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner, who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, and who shall, in the absence of the commissioner, act as, and perform the duties of, the commissioner of corporations, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the secretary of commerce and labor or by the said commissioner. There shall also be in the said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law.

"The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the secretary of commerce and labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations excepting common carriers subject to 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require; and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct, shall be made public.

"In order to accomplish the purposes declared in the foregoing part of this section, the said commissioner shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations, joint stock companies, and combinations subject to the provisions hereof as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said 'act to regulate commerce' and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers, so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths. All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said 'act to regulate commerce' and by 'An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission,' etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplemental to said 'act to regulate commerce,' shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

"It shall also be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, including corporations engaged in insurance, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law."

The sixth amendment agreed to is to insert at the end of the first sentence in section 7 (which provides for the transfer of the Bureau of Immigration to the new department) the following: "Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the method of collecting and accounting for the head tax prescribed by section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate immigration,' approved August 3, 1882."

The seventh amendment agreed to is to insert the words "or by" in section 9, so as to include in the transfer "all officers, clerks, and employees now employed in or by any of the bureaus," etc., transferred to the new department.

The eighth amendment agreed to is to strike out all of section 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all duties performed and all power and authority now possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department in and over any bureau, office, officer, board, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, or in relation to the duties performed by and authority conferred by law upon such bureau, officer, office, board, branch, or division of the public service, whether of an appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor.

"All duties, power, authority, and jurisdiction, whether supervisory, appellate, or otherwise, now imposed or conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by acts of Congress relating to merchant vessels or yachts, their measurement, numbers, names, registers, enrollments, licenses, commissions, records, mortgages, bills of sale, transfers, entry, clearance, movements, and transportation of their cargoes and passengers, owners, officers, seamen, passengers, fees, inspection, equipment for the better security of life, and by acts of Congress relating to tonnage tax, boilers on steam vessels, the carrying of inflammable, explosive, or dangerous cargo on vessels, the use of petroleum or other similar substances to produce motive power, and relating to the remission or refund of fines, penalties, forfeitures, exactions, or charges incurred for violating any provision of law relating to vessels or seamen or to informer's share of such fines, and by acts of Congress relating to the Commissioner and Bureau of Navigation, shipping commissioners, their officers and employees, Steamboat-Inspection Service and any of the officials thereof, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to and imposed and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor from and after the time of the transfer of the Bureau of Navigation, the shipping commissioners, and the Steamboat-Inspection Service to the department of commerce and labor, and shall not thereafter be imposed upon or exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as inconsistent, hereby repealed."

The principal new matter inserted in section 10 as agreed to is for the purpose of transferring the present authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to navigation and steamboat inspection service to the secretary of commerce and labor. The amendment enumerates various acts of Congress in which the Secretary of the Treasury is now named by that title, in order to more specifically transfer his present power to the secretary of commerce and labor.

The ninth amendment agreed to is to strike out of section 12 the words "or the Interstate Commerce Commission" and insert in lieu thereof the following:" From the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post-Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior." The effect of this amendment is to permit the President to transfer statistical or scientific work to the department of commerce and labor from any of the Departments named, but it does not permit him to transfer the Interstate Commerce Commission or the statistical work of the Department of Agriculture or the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The tenth amendment is to insert after the word "act," in line 3 of section 13, the words, "other than those of section 12." The effect of this amendment is to make section 12 of the act take effect immediately upon its passage.

W. P. HEPBURN,
JAMES R. MANN,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. JOSHUA S. SALMON.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following resolutions:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted, the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a faithful and distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. Speaker, conforming to a venerable usage of this House, a pious and proper custom, we devote a brief hour of to-day to the memory of one who, having played well his part, has passed from us. To me, as his successor, has fallen the duty and honor of outlining, for I may but briefly outline, the life history, the virtues, and public service of the late Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON.

Mr. SALMON was born near Mount Olive, in Morris County, N. J., February 2, 1846, the son of Gideon and Jane Van Fleet Salmon. The family had been settled in Morris County for more than a century, William Salmon having removed there from Southold, on Long Island, early in the eighteenth century and having become possessed of large tracts in the vicinity of Schooleys Mountain.

The grandfather of William Salmon had sailed from England about 1640 with his two brothers. He founded Southold, Long Island. One of his brothers settled at Elizabeth, N. J., the other in Massachusetts.

The family was of Scotch origin, and an ancestor of the name is said to have been knighted by Robert Bruce for bravery on the field. During the progress of later wars the family had removed to Suffolk County, England.

JOSHUA SALMON received his formal education at the schools of Charlottesville, N. Y., and Schooleys Mountain, N. J. He found on attaining manhood that his whole bent was toward the law and articled himself as a clerk in the office of Charles E. Schofield, of Jersey City. Here he served his apprenticeship and, when opportunity and fortune served, he rounded his education by matriculating at the Albany Law School, whence he was graduated in 1873 with the degree of LL. B. In March of the same year he was admitted to practice in New York as attorney and counselor, and in November as attorney in New Jersey. Later he became a counselor at the New Jersey bar, and in 1894 an attorney and counselor of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Immediately on his admission as an attorney at the New Jersey bar he began the serious practice of his profession in Boonton, Morris County, N. J., where he lived and had his principal office to the time of his death.

Mr. SALMON possessed all of the qualifications of a successful practitioner, and his success was only limited by the field in which fate placed him. He was a hard student, and commanded a very complete knowledge of legal principles and precedents.

He was most conscientious in the preparation of a case, with a nice care for detail that made him a formidable adversary on the day of trial. He had naturally a logical and orderly mind, and his arguments, flowing in natural sequence, were clear, incisive, and convincing. His delivery was graceful, his voice resonant and pleasing.

Mr. SALMON was counsel in many very important cases, and in the well-known case of Miller et al. v. Speer et al. obtained a construction by the court of errors and appeals of the statute of descents which secured for his clients a large estate. In this case, tried in 1883, the opinion, I believe, of most of the eminent jurisprudents of the bar of New Jersey and of the lower courts had been opposed to his contentions, and on the trials of the cause he had arrayed against him the best talent of New Jersey.

In March, 1893, he was appointed by Governor Werts prosecutor of the pleas for Morris County. In that position he was very successful in securing the conviction of those he prosecuted. Two famous murder trials were those of the State against Bergeman and the State against Wilson. The former case was carried to the United States Supreme Court, which sustained the verdict obtained by Mr. SALMON. The latter case was carried to the court of errors and appeals, the verdict was sustained, and Wilson paid the death penalty.

Mr. SALMON filled a very large place in the life of the city of Boonton. In every good work, in every enterprise that would add to the comfort, the welfare, or the advancement of his fellow-citizens he played an active part. He was a director of the Boonton Bank from the time of its organization in 1890, the most influential member of the board of trustees of the library, and it was so of all other public enterprises.

He was active in matters political from the time of his admission to the bar. In 1876 he was elected to the city council and held office for six years. In 1877 he was elected to the State legislature, where he served on a number of important committees and won recognition on the floor. From 1880 to 1893 he was counsel to the board of chosen freeholders of Morris County, and was counsel to the town of Boonton and a number of townships of Morris County for most of the years from the time of his admission to the bar until death found him at his desk.

On the 6th of October, 1898, Mr. SALMON received the Democratic nomination for Representative of the Fourth Congressional district of New Jersey, and at the polls in November was elected by a handsome majority. In 1900 he was reelected and served with you during the first session of this Congress; served until the 6th day of May, 1902, when the hour struck and he was called suddenly from his work and his honors.

On October 13, 1869, Mr. SALMON married Deborah Virginia Emmons. Six children blessed their union. In March, 1892, Mrs. Deborah Salmon departed this life, and in April, 1893, Mr. SALMON wedded Mrs. Emma Mains Richards, who survives him. Mr. SALMON was a member of the Masonic Order (Arcana Lodge, No. 60, Free and Accepted Masons), and of the social organizations of his city and county. He was an active communicant of the Presbyterian Church and he held an honorable position in the social and religious life of Boonton.

JOSHUA SALMON won distinction in his profession, attained high honor in politics, and held an enviable social position, but it was his own character which will live most dearly in the memory of those who knew him. He possessed a gentle nature; he gave himself, his time, and effort freely and gladly; he could not tire in Christian charity. May he sleep peacefully, secure in the faith he held.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, although my heart is full of sweet memories of the late JOSHUA S. SALMON, it was not until about fifteen minutes ago that I expected to take part in these memorial exercises, and my attempt will be a very imperfect but cordial tribute to the memory of the deceased gentleman.

I became acquainted with Congressman SALMON shortly after his appearance on the floor of this House. His reputation as a lawyer of ability and industry in his State I was familiar with. I saw him last alive on the evening of the last day of his short Congressional career. I had a pair with him. He was full of exultation, happy, cheerful, and hopeful, going home to try a case at the capital of his State, and expected to be back the following Tuesday. On that Tuesday he suddenly died. He was beloved by all who knew him; stately in physique, gentle, and kindly of heart, always on the alert to do some good, self-denying, absolutely just, and generous.

He was a man who invited your confidence; one you could lean upon and ask for guidance in any doubtful crisis. He was a very resourceful man, and a legislator of tact and wisdom. Although a party man, he was singularly without prejudice or bitterness, and rancor was not a part of his nature. He was of inestimable help in his party's counsels. In private life he was plain, honest, wholesome, and true. Modest, yet strong; retiring, yet insistent and persuading when his cause was just.

We are now so frequently reminded in this Chamber of the inexorable call of death that it has become to many of us a familiar figure, and not so dark and forbidding as portrayed by the poet:

Deep in a murky cave recess,
Laved by oblivion's listless stream, and Fenced by shelving rocks and Intermingled boughs of yew and Cypress shade from all obtrusion
Of the busy noontide beams,
The monarch sits in unsubstantial majesty.

Rather do we after middle life regard death as an unseen but friendly hand that leads us through the deep valley of the shadows of eternity to our everlasting abiding place. In my mind's eye I can now see the sweet face of JOSHUA SALMON in the sunny region of eternity. A strong, true character on earth, he must be in the enjoyment of the reward that awaits the just made perfect. Our ranks are thinning fast, and on this gloomy Sunday we are reminded of the sad words of our great American poet:

All are scattered now and fled,
Some are married, some are dead;
And when I ask, with throbs of pain,
"Ah! when shall we all meet again?"
As in the days long since gone by,
The ancient timepiece makes reply—
"Forever—never!
Never—forever!"

Let us all emulate the virtues of our departed friend and ever remember his daily life of simplicity and gracious deeds. JOSHUA S. SALMON is not dead. He still lives essentially in the lives of those who knew and loved him. His dignity of character, sweetness of temper, Christian fortitude, and healthful and entertaining converse can not but be an abiding influence upon us for all time.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, first impressions are usually the most lasting. We remember first occasions. The man who has rounded out a busy life and has reached the leisure of old age frequently recalls with vividness the facts and incidents of his early life when the picture of his later years and his greater achievement grow dim. So it is with the new member. The men with whom he first comes in contact make a lasting impression upon him.

One of the first members whom I met and with whom I became acquainted upon entering this body on the 1st of December a year ago was the late member from New Jersey. I sat beside him in the Committee on Claims. I learned to respect him, to esteem him. His uniform courtesy, his readiness to give his assistance whenever occasion offered without waiting for it to be asked, his kindliness even when disagreeing with the other members of the committee endeared him to us all.

While he was a devoted member of the party to which I do not belong, I found him eminently fair on all occasions, eminently fair in his views upon all cases that were before that committee. He was not only fair but industrious, earnest, and faithful in the discharge of his duty, watchful of the interests of the Treasury of this great country of ours, and anxious to see that those who came before us had justice done them. He was honest and painstaking in all his work with us. He showed the result of his careful training and long experience in his chosen profession. The facts and the law in all the varied cases which we were called upon to examine were carefully investigated by him.

He exhibited a judicial fairness and earnest desire to get at the truth, wherever it might strike. He was quiet, unassuming, and unostentatious; yet earnest, independent, and tenacious of his judgment. He had the true spirit of the student, of the patient seeker after truth. He was a good listener, a logical reasoner, and a good debater.

And what was true of him in that committee was equally true of him on the floor of this House. It is not necessarily the noisiest man who is the most useful member of this body. This proposition is true everywhere:

The shallow murmur, but the deep are dumb.

It is probably true that to the great majority of the public they are the members of greatest service whose voices are most frequently heard, whose names are oftenest seen in print—the men who by their position as chairmen of the various committees naturally have charge on the floor of the House of the legislation that comes before us. But we who are familiar with the legislation that is enacted here, we who know how the work of this great legislative body is accomplished, fully appreciate the truth that the most useful member not infrequently is the man whose voice is seldom heard. He is the faithful builder, the man who exercises judgment in the forming and perfecting of measures in the committee; he is the man who by his investigation, by his research, his general intelligence and training, is able to shape the proposed legislation before it comes to the House for final action.

It may be truthfully said of this late member from New Jersey that he was one of the useful members of this House, a man belonging to that great host whose names are not less honorable because less honored by us here and by the world at large. His career was cut short without giving him an opportunity to gain that prominence in the House which his ability, his integrity, and his lovable nature were sure to win for him. In his death his family lost a good husband and father, this great Republic of ours a representative American, his State a high-minded, patriotic citizen, his district a conscientious and devoted Representative, and his party a resolute and steadfast supporter.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of paying modest but sincere tribute to the memory of JOSHUA S. SALMON, of New Jersey. The circumstances of his death and the sudden demise of Mr. Otey, of Virginia, two days before—both having been colleagues upon the Committee on Claims, of which I was chairman—left a deep impression upon the minds and hearts of every member of that committee, and, indeed, caused a shock to all the members of the House. The twenty-fourth meeting of our committee was held on May 5, for the purpose of passing resolutions of condolence with the family and friends of Major Otey upon his demise. Mr. SALMON was appointed by the House as one of the Congressional escort to accompany the other members of the House appointed to attend the funeral of his colleague, Major Otey, upon the committee. Again, two days afterwards, on May 7, 1902, in the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, the committee met again, and I have the record of the committee now before me, and I read as follows:

Mr. GRAFF called attention to the fact of the death of two members of the Committee on Claims in as many days, and said that we all voiced the sentiment that Mr. SALMON was an amiable, conscientious man, careful in his conclusions, liberal to those who differed with him, and at all times a valuable member of the committee. He enjoyed the universal respect of all the members of the House.

Mr. MILLER, of Kansas, presented resolutions as follows, which were unanimously adopted:

"The Committee on Claims have heard with profound regret of the death of Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, of New Jersey, who was a valuable and efficient member of this committee: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives, That in the death of Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, Representative from the State of New Jersey, the Committee on Claims have met with a great loss in being called upon to part with the services of Mr. SALMON. As a member of the Committee he was at all times faithful and earnest in the investigation of all matters presented, and we sincerely testify to his marked ability, his kind and genial manner. As members of the committee individually we all feel that we have lost in him a friend, and one who at all times was mindful of the wishes of others, and in this way he commanded the respect and confidence of all his associates.

"Be it also resolved, That as a further mark of respect the committee do now adjourn, and that these resolutions be spread upon the records of this committee and a copy thereof be transmitted to the family of the deceased."

While it is true, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. SALMON was not without honor received at the hands of the people among whom he lived and among whom he died, yet it remains that we are not here this afternoon to speak of a man whose fame resounded through the world. And for that reason, for the particular reason that Mr. SALMON was a fair type of the general level of American life, American character, American religious, moral, social, and political conditions, we are appropriately devoting this hour to his memory.

There was something else but humor in the quaint remark of Abraham Lincoln, that "God loves the plain people best because He made the most of them." He was proud to constantly enroll himself as one of them. JOSHUA S. SALMON did not rise so high above the general level of the community in which he lived that he was not a part of them. He was a true example of American life, an index of the general level; and this Government is not created for the purpose of giving a few opportunities to those who have been especially endowed by God with gifts for obtaining great victories in commerce, in science, in art, and in politics, but the great purpose of the Republic is the uplifting of the general mass of its citizenship.

The experiences through which JOSHUA S. SALMON passed were the experiences of the millions of the people of this country to-day. A farm boy, not having passed through the bitterest of poverty, yet labor and trial and deprivation were not strangers to his career. He had been born in the same county where his life had been developed and where his disappointments had been borne and where his victories had been won, and where finally the community in which he had lived and of which he was a part met to perform the last sad rites of his burial.

I rejoice, Mr. Speaker, that there are many men in the United States of the same moral temperament and type, of the same intellectual level, who have accomplished the same achievements, who have lived to realize the same aspirations as had JOSHUA S. SALMON. He loved nature. He said one day in the committee room that he and his wife had been accustomed all through their lives to make long journeys in his own county and the surrounding counties. He loved the hills and the valleys of New Jersey. He was one of those men who loved nature; who can see the existence and promise of God in the opening of the flower; who can see that there is a divine purpose and plan running through human experience in the logical creation of the plant life of the world. No man who loves the flowers, who loves the trees, who loves the earth and sky, can help but love the greatest product of God Almighty—his own children.

I understand that JOSHUA S. SALMON with the eyes of faith saw another world, but we may differ about the immortality of the soul. The only two evidences that we may have of it here are the evidences which faith finds in revealed religion, or, without the aid of the Divine Book, we may be able to gropingly and blindly reason it out by analogy; because, forsooth, it is the longing of every soul, and because the Father has provided water to slake the thirst, and food to satisfy the appetite, and perfume and beauty and music and all of the things of nature to satisfy the longings of every physical sense, that therefore an after life and immortality must indeed be a fact.

However we may differ about the immortality of the soul, we may be certain of another immortality, and that is the immortality of the influence of a life which has been lived. That influence, while it may grow imperceptible in a few years, is still moving on. The great lesson of this hour is that the influence of his clean and pure life is immortal, and goes on in the current of life a force as indestructible as the everlasting hills.

JOSHUA S. SALMON, living on the same level with his neighbors around about him, interchanged with them the mutual influences of the lives of each other, and, Mr. Speaker, while I had but two characteristic opportunities of viewing his life and of forming conclusions thereon, they were very useful. First I had an opportunity to see what manner of man he was from his demeanor in the performance of his duty in the some twenty-three or twenty-four meetings of the committee had during the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress. Second, I had an opportunity to breathe in the spirit which prevailed at that little town of Boonton when the members of the House went there to pay their last respects to the departed.

All business had ceased; every man had given up his occupation; the town was silent, but throbbing with the respect the entire community felt for this modest, silent, Christian, patriotic man who so loved his home; and while no doubt he took pride in the various honors conferred upon him, the position of prosecutor of the common pleas court in Morris County, the position of a member of the assembly of the State of New Jersey, and finally the crowning position of honor as a member of this House, yet I believe that after all the greatest interest in his life was the interest he took in the affairs of the community in which he lived. He moved in but one direction. He did not seek opportunity to get into the RECORD that he might see his name frequently appear. He made no play for public favor, he scrambled not for public notice, but moved always in the same direction, and that was in the direction of what he conceived to be his duty.

So, then, from that standpoint and analysis of the life of JOSHUA S. SALMON, I say that we are justified in spending this brief hour in tribute to the memory of a man who stood as a fair type of the general level of American citizenship. He was a silent man. The silent forces of nature are the most powerful. Sound is not force. One of the greatest forces of nature is that silent one which draws the waters from the oceans, the rivers, the ponds, and the creeks of the world, and takes them to the heights from which the generous clouds distribute them to the waste places of the earth; and so this silent man could not do otherwise than by his life exert a powerful and uplifting influence for good in the community where he lived and patiently worked and died.

This man, who lived the satisfying life of content, is an example of the golden mean which is commended by Horace in the following lines:

He that holds fast the golden mean,
And lives contentedly between,
The little and the great,
Feels not the wants that pinch the poor,
Nor plagues that haunt the rich man's door,
Embittering all his state.

The tallest pines feel most the power
Of wintry blasts; the loftiest tower
Comes heaviest to the ground;
The bolts that spare the mountain's side
His cloud-capt eminence divide,
And spread the ruin round.

But the pagan poet, Horace, does not fulfill my purpose of illustration or give full expression to this man's life; and his translator, the Christian poet, Cowper, carries the thought to higher heights, which the life of Mr. SALMON typified.

And is this all? Can Reason do no more
Than bid me shun the deep and dread the shore?
Sweet moralist! afloat on life's rough sea,
The Christian has an art unknown to thee;
He holds no parley with unmanly fears;
Where duty bids he confidently steers,
Faces a thousand dangers at her call,
And, trusting in his God, surmounts them all.

And, as I believe, this man, not the slave of ambition, contented in his career, fearlessly followed the commands of duty and his God.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, what are all our little ambitions, our brief antics on the stage of life? It is no wonder that genius even, brought face to face with the vacant, cold clay tenement of a departed friend, realizing its own insignificance, exclaimed:

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a fleet-flitting meteor, a fast-flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
He passes from life to his rest in the grave.

Mr. Speaker, few members of the Fifty-seventh Congress are apt to forget its horrible roll of death. Still fewer will forget the impressive coincidences in the deaths and funeral obsequies of Cummings of New York, Otey of Virginia, and SALMON of New Jersey—how the one died, how the second was appointed to accompany his remains home, and how he died before the funeral cortege was under way, and how the third was appointed as one of the committee to represent this House in paying its last sad debt of memorial observance at the grave of the second, and how the icy hand of that grim master of us all—Death—was laid on his shoulder, summoning him hence before that duty could be performed. On May 2 Amos Cummings, on May 4 Peter J. Otey, on May 5 J. S. SALMON passed away.

We have had much to remind us of those lines which Oliver Cromwell said "always chilled his bones:"

The glories of our blood and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate,
Death lays his icy hands on kings;
Scepter and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

My service with Mr. SALMON taught me that he was self-made without the self-made man's pride; successful without haughtiness; self-reliant, but tolerant; knowing much, but willing and seeking to learn more. These are rare traits among men.

He was genial and kindly—in a word, followed Solomon's advice and "showed himself friendly"—as a consequence, "having friends." Hence, in a Republican county he could and did achieve Democratic victories. He was lovable personally, and in aiding him to compass his ends men forgot their politics and his.

Perhaps he knew more people by name and face than any other man in New Jersey. Certainly more people in Morris County, and probably a greater number in New Jersey called him by his given name than paid that tribute of personal affection to any other son of the Commonwealth.

He never forgot that the brightest intellect is, after all, but a poor halting substitute for work. He was therefore "diligent in business," and as a member of this House faithful in attendance and industrious—in his office in the discharge of committee duties and duties on the floor. When an old man dies, one "whose race is run," we easily reconcile ourselves to death.

If it be one who has "fought a good fight and kept the faith" we can even rejoice with him as he leaves the field of battle, which has been a field of victory achieved and duty finished. When a child dies we console ourselves with the reflection that pain, sorrow, suffering, labor have been spared it. Perhaps the saddest death is that of him in middle life, falling shattered like a statue whose outlines have nearly all appeared, but is still unfinished. Then it is that one can not help thinking or saying:

So many worlds, so much to do,
So little done, such things to be,
How know I what had need of thee,
For thou wert strong as thou wert true.

Truly, JOSHUA S. SALMON was strong and he was true.

In the prime of life, on the high tide of noble endeavor, at the beginning only of his usefulness in this body, death worked, in his taking off, disappointment to our well-founded expectations and shock to our loving hopes.

Nature hath nor thought nor pity for man. She is the Relentless Fate of the Greeks. But there is an Intelligence above nature, and in a kinder sense, and a more truly catholic spirit than the Dominican pronounced the sentence, "God will know His own."

"His peace passeth all understanding."

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, the members of this House, Representatives and Delegates, come from all parts of the United States, from Hawaii to Maine, from Porto Rico to Oregon.

They are the chosen champions of their parties—Republican, Democratic, and Populistic—and of the local interests of the districts they represent.

Each is ambitious and anxious to gain and retain the approbation of the people he represents, and each works hard, ably, and loyally for the benefit of his district and for his own political advancement.

Under such circumstances it would be but natural to presume there would be little kind feeling or genuine friendship among them, but such a presumption would be erroneous and do injustice to the members of this honorable body.

I doubt whether among an equal number of men, thrown together anywhere in the wide world, there can be found as kindly feeling, as sweet sympathy, and as genuine friendship as exists, regardless of political affiliations, among the members of the House of Representatives of the United States.

They may—and do—in the House, in caucus, and in committee fight fiercely for party advantage and party success, but when the vote is taken and the question is settled they are gentlemen and friends in the purest sense of the word.

During my service in this House I have never known of any instance where any member has manifested an unwillingness to personally favor or befriend a brother member, regardless of his politics, and no member has met with death or misfortune without causing the sorrow or receiving the sympathy of all his brother members.

I regret, and share in the sorrow of his family and friends, the death of any member, but in the death of JOSHUA S. SALMON I further feel I sustain a personal loss—the loss of an able adviser, a genial, kindly companion, and a valued friend.

I first met him when he came here as a member of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and I began to know him and appreciate him when we were associated as members of its Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

That committee, while he was one of its members, had referred to it, carefully considered, reported to the House, and had passed a bill covering 630 printed pages, making further provisions for a civil government of Alaska, known as the "Civil Code of the District of Alaska."

The committee was engaged a number of days in considering the bill section by section, line by line, and almost word by word, and, necessarily, its members were closely associated in their work and became well acquainted with each other.

Mr. SALMON was a quiet, unassuming gentleman, but it required only a short time of service with him on that committee for all his associates to appreciate his ability as a lawyer, his statesmanship, his patriotism, his honesty, his solid worth as a member and a man, and he grew on us from the first day of our acquaintance until his death. We soon came to know that when he proposed to make a suggestion it would be sound and advisable, and I do not remember one made by him that was not adopted.

He was not only a good lawyer, but an able legislator. He was careful, conservative and fearless, and, in my judgment, was guided solely by his sense of right and justice.

In addition to my association with him in committee and on this floor we lived during his service here at the same hotel and we spent many quiet, pleasant evenings together in social intercourse, and such intercourse only increased my respect for and my admiration of him, and I can not command language to adequately do justice to his character.

He was as gentle as a child and as firm as granite. He was refined, tender, and sympathetic, and seemed to wish all mankind well. I never heard him use a word that could not with propriety be used in any company.

He was of Scotch descent, his ancestors having come to this country about the year 1640, and it was easy to detect in him many traits of his sturdy Scotch ancestry.

He was a self-made man. All that he was, the position he achieved, was due to his own exertions and honest worth. He acquired a good education. Studied law and was admitted to the bar of his own State of New Jersey and of the United States of America. He practiced his profession to the credit of himself and the benefit of his clients and won the confidence, respect, and love of all who knew him. He served his people in the legislature of his State and in this House of Representatives, and always to their entire satisfaction, and while serving them here he laid down his burdens and went to receive the reward that always awaits such an honorably and well spent life.

While I knew him only a few years, I shall remember him and think of him and feel his influence as long as I live, and I humbly submit this brief tribute to his memory and worth.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, while I was in New York City attending the funeral of Hon. Amos Cummings an evening paper announced the sudden and untimely death of Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, of New Jersey. A strange coincidence attended the demise of these two men and that of Hon. Peter Otey, of Virginia. After the death of Cummings, on May 2, 1902, Otey was wired, asking him to act as one of the Congressional escort, and an answer came on the 4th saying he was dead. Then SALMON was notified by wire to act as escort for Otey's remains, and on the 6th came word that he, too, had joined the silent majority and passed into the shade of the great valley of the grave. All three were stanch Democrats; all from the original 13 States which gave being to our immortal Union; all of great prominence in State and national councils; all men of strong individuality and great popularity, and their deaths in such quick succession—Cummings on the 2d, Otey on the 4th, and SALMON on the 6th—cast a deep gloom among their colleagues of the House and Senate and in all the public life of the Capitol.

I do not think such an occurrence ever happened before in the history of our country. Otey, pallbearer of Cummings, dies before the latter is buried, and SALMON, pallbearer to Otey, joins his colleague in the great congress of the other world ere his remains are laid in their last earthly home. All belonged to the minority which could so ill-afford to lose any of its members, and especially such shining lights. I felt consoled, as a party man, with the thought that the "Lord loveth whom he chasteneth," and the Democratic party was then receiving such severe punishment it must surely be in favor above.

What shall I say about the life and character of Mr. SALMON? To those who knew him better I must leave the task of writing his biography and shall give only a few impressions formed during the two years of our pleasant friendship. We were thrown together frequently at our hotel, and our wives were excellent friends, hence I had a good opportunity to know him. His last day in the House, the Saturday preceding his death on the following Tuesday, we were together all day, lunched together, and walked up from the Capitol to our hotel.

I remember well how much he talked about his wife, whom he loved devotedly. She was unwell at the time, and he was very solicitous about her. My wife had been similarly affected, and on describing how successful her doctor had been he insisted upon my writing him at once about Mrs. Salmon. I did so while he was sitting by me, as he was a man of action and did not believe in delay. Little did I dream then that the strong, hearty man, so full of vigor, bright thoughts, and love for wife and children, would in a few short hours be called to another world. I do not think he had any premonition of his fate, and yet a small occurrence would indicate it. He was to go to Boonton that evening for a stay of several days, Mrs. Salmon being then at home, and though he had never before called to say farewell when leaving Washington, on that occasion he stopped at my room to tell Mrs. Ransdell and myself good-bye. We thought nothing of it at the time, but coupled with the great shock of his death two days later the act seemed providential.

I feel it a privilege to have been with him that last day in our country's Capitol, and recalling now his conversation, I take pleasure in recording that his sentiments expressed that day were those of a Christian gentleman, a scholarly lawyer, a wise, conservative legislator, and, best of all, a fond father and loving husband. We had many such talks and all of them left on my mind a pleasant, healthful impression. And yet I do not mean to say he was a brilliant talker. In fact, he was at times prosy and prolix. In describing events in his life or telling anecdotes, of which he was very fond, he sometimes went into minute details, leaving nothing to the imagination, and bringing in many side issues which had only a vague connection with his subject. More than once have I heard Mrs. Salmon say: "Hurry up, Josh. Bring that story to a close." But when it did close there was something clean, wholesome, and witty in it which invariably brought a hearty laugh from his hearers. Like all good raconteurs, he enjoyed his own stories, and his laugh was as infectious as that of Private John Allen. In discussing legal questions Mr. SALMON was unusually clear and concise. No side issues were brought in them. Fresh and resonant as the tones of a bell came the ideas from bright mind and fluent tongue. His opinion on legal subjects was held in the highest esteem by his colleagues. I heard the chairman of his committee say of him that when they were reading aloud the dry provisions of the Alaskan code, every now and then Mr. SALMON would say, "Hold on, Mr. Chairman, let us read that over again," and the committee always cheerfully retraced their steps, for they knew he had a good suggestion to offer.

Mr. SALMON, while not in any sense a purist or a Puritan, was one of the most honest and examplary men I have ever known. His happiness consisted in doing his whole duty to his constituents and his country; in cheering and brightening by his own sunny nature the lives of all with whom he came in contact, from the humblest servitor in the Capitol to the proudest official; in delightful conversation and exchange of views with congenial friends, and in the sweet intercourse of an ideal home circle of six loving, happy children, and the best of earthly blessings—a good wife. My heart bled and still bleeds for that home, but I believe the heavenly Father, who doeth all things best, has wife and children in his keeping, and I also believe that the father and husband, though hidden to mortal eyes, still watches over his loved ones and aids them in their earthly journey.

Good-bye, my friend! While here I loved thee well and hope to meet thee some day in the valley beyond the river, where we can rest under the shade of pleasant trees and live again our happy days. Thy memory and the influence of thy pure, sweet life shall never pass from me, but I shall garner them in my holy of holies among the most precious treasures of my life.

The monarch may forget the crown
That on his head so late hath been;
The bridegroom may forget the bride
Was made his own but yester e'en;
The mother may forget the babe
That smiles so sweetly on her knee;
But forget thee will I ne'er, Glencairn,
And all that thou hast done for me.

Mr. NEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I arise to-day to lay a single flower upon the grave of my deceased friend, JOSHUA S. SALMON. It had never been my fortune to meet Mr. SALMON until after the opening of the Fifty-seventh Congress. We had been placed by Speaker HENDERSON upon the same committee, the Committee on Claims, and there I first met him and first learned to appreciate and to love him.

The Committee on Claims occupies in some respects a unique and peculiar position, in that the members of that committee, upon all matters that come before it, are judges and jurors. They pass not only upon the facts, but upon the law, and, to some extent, lacking the law, they sit as chancellors in equity to determine what claims, in fairness and in good conscience, should be allowed by the Government.

The chairman of that committee had assigned Mr. SALMON, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, and myself upon the same subcommittee, and thus we three became more intimately acquainted with each other than we did even with the other members of that committee. But not alone in subcommittee were matters presented that tested the knowledge, the good judgment, and the fairness of Mr. SALMON. Each subcommittee reports to the whole committee, and each then expresses to the other his opinion of the matters brought before us, and I can say truthfully that whether in subcommittee or when we met as a whole, Mr. SALMON brought to the consideration of the matters before us a thorough knowledge of the law, a complete comprehension of the facts, and an earnest desire to know the right and then to do it. I soon learned to respect him as a lawyer, as one who was thoroughly versed in the principles of the law; but beyond the mere letter of the law I found that there was grounded in him the principle of equity and of right, and that where a claim came before our committee, and especially where it was one resulting in a personal injury and he believed that the person injured had an equitable and just claim upon the Government, he unhesitatingly so expressed himself. And yet he was sincerely honest and conscientious, and more than once, yea, many times, when matters came before our subcommittee or in our committee as a whole in which he believed the Government was not responsible and should not respond in damages to the claims that were presented he openly and unhesitatingly said so, and no mere sympathy for the injured or feeling for the distressed ever induced him to recommend the payment of a dollar or a penny that he did not believe was right.

The more I knew him and the better I became acquainted with him the more I esteemed and regarded him, and although but a few short months had passed from the time I had made his acquaintance until he ceased to be one of our number, yet such was the estimation in which I held him that I would have unhesitatingly left to his judgment, to his fairness, and to his determination any matter of the highest importance I might have had of my own.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that I could say more than that though I occupied the rest of the day. It is strange that one so young as he, and in the full bloom, apparently, of health, for I had never heard an intimation from him that he was ailing in the slightest, should be taken from our midst. It is but a reminder of the old thought of the Persian poet, who lived many centuries ago, who, in speaking of life, said:

'Tis but a tent, where takes his one day's rest,
A Sultan to the realm of Death addrest:
The Sultan rises, and the dark Férrash
Strikes, and prepares it for another guest.

Of Mr. SALMON'S religious ideas or belief I know absolutely nothing, but I did know enough of Mr. SALMON to say that he had lived such a life, had been so true to his convictions of what he believed to be just and right, that to him in the future could only come the words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that upon the death of a brother member of this House his colleagues should gather to pay tribute to his memory and review his life, character, and services. It is appropriate also that the House has recently adopted the custom of meeting upon the holy Sabbath day for these occasions.

It is a sad fact, Mr. Speaker, that the grim reaper has invaded the ranks of the Fifty-seventh Congress with all too frequent tread and gathered into his embrace a larger percentage of its membership, perhaps, than that of any previous Congress. Within the two years nearly twenty members have answered the summons from the Maker of us all. Only two Sundays ago we pronounced eulogies upon the life and character of my colleagues from Texas, Mr. Sheppard and Mr. De Graffenreid, and that of Mr. Russell, late a member of this House from the New England State of Connecticut. Since then two other members of this House, Mr. Rumple of Iowa and Mr. Moody of North Carolina, have gone to their last reward.

Reference has already been made during these services to the fact that when the message from on high came for JOSHUA S. SALMON three members of the Fifty-seventh Congress then awaited sepulture at the same time—Mr. Cummings, of New York; Major Otey, of Virginia, and the friend whose earthly life we have met to-day to commemorate.

These occasions would be wasted, Mr. Speaker, if we did not stop a moment, in addition to paying tribute to the memory of our brother members, and find a lesson to be learned by the living—of the philosophy and the uncertainty of life, and of the certainty that death must come to us all.

It has been said by one of the speakers to-day that we are prepared for the death of the old; we can be in a measure prepared for the death of the very young, who are thereby spared the sorrows and vicissitudes of after life, but it is hard for us to reconcile ourselves to the death of those who are taken away in the flower of their usefulness. The life of such a one is sometimes pictured as a broken shaft; but, Mr. Speaker, when we have but a few years at best, and when as individuals we are only mere atoms in the sphere of human activity, is it for us to say when the proper time has come to die? Is it not a truth to be gleaned from all the addresses on this occasion that our brother left practically all that mortal man can hope to leave to prosterity and to his family—a life well rounded in its usefulness, beautiful in its simplicity and devotion to duty; a life that has left no stain upon his memory and that is a benediction and a consolation to his friends and his family?

Our dead friend was of Scotch ancestry, although for nearly three hundred years New England claimed the worthy stock of which he came as her own. It has been said by his successor, Mr. FLANAGAN, that one of the ancestors of our departed friend was knighted by Robert Bruce. Mr. Speaker, "we have no blue blood here, save the royal, ruddy drops which course from honest hearts to quicken healthy brains;" but we have a knighthood that is the birthright of every citizen of the United States, conferred upon everyone by the beneficence of the free government under which we live, the knighthood of equal rights and opportunities, and then we have a knighthood which each individual can confer upon himself; and JOSHUA S. SALMON conferred knighthood upon himself, because he always carried with him, wherever he went, in all the walks of life, upon his breast "the white flower of a blameless life."

Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to know Mr. SALMON well, not only as a member of this House, but personally and socially. We were associated together upon the committee whose chairman [Mr. WARNER] has paid him such high tribute and such well-deserved encomium this afternoon. We lived together at the same hotel. I also bear witness to the fact that he was not only a valuable, faithful, efficient member of this House, an untiring and patient worker upon committees, but a man of high character and a Christian gentleman. Some one has said of another of New England's sons (I do not quote with exactness, but express the sentiment) that "In his composition the coarser clay of which men are made was tempered by the finer sort from which woman is fashioned, and thereby he became a yet more manly man." This can be truly said of our dead friend, for without thought of effeminacy we can say, he was a lovable man.

It was my sad privilege, along with the chairman of the Committee on Claims [Mr. GRAFF] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD], who have added their tributes to-day, and others of the Congressional committee, to attend his funeral in the city of Boonton, and like them I am prepared to say that seldom does it come to any man to have showered upon him in death the tributes of respect and esteem that were everywhere evident upon that occasion. As has been said, every business had stopped, every house was closed, and the entire population of the city, old and young, rich and poor, attended the funeral services. From out the windows of nearly every establishment we caught glimpses of his portrait encircled with mourning emblems, to testify to the universal respect and esteem in which he was held. His had been a busy life, made up of good deeds, kind words and actions in the performance of his daily duty, and he had won the confidence and affection of all who knew him, regardless of political affiliations or conditions.

Only the evening before his death he had attended a meeting of the fire wardens and of the Holmes Library Association, thus showing how closely he had kept in touch, despite the high honors which had come to him, with the local institutions of his home people. He was a member and a trustee of the First Presbyterian Church of Boonton, a director in the national bank there, and in all the activities which went to make up the life of that little city he was the head and front and its most honored citizen.

As proof of the fact to which my friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] has so eloquently referred, that he was a man of the plain people, who kept in close touch with that citizenship which goes to make up the glory of this Republic, I hold in my hand a tribute that was paid him by those of lowly walk in life. The Slavonic Band, of Boonton, in a letter addressed to his devoted wife, said:

To our deep sorrow we have learned of your almost unparalled loss of one who was a friend to us, strangers in this great land; one who was a friend to us poor working people, and always had a friendly word for us. How much was he to his beloved family! Believe us that we feel the loss with you, and as Christians think that this earthly trial is only a dream to which an awakening must follow, to meet again and never to part. We, as foster children of this country, knowing that the esteemed deceased was our fatherly friend, would like to have the honor to be allowed to render our services at his funeral if the arrangements would permit the same.

That was a tribute which speaks louder than any eulogy we can utter here to-day.

Others more familiar than I with his early career have spoken of the many positions of trust and honor filled by Mr. SALMON before his election to Congress. My acquaintance with him began only after that date. I do know that while here he came up to the full measure of a faithful public servant, and that when he was cut down, when only 56 years of age, in the full tide of his usefulness, we all felt that we had suffered an almost irreparable loss. The summons to him, "Come up higher," came so unexpectedly that it was hard for us to realize our loss. It came to him suddenly, for he had awakened at 7 o'clock in the morning, expressing his intention to go out and attend to some business, and in one-half hour thereafter he was no more. Death had come suddenly, but it did not meet him unprepared, for all his life had been a preparation, so living here as to deserve a higher and better life. A score of years is as nothing in the sum of eternity. The great question is, when called to die, "Are you ready" to meet that Creator "from out whose hand the centuries fall like grains of sand?"

Our brother was ready; as others have borne witness, he was a devoted Christian. We heard his pastor, who knew him best in life, and who can speak better than I of his Christian experience and conduct, deliver an eloquent address over the bier of our departed friend in the church of which he was an honored member in life. I take these lines from his sermon upon that occasion:

In every line of activity which made for goodness and for help he was strongly and sincerely interested and engaged. And all because he believed that life was an opportunity given him by God which he must not fail to improve to the utmost. And this leads me to the lower depths of his nature. Believing that life was an opportunity, he knew that to make it effective there must be a belief in God, and early in his career he took opportunity to confess publicly and plainly by uniting with this church his faith in and dependence upon God. His faith in God and in Jesus Christ as God manifest in human form was the basis of his life of purpose, of his life of goodness, of his constant sense of his responsibility to God. He was a Christian man first of all, and this was the secret of his successful life.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I can only add my profound conviction that our brother is now safely anchored "beyond the dark sea" awaiting the coming of his loved ones. Wife and children can find abiding consolation and hope in the assurance that it can be said of him that while here "he loved his fellowman" and served his Master, and that the blessing and promise which fell from the lips of Him whom he served, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God," is the everlasting reward that comes to men like JOSHUA S. SALMON.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, a swift messenger bore the summons to quit this earthly existence to JOSHUA S. SALMON. The quick response separated him from every human tie and left the bitterest cup of grief for the family so suddenly bereft. As the sad news was carried to his friends there came this expression to the sorrowful message: "It can not be." His strong physique and apparent healthfulness was an earnest to everyone of many years of life and vigor. How strange the work of death! It respects no age nor condition. Those in the flower of youth, the power of manhood, or the decline of age yield alike to its determined sway. The unexpected call of Mr. SALMON to the Beyond in the midst of his usefulness and in the prime of his manhood is another forceful example of the uncertainty of life and the illustration of the fact that no one knows the time when the spark of existence may go out.

Mr. SALMON was a man of tranquil temper, considerate and thoughtful about everything with which he was connected. He was free from ostentation. He was plain, frank, and genial. It was my good fortune to be associated with him in committee work in this House. In this labor he showed himself to be painstaking and faithful to duty. The members of the committee will remember his superior advice, his analytical judgment, and practical suggestions. He was rather slow to assert himself—his perception was not so quick as some—but his comprehension of the subject exhibited his potential ability. He was observant of little things. After all, the sum of useful endeavor is measured by the aggregation of little things. By this standard he would measure far above the mediocre. He would stand amongst those whose lives are crowned with success and who have benefited the world by their contact with it.

The scene in Boonton, N. J., the home of Mr. SALMON, when the funeral escort appointed by Congress wended its way from the station to the comfortable and unpretentious residence where his body lay will not soon be forgotten. It was observed that the activities of business had ceased. Many stores were draped in mourning, the streets were lined with the sorrowing throng, who were concerned to pay the last tribute of respect to their honored townsman and personal friend. I remember as we waited near the doorway an old man with tears on his face and the marks of toil upon his person said to his associate standing by, "John, we have lost our best friend." In another group waiting near the church for the family to pass in I heard this expression: "Josh was the poor man's friend. He never forgot us."

When the congregation was seated in the church where the religious service was held I observed a uniformed body had prominent place. To my surprise it was the volunteer fire company of which he had been an active member; there not to contend against the flames and overcome them, but to lay the flower upon the bier and water it with the tears of their sorrow that their brother could no more respond to the alarm of fire and relieve the distress incident thereto. When the pastor made reference to the deceased, and spoke of his honor, integrity, and upright life, and commended his Christian character, it was plainly observant that Mr. SALMON held a warm place in the affections of those who knew him best, and was respected by all. He had touched humanity at many points. The banker and the day laborer, the professional man and the merchant, were alike the recipients of his favor and the beneficiaries of his life.

Mr. SALMON'S chief virtue was in his moral influence and Christian manhood. His life each day was an exhibition of the truthfulness of his profession. No one doubted him. He was a forceful exemplar of right living. His words and acts brought no reflection on Christianity. Think as we may about religion, discard the Bible if it is thought best and class it with profane history, belittle the work of the church and discourage individual devotion to the tenets of Christianity, but when the coffin shall hold the body, the funeral dirge shall be sung, and mother earth receive back its own, the greatest consolation that can come to the survivors is the hope of the resurrection and eternal union of loved ones where separations never take place and tears are never known.

A faithful wife and loving children survive Mr. SALMON. What a beautiful monument he has left them. A structure of his own hand. The heritage of a pure and upright life. The marble shaft erected over the grave by family and friends may crumble to earth and be forgotten, but the influence of his good deeds will continue like the waves of the mighty ocean, rolling on until they break upon the farther shore. His influence will tend to strengthen and encourage long after the body has turned to dust and the marks of recognition shall be effaced.

Our friend has gone, and his untimely taking reminds me of these words:

Death takes us unawares
And stays our hurrying feet,
The great design unfinished lies,
Our lives are incomplete.

[Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. FLANAGAN. Mr. Speaker, there are several members who have prepared eulogies on Mr. SALMON, but who are unable to be present to-day. I ask unanimous consent that they have permission to print their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked by the gentleman from New Jersey that members of the House have leave to print remarks upon the subject of these resolutions. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolutions were then unanimously agreed to.

And then, in pursuance of the resolutions, the House (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 9, 1903.

Rev. A. H. GJEVRE, of the city of New York, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Heavenly Father, Thou art the giver of every good gift and of every perfect gift, for it cometh down from Thee, the Father of light, in whom there is no variableness or shadow of turning. This great and glorious country, the United States of America, is truly a gift of Thee. Thou hast made it a refuge and a home for millions of people who previously had no home, and Thou hast blessed us abundantly unto this day. But we need Thy blessing every day, O Lord, and we ask Thee to bless our country, and our people.

Bless our President and his family. Protect him from all danger and harm. Bless the Congress and all its members. Bless the members of the Senate, and let the spirit of love, of truth, and of wisdom rest on them and guide them and lead them to perform Thy glorious will, and work for the true welfare and progress of our country and our people. May they experience Thy love, Thy mercy, and Divine guidance through every day.

Hear us, O Lord, for we ask Thee in the blessed name of Jesus our Redeemer. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. MCCUMBER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

CHAPLAINS IN THE NAVY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 23d ultimo, all correspondence relating to the pay and status of Navy chaplains that passed between the Secretary of the Navy and Navy chaplains from November 1, 1901, to the present time; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PHILIPPINE CURRENCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a cable dispatch from the governor of the Philippine Islands, indicating the urgent necessity for legislation regarding the Philippine currency.

Mr. FORAKER. As the cablegram is not long, may it not be read?

There being no objection, the cablegram was read, as follows:

[Cablegram.]

MANILA, February 5, 1903.

SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.:

Official ratio of Mexican dollars to United States currency now $2.66 to $1; total direct net loss to insular treasury from depreciation silver since January 1, 1902, $1,277,941.91.

All business suffering greatly from fluctuation and depreciation insular treasury—immense losses to merchants who have sold on credit. Failure to furnish relief at this session of Congress would create consternation throughout the islands; added to prevailing financial depression, loss animals by rinderpest and other contagious diseases, and resulting destitution, the political situation would become more difficult.

The adoption American money would enhance prices greatly and derange every form of business. Legislation making gold peso equal one-half American dollar as unit of value, peso and subsidiary minor coinage receivable for all public dues at the rate of 50 cents American money for 1 peso, with provision for issuance silver certificates based on deposit of new pesos, would furnish a currency as good as American money and much better adapted to needs of the islands. The Philippine Commissioners are unanimous in these views.

TAFT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table and be printed, the bill being now on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11544) to correct the military record of Thomas J. Morman.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 17) requiring corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, prohibiting rebates and discriminations and the use of interstate commerce in attempts to destroy competition, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. CAPRON, and Mr. HAY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also communicated to the Senate resolutions passed by the House commemorative of the life and services of Hon. William Joyce Sewell, late a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

The message further communicated to the Senate resolutions passed by the House commemorative of the life and services of Hon. Joshua S. Salmon, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR. A bill (H. R. 3265) granting an increase of pension to Henry Pensinger;

A bill (H. R. 3353) granting an increase of pension to John H. Kehn;

A bill (H. R. 16073) granting an increase of pension to John H. Smith; and

A bill (H. R. 5876) granting an increase of pension to Jacob E. Richards.

Mr. BURTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14592) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Barrett, reported it with anamendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7194) authorizing the issuance of letters rogatory by the Commissioner of Patents, and providing for the execution of letters rogatory issued from foreign patent offices, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $200,000 for payment to Liliuokalani, formerly Queen of the Kingdom of Hawaii, in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims or pretended claims, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill or to any other general appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

STATUES OF CHARLES CARROLL AND JOHN HANSON.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. McCOMAS on the 3d instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson, presented by the State of Maryland, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maryland.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable copper-process plates to be bound with these memorials.

LILLIAN G. ELKINS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6048) granting a pension to Lillian G. Elkins, to report it favorably with an amendment; and as it is extremely important that the bill should be immediately passed, I ask for its consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lillian G. Elkins, widow of Fred C. Elkins, late of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and Company D, Seventeenth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW C. SMITH.

Mr. GALLINGER. I make the same request for the same reason in regard to the bill (S. 4922) granting an increase of pension to Andrew C. Smith, which I report back from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments of the Committee on Pensions were, in line 6, after the word "late," to strike out "of company" and insert "musician;" and in line 8, before the word "dollars," strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew C. Smith, late musician, Twenty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 dollars per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 7291) regulating the importation of breeding animals; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for constructing a first-order light and fog signal on one of the ledges known as The Graves, on a granite tower, to mark the entrance to the new Broad Sound Channel in Boston Harbor, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7142) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate a sum equal to two years' pay of a district superintendent of the Life-Saving Service for the widow and children of the late Joseph W. Ethridge, late superintendent of the sixth life-saving district, who died from pneumonia contracted in the line of duty, and proposing to appropriate a like sum for the widow of the late John M. Richardson, late superintendent of the first life-saving district, who died from sickness incurred in the line of duty, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL POSTAL RATES.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted the Postmaster-General to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers marked "Exhibits A, B, C, D," submitted by him in connection with Senate resolution No. 103, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, dated February 4, 1902.

PHILIPPINE COMMERCE.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,000 copies of Senate Document No. 126, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, entitled "Philippine Commerce," of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 500 copies for the use of the War Department.

EXTENSION OF EIGHTH STREET NORTHWEST.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3638) for the extension of Eighth street NW., or Wrights road, District of Columbia.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 11, before the word "subdivision," to strike out "Wright and Dole's" and insert "Todd and Brown's;" so as to make the section read:

That within six months after the passage of this act the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to institute in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court, by petition particularly describing the lands to be taken, a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for the extension of Eighth street NW., otherwise known as Wrights road, District of Columbia, northward to Irving street, through lot 4 of Todd and Brown's subdivision, with the full width of said lot.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the omnibus statehood bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is prepared to submit some remarks on the resolution which I offered, calling for information concerning courts-martial in the Philippines, and I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania to defer his motion.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution went over, I will say to the Senator, subject to call, and the Senator from Tennessee has a right to call it up at any time.

Mr. QUAY. Certainly. I withdraw the motion.

MUSCLE SHOALS POWER COMPANY.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Tennessee and the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up House bill 16602. It is a bill merely extending the time in which work is to be done on the Muscle Shoals by a private company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 16602) to extend the time granted to the Muscle Shoals Power Company by an act approved March 3, 1899, within which to commence and complete the work authorized in the said act to be done by said company, and for other purposes; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN COLORADO.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the pending business be temporarily laid aside——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from North Dakota will pardon the Chair, a pending resolution was by unanimous consent laid on the table subject to call. The Senator from Tennessee has just given notice that he proposes to call it up in order to submit some remarks, and therefore the Chair will be obliged to recognize the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. PATTERSON. There was a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary this morning establishing a term of the United States court in Montrose, Colo. I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennesse yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16334) fixing terms of United States courts in Colorado, and other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT CAPE NOME, ALASKA.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. TURNER. I wish to call up a short bill in which the people of the Territory of Alaska are very much interested. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 6848) to establish a life-saving station at Cape Nome, Alaska.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the thirteenth life-saving district is hereby extended to include the coast of Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 17) requiring corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, prohibiting rebates and discriminations and the use of interstate commerce in attempts to destroy competition, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. QUARLES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SALMON.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, February 14, after the conclusion of the exercises in commemoration of the life and character of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a member of the House, I shall submit resolutions commemorative of the life and character of JOSHUA S. SALMON, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 7th instant, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 679) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Capt. E. O. Fechét, disbursing officer, United States Signal Service Corps, in favor of the Bishop Gutta Percha Company;

An act (S. 4832) for the relief of Col. H. B. Freeman;

An act (S. 5079) for the relief of George P. White;

An act (S. 5381) to correct errors in dates of original appointments of Capt. James J. Hornbrook and others;

An act (S. 6446) to provide for the construction of a bridge across Rainy River in Minnesota;

An act (S. 7063) permitting the building of a dam across the St. Croix River at or near the village of St. Croix, Polk County, Wis.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 146) to extend the time for construction of the Akron, Sterling and Northern Railroad in Alaska.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 4722) for the erection of a building for the use and accommodation of the Department of Agriculture; and

An act (S. 7124) to provide for the removal of persons accused of crime to and from the Philippine Islands for trial.

COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A resolution submitted by Mr. RAWLINS, directing the Secretary of War to inform the Senate what courts-martial have been ordered and held in the Philippine Islands, etc.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I suppose that the Senate, following the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], will send the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines. I suppose also that every Senator thoroughly understands that you might as well write a letter to a dead man for information as to send a resolution of inquiry to that committee. Before this resolution goes to its grave, I wish, in the language of a distinguished Arkansas divine, to make a few remarks concerning the remains.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] the other day, when this resolution was in debate, asserted with an air of triumph that the inquiry made by the Philippines Committee had shown that the great majority of the officers and soldiers in the Philippine Islands had been kindly and humane in their dealings with the natives, and he declared that I was very much disappointed because the result of that investigation had not put a brand of infamy upon the American Army.

This last remark, Mr. President, was wholly gratuitous and wholly mistaken. I have asserted that myself in every speech I have made upon the floor of the Senate. I have said over and over again that the great majority of the American Army abhorred the criminal practices which have brought shame and dishonor, not so much upon the American Army, which is the mere instrument, as upon the authors of that policy. The Senator's statement in that respect is absolutely true, but it is utterly irrelevant. I have some facts in mind to show how true and how irrelevant the Senator's statement is.

We had a number of witnesses before our committee who testified that the command to which they were attached occupied a district comprising five towns, one or more of which had a population of 12,000, and that in all this district there had not been one single act of violence committed by a single Filipino against a single American soldier, and the soldiers on their part were kind and just and generous in dealing with the natives.

There is a fact, Mr. President, to vindicate the assertion made by the Senator from Indiana, if an uncontroverted statement needs any vindication. But what does it signify so far as this controversy is concerned? The further fact is that by the order of the commanding officer all five of those towns and every house in them was laid in ashes and the people driven forth into the wilderness. How much good did it do these wretched Filipinos that the great majority of the soldiers were kindly and humane? How much good did it do them to know that the very men who applied the torch abhorred and detested the acts which they were compelled to commit?

I have another fact in mind, Mr. President, to substantiate the Senator's statement. General Smith in a letter over his own signature declared that the relations existing between his soldiers and the native Filipinos in Samar were of the friendliest character. He declared, in substance, that it was almost impossible to compel his soldiers to execute his brutal and inhuman policy. He said that the soldiers seemed to have a love of the little brown brothers ingrafted in their nature; that they looked upon them as little brown angels.

Mr. President, there, I say, is another fact to substantiate the statement made by the Senator from Indiana that a majority of the American soldiers were just and kind and humane in their dealings with the Filipinos. How much good did that do? How much good did that do the people when Smith issued his inhuman order to make Samar a howling wilderness, to practically exterminate the whole people, to kill even the little children above 10 years of age, and to kill all prisoners?

Sir, if we may believe the testimony brought out in the recent Glenn trial, his orders were executed with such brutal completeness that he actually doomed several thousand people to death by starvation after they had laid down their arms and become friendly to the United States.

Mr. President, how much good does it do to say that the American Army contained only the usual proportion of wicked and vicious men? Every man knows that every army contains a number of wicked and vicious men. How many men does it take to torture unarmed and helpless noncombatants? How many men does it take to burn a village, or a hundred villages? How many men does it take to sweep a whole district with fire after its armed defenders have been driven away?

Mr. President, we know, as I have said, that every army in the world contains enough wicked and vicious and lawless men to make its presence a hell upon earth if those men are not restrained by proper discipline. You may take the most peaceful community in this world, in a time of profoundest peace, when the people are long habituated to orderly government, and you dare not relax the rigor of your penal laws. You know that if you did so, that community would burst out into crimes of blood and violence.

How much more is that true of an army in time of war, habituated to scenes of death and violence. You may take the best army that ever trod the earth, send it to a distant and hostile country, subject it to the nerve-racking strain of a campaign in a tropical land, and let it be known throughout that army that crimes of violence will go unpunished, and who does not know the awful consequences that will ensue?

Let us suppose, Mr. President, that in an army invading a distant country you have a regular system of criminal violence in known, deliberate, scandalous violation of the laws of war; and though this is long continued and notorious, no effort whatever is made to suppress it, and that no criminal is ever brought to justice; let us suppose that the very officers, charged with the duty of enforcing discipline, are themselves the very worst offenders; let us suppose that the most brutal outrages go unnoticed and apparently unknown to the military authorities on the scene long after they have become a matter of common knowledge even to the people at home, 7,000 miles away; let us suppose that courts-martial obstinately refuse to punish or to adequately punish the most flagrant crimes; let us suppose when the facts of an atrocious murder are forced upon the attention of the military authorities, the crime proven, and the criminal known, it is all waved aside as a matter of no consequence, and that this action is approved by the government at home; let us suppose that at last a general officer should throw down all pretenses of discipline and should proclaim to his soldiers that the more bloody and cruel and ferocious they were the better he would be pleased—let us suppose that these conditions exist in the best army in the world, I ask would they not be utterly subversive of discipline, would they not demoralize that army, would they not result in a reign of blood and crime and violence?

Mr. President, the charge we make is that just these conditions have existed and just these consequences have ensued. Who can say that that is a charge against the honor of the great body of American soldiers?

But, Mr. President, you must add one more condition to make this statement complete. You must suppose that these crimes have been again and again brought to the attention of the governmental authorities at home; that respectful requests have been made for some action that would put an end to these abuses; that these requests are at first met with cynical indifference, and when the demands become more sharp and insistent they are met with spurious investigations, which discover no single fact, and with sweeping denials of charges which are afterwards proven beyond the possibility of doubt or denial; and when the facts are established so plainly that they can no longer be disputed, let us suppose that the governmental authorities, and those who speak for them, should turn with the bitterest imprecations upon those by whose efforts the truth has been revealed and should show in every possible way that they have a deeper hatred for the man who exposes than they have for the man who commits the crime—I ask if that would not demoralize the best army in the world? I ask if it would not operate as a license to all the wicked, degraded, depraved, and ruffian characters in that army?

Mr. President, it is a fact that we have had an organized system of torture in the Philippine Islands—torture practiced frequently upon helpless noncombatants, upon men against whom there was no scrap of evidence, against whom no charge was made—torture prolonged until the victims fainted from agony, only to be revived and tortured again, until they had made a confession of guilt or betrayed their countrymen, or by their long endurance of agony convinced their persecutors that they had no crime to confess and no knowledge to reveal, or else until, as in some cases, they died from the torture.

Mr. President, it is a further fact, that though this was notorious throughout the whole army, though it was continued for months and years, no effort was made to suppress it, and no single torturer was ever punished for the crime. It is a fact that men of high character and standing, representatives of leading Republican, Administration newspapers, went in person to the commanding general and told him that they had not only seen a perfect orgy of looting and plunder, but that they had seen wounded prisoners butchered before their very eyes, and, though he did not deny it, he ignored it.

It is further true that this fact was brought to the attention of the Secretary of War in a letter over the signature of Robert M. Collins, the chief agent and representative of the Associated Press in the Philippine Islands, and it did not suggest to him the propriety of any inquiry or any investigation.

Another fact. It was revealed by the publication of a soldier's letter in the United States that there had been a murder of prisoners of war after the battle of Caloocan. I want to say right here that this was one of the many cases that have occurred again and again where the most atrocious crimes remained unnoticed by the military authorities until they were accidentally revealed by the publication of a soldier's letter in the United States, and from the United States sent back to the Philippines.

In this case an investigation was ordered. The inspector-general of the district prosecuted that investigation and he reported that at least two—he did not know how many more—but at least two prisoners had been murdered, and the facts recited showed that there was strong reason to believe that it was done by the order of an American officer, Captain Bishop.

Mr. President, what was done with respect to that report? What followed that report? First, Mr. President, there was a great hue and cry raised and threats of prosecution against the soldier through whose letter the facts had been revealed; next, an attempt was made to stop all investigation by one of the principal heroes, one of the prime favorites of the War Department—General Funston—who lodged the complaint with General MacArthur that the inspector was showing too much zeal in seeking to uncover this crime; next, it was proposed to make a vicarious sacrifice of a poor private soldier, one of the men who, under orders, had executed the prisoners; but when this was brought to the attention of the judge-advocate he saw that you could not kill even a private soldier or put him in the penitentiary without a trial, and he said that the soldier on that trial would bring out the fact that he acted under the orders of his superior officer, and that the facts developed would implicate too many others.

So, Mr. President, it was decided—it was officially decided—that there were so many engaged in this bloody business that it was better to wink at the crime of murdering prisoners of war than to expose the actual condition of affairs, and that lame and impotent conclusion was accepted by the War Department without a protest.

The Department itself had ordered an investigation of a charge that American officers had murdered prisoners of war. The answer came back that there had been so many men engaged in this practice it was too common a practice to bear investigation; and that answer seems to have been entirely satisfactory to our noble and generous and humane Secretary of War.

Mr. President, when, later on, in a sudden spasm of virtue, a court-martial did convict an officer of the crime of killing an unarmed and unresisting prisoner of war and had fixed upon him the disgracefully light punishment of five years in the penitentiary the President of the United States intervened in his behalf and commuted the punishment to a pecuniary fine and a slight reduction in his rank.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator please state what case that was and give the name of the officer?

Mr. CARMACK. That was the case of Lieut. Preston Brown.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I want to say when you talk about dishonoring the Army, that the man who does more than any other to dishonor the American Army is he who permits a cowardly convicted murderer to wear the uniform of an American soldier.

Mr. President, it is a fact that our court-martial trials over there are a travesty upon justice.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him again?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator contend that the record shows that Lieutenant Brown was convicted by a court-martial of murder?

Mr. CARMACK. It does not say "murder."

Mr. SPOONER. No; but the Senator said "a cowardly murderer, a convicted murderer," as I understood him. Does the Senator contend that the record shows that Lieutenant Brown was convicted of murder?

Mr. CARMACK. He was convicted of this: He was convicted of killing an unarmed, unresisting, native Filipino prisoner of war in his charge; and I say that that is murder, whether they call it murder or not.

Mr. SPOONER. If that were true, it would be murder.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what he was convicted of; that was the very charge; it was the very language of the charge; and he was convicted of that—that is the record—of killing an unarmed, unresisting, native Filipino, a prisoner of war in his charge.

Mr. BATE. I wish to ask my colleague if the record shows that fact?

Mr. CARMACK. It does. I think I have quoted the exact language. I have it here, and it reads:

> Lieut. Preston Brown, charged with murdering "an unarmed, unresisting, native Filipino, name unknown, a prisoner of war in his charge," convicted of manslaughter, and sentenced to be dismissed from the service of the United States and confined at hard labor for five years.

I was saying, Mr. President, that our court-martial trials over there have been a travesty upon justice. We have had men convicted of torturing helpless prisoners of war by hanging them by the neck, and the punishment inflicted was a reprimand; of looting, plundering, and firing upon peaceable citizens—punished with reprimand; the most outrageous acts of violence committed upon women and children—punished with a small fine; rape and murder—punished with imprisonment.

Mr. President, I ask if these unpunished crimes, these insufficiently punished crimes, did not constitute a license to all of the criminal elements of the American Army? We have had over there innocent, friendly guides butchered in the most horrible manner without the form or semblance of a trial, and though the facts subsequently developed showed that they were innocent, that they were loyal, that they by their faithfulness had saved the lives of their very murderers, no man ever was punished for the crime. It has been shown in court-martial proceedings over there that natives were required to act as guides to betray their countrymen to American troops, and when they refused to do it their brains were beaten out with the butts of muskets. We have had repeated cases of indiscriminate firing upon peaceable citizens resulting in the killing and wounding of women and children, and the only record of any man ever having been punished for the offense is that of one officer who was reprimanded.

We have had a case brought to light, as so many others have been, through the letter of a soldier, where a number of soldiers surrounded a house, from which house there proceeded sounds of music and laughter. There was no body of armed insurgents there. It was a wedding party. And yet the soldiers fired in upon that peaceable wedding party, killing and wounding a number of women and children, and no man was ever punished for that. No notice was ever taken of it until the news had come back to the United States, having been accidentally revealed through the publication of a soldier's letter and forced upon the attention of the War Department, and, by that circuitous route, sent back to the Philippine Islands.

We have had towns and villages innumerable burned. We have had vast tracts of territory converted into a howling wilderness. Mr. President, when Smith issued his brutal and inhuman order, commanding his soldiers to practically kill everybody over 10 years of age, to murder all prisoners, to make the country a howling wilderness, I have no doubt that that shocked the conscience of a large majority of the American soldiers; but to every wicked, vicious, and depraved ruffian it said, "There is no more law; there is no more restraint; there is no more punishment for crime; you can do just as you please;" and, as I have said, there are enough bad men in every army to spread ruin and death and desolation in its path where no restraint is put upon them.

Mr. President, suppose when Lee invaded Pennsylvania, instead of issuing that humane, magnanimous order forbidding pillage and violence, he had said, "I want you to kill and burn; I want no prisoners; the more you kill and burn the better you will please me." Suppose Grant had issued such an order in the South; each of those great humane commanders would have burned a path of ruin and desolation as deep and as lasting as that of the Conqueror in Northumberland, and he would have left a memory to be execrated by the remotest descendants of the victims.

But, Mr. President, we have to deal not only with the ruffian element of our own Army, who are thus licensed to commit crime, but it is a fact that we turned loose upon those helpless people heathen Macabebe savages. It is a fact, not shown from the testimony of witnesses, but from the official reports of General MacArthur and of General Wheaton, that we turned loose upon those people heathen Macabebe savages, who carried on a perfect carnival of crime, plundering towns, murdering peaceable citizens, and ravishing women, and that the American commanders sought to conceal their crimes and protect them from punishment. It is admitted by General MacArthur and General Wheaton that when these men were employed and clothed with the uniform of the United States their propensity to murder and loot and ravish was well known, and after they had done all this they remained under the same commanders in the service of the United States! The excuse is made by General MacArthur that it was absolutely necessary to employ those savages in order to execute there the policy of the United States.

Mr. President, I have no charge to make against General MacArthur. I will accept as true the plea that the exigencies of the policy imposed upon our commanders did require that mediæval torture should be inflicted, that it did require that we should employ known murderers of men and ravishers of women and clothe them with the uniform of the United States. I will admit, for the sake of argument at least, that these things were necessary to execute this policy; but I say that it constitutes the strongest indictment that could be made against any policy that it requires that such things shall be done by men wearing the uniform of the American soldier.

Mr. President, such were the methods which prevailed in the Philippine Islands, and yet the President of the United States in a public speech declared that we should have been justified in being infinitely more severe. We have adopted mediæval tortures; we have adopted the Spanish reconcentrado policy; we have hunted men down like wild beasts and shot them if they preferred their own wasted country to the reconcentrado pens; we have made that country a howling wilderness; we have driven the people into the very jaws of famine, and yet the President of the United States calmly surveys the ruin he has wrought and, like another great imperialist, is astonished at his own moderation!

Mr. President, I say that we have a right to have the records of these courts-martial laid before the American Senate and given to the American people; and when we ask for them we are confronted with the pitiable excuse on the part of those who have squandered hundreds of millions of dollars of the public money in this wicked policy and wasted four years in a bloody and devastating war that it would cost a dollar or two and would put the War Department to a little trouble.

Mr. President, we have seen enough in the newspapers with respect to the Glenn court-martial to make it important that the facts should be laid before the American people. I saw in a newspaper a report of some testimony taken in that trial. It was said that a number of natives were commanded to act as guides for American soldiers, and either because they would not or because they could not they were made to kneel and their skulls were beaten in with the butts of muskets, and no man has been punished for that crime.

I do not know whether those men were able to do what was commanded of them. I have it from a high official of the Philippines, recently in the city of Washington, that one peculiarity of the Filipino is that he knows very little of the geography of his country outside of his immediate neighborhood; that it had been the policy of Spain to keep them confined within their own neighborhoods, and that when the average Filipino got beyond that he was in a strange and unknown country. It may be, Mr. President, that these men were killed for not doing what they did not know how to do; but if they did know, and if they chose death rather than betray their countrymen, though their names are unknown and their graves are unmarked, they suffered martyrdom with as sublime a heroism as the most illustrious chieftain who ever died for the liberties of his country.

I do not know, Mr. President, whether Major Glenn was guilty of the murder of those men; I do not know that he had guilty knowledge of the act; but I know from newspaper reports of that trial that the crime was committed and that no man has been punished for it.

I know, further, that Major Glenn defended himself by citing the orders of General Chaffee and General Smith, and that he demanded that they should be brought before that court-martial to testify, so that he might confront them with his statements, and they did not come. I know he declared that the records of General Smith's brigade had been tampered with in order that they might not show the truth.

Mr. President, General Smith has been defended on the ground that his brutal order was not executed. If some of the testimony adduced in the Glenn trial by American officers is true, that order was executed with the most brutal and barbarous perfection. "Let them die," said General Smith, when told that several thousand people who had become friendly to the United States were starving to death in the mountains. "Let them die; the sooner they die the sooner we shall have peace."

Mr. President, there is the Brownell case. How does it happen, I want to ask, when we were assured by the President that he was going to conduct a most rigid investigation and was going to discover all of the crimes that had been perpetrated in the Philippine Islands—how does it happen that he never heard and never learned of the Brownell case, where a priest was tortured until he died? This man was tortured again and again until he fainted under the torture, and when he revived he was tortured the third time, when he died. I know that a complaisant physician who made the post-mortem examination in that case certified that this man did not die of the torture, but that he died of a broken heart—died from "mental anguish."

Mr. President, fortunately we know the meaning of the term "mental anguish" as it is used by the military authorities in the Philippine Islands, for when men were tried and convicted and reprimanded for torturing native Filipinos by hanging them by the neck they were found guilty of inflicting "mental anguish" upon their victims. You can fancy the "mental anguish" of a man who is hanging by his neck!

Mr. President, I do not know but that it would be a good idea to adopt some of these terms in our own law courts. It would not sound half so bad, and would rob death of a great deal of its terrors, if we would do so; if the judge, when he draws on his black cap to pronounce the sentence of death, should order that the prisoner at the bar should at such a time be taken to such and such a place and there suffer "mental anguish" in the neck until he is dead! [Laughter.]

I am not surprised that "mental anguish" is so fatal to people in the Philippine Islands. But, Mr. President, accept this statement as true and it at once destroys the pretense that this water torture is a gentle, humane, and persuasive method. It is said that this man was filled with agony and remorse; that as soon as he had been compelled to make his confession he felt that he was disgraced and dishonored, and he wanted to die and he prayed for death.

Mr. President, how great must have been the physical agony that could have extorted from such a man a confession which he would rather have died than reveal. I have no harsh words to say of Captain Brownell. I am willing to give all due weight to what has been said in his behalf by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], who knows him well. But the fact is that he repeatedly applied the torture to this priest, and that the latter died under the torture; and I suppose the Senator from Vermont himself would admit that this act was, in general, a violation of the rules of civilized warfare, and in particular a violation of the specific rules laid down for the government of our army in the Philippine Islands—orders and rules which every American officer is supposed to understand and by which he is supposed to be guided unless he receives contrary instructions from his superior officer. If Captain Brownell of his own volition deliberately violated the rules of warfare by torturing this priest to death, he is guilty of an atrocious crime and he ought to have been punished.

I want to say that, in my judgment, Captain Brownell was doing his duty as a soldier in the sense that he was obeying the orders of his superior officers. I believe he was doing what he was sent there to do. I believe he was doing what Chaffee wanted him to do and knew he was doing. One of the most dastardly things in this whole business has been the attempt of the commanding officers to saddle all the odium and all the criminality of these acts upon subordinate officers and private soldiers when they themselves are responsible for the crimes.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from Tennessee a question? Was General Chaffee in command at the date of this occurrence?

Mr. CARMACK. I am not right sure.

Mr. LODGE. My impression is that it was General MacArthur who was in command. I have not the date here.

Mr. CARMACK. I do not remember the date when it occurred.

Mr. President, there is one other case which does not concern the torture of a Filipino. It is the torture and the murder of an American soldier. I refer to the case of Private Richter, tortured and killed by Lieutenant Sinclair, who was afterwards acquitted. The effort has been made and the statement has gone forth, apparently emanating from the War Department, seeking to represent this man as a debauched, depraved, and degraded beast, who died while suffering mild and proper correction. I have here a statement which purports to have been taken from the records of this trial and which I believe is correct, and I will read it to the Senate.

The case of Private Edward G. Richter, who was put to death by torture while serving his country in a foreign land, is surrounded with details so horrible as to challenge human belief.

Prior to his enlistment in the United States Army young Richter was an honest and respected citizen of Syracuse, N. Y., possessing the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. A brief outline of the details in connection with the murder of this young soldier are as follows:

At Dasmarinas, Cavite Province., P. I., on the night of February 7, 1902, Lieut. William B. Sinclair, of Company I, Twenty-eighth Infantry, commanded his subordinate to remove Private Richter from his quarters and bind him, hand and foot, to the ground. There being no rope at hand Lieutenant Sinclair hastily procured one from his own quarters near by, and the man was bound as directed.

At this juncture the unfortunate soldier must have had a premonition of the horrible fate that awaited him, for he cried out to his comrades, "They are going to kill me." To prevent further outcry the lieutenant ordered a gag placed in the already helpless man's mouth. Next a stick of wood was brought, and with this the gag was pressed firmly into the mouth, apparently so as to effectually shut off the breath. But the torture did not cease here.

By the officer's order a cask of ice water was brought to the scene. Dipperful at a time, the water was slowly poured on the dying man's face. In the agonizing attempt to catch one last breath the bound man twisted and squirmed his poor, tortured frame as much as the cords which bound him would allow. According to witnesses this diabolical torture was continued for two hours and twenty minutes, even for a considerable time after the dying man's struggles had ceased. Lieutenant Sinclair was duly tried, charged with the murder of young Richter.

It has been my painful privilege to read the entire court-martial proceedings, covering some 20,000 words, and I give it as my own unbiased opinion that the testimony there adduced was sufficient to convict a hundredfold; but the accused officer was found "not guilty."

Absolutely the only atom of evidence presented at this trial which by any stretch of the imagination could be construed as unfavorable to Richter was to the effect that he was in a state of intoxication—which, if true, only adds to the enormity of the crime—and that he had used obscene language to the lieutenant who was torturing him. Also, that during the torture Richter had called upon his comrades to help save his life. But the testimony shows that even these frail charges were by no means concurred in by all the witnesses. There is not a word in the testimony to indicate that the boy at any time offered the slightest violence toward his so-called superiors. All in all, it is one of the most cowardly and revolting deeds that stains the whole calendar of crime.

The mother who had borne and reared her son to manhood is now passing her days in sorrow and grief. She has modestly asked the War Department to return to her the body of her boy and to furnish her with a copy of the court-martial proceedings which acquitted his murderer. Up to the present time both of these requests have been denied her.

Mr. President, I assert that in my opinion that is a true statement of what will be revealed by the records of that court-martial. I assert that it is not true that this man was a debased and degraded ruffian, but that he was a man of good standing and of good character. In my judgment the records of that court-martial, if they are laid before the Senate, will show that he was foully and brutally murdered; and we demand that the court-martial proceedings shall be made public; and we demand it not to defame the American Army, but to defend the honor and good name of a murdered soldier.

Mr. President, the plain truth is that Senators upon the other side of the Chamber know of the awful horrors that have been enacted in our Philippine war, but they do not care. The whole land has been blighted and ruined by fire and sword, with plague and famine following, like wolf and vulture, in the track of war. Perhaps nowhere in the world are there a people in a more pitiable plight than are the people of the Philippine Islands to-day. But we do not care. If any part of our own people had been thus afflicted Congress would have been called together in extraordinary session for their relief, large appropriations would have been instantly voted, and private charity would have poured out its bounties.

In this case it is not even a topic of conversation. It is not mentioned by Senators in private or in debate. It was absolutely ignored by the President in his annual message to Congress. He rhapsodized over the magnificent triumph of our American arms, but he had not one word of pity for our victims. No note of dolor was suffered to mingle with the victor's song. In his speech at Memphis the President declared that the people of the Philippine Islands had never been as orderly, as peaceful, and as prosperous as they are to-day. He declared that their progress in material well-being was absolutely astounding. Yet, Mr. President, at the very moment when he made that statement those people were actually and literally starving to death. At that very time the insular government was spending $15,000,000 to buy food to stay the advance of famine—$15,000,000 wrung from the people themselves; taxing starvation to feed famine. At that very time agriculture and all other forms of industry were paralyzed and prostrate, and the people were being driven, by sheer hunger, to brigandage and robbery, fighting no longer for liberty, but for bread. These were the actual facts as stated by Governor Taft in his report from the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, if all the cereal crops of the United States should fail, if some plague should destroy nearly all the horses, the cattle, and the hogs in this country, the immense increase in the importation of food stuffs and of live stock that would ensue would not be regarded by any man as an evidence of prosperity in this country, but rather as the marks of a vast and overwhelming calamity. But in the Philippine Islands our President and our Secretary of War and our imperialist orators regard the food that is imported to feed the starving as showing the great commercial prosperity of a famine-stricken country. "The imports are so great and the people are so prosperous" because food is being sent there to feed the people who have no food at home, and which would not be sent there if the people were prosperous and if their crops had not been destroyed.

Mr. President, there is another aspect to this question besides that of mercy and humanity. I suppose it is vain to appeal upon that ground, but there is this practical aspect of the question. Mr. Roosevelt, in a speech made when he was governor of New York, said that our indifference to the welfare of the people of Alaska had made them prefer annexation to Great Britain, and the same condition would result, he said, if we showed a like indifference in the Philippine Islands. Governor Taft has told us that if our Government there is to be a success, if it is not to be a colossal and egregious failure, we must keep in office there the very best men, and he said it would be very difficult to get high-class men to remain in that country. He said that the opportunities and temptations for plunder and oppression would be very great, and that there must be a constant and most vigilant supervision on the part of the Government at Washington. How much vigilant supervision is exercised by the man who thinks that the country is enjoying the greatest prosperity when, as a matter of fact, it is actually starving to death?

The President has told us again and again that our war in the Philippine Islands was the most gentle, the most merciful, and the most humane ever waged in the history of this world. But we can not forget that the same President has told us that the people of the Philippine Islands were actually wallowing in luxury and fat content, when, as a matter of fact, they were perishing by the tens of thousands of plague and famine. How much confidence can you put in official information with respect to that unhappy country when the very source of information tells us that the people are the most prosperous people in the world, when, as a matter of fact, they are in the grip of famine and dying by the thousands and the tens of thousands, and when an appeal is lying right before this Congress to make an appropriation to keep this most prosperous people on earth from starving to death? The most prosperous people in the world! With torch and sword he had scattered plenty o'er a smiling land. He had made it a howling wilderness, but the most prosperous "howling wilderness" in the world.

Mr. President, the same vigilance that enabled the President to discover that these people were enjoying such marvelous prosperity, when they were starving to death, will enable him to discover that they are enjoying the best government in the world, when, as a matter of fact, they are being oppressed and plundered by carpetbag adventurers, and when they rise in insurrection against intolerable oppression that vigilance will enable him to see that it is simply the innate devilment and wickedness of the people.

Mr. President, I have heard it said again and again, "There is no use talking about this Philippine question, because the people of the United States do not care what is going on in the Philippines." Our experiment there will fail disgracefully and disastrously because we do not care. If you are to have good government there, if you are to have tolerable government there, you must care; you must exercise an eternal vigilance for the welfare of the people, for, Mr. President, the price of bad government will be discontent, will be hatred, and sooner or later it will be insurrection and war, to be put down at the cost of the blood and the treasure of the American people.

Mr. President, I do not know whether this country will ever come back to the old traditions of the past. I have seen a vast change in the ideals of those who now lead the dominant party. The President of the United States in his public utterances has repudiated his own most fundamental political conceptions as laid down in his books. An eminent Senator on the other side of the Chamber has declared that in his judgment the abolition of human slavery was a mistake. Perhaps that eminent Senator, whoever he may be, contemplated the opportunity for vast profits by the employment of slave labor in the Philippine Islands and cursed the shortsightedness of the Republican party in abolishing slavery. I do not know how that is.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] in a speech made during the last campaign expressed a wish that the present occupant of the White House could be fixed in that position for twenty years, in order that he might resist such revolutionary and socialistic doctrines as found expression in the New York Democratic platform. But, Mr. President, those who have launched this country upon a new and strange and revolutionary policy abroad can not complain if others follow their revolutionary example. The fatal work is done, and the door is thrown open to all forms of revolution when you destroy the reverence of the people for the old conservative traditions of the past. Those who have trampled down the principles and traditions which forbid this country to become the ruler of subject races can not complain if others trample down those old principles and traditions which define the scope and purpose of our Government at home.

Mr. President, it is said that we can not retreat; that it would be cowardly for us to retreat. I do not believe that it is an act either of folly or of cowardice to retreat from the bog to the solid highway upon which we have thus far traveled to glory and with honor. I believe, I firmly believe, that time will demonstrate the folly of all this business, and I earnestly hope time will find some cure for the blunder we have made.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the resolution may lie on the table. Does the Senator mean as before—subject to call?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I think it would be better in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will obviate the necessity of its being laid before the Senate every morning. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the resolution may lie on the table subject to call. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. I now renew my motion that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the omnibus statehood bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALGER. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

ROBERT C. GREGG.

Mr. ALGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 5219) to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Robert C. Gregg.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of War to review and to revoke the order dismissing Robert C. Gregg from the service as a first lieutenant of the Forty-ninth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, and to issue a certificate of honorable discharge for him to date from the 31st day of March, 1900.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills:

A bill (S. 149) to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah; and

A bill (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17, and agree to same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In place of "six" insert "seven," and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 10.

GEORGE F. HOAR,
CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS,
GEORGE TURNER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN J. JENKINS,
D. H. SMITH,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State covering a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company for the month of December, 1902, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission in pursuance of section 11 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1903.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. KEAN addressed the Senate in continuation of the speech begun by him on the 4th instant, and having spoken, with interruptions, for nearly an hour,

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

[Mr. KEAN'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. PATTERSON. My attention was attracted to what appear to be suggestions from the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that there are no good, substantial reasons for the admission of New Mexico, in connection with which he told an anecdote, the full import of which I did not gather, but I thought it would be quite apropos to read a very short extract from a speech by a very distinguished Republican, made at Las Vegas, N. Mex., on the 25th of June, 1899—made by the present occupant of the White House. It was at a reunion of the Rough Riders, and this is an extract taken from the speech which he made at that time, which was published in the Las Vegas Daily Optic. It was sworn to by the publisher of that paper as a correct report of his remarks. It is very short, and it may furnish an opportunity for further digression by Senators who oppose the admission of these Territories, as I take it that opportunities for digression are what they are mostly seeking for at this time. The extract I referred to is as follows:

I can not say how glad I have been to come here. I never was in New Mexico before, but I never felt like a stranger for one moment among you. [Applause.] I claim the same right that each of your sons claims of glory, and take pride in the name and fame of New Mexico. I am an American, as you are Americans, and you and I alike have the right to claim as our own every acre and rod of country from Maine to Oregon; from Florida to California. [Applause.]

It seems that a shower came up at about that time and the speaker said:

The heavens have been more than propitious so far and we must not complain of this shower. All I shall say is if New Mexico wants to be a State, you can count me in, and I will go to Washington to speak for you or do anything you wish.

Mr. KEAN. What was the date of that speech?

Mr. BATE. By whom was it delivered? The Senator should state that.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is an address delivered by Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, now President of the United States, at the Rough Riders' reunion, on Sunday—"the better the day, the better the deed"—June 25, 1899, at Las Vegas, N. Mex.

Mr. KEAN. That was not a speech in favor of the omnibus bill.

Mr. HALE. Does the President indicate in that rather large contract that he entered into that he had never been in New Mexico before?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is what he said.

Mr. HALE. He was a stranger?

Mr. PATTERSON. He was a stranger.

Mr. HALE. Speaking from his impressions?

Mr. PATTERSON. He was a stranger, but they did not take him in. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEAN. But they tried to.

Mr. GALLINGER. He took himself in.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am quite convinced that they could not play any gold-brick game on the honorable gentleman who was addressing that meeting; but I am inclined to think that President Roosevelt was not at all ignorant of the history of the country, nor of the part New Mexico had played in the country's history, nor of the part its men played in the war from which we emerged with so much glory, and I imagine also that he was not ignorant of the moral obligation that rested upon this country by virtue of the treaty——

Mr. KEAN. What moral obligation of the treaty?

Mr. PATTERSON. By which that great territory was annexed to the United States; nor, I take it, was a man, who had been so long connected with public affairs, ignorant of the section of the country and its conditions of which he was then an honored and invited guest, and I am inclined to think that at that time the President of the United States spoke his honest sentiments, sentiments that a majority both of the Senate and House of Representatives echoed.

This bill passed the House of Representatives by a tremendous majority, and there are those who say that if an opportunity was given in this body it would pass this body by a very decided majority. So we have the very condition of things that the parties to the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo contemplated. Congress is now ready to admit these Territories if those who are opposing the measure will but give the Senate an opportunity to vote, so that the record made on this side of the Capitol may coincide with the record made on the other side.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say that I have no doubt that the President was sincere at the time that he made that speech. It does not disclose that he had made a thorough examination into the conditions of New Mexico; but with the impressions upon his mind, the feeling that animated him, he was in favor of the admission of New Mexico; but, Mr. President, there is nothing in that speech that indicates that the President at that time was in favor of the admission of New Mexico with bare, barren, sparsely populated Arizona tacked on it as a rider, and Oklahoma, with varying conditions, not in the slightest degree touching those of New Mexico, tacked on as another incident. There is nothing whatever in that speech that indicates that the President in any way then, there, or now was, or is, in favor of this omnibus bill, admitting all these Territories together.

If some enthusiastic person in the audience which the President addressed, some denizen of Arizona, who had strayed far enough away from that Territory to be present at the meeting which the President addressed, and thinking of his own region, instead of New Mexico, had arisen and asked the President whether he was in favor of the admission of New Mexico with Arizona attached, does the Senator believe that the President had enthusiasm enough at that time to have favored that proposition also?

The President was talking about a single bill for the admission of New Mexico standing upon her own merits, whatever they may be. One of the great objections that we have to it is that it is lumped together with other measures, and sought to be put through as an omnibus bill. I know of no record of the President or of anybody who is opposing this bill which ever indicated that they would support such a proposition as is presented here by the minority.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. As a part of history, the Senator from Maine, I think, will find, if he will search the RECORD of the proceedings of the other House, that there were three separate bills there introduced and ready to be acted upon, which passed the committee, and that the House of Representatives gave an instruction or an order, which I think is in the RECORD, that the three bills should be united into an omnibus bill. The House has done that and put the bill in this shape. That is a Republican House, and Republicans voted for it.

Mr. HALE. Is there anything to hinder the Senate committee from separating them and putting each of these Territories in a separate bill?

Mr. BATE. I understand, sir, there was an order in the House that the different bills should be united in an omnibus bill.

Mr. HALE. Yes; but that does not bind the Senate.

Mr. BATE. Perhaps not; but has the minority here attempted to put those bills through separately; and if so, when? Has the minority proposed statehood for a single one of these Territories? I understand not, nor has there been any effort made to put a single one of them through or to give us a chance to vote upon the bill at all.

In reply to what the Senator from New Jersey said in reference to the speech of the President, I beg leave to read the closing words of what the President said, and let us see if he did not mean to assist New Mexico even at that time, if it were necessary. The closing words of the President's speech, addressing that audience in New Mexico, are:

All I shall say is, if New Mexico wants to be a State you can count me in, and I will go to Washington to speak for you or do anything you wish.

I think that is language plain enough and distinct enough to show what the President then desired to do. But whether he has changed his opinion or not is, I suppose, a mere matter of surmise, for I do not know what his position is now. I do not belong to his party and do not know what he thinks about this measure, nor do I know what his final action regarding it will be if the bill should come before him for the admission of these Territories; but there is the declaration of Colonel Roosevelt, now the President of the United States, and I have seen no recantation of it.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a few moments?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. With reference to the question that was before Colonel Roosevelt when he made his speech at Las Vegas, it is very true there was no proposition to lump three Territories together for admission as three separate States; but as I have listened to the objections to the omnibus bill from the other side of the Chamber, they have been concentrated almost exclusively upon New Mexico. New Mexico is the sore spot in the measure; and that, I discover, is chiefly by reason of the fact, until the Mormon bugaboo was started the other day, that the people speak Spanish, that the children play in Spanish, and that some of the business houses have Spanish signs over their doors to indicate——

Mr. KEAN. What did the Senator say—that the children play in Spanish?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; they play in Spanish. They leave school where they have been taught English during the day, and they have so much love for what we would term their mother tongue that they actually forget English for the time being and play tag and puss in the corner and games of that kind in the Spanish language, which of course is quite a disqualification for statehood, or it would be when they come in.

But, Mr. President, the main objections have been urged against New Mexico, and those objections have attacked the qualifications of the citizenship of New Mexico.

So far as Arizona is concerned, the chief objection has been to the lack of numbers and not the quality of the people. It is admitted that Oklahoma has a population sufficient, I think, for at least two members of Congress, nearly 400,000, a population that is composed of the very best blood and the very best people of the American race.

So when we show that a most distinguished statesman and a most distinguished Republican leader, one upon whom at that time the eyes of the Republican party were concentrating as a proper person at least to fill the great office of Vice-President of the United States, most heartily and enthusiastically pledged himself even to go to Washington for the purpose of securing the admission of New Mexico as a State in the Union, then the objections to the omnibus bill ought to vanish.

It is not at all unusual for States to be admitted into the Union in a group. That has been the practice ever since the adoption of our Constitution and the passage of the Ordinance of 1787. If the grouping of three Territories in one bill for admission as three States were at all unusual, then an objection based on that fact might carry some weight with intelligent Senators, but I submit to the Senate that it has been the exception to admit a State singly; that the usual course has been to group several States, admitting them either in one bill or at one session, it being understood that the admission of one was dependent upon the admission of another.

So I again suggest that that most emphatic and earnest and unqualified indorsement of New Mexico by the gentleman who is now President of the United States should carry conviction even to unwilling Republican minds.

Mr. QUAY and Mr. ELKINS addressed the Chair.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I trust the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, recurring to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the proposition for the admission of the Territory of New Mexico as a State is an entirely different proposition from the omnibus bill, I ask the Senator from Maine whether, in the event there is an agreement for a division of the question and that a vote shall be taken as to the admission of each Territory separately, he and those who are acting with him in obstructing the passage of this bill through the Senate will agree to fix a day for a vote?

Mr. HALE. Oh, well, that is a non sequitur. But if the question were divided and it came separately, I should certainly vote for New Mexico quicker than I would for Arizona. I should like to have the opportunity of discriminating, and I think we ought to have it.

Mr. QUAY. There will be no opportunity to discriminate unless there is an opportunity to vote.

Mr. HALE. There will be an opportunity to discriminate when we do vote.

Mr. QUAY. When will we vote?

Mr. HALE. I can not tell the Senator. I am not in charge of the measure; I do not know. I will assure the Senator that I would rather vote for New Mexico than for Arizona.

Mr. QUAY. I should be very glad to have a date fixed for this discrimination, if it is ever to occur.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KEAN. Before yielding to the Senator from West Virginia, I want to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. That is, whether he would give us the same assurances now on the admission of these Territories that he gave in the House of Representatives—in 1875, I think it was—when he was urging the admission of Colorado as a State in the Union.

Mr. PATTERSON. I was not then a member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN. Was not the Senator a Delegate?

Mr. PATTERSON. I was not a Delegate when Colorado was admitted into the Union. Mr. Jerome B. Chaffee was the Delegate from Colorado at that time.

Mr. KEAN. It must have been at a previous time. I made a mistake as to the date. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia, although I had not quite completed reading from his remarks. I can do it after he has concluded.

[Mr. ELKINS addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] certainly does not desire to do an injustice to the people of New Mexico and Arizona, but the Senator has undoubtedly done them an injustice. The Senator has referred to the fact—and it has been referred to on this floor time and again—that the people of New Mexico and Arizona were in favor of polygamy; that they were ignorant; that they were repudiationists. It is perfectly legitimate to stand on the floor of this Chamber——

Mr. KEAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not refer to them as repudiationists.

Mr. CLAY. In one moment I will yield to the Senator.

It is perfectly legitimate to stand on the floor of this Chamber and present proper arguments against the admission of these Territories to statehood, but to stand here and do an injustice to those people, Mr. President, is an act which some day Senators will regret.

Now I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that I did not allude to those people as repudiationists.

Mr. CLAY. I did not especially refer to the Senator from New Jersey when I stated that those people had been spoken of as repudiationists, but it has been charged on this floor that the people of Arizona were repudiationists, and when an investigation was made it was demonstrated that they were in favor of the payment of their debts, but that Congress had done them an injustice in requiring them to pay bonds that were fraudulent, and which ought not to have been paid.

The Senator from New Jersey has said upon this floor that there was great danger in the admission of New Mexico to statehood, because of the large number of Mormons in that Territory. Why, Mr. President, if you will refer to the census report you will find in 1890 that, with a population of 180,000, there were only 456 Mormons in New Mexico.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator is mistaken. I know perfectly well what the Mormon population in New Mexico is according to the census report, for I have it here. I call the Senator's attention to the statement which I made, which was that there were 400 and odd Mormons, I believe, in New Mexico.

Mr. CLAY. Four hundred and fifty-six.

Mr. KEAN. Four hundred and fifty-six. I made no extravagant statement as to the number of Mormons in New Mexico.

Mr. CLAY. I did not say that the Senator from New Jersey made an extravagant statement in regard to the number of Mormons in New Mexico, but the Senator stated that great danger was likely to come by reason of the Mormon population in that Territory, which is only 456.

Mr. KEAN. That was twelve years ago.

Mr. CLAY. And the best information that I can obtain at the present shows less than 1,300 Mormons there at the last census.

Mr. KEAN. It has considerably more than doubled.

Mr. CLAY. Yes. I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that in Idaho, by the census of 1890, there were 14,972 Mormons, and if you will examine the census returns as to the population of Utah you will find that there are 118,201 Mormons there, while there are only 456 in New Mexico and 6,500 in Arizona.

Mr. President, we ought not to do those people an injustice. The time may come—and it ought to come now—when we will admit those people to statehood, and we shall be ashamed of the treatment we have accorded to them during this debate. They are all American citizens; they can be classified among the best people of this Republic, and it is wrong to stand upon this floor and denounce them in the way they have been denounced.

I want to call the attention of my friend from New Jersey to a statement he made, for I do not believe he desires to do injustice to any one. He said that New Mexico and Arizona had never given an expression against polygamy. If the Senator had taken the trouble to read the history of New Mexico, he would have found that in 1889, when she adopted her constitution, she provided that polygamy should forever cease in that Territory; and I have that constitution before me. That constitution was adopted with practical unanimity, and we find that the Secretary of the Interior in submitting it to Congress said:

> Referring again to the constitutional convention held in 1889, I beg to submit its work herewith as an evidence of the character, ability, fairness, and broadness of the people who framed it, and who were representative New Mexicans. I submit it confidently, to compare favorably as a state document with any of the constitutions adopted by the older States, and earnestly invite your attention to the same as showing the qualities of mind and character of thought representative of the people of New Mexico upon this organic measure.

If the Senator would turn to the bill of rights in the constitution adopted by the Territory of New Mexico in 1889, he would find that the people whom he has charged with being polygamists provided in section 14 of their bill of rights, as follows:

> SEC. 14. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, is hereby guaranteed, and no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or a juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not excuse acts of licentiousness or justify polygamous practices or other acts inconsistent with morality or the peace or safety of the state, nor permit any person, organization, or association, directly or indirectly, to aid or abet, counsel or advise any person to commit bigamy or polygamy or any other crime.

Now, mark you, Mr. President—

> Bigamy and polygamy are forever prohibited—

By this constitution adopted in 1889 by New Mexico and submitted to Congress. If the enabling act had been passed, New Mexico would have become a State. I understand now that the people of New Mexico are ready at this time to present this identical constitution to Congress. All they ask is an opportunity for statehood.

I did not rise for the purpose of making a speech, but I do believe it is wrong for a Senator to stand here and charge those people as being repudiationists, charge them with being polygamists, and charge them with being ignorant, when they are an intelligent, progressive, and enterprising people, who at no distant day will constitute States in this Union of which we shall all be proud.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

Mr. KEAN. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota in a moment. Before yielding, however, I would like to say that I am not in the least disturbed by the remarks of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. I do not think that I charged the people of New Mexico wrongly. All I was contending for was a proper amendment to this omnibus statehood bill to prohibit polygamy. With the growing power of the Mormon Church, I think such a provision is necessary, and I think the Senator from Georgia will agree that it is necessary. I have looked through the statutes of Arizona, and all I could find on this subject was what I read on Saturday last. There may be other statutes, but I do not know of them. I was not aware until a little while ago of the provision of the constitution of New Mexico which the Senator has read, but I certainly did not charge that any statute had been passed in New Mexico that gave polygamy any standing whatever. What I complained of was that not sufficient attention had been given to this subject in the pending bill.

Now I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement to correct some of the misapprehensions under which Senators seem to labor. First of all, I was struck by the circumstance that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is usually very correct in his statements, the other day called attention to the fact, as he claimed, that it was really New Mexicans that expelled the Confederates from New Mexico during the civil war. In that I think the Senator unwittingly did an injustice to his own State. As a matter of fact, and it is also a matter of history, it was a regiment from Colorado, a regiment of "Pike's Peakers," under the command of Colonel Slough and Major Chivington, that went into New Mexico and turned the tide of the Confederate invasion.

I wish to read very briefly in this connection from Bancroft's History of Arizona and New Mexico:

> Colorado's experience in the civil war has been elsewhere recorded in the volume devoted to that Territory. Here it must suffice to state that by the energetic efforts of Governor Gilpin and his associates a Union force was raised, which not only defeated all Confederate hopes at home, but was also able to go abroad and turn the scale in New Mexico. Two companies, which later became A and B of the Second Colorado Volunteers, were mustered in December, 1861, going to New Mexico in January, 1862. Company B, Capt. T. H. Dodd, served under Canby at Valverde, as we have seen, and Company A, Capt. J. H. Ford, remained at Fort Union.
> The First Regiment of Colorado Volunteers was commanded by Col. J. P. Slough, S. F. Tappan being lieutenant-colonel and J. M. Chivington major. The regiment was composed largely of "Pike's Peakers," the best of fighting material, intensely loyal to the Union, always eager to go to the front, but not taking kindly to the restraint of military discipline when there was no fighting to be done. Whole companies were often under arrest for mutiny, and an order to march to the relief of Canby, obtained by Major Chivington from General Hunter mainly with a view to prevent the disintregation of the regiment, was welcome to all. The troops left Denver in February; the different divisions united March 7 at the foot of the Raton pass. A march of 64 miles was once made in twenty-four hours, and the regiment arrived at Fort Union on the 11th-13th of March. Maj. G. R. Paul, colonel of New Mexico Volunteers, was in command of the post, but was ranked by Colonel Slough, who assumed command of the united forces.
> On March 22, Colonel Slough's army of 1,342 men, including 300 regular troops, marched from Fort Union toward Santa Fe, encamping at Bernal Spring on the 24th. On the 25th the advance of 400 men, half of them mounted, encamped near the old Pecos ruins, and a scouting party, under Lieutenant Nelson, captured 4 men of the enemy's picket, 5 miles farther west at Pigeon's rancho. Next morning Major Chivington advanced with all force; and about a mile beyond the rancho, at the mouth of the Apache Canyon proper, found a Texan battery posted, which opened fire. This was about 2 p. m. The Federal infantry deployed to the canyon slopes as skirmishers, advanced to the attack, the calvary remaining behind a spur in the ravine, with orders to charge when the battery showed signs of retreating. The battery presently fell back a mile or more, but Captain Howland failed to charge as ordered. The new position of the Texan guns was at a bend in the canyon, across a dry arroyo bed, supported by the infantry, strongly posted among the rocks and on the summits.
> Chivington repeated his former manuever, but dismounting Howland's and Lord's men to strengthen the infantry on the flanks, he left the cavalry charge to 100 Colorado horsemen under Captain Cook. After a sharp fight on the flanks the battery yielded and Cook dashed forward, his horsemen leaping the arroyo with a yell and charging through and through the enemy's ranks. Cook fell severely wounded, but Lieutenant Nelson took his place. The infantry, under Captains Downing and Wincoop, cooperated most effectively; the Texans were driven from the field, and the fight of Apache Canyon was won.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to correct him?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I never made any statement of the kind the Senator has attributed to me. I only claimed that the New Mexican soldiers had assisted in the expulsion of the Confederates. The New Mexicans had three regiments in that fight and Colorado had one regiment. I do not know who did the work, but I know it was well done. I have never claimed that the New Mexicans did all the work and that our soldiers did not do their share.

I want to say to the Senator that I am entirely familiar with that transaction. In the regiment from Colorado all of the officers were acquaintances and friends of mine, as were very many of the common soldiers; and I should like to say now, while upon the subject, that in that campaign a Colorado regiment of infantry made a march of over 60 miles in twenty-four hours, and went into that battle at the dawn of day, assisting General Canby with his New Mexican troops. I will not allow the Senator to put upon the record a statement that I claimed that the New Mexican soldiers did this work alone; for I made no such statement, and nothing which I said could be tortured into it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the most that can be claimed for the New Mexicans during the civil war was that they were to a large extent passive. The turning of the tide of the Confederate invasion of New Mexico was largely through the efforts of this regiment of Colorado Pike's Peakers, in connection with about 300 United States Regulars. But I will take no more time upon that subject. I only refer to it incidentally to show how sometimes we are prone to exaggerate and give credit where credit is not due.

Now, I want to call attention to some of the statements of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], which were utterly wide of the mark. He claimed, in his remarks a moment ago, that there were over 300,000 people in New Mexico, and that three-fifths of them are now Americans. I have examined the last annual report of Governor Otero, of New Mexico, and the most he claims is 234,000, and out of that he says that the Spanish-Mexican population is 144,000 and the American population only 90,000. That shows that the Senator from West Virginia is entirely mistaken.

At the close of his speech the other day, and I had not the opportunity of being in the Chamber at that time, owing to the fact that I was engaged in committee work, the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] referred to the character of the population in the State of Minnesota and took occasion to compare them with the population of New Mexico. It is true that in Minnesota we have a large foreign population; but a large proportion of that foreign population are English-speaking people. Out of a total foreign population of about 500,000 in Minnesota nearly 90,000 are English-speaking foreigners from Canada and the British Isles. They come over familiar with our language and they immediately become valuable members of the community. The remainder of our immigrants in Minnesota are either from Germany or the three Scandinavian countries—Denmark, Sweden, and Norway. Everyone who is at all familiar with the facts knows that there is no class of people coming to this country speaking another tongue who more rapidly learn the English language and become good American citizens. The first generation of children of these German and Scandinavian immigrants become thoroughly Americanized; they speak the English language, and in many instances never are able to learn the mother tongue of their parents; in fact, they frequently grow up without any knowledge of it.

Minnesota has been settled to a large extent by immigrants and the children of immigrants, and it is to-day one of the most prosperous and progressive States in the Union. In the matter of intelligence, in the matter of literacy, and in all that goes to make up a State it will compare favorably even with the State of Ohio, and there is no occasion to compare it with the Territory of New Mexico.

I find on looking at the census reports for 1890 that the percentage of illiteracy in the State of Ohio was 4.8 per cent, while in the State of Minnesota it was only 4.1 per cent. Compare that with New Mexico, with its 28.3 per cent, and the Senator from Ohio will see the difference as to the conditions existing in Minnesota and New Mexico.

As I have said, we have one of the most prosperous and progressive States in the Union. We have a school fund, which we have secured from the proceeds of the sales of the public lands given us by the United States, of over $15,000,000 invested in interest-bearing securities. Notwithstanding other States got as large a school land grant as we did, we have a greater school fund in the State of Minnesota than any State in this Union outside of the State of Texas.

We have in our State a State university with over 3,500 students and with a curriculum only second to that of a few of the leading institutions of learning. I think there are only three universities in all the United States that have a larger attendance of students than has the University of the State of Minnesota. We have connected with that university a school of practical agriculture, the leading and most eminent one of its kind in all this country, with an attendance of from seven to eight hundred students, where the sons and daughters of farmers are taught all that pertains to farming and the agricultural interests of the country.

We are the most progressive State in the way of regulating and controlling the great corporations of the country. We have in our State a board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, and we have given them what the Federal Government has refused to give to our own Interstate Commerce Commission, authority to fix transportation rates; and the rates which this board fixes are valid and binding until set aside by the courts.

We have in our State an elevator and warehouse law, by which railroad companies are required to permit warehouses and elevators to be built along their right of way. We have compelled the railroads where they intersect one another to put in Y's, so that loaded cars may be transferred from one intersecting railroad to another, and I doubt whether another State in the Union has such a law.

All this legislation, Mr. President, we have secured in the face of the opposition of the railroad companies and their friends. A large share of this liberal and broad-minded legislation, intended to protect the farmers and industrial classes of the country against the inroads of the great corporations, has been secured through the energy of the representatives of foreign birth in our legislature. The leader in the house of representatives of the Minnesota legislature for the last six or eight years, a man who is recognized by all elements as the leader of the house, and who has secured a great deal of the progressive legislation in that State, is a man who was born on the other side of the sea, in one of the Scandinavian countries.

Compare the record of the people of Minnesota with that of New Mexico. In 1878, after New Mexico had been a Territory of the United States since 1850, the legislature of the Territory, in defiance of the statutes of the United States, in defiance of all right and justice, passed a law to incorporate the Jesuit Society. Let me read the act. I read from Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 43, second session, Forty-fifth Congress:

An act to incorporate the Society of the Jesuit Fathers of New Mexico.

Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico:

SECTION 1. That Donato Gaspari, Rafael Baldasaré, Luis Gentilé, Salvador Personé, and Pascual Tomasine, of the counties of San Miguel, Mora, and Bernalillo, in the Territory of New Mexico, and all other persons who are now or in the future may associate themselves with them for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, be, and hereby are, created a body politic and corporate, in law and in fact; and they shall be known and called by the name, style, and title of that of the "Association of the Jesuit Fathers," and by this name may hereafter have perpetual succession, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, in any court of law or equity—may hold and reserve to themselves and for their successors, either by grant, contract, sale, transfer, gift, testament, legacy, or in any other manner, lands, tenements, hereditaments, and all and every class of real or personal property, and may cede, contract, sell, and transfer the same, for the use and benefit of said Society of the Jesuit Fathers so incorporated; and singular and generally may do each and every thing that such corporation may and be legal for them to do, for the welfare, benefit, and advancement of said Society of the Jesuit Fathers hereby incorporated.

I call attention to this—

It is curious to see how this act was passed. I am reading from this same document—

Introduced by the Hon. Diego Archuleta January 11, 1878.

Read the first time, and, the rules being suspended, was read the second and third times, and passed the legislative council January 11, 1878.

JESUS M. SENA Y BACA,
Chief Clerk of the Legislative Council.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Received January 11, 1878.

Received on the same day it passed the legislative council.

Read the first time, and, the rules being suspended, was read the second and third times, and passed.

It was passed under suspension of the rules in both houses. Here is a further indorsement:

An act to incorporate the Society of the Jesuit Fathers in New Mexico, introduced by Diego Archuleta January 11, 1878, read the first time, and, on a suspension of the rules, was read a second time, and the rules being further suspended, the act was read the third time, and passed the legislative council January 11, 1878.

This act was sent to the governor for his approval. The governor vetoed it, and here is his veto message. It is a very interesting document, and I want to call attention of Senators to it:

GENTLEMEN: I return to you with my objections "An act to incorporate the Jesuit Fathers in New Mexico."

For the purpose of obtaining for your information the best legal advice within my reach, I requested the attorney-general of the Territory, Hon. William Breeden, to prepare a careful opinion upon the law of the case. This opinion I make part of my message and lay it in full before you. Attorney-General Breeden says: "The bill, in my opinion, is clearly in violation of the said law of the United States."

This opinion I fully indorse, and if you pass this bill over General Breeden's opinion and my veto you will do so with your eyes open, in violation of your oaths of office and the laws of the United States. There are many other objections to the bill, a few only of which I will briefly notice.

It is difficult to decide whether the man who seeks to establish the society or the society which he seeks to establish is the worse. Both are so bad you can not decide between them. This Neapolitan adventurer, Gaspari, teaches publicly that his dogmas and assertions are superior to the statutes of the United States and the laws of the Territory. No doctrine or teaching can be more dangerous to good government than this, especially in New Mexico, where the mass of the people are ignorant. He also, by his writings and harangues, endeavors to excite animosities and to stimulate the people toward those lawfully exercizing civil authority over them to acts of violence. He comes here while the legislative assembly is in session and lobbies in the most brazen and shameless manner to defeat needed and wholesome laws, and to force through bills antagonistic to the laws of the United States.

Two years ago he intruded himself into the lower house and remained within the bar and by the speaker's side till he forced the passage of this bill, but at that session it was defeated by an honest legislative council. He now presents himself again, and being fully informed that what he asks is contrary to the laws of the United States, urges you to violate your oaths and pass the bill.

The society which he seeks to establish in New Mexico is worthy of just such a leader. It has been denounced time and again by the head of the Catholic Church, and justly expelled from the most enlightened countries of Europe.

But apart from the bad character of the society and the dangerous character of its chief, the bill is especially objectionable because it does not require that the incorporators shall be citizens of the United States nor residents of New Mexico. The number who may hereafter associate with them is unlimited, and they might all be aliens and reside abroad.

Again, the bill permits these people to own, free of taxation, an unlimited amount of property. They are permitted to own all kinds of real and personal estate in all parts of the Territory, and are not subject to any supervision by the legislature nor required to pay anything toward the support of the government. The provisions of the bill are contrary to public policy and in direct violation of the laws of the United States, and can not receive my approval.

Then follows the opinion of the Attorney-General calling attention to the statutes of the United States and pointing out plainly that such legislation is directly in violation of the United States statutes.

Now, what do you think they did after that veto? I read from the same document:

There was taken up from the president's table and under consideration act No. 3, "To incorporate the Society of the Jesuit Fathers in New Mexico," submitted by his excellency the governor, with his objections and disapproval, and the said act having been read, the question was put, "Shall the act pass, notwithstanding the objections of his excellency the governor?" which resulted by a vote of the council in the passage of the act in the legislative council by a two-thirds vote of the members composing the legislative council, notwithstanding the objections and disapproval of his excellency the governor.

January 18, 1878.

JESUS M. SENA Y BACA,
Chief Clerk of the Legislative Council.

Sent to the house of representatives for its action, together with the objections of his excellency the governor, and returned from the house on the 19th day of January, 1878, having passed that body by a two-thirds vote, notwithstanding the objections and disapproval of his excellency the governor.

They passed the bill in both houses on the same day. It was sent to the governor, and after the governor had vetoed it and called their attention in his own veto and also in the letter of the Attorney-General to the fact that it was contrary to the laws of the United States, they passed it in both houses on the same day over the governor's veto.

That act came before Congress. Congress was compelled to pass an act annulling that law. It is an act passed in 1879, and is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico entitled "An act to incorporate the Society of the Jesuit Fathers of New Mexico," which passed both houses of said legislative assembly on or about the 18th day of January, 1878, over the veto of the governor of said Territory, being in violation of section 1889 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which declares "the legislative assemblies of the several Territories shall not grant private charters or especial privileges," said bill being a grant of a private charter or act of incorporation, with the "especial privileges" of an unlimited power to acquire, hold, and transfer all kinds of property, both real and personal, and the exemption from taxation of all the effects and property of said corporation be, and the same is hereby, disapproved and declared null and void.

This act was approved February 4, 1879.

All these things occurred when, or about the time when, my friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] was a delegate in Congress laboring to get that Territory admitted as a State in the Union.

I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], who has taken pains to parade the figures of the foreign population of Minnesota and to compare them with those of New Mexico, if he can find in the legislative history of Minnesota, either as a Territory or a State, any instance of that kind of legislation. Our public school system in the State of Minnesota is equal to the very best in all of the United States. We are as progressive and as prosperous as any State in the Union, and no State can fairly say to us, not even the State of Ohio, that we occupy an inferior rank, except in population and wealth, in the galaxy of the American States.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota asked me a question, and in the asking of the question said I had arraigned the State of Minnesota and paraded the fact that she has a large element of foreigners in her population. The Senator I know does not want to do me an injustice.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly not.

Mr. FORAKER. And does not want to misrepresent what I said.

In saying what I did about Minnesota I was answering an argument which had been made by the Senator. The Senator in addressing the Senate had alluded to the fact, and had cited the statistics to sustain him, that there was a large foreign population in New Mexico. I conceded that, and said in conceding it that that was not peculiar to New Mexico; that other communities which had been successful had a large element of foreigners in their population. And this is the language I employed in respect to Minnesota. The Senator, I know, will pardon me, in order that I may, in justice to myself, quote it. Before quoting it I will stop long enough to say that in all that the Senator has said in compliment of Minnesota he has not exceeded the compliments I passed upon Minnesota at that time and in that connection. What I said, referring to the Senator's argument that these people were disqualified for admission into the Union because of this large foreign element, was as follows:

Neither is it a disqualification that they are foreigners—

Referring to the Mexican and Spanish element—

Neither is it a disqualification that they are foreigners. We heard a large part of the Senate's time taken up in urging that these people ought not to come into the Union because they were not all American citizens. We have a number of communities in this country where the foreign element is very largely represented, and I am going to call attention to one. I refer to Minnesota. There is no State now in the Union where they have a more loyal, faithful, capable, creditable population than they have in Minnesota. That is not in spite of the fact that they have foreigners, but because the foreign element is sometimes a very valuable mixture.

One paragraph further:

Let me call your attention to what the statistics show as to the State of Minnesota. There is no better State in the Union, but what I call attention to shows that a representative of that State is the last one to question the fitness for statehood of a people on the ground that a large percentage of them are foreigners.

Then, giving the statistics, which I do not care to take the time now to repeat, I said:

Now, Mr. President, with that admixture of foreigners, as I said, they have had enough good sense to have built up a great Commonwealth, to have made a proud record for themselves, and to have sent to this body as their representative the distinguished Senator who has addressed us in opposition to the admission of New Mexico to statehood.

Then I was interrupted by a question, which, having answered, I proceeded as follows:

I regret to say that I am unable to answer that question. I did not think to look at that. But what I want to say is that Minnesota is one of the best States in this Union. Her population, as everybody knows, is an intelligent, patriotic, busy, and capable population. They have never made any mistake in selecting representatives to the Congress of the United States in either House, certainly not beyond the average number made by States as a rule. Their whole record is a creditable one, and I cite the fact that they have this foreign-born population to show that it does not follow because there are foreign-born citizens in the Territory of New Mexico that that Territory is disqualified for admission to statehood.

I might have cited the statistics as to my own State, Ohio (as the Senator has seen fit to do, but I did not care to parade the statistics as to my own State), to show that there was a large admixture of foreign element in the population of Ohio. It did not seem to me that it was necessary for me to make any defense of the people of Ohio because they had a large foreign population. I think every Senator here will concede that the population of my State is a creditable one, that they have made a creditable record in the history of this country, and that they have done their duty under any and all circumstances.

I did not refer to Minnesota except only because the Senator himself had challenged attention to that subject. The purpose I had in view, conceding that they had a foreign element of which we all have knowledge, was to show that it does not follow that they are disqualified for statehood. You have only to look to New York, to Massachusetts, as well as to Ohio and Minnesota, or to any and every other State of the Union, where you will find a large admixture of foreigners with the native-born population, to find that it has made a splendid population in the aggregate, and that the people of all the States are, notwithstanding that fact, doing their duty in a creditable way as citizens of the United States.

I was simply answering the argument the Senator made. I was not arraigning his people. I was not arraigning his State. I was complimenting his State. Every Senator I know is proud of the record Minnesota has made, and it is not to the discredit of Minnesota that she has this large foreign element in her population. I did not say they could not speak the English language. The Senator says that 25 per cent of the 500,000 can and do speak the English language. I supposed a larger percentage than that spoke the English language, although I did not stop to examine the statistics; but that is immaterial. We know the record they have made, and that is one we can all in good faith compliment.

Why I rose was simply to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I did not arraign Minnesota. I did not say one word to her discredit or in disparagement of her. I cite her record with pride, and I cite her deeds and her achievements with pride, as every other citizen might.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator is entirely wide of the mark. He built up an argument as a basis for his reference to Minnesota by claiming and insisting that I was opposed to the admission of

New Mexico because of its foreign population. They are not a foreign population. I never opposed the admission of New Mexico on the ground that its population is foreign born.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. They have more native-born people there perhaps than in most of the Northwestern States.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. The Mexicans and that class of people whom I think are unfit for State government are people who were born in and have lived in this country for generations, as did their ancestors ahead of them. They are not foreign born. I never attacked the people of New Mexico on the ground that they were foreigners. They are natives of this country. I simply criticised them for the fact that they had not become Americanized, notwithstanding the fact that they were born in this country, notwithstanding the fact that their fathers and their grandfathers and their great-grandfathers way back for generations were all born in this country they had not become Americanized as rapidly as the foreigners in our country of the first generation.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NELSON. By and by.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to——

Mr. NELSON. Of the immigration that comes to Minnesota over 25 per cent are English-speaking people—Canadians and from the British Isles. The remainder that come are from the German countries, the northern countries of Germany, and from the three Scandinavian countries. They come there and they learn the English language as rapidly and as readily as any class of people who come here speaking a foreign tongue. You do not have to wait three or four or five generations before those people can speak the English language. They learn it themselves, so that they speak it quite well, and their children speak it.

They do not have interpreters in the courts to interpret the argument of counsel to a jury. They do not have interpreters in court to interpret the charge of the court to the jury. They do not publish the laws in the German or the Scandinavian or any other foreign language. They are to all intents and purposes an English-speaking people. They are Americanized; and that is my objection to the Mexican people; that although they are natives of this country, they have not become Americanized as the great mass and body of our people have.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not looked over the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota as they appear in the RECORD, but I sat on the other side of the Chamber near the Senator when he was making that part of the speech to which I refer, and if he did not say that one of his objections was that there was this large foreign element in the population of New Mexico, I misunderstood him. I understood him so to charge and so to insist.

Mr. NELSON. I never intended to charge anything of the kind.

Mr. FORAKER. It may come from the fact that the Senator was talking about the people not becoming Americanized. That is practically the same thing, I think. There is not a very broad distinction. I got that impression.

If the Senator has no objection to the population of New Mexico on the ground that they are foreigners, or if he insists there are no foreigners there, of course the point to which I was replying falls to the ground by his concession, and I have nothing more to say. But I retract nothing I said in that connection. What I said was justified by the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota, and what I rose to object to was simply his putting it into the RECORD that I had arraigned the State or the people of Minnesota. I had not done anything of the kind. I had complimented them quite as generously as the Senator himself has complimented them.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the last effort of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is to my mind the most conclusive evidence of both the necessity and the justice of the passage of this bill. Here are 200,000 people arraigned and assailed in this body at the national capital, and the things that are said against them, injurious to the last degree, must practically go unchallenged unless they are met by those who are not residents of the Territory, and who may not be presumed to have that knowledge of the procedure of the Territory and its people that those who live there have.

For the purpose of combating in some degree some things that the Senator from Minnesota imagined the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] said about the foreign population of his State, the Senator from Minnesota recalls to the attention of the country an episode which occurred in New Mexico twenty-five years ago. Simply reading the measure and reciting the circumstances of its passage and its repeal by act of Congress would create the impression that there was something heinous committed by the people of New Mexico against the United States and American institutions.

What was it after all, Mr. President? The legislature of New Mexico passed a special act incorporating a religious body, and it was against the laws of the United States only in this respect, that the law creating the Territory of New Mexico, commonly known in Territories as the organic act, or the constitution of the Territory, prohibited the granting of charters by special act to any corporation whatsoever. The legislature of New Mexico had been induced to believe that they might incorporate by special act a religious body known as the Jesuit Fathers. It could not be done under its organic law. That, Mr. President, was the head and front of its offending.

There is nothing criminal or reprehensible in the incorporating of religious bodies. I will venture the assertion that in the Senator's own State the religious order known as the Jesuit Fathers has a corporate existence, organized under its general incorporation law. I imagine that whether a religious body is incorporated under a special or a general law makes no difference whatsoever so far as the public welfare is concerned.

Mr. President, why did not the Senator from Minnesota, if he desired to do justice to the people of New Mexico, in connection with that statement make the additional statement that in fifty years of Territorial life it was the only law enacted by the New Mexicans in their Territorial legislature which the Congress felt compelled to repeal? One of the strongest and most conclusive evidences of the capacity of a people for self-government is the peace and order they maintain within their borders and the character of the laws they enact. And this one charge by the Senator from Minnesota brings prominently before the people of the country the fact that so well are the people of New Mexico qualified for self-government that in fifty years, during all of which time they have elected their legislature, with its membership answering to the strange names he read, not a single law that that body has passed has received the censure of the Congress of the United States, and during all that time Congress had the right to repeal any law that the legislature of New Mexico enacted.

So we find, even from the report of the committee that went to the Territory seeking rather to evade testimony than to obtain it, that that Territory is lawfully inclined and peaceful, and that life and property are as safe in that Territory as in any other section of this Union. In addition to that we have now the unqualified and uncontradicted fact that in fifty years of legislative life, enacting their own laws, providing for their own rules, not a single law has been enacted by the legislature of that Territory which received the censure of Congress, and which was not permitted to remain upon the statute books so far as any act of Congress is concerned.

Flings are made, Mr. President, against the people of New Mexico because interpreters are used in the courts and occasionally an interpreter may be called to the jury room for the purpose of interpreting the evidence given on the trial and which was taken down in shorthand by the court stenographer. In Colorado, I believe that the legislature which is in session to-day is the only one that ever met and did not appoint interpreters to make easier the burdens and the labors of Spanish members who were elected to that body, that they might perform their duties the more intelligently. I think the laws of every legislature there up to the present time have by special act been printed in Spanish.

I recall, when I first went to the Territory of Colorado, making a canvass for Congress as early as 1874, and upon more than one occasion I addressed the audiences through an interpreter. The object of an interpreter is simply to give to those who listen a clear and comprehensive knowledge of that which the speaker says. It does not indicate that those who are not able to speak English are un-American or that they have not adapted themselves to the best of their ability to American institutions. It simply means that in the stress of life, in the efforts and the time necessary to earn the bread with which the breath of life is maintained, they have not had time to learn what to them is a difficult language to understand and to master.

So none of these objections, when they are summed up, go to the capacity or to the character of the citizenship or to the relation of the minds of the Mexican people to the American Government. They simply go to the proposition whether or not they can speak more than one language. I take it that in every community in New Mexico and wherever Spanish-speaking people are they have the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of their State or, if it is a Territory, the organic law printed in the language the people speak. I know that every volume of the statutes throughout that section of the country has in it, in the Spanish language, the Constitution of the United States and of the State, in order that those who use the statutes and may not be able to speak the English language may have those instruments, so essential to American freedom and American liberty, and that they may be read and comprehended by them.

But what I desired to enforce above everything else was that in fifty years, with the exception of a single law which has been read by the Senator from Minnesota, not a single act has been passed by the New Mexican legislature which did not receive at least the quasi approval of Congress, because Congress was not called upon to repeal it.

It is a testimonial, Mr. President, to the patriotism, to the love of country, to the genius for government of the Mexican people. Instead of crowding them back, instead of denouncing and anathematizing them and holding them up in a degraded light to the American people, it should be the duty of Senators to extend to them the hand of fellowship and of help, and to give them credit for what they have accomplished and for what they are attempting to accomplish. If that was done there would be no such controversy as we have had here now for nearly six weeks over the admission of these people to statehood.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] seemed to think that I overlooked the services of the Colorado troops in Mexico. I want to read what I said. In speaking of these people on Saturday I said:

> I knew them in the war. I knew them when they had not forgotten the fact that they were a conquered people. I know that nowhere on this continent were men more anxious to preserve the integrity of the Union than the Spanish population of New Mexico and Colorado. They put into the field, in proportion to their population, more men than many of the States which are boasting of their devotion to American institutions. They fought our battles; they kept back the forces from the Confederate States that were invading and attempting to cut off communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific oceans.

Mr. President, that is strictly true. Early in the winter of 1862 General Sibley left Texas with a large force, probably from 4,000 to 6,000 men—nearer 5,000, perhaps, than either. I need not state that General Sibley was a West Point officer and a man thoroughly familiar with the Western country. He moved into New Mexico. He was met soon after he got into New Mexico by General Canby with three New Mexican regiments. General Canby's force was greatly inferior to that of General Sibley. These New Mexican forces under Canby held Sibley in check for some time, but being less in number, they were compelled gradually to retire toward the capital of New Mexico. The point for which Sibley had started was first to strike Fort Union, where the Government of the United States had then a very large quantity of munitions of war, amounting to many millions of dollars. The second point to which he was reaching was the continental stage line, to cut off communications with California.

We had in Colorado a regiment, raised the summer before in a very irregular manner, and it had been rejected by the General Government. It took the united efforts of all the people of Colorado for many months to get the Government of the United States to accept that regiment. Some time late in the fall or early in the winter the Government accepted it. The regiment was composed of about 1,000 men.

We had in addition to that a battery and about 120 cavalry. So we had in the Colorado force about 1,200 men.

The Government of the United States ordered a portion of those troops, and a portion of them only, to New Mexico to support Canby. About two-thirds of the troops were ordered into New Mexico. The officer in command reached a point not far from Fort Lyon where about 400 of the Colorado troops were stationed. The Colorado troops so stationed, and who were to be left in Colorado, insisted that if there was to be any fighting they had not enlisted to remain in the fort and that they would go to New Mexico with the rest, and in spite of the protest of the colonel, contrary to the designs of the General Government, they marched out with him to meet Canby.

Couriers from General Canby were sent up to the Colorado troops coming down to hurry their passage, stating that it was quite impossible with his inferior forces to hold the Confederate army in check, and, as I stated a few moments ago, the last day this infantry made a march of 52 miles, marching all day and all night, and in the early gray of the morning striking Sibley. They did not wait for any orders from Canby, but sailed into him, burnt his baggage train, which they struck first, and, with the aid of the New Mexicans and General Canby, routed General Sibley. Sibley having lost his baggage train, and having failed to reach the munitions of war at Fort Union, of course turned his face toward Texas.

Now, Mr. President, I should not have referred to this matter at all, but the statement made by the Senator might leave the inference that I had been careless, at least, in not giving to the people of Colorado the credit that they were entitled to receive. I only claimed that Canby had held in check until our troops got there, and that was all that could have been expected with the small number he then had.

Now, Mr. President, I do not care to debate this question. I am going to present some facts on some other occasion in connection with this debate, if the debate is to continue. I have some things I desire to say, and that I believe ought to be said, in defense of those of us who think the time has come when justice requires that these people should be admitted into the Union, and that, too, in spite of everything that has been written by the committee or spoken, so far as I know, by the opponents of the bill. But I shall not attempt to do that, Mr. President, to-night.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there has been much injustice, it seems to me, done to these Mexicans in comparing them with other nationalities and drawing an odious comparison as to their ability to understand and read or write the English language. It appears to me that we ought to take into consideration one condition there that has never applied to any foreigners coming to any other section of the country. Let us remember this one fact and then apply it.

We simply removed the boundary line of Mexico a few hundred miles south. We had there a population that was practically Mexican. That population was segregated hundreds of miles from the rest of the populated section of the United States. We had to cross hundreds of miles of territory before we could reach their settlement not only on the east, but on the west. They were practically segregated from all the balance of the United States.

Now, let us suppose that we had placed Germans, Scandinavians, or any other foreign-speaking element in that same section, does any person claim that they would have learned the English language as readily and as properly as they have done in the State of Minnesota?

It must be remembered that the foreigners from Europe who have come to this country have not come as a body. They have come here gradually. They have been learning the English language gradually. They have come into a country where the English language was spoken, and necessity, which is the mother of invention, compelled them to learn the English language. For instance, Russians and that class of people coming to the State of North Dakota or Minnesota very readily learn the English language, but suppose we had had them all up in Alaska and segregated from the balance of the United States, does anyone claim that they would have adopted the English language readily? Suppose, if we could reach beyond our own borders, that we would extend our laws over a portion of Norway or Germany to-day, where the people are surrounded by those speaking their own language, does any person claim that then they would readily adopt a new language?

Yet this is exactly the condition of those people in New Mexico. They have never had an opportunity to understand the English language. They have never been brought enough in connection with the English-speaking classes to compel them to learn it. It seems to me that if we will take any population of a foreign-speaking element and place them in the same conditions that have surrounded this little band of Mexicans in a Territory so far from the English-speaking portion of the United States, the comparison with other people situated under the same conditions would be favorable to the Mexicans there. I simply speak of this, Mr. President, because it seems to me that the comparison does not do them justice.

Mr. QUAY rose.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment? I do not want to prolong the debate at this time. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that I had no intention to do him any injustice in this matter, and if I have misrepresented him I am sorry for it. I have the highest respect for the Senator from Colorado. I know he always means to be fair and right, and I certainly had no intention to do him any injustice.

Mr. TELLER. I do not myself think the Senator had any such intention.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that a vote be taken upon this bill and the pending amendments at 2 p. m. on the 20th instant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a vote be taken on the pending bill and all amendments then pending and all amendments then offered, without further debate, on the 20th day of February, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I think I should like to finish my remarks before a day is fixed for a vote.

Mr. QUAY. Do I understand the Senator from New Jersey to object?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey did not say that he objected.

Mr. KEAN. I think——

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I object, because I should like to hear the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 10, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 9, 1903.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 9, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal will be approved.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JENKINS. I desire to correct the RECORD. I joined with the other members of the conference committee in the report and statement as printed on pages 1893 and 1894 of the RECORD. My name is omitted from both the report and the statement. I desire it inserted.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the Journal will be corrected.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order, and it relates to the approval of the Journal of the proceedings of the House on yesterday. I think it affects the integrity of our proceedings, and is, therefore, in that view of the case, a privileged matter. I find that yesterday, under the orders of the House——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman whether what he is now saying relates to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS]?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all; it relates to another matter; but it refers to the approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, then, the Journal will be corrected in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I supposed the Chair had submitted that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman was addressing himself to that question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not at all; what I am about to say relates to another matter presented yesterday during the session of the House by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. Speaker, I have no sort of interest in this matter except to preserve the integrity of our proceedings here, which I know the gentleman from Iowa is as anxious to do as any other member; and what I say shall not reflect upon him in any way.

But, sir, the House met on yesterday (being Sunday) for a special purpose; and that purpose is defined in an order which I will read, which appears on page 1918 of the RECORD, and was read yesterday when the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore. The order under which the House assembled is as follows:

On motion of Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey, by unanimous consent,
Resolved, That the House meet on Sunday, the 8th day of February, 1903, at 12 o'clock noon, for the consideration of resolutions commemorative of the life, character, and services of the late Gen. WILLIAM J. SEWELL, a Senator of the United States from the State of New Jersey.

And it further appears that subsequently on a previous day of this session this order was made:

On motion of Mr. FLANAGAN, by unanimous consent, it was Resolved, That when the House meets on Sunday, the 8th day of February, 1903, it shall consider appropriate resolutions memorial of the public services and life of Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, late a Representative from the Fourth Congressional district of New Jersey.

Now, I say that under the special rule, the House assembled yesterday to pronounce eulogies on the life and character of General SEWELL, late a Senator, and Mr. SALMON, late a Representative; and, this being true, it was not in order—and unanimous consent could not have been given for the purpose, although it purports to have been given—to transact business. The business which I refer to as having been transacted yesterday was the presentation of a conference report by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. It appears in the RECORD as if done by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, I think that when we adopted the rule that these conference reports should be printed in the RECORD it meant that they should be presented on one day and printed in the RECORD of the next day. It certainly had in contemplation a legislative day. So that, in my opinion, under the special rule setting apart Sundays for eulogies alone, that report could not be presented; and, secondly, the report should be presented on a legislative day. For these two reasons this act of legislation should not, in my judgment, have taken place yesterday. Sunday is not a legislative day. In the law it is dies non, as I understand. It is not a legislative day under our rules.

If it be said that we sometimes, near the close of a session, legislate here on Sunday, I answer that we do not legislate on Sunday the calendar day. We sometimes extend the session over by recess from Saturday, and then, in that way, we sometimes legislate during the calendar day of Sunday. But that is done on the legislative day of Saturday. I do not believe there has ever been a case in which the House of Representatives adjourned on Saturday to meet on Sunday for legislative business. If so I have overlooked it. It has certainly never been done during my service in the House. But when it is necessary that we should meet on the calendar day of Sunday, near the closing of Congress, it is done under the legislative day of Saturday, and all business transacted at that time—by fiction, I grant you—is done as of Saturday and not Sunday.

Mr. Speaker, I think it wrong that we should meet here to legislate on Sunday. I do not think that was intended when we passed the special order in this case. I do not think when we agreed that we would meet on Sunday to perform this quasi religious service or pronouncing eulogies on deceased members that it was intended we should enter upon legislation. If this is true, then the effort to legislate on yesterday is void, and being void, the rule has not been complied with which requires that the conference report shall be printed in the RECORD. As I say, the language of the rule requiring conference reports to be printed in the RECORD does not declare that they shall be offered on a preceding day, but I think that is what is meant. Be that as it may, however, the proceedings would be void under the rules of the House, which prescribe that we assembled here for eulogies and not for legislation. If it be an error, the same mistake occurs in the Journal as in the RECORD, because the Journal says that the gentleman from Iowa presented this conference report, and that is the reason I objected to the approval of the Journal. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the proper course will be for the gentleman from Iowa to withdraw the report and offer it this morning, let it be printed in the RECORD as of to-day, and come up for action to-morrow. If the gentleman does not desire to do that, however, I feel constrained to move to strike it out of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the motion?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope to hear from the gentleman from Iowa. I prefer to relieve it of all question by letting it come up regularly, and there is no necessity for haste in the matter. I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not yield to him. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question. It has been held more than once that Sunday may be made a legislative day. There is no question on that point. It is a legislative day, if so made by the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interrupt the Chair, but——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not wish to be interrupted. If the gentleman desires to say anything afterwards, the Chair will hear him again. Sunday was set apart for eulogies. There was no legislation transacted yesterday. The filing of this report under the rule was not legislation, but the House, by unanimous consent, permitted that to be done. This House is the omnipotent party in this Hall, subject only to the Constitution. It unanimously consented that this might be done. If the House had said, ever so emphatically, that nothing else should be done on Sunday but the pronouncing of eulogies, still it would be within the power of the House to change its mind, and it did change its mind and allowed the notations to be made under the rule. No one is hurt by this. The rule distinctly requires every report to be printed in order that due notice may be given to the House. The report was printed this morning. The House has had notice and is entirely qualified to intelligently proceed this morning to consider the conference report involved in that notation, if it so desires. The Chair sees no difficulty in the question whatever. If the gentleman has anything further which he desires to say, the Chair will be pleased to hear him.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the Chair will indulge me just a moment. I have no desire to take up time in this matter. I had no intention of interrupting the Chair a moment ago.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will always give ample opportunity for gentlemen to be heard.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes. I have no interest in the matter beyond keeping the record as it should be. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that for years we met on Friday nights for the purpose of considering pension legislation. Now, we did not enter upon general legislation on Friday night. I know it may be said that the rule was that we meet for the consideration of pension legislation and the removal of political disabilities and charges of desertion only; but that would not affect it, because, under the intimation of the Chair, the House is omnipotent when its meets, and when it met on Friday nights it could say, we will set aside the little word "only" and go on and legislate. But it was always held that we could not do that on Friday night.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no doubt the House could have done so on Friday night. This is District of Columbia day, but the House can take up something else if it so desires.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the Chair will indulge me further, I would ask what became of the Journal of Saturday? It was not read to-day.

The SPEAKER. It was read and approved yesterday.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the RECORD does not so say—at least, the copy that I have.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should remember that yesterday the House was equipped with everything, the Journal and RECORD, to officially carry on the business of the House, and the usual proceedings yesterday morning were had as they are had every morning.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On looking further, I find that the Journal of Saturday was read and approved yesterday.

The SPEAKER. It was read and approved in the usual way. The House was clothed with all the power essential to do business, and still the gentleman must not forget that no legislative act was done, if he is disturbed by the idea that what was done was legislation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I wish to say with all respect to the Chair that if we transact any business it is legislation.

The SPEAKER. In a technical sense that might be so.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And the ordering of the printing of a conference report would be legislation. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, we are getting upon dangerous ground if we concede that when we set apart Sunday for eulogies the House can meet here and go into all kinds of legislation. I do not think that was meant, and if that is meant I shall object to setting apart Sundays for eulogies. That day should not be converted into a day of general legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will frankly say to the gentleman that when he first learned of this thing he was a little disturbed by it himself, until he looked into it and thought of it. The gentleman will remember, too, that any one member could have stopped the proceedings yesterday, if he had wished.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Oh, yes; he could do that at any time if a quorum was not present.

The SPEAKER. And this was always so on Friday nights when the House met then. The Chair thinks there is no difficulty about it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then I move to correct the Journal and RECORD by striking it out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to correct the Journal and the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. By striking it out of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Which motion does the gentleman make first? The question is first on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My motion will go to the approval of the Journal of Saturday, at yesterday's meeting, and the insertion of the item of legislation, in publishing the report of the committee of conference made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. I would like to put it in that way in order not to make two motions.

The SPEAKER. It will involve a separate vote on each.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In order that it may not appear that I make two motions I am willing that they be treated as one.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman is to correct the Journal of yesterday in the matter of the admission of the report of the gentleman from Iowa, the conference report, and the statement.

The question being taken (on a division demanded by Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee) there were—ayes 80, noes 88.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 102, answered "present" 9, not voting 115; as follows:

Mr. FOSS with Mr. FLANAGAN.

Mr. FOERDERER with Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. EVANS with Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. DOUGLAS with Mr. COONEY.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. CONNER with Mr. CONRY.

Mr. ALEXANDER with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. CALDERHEAD with Mr. BALL of Texas.
Mr. SMITH of Iowa with Mr. CROWLEY.
On this vote:
Mr. SHELDEN with Mr. COCHRAN.
Mr. BARNEY with Mr. BARTLETT.
Mr. MAHON with Mr. JETT.
Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota with Mr. LEVER.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire as a parliamentary inquiry to ask the effect of this motion. As I understand, the gentleman moves to correct the RECORD by striking out the language that declares that this report was presented, that unanimous consent was given here, and that it was printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is to strike that out. What is the effect of that—to say that it did not occur? I say that does not change the fact. It did occur. There are scores of men that know it, and gentlemen who have made this declaration have simply stated that which is untrue. That did occur. That did happen here in the House yesterday, and the Journal is correct

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I rise to a point of order, that the gentleman is not making a parliamentary inquiry, surely.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer. The Chair is ready to rule. We can not use all the day on this sort of business. The Chair admits that what has been done is proof of its having been done, as a fact. [Laughter.] The Journal has been corrected, and there is no proof that these were filed. [Laughter.] The Chair recognizes, and the gentleman, the Chair trusts, will recognize this. The Chair stated that he felt that there was perhaps a question about this, but there is no doubt of the legal right and of the exercise of it, and had no doubt at all, until the House has just spoken, that what was done was perfectly legal. Yet the sensitive feeling of every member, which feeling the Chair entertained, makes us all dislike to have a day that is set apart possibly used for another purpose. [Applause.] The Chair thinks that is the feeling of the House, and suggests that the gentleman bring in his report and his statement anew, and have it printed in sweet compliance with the decision of the House. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to compliment the Chair on his answer to the parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

The question was taken, and the Journal was approved.

TERMS OF COURT IN DISTRICT OF UTAH.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses on Senate bill No. 149, to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah——

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and the statement, which was printed in the RECORD, be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and that only the statement be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The committee of conference agree that the House recede from its amendments to said act, and agree to the same with the following amendments:

Strike out the words "September, January, and" in line 6 of the Senate act, and insert after the word "April," in line 6, the following: "and November, and at Ogden City on the second Monday in March and September."

Insert in line 7, before the word "terms," the word "other," and insert after the word "at," in line 7, the following: "said Salt Lake City and."

Further amend line 7 by striking out the word "or," after the word "City" and before the word "other," and inserting the words "and at;" so that the said act when so amended will read as follows:

"That the State of Utah constitutes one judicial district, which is known as the district of Utah. Terms of the district court shall be held in Salt Lake City on the second Monday in April and November, and at Ogden City on the second Monday in March and September of each year: Provided, That other terms of said court may be held at said Salt Lake City and Ogden City and at other places in said district when deemed necessary by the judge."

JOHN J. JENKINS.
D. A. DE ARMOND.
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report of the committee.

The question was taken, and the report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SALARIES OF JUDGES OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I call up another privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up another privileged report.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement only be read.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, if we could get order, I would like to know what it is.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, of the gentleman what report this is, and if it is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. JENKINS. I will ask the Clerk to read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the statement only will be read.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that this is a unanimous report from the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read, as follows:

To accompany conference report on S. 3287, "An act to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States."

The Senate conferees agree to all of the amendments of the House with the exception of those relating to the salaries of the chief and associate justices of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.

The bill as it passed the Senate gave the chief justice of this court $8,000 and the associate justices $7,500. The House amended the bill by giving the chief justice $6,500 and his associates $6,000.

The report of the conferees gives the chief justice $7,500 and his associates $7,000 a year.

The bill in all other particulars is as it passed the House.

D. H. SMITH,
V. WARNER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JENKINS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will remember that the House struck out of the bill the provision which disallowed expenses of the judges while away from home. Did the Senate put it in or leave it?

Mr. JENKINS. That is left as it passed the House.

Mr. BARTLETT. Under this report the judge gets the increase of salary——

Mr. JENKINS. They get the increase of salary and the expenses now provided by law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. JENKINS. Very well.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to have the gentleman state what the present law is with reference to paying the traveling expenses of the Federal judges. What expenses are paid now under the law?

Mr. JENKINS. Ten dollars a day.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does that cover railroad and steamboat transportation?

Mr. JENKINS. It covers all the expenses whatever they may be.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then if the judge is absent twenty days he gets twenty times $10 for being away on irregular work. Is that the law?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes, that is the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When the judge goes on his regular circuit what expenses are then paid?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I object to answering these questions, because that is not involved in this report.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. The gentleman is so well versed in the law and the machinery of his great committee that I wanted this information from him. I wanted to see, to be frank about it, whether the judges drew money for their traveling expenses and then ride on "passes," as I am told by railroad conductors that some of them do; and it is an outrage.

The conference report was then agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADVANCES FROM THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (H. R. 16761) providing for advances from the Treasury of the United States for the support of the government of the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman if that is the loan bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it ought to go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of that bill, and, pending that motion, I would like to know if there is anyone here who is opposed to it with whom we can agree on a time for general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 16761, and pending the motion seeks to arrive at an agreement as to general debate.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I supposed the members of the committee who opposed the bill would probably have charge of the other side, and as this is an important bill and several gentlemen have asked to be heard upon it, I think probably we would get along faster if we let debate run for a little while and see how it is coming out, rather than to attempt to agree upon time now.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think one hour, Mr. Speaker, is all the committee wants in favor of the proposition. Would it not be better to fix it at two hours for general debate?

Mr. COWHERD. I would rather not agree on a time now. I only want a few minutes myself, and four or five gentlemen want to be heard, and one of them wants about a half an hour. Of course, the gentleman knows that when we get into debate it may happen that the first speaker will cover the whole ground and the rest may not care to be heard. Perhaps we will not take that much time. There is no disposition on our part to kill time.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, as it is impossible to come to an agreement, I withdraw the request.

The motion of Mr. BABCOCK was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16761) providing for advances from the Treasury of the United States for the support of the government of the District of Columbia; and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until and including June 30, 1923, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, from time to time, on requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be required to meet the obligations of the District of Columbia on account of its share of the extraordinary expenses for municipal improvements authorized, or to be hereafter authorized, by Congress: Provided, That the total advances hereafter made under this act, taken in connection with those heretofore made under the acts of February 11, 1901, and July 1, 1902, shall not exceed the sum of $10,000,000, which said total sum, so advanced, shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States within twenty years from July 1, 1903, out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, at the rate of $500,000 per annum of the principal, together with interest upon the deferred payments at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PALMER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 7, 1903:

H. R. 159. An act providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers in the north one-half of the Colville Indian Reservation, State of Washington, and reserving the public lands for that purpose;

H. R. 5756. An act for the relief of the officers and crew of the U. S. S. Charleston, lost in the Philippine Islands November 2, 1899;

H. R. 8650. An act for the relief of the estate of Leander C. McLelland, deceased;

H. R. 9360. An act for the improvement and care of Confederate Mound, in Oak Woods Cemetery, Chicago, Ill., and making an appropriation therefor;

H. R. 16099. An act to cancel certain taxes assessed against the Kall tract;

H. R. 11139. An act granting a pension to Carter B. Harrison;

H. R. 12240. An act granting to Nellie Ett Heen the south half of the northwest quarter and lot 4 of section 2, and lot 1 of section 3, in township 154 north, of range 101 west, in the State North Dakota;

H. R. 13316. An act granting an increase of pension to Weden O'Neal; and

H. R. 16564. An act granting an increase of pension to James Hunter.

On February 9, 1903:

H. R. 16724. An act to provide for an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York.

ADVANCES FROM THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read for the information of the House, an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time. The object of this amendment is to more clearly define this proposition and to remove some objections that have been raised to the bill just read by the Clerk. I ask for the reading of this amendment as part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance from time to time to the District of Columbia, in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be required to meet the obligations of the District of Columbia on account of its share of the extraordinary expenses for municipal improvements heretofore specifically authorized or to be hereafter specifically authorized by Congress, and as appropriations therefor shall have been or may hereafter be made by Congress: Provided, That the total advances hereafter made under this act, taken in connection with those heretofore made under the acts of February 11, 1901, and July 1, 1902, shall not exceed the sum of $6,000,000, which said total sum so advanced shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States from and after July 1, 1903, out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, at the rate of $500,000 per annum of the principal, together with interest upon the deferred payments at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, one difference between this and the original bill is that this fixes the limit at $6,000,000 instead of $10,000,000. That is not the primary object, however, which is this: The substitute states specifically that these advances are to be made only for moneys heretofore appropriated or that may be hereafter appropriated by Congress. Quite a number of my colleagues and others have conceived the idea that this was a proposition to loan the District $10,000,000 or to authorize the expenditure of $10,000,000 or less. Mr. Chairman, this proposition does not appropriate one dollar. It does not authorize the expenditure of a single dollar. It provides simply this: For instance, if Congress appropriates $10,000,000 in the current appropriation bill, the District's half would be $5,000,000 and the Government would be forthcoming with its $5,000,000; but if the District has but $4,500,000 ($500,000 less than its share of the total amount appropriated), it is provided that the Government may advance or loan to the District this deficit of $500,000 with interest at 2 per cent.

I think, Mr. Chairman, this is as clear a statement as I can make of the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend believe that this Congress or any of the Congresses that will assemble for the next twenty years will be quite competent to decide how much the Government should advance when the emergency arises? In other words, is it not true that when we die wisdom will not take its departure?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, we hope not, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.] Now, sir, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that we have been passing practically acts of this character in every recent Congress. In 1901 I reported from the District Committee the law which you will find printed on page 1 of the report, providing that the Government shall advance to the District an indefinite amount—any sum whatever—$100,000,000 it might be, if Congress should so determine. That is the present law.

Now, sir, at the end of this fiscal year the District will be indebted to the Government in the sum of about $1,901,000. The appropriations that Congress has authorized—appropriations for great improvements which are in progress—I refer to extraordinary appropriations, such as for sewage disposal, the filtration plant, the municipal building, and the union depot, which all practically must be paid for within the next three years—amount to something over $4,000,000. The finances of the District of Columbia, thanks to the gentleman from Illinois, are now on such a basis that it can pay its current expenses and contribute to extraordinary expenses something like five or six hundred thousand dollars a year.

No gentleman on the floor of this House will say that these great improvements should be suspended, or that they should be strung along during a period of twelve or fifteen years, when they are absolutely demanded at the present time and necessary for the health of the city and for the well-being and development of the capital. Now, this proposition simply authorizes the Government to advance whatever Congress may appropriate over and above the District revenues, and limits it to what will be the sum of the extraordinary expenses—$6,000,000.

Now, this eliminates the question of a municipal hospital, and other things of that kind that have been discussed, and which Congress will probably discuss at greater length hereafter. This brings the amount down to the amount of the expenditures that Congress has authorized—projects covered by the law to-day, and for which payment must be made. Every recent session of Congress either this committee or the Appropriations Committee in an appropriation bill has been called upon to enact practically this law, giving it a time limit.

Now, if you adopt this provision, you settle this proposition here, so far as these improvements are concerned, which have been already authorized, and you provide that the District shall reimburse the Treasury at the rate of half a million dollars a year and the interest on the whole sum advanced. It settles the finances of the District. When the Commissioners make a recommendation to Congress, they will know just what the revenues are. When the Appropriation Committee reports a bill, it will know what the revenues of the District are or what they will be, and when Congress acts upon it it can act intelligently. So it would seem to me that the thing to do, the proper thing to do, and to do now, is to settle this question and not necessitate having it up every session of Congress.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. STEELE. What rate of interest is provided?

Mr. BABCOCK. Two per cent.

Mr. STEELE. Is it so guarded that the interest shall be added to the District's part of the expenses of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, absolutely. I want to say to the gentleman right there on that point that the District moneys are in the United States Treasury, and the only way to get them out is by an act of Congress presented through the Appropriation Committee here. The Commissioners can not spend one dollar without a warrant of law from Congress, and this simply provides that where the District is short in its part, its proportion, that the District be loaned that money, which is repaid by the District, with 2 per cent interest, out of its taxes and revenues collected.

Mr. STEELE. It is usually provided wherever expenses of the District are appropriated for, that one-half shall come out of the District fund. This would have to be all out of the District fund, in making the appropriations.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; but I understand that this law in itself is a warrant for the payment of principal and interest, and it states specifically where it shall come from.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin, bearing upon the subject of the ability of the District to repay. In the report of 17 pages I do not find the information that I seek. What is the total valuation of the real and personal property in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. I can not give the gentleman the exact figure, as there is now a new assessment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I do not find that statement in the report.

Mr. McCLEARY. I take it the answer the gentleman wants is the earnings, the income to be derived.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; I wanted the total valuation of the entire property; and then I will ask the gentleman what proportion that valuation bears to the real value.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is two-thirds. The assessed valuation is two-thirds of the real value.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But I do not find this in the report, which would be a valuable source of information.

Mr. McCLEARY. The gentleman has the information now.

Mr. BABCOCK. It has been reported over and over again to the House by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But it is not in this report of 17 pages.

Mr. BABCOCK. The total assessed value is about two hundred and sixty-six millions, including real and personal property.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Can the gentleman separate the real from the personal easily in his statement?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Or approximately.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think I have it right here. The value of the real property is $219,192,000, and of the personal property $46,666,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then will the gentleman state to the House the amount of taxation per hundred dollars of valuation?

Mr. BABCOCK. One and one-half per cent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman state further what proportion the valuation, as he has given it, of the personal and real estate in bulk, if he cares to give it in that way, is to the real value of the property in the District?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is suppposed to be two-thirds of the real value.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. On page 3 of his report the gentleman gives the income of the District, and among other items we find $3,222,000 from taxes on real estate, and the tax on personal property is $500,000; licenses, $640,000; arrears of taxes, $150,000; miscellaneous, $700,000. In a general way, can the gentleman give information what that miscellaneous item of $700,000 includes?

Mr. BABCOCK. That comes from all other sources, from water taxes and different fixed incomes of the District, and for special assessments that have been levied. For instance, I will refer the gentleman to one matter. In the opening of new streets since the partial repeal of the highway act in 1898, the total amount expended is $1,710,889.17, and $466,139.44 has been charged up against the property as benefits.

Now, the District has to pay the entire amount of awards for the property taken, but the benefits assessed are charged up to the abutting property. Only $194,103.68 of the amount assessed as benefits has been paid, and there is still due the District $232,035.76 on account of the opening of the streets for benefits to adjacent property. That is an item that would go in under the head of miscellaneous.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Briefly, then, as I understand, the amount of benefits on street openings which under the law are paid by the District alone are a part of this miscellaneous of $700,000.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is one of the assets of the District now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How long has the District had a personal-tax law?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think the District has had a personal-tax law ever since George Washington was here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. They have been assessing on personal property, then, since the beginning of the Government.

Mr. BABCOCK. Not on all personal property. They have assessed personal property all the time.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I thought a year ago we passed a law to tax personal property.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] can explain the details of that better. I understand that the courts held that the personal-property tax law on the statute books could not be enforced.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And if that is the law that has existed since the time of George Washington, of course that is not in force now.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that from 1878 up to the current fiscal year there was practically no tax upon personal property. Now, last winter there was an increase made for licenses, which is the largest increase that was made, other than grew out of the increased valuation of real estate, which was a matter of administration. It was valued at about two-thirds of its real value, in fact, for the current year. Now, there is no tax upon many kinds of personal property now. There are very liberal exemptions to start with. There is no tax on bonds, there is no tax on stocks, there is no tax on evidences of indebtedness or choses in action, and so on.

Mr. SIMS. Or money.

Mr. CANNON. Or money, even under the legislation that we had; but I think that the total personal tax amounts to about $500,000 and the total estimated tax for the coming fiscal year is $5,400,000. That is to say, about $600,000 from licenses.

Mr. BABCOCK. Six hundred and forty thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. Six hundred and forty thousand dollars from licenses and $500,000 from personal taxes and the balance from realty.

Mr. BABCOCK. Miscellaneous and realty.

Mr. CANNON. Miscellaneous and realty.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to submit to the gentleman from Wisconsin a proposition. If the District owed $22,000,000 in 1878, and up until the present time, in twenty-five years, has paid $9,000,000 of that, it would take thirty-three years to pay the balance of that sum. Now, if you increased that indebtedness, as proposed to-day, how soon would the District be out of debt? Will the District get out of debt in fifty-five years?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, yes; the gentleman should understand that the revenues of the District of Columbia are about 100 per cent greater than they were ten years ago.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the increased appropriations and expenditures—how much greater are they now?

Mr. BABCOCK. They have grown as the revenues have grown.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And they will grow 300 per cent, will they not, if the gentleman's plan is adopted?

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman must recollect that here is the sewage-disposal plant, here is the water-filtration system, here is the municipal building, here is a union station, all projects that have never been considered before, and projects that will never be duplicated. The question is, Can we put the burden upon the people here now in the next three years to pay these extraordinary expenditures?

I want right here, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the gentleman to another fact, that the per capita tax paid in the city of Washington by its citizens for the present fiscal year is $17.98, against an average per capita tax in the 18 largest cities in the United States of $15.85.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the rate of taxation upon the assessment in these 18 cities of the United States? Has the gentleman those statistics?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; I have not them here. I wrote to some of the places. The assessment of the District of Columbia at one time was more than the whole West Side of Chicago, with its million of inhabitants.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the rate is one and a half upon the assessed valuation, and the assessed valuation is two-thirds of the value of the property. That would be 1 per cent upon the value of the property. Does the gentleman know of any city in the United States where the total taxation of the city and county is lower than that—a rate of 1 per cent of the value of the property?

Mr. BABCOCK. I have just stated for the benefit of the House that the tax contributed averages only $15.85, as against $17.98 here. That is the answer.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the per capita tax. It does not make any difference to me if I am assessed on $10,000 worth of property what is the per capita tax in my city; the question is, What is the rate on the assessment? I want to ask another question of the gentleman in that connection. Is there any reason under heaven why Congress should not deal with the city of Washington just as any other city is dealt with in the United States—make up a budget of expenses from year to year and find out how much taxation it would require to meet those expenditures, and put the tax rate upon the assessment to meet the expenses that have to be met during the year?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, I would say to the gentleman that he knows, as well as every other gentleman of the House, the city of Washington is called upon to pay extraordinary expenses which no other city in the United States is called upon to pay.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; and the city receives extraordinary help more than any other city in the United States. And I will say that if he takes these ordinary expenses you will ascertain the fact that the tax rate is low when compared with other cities in the United States. You will see what the rate is; and I am talking of what the rate is. Why is it not better to meet these expenses just as they are met everywhere in the United States—make up your budget of the amount of expenditures so that your tax rate must be equal to the expenditures and make the levy upon the next year's assessment of the taxes?

Mr. BABCOCK. Is the gentleman through with his question? I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I did not expect to call up the repeal of the law of 1878 this morning. Congress in its wisdom enacted that law. I think the gentleman was a member of the House at that time, and that has been the law which has governed the District of Columbia since then.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to answer this short question of the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.] And now if the gentleman wants to go to work to legislate in accordance with that principle, that is another proposition. The District Committee has acted upon the theory that the laws should be carried out exactly as they are. I am showing the gentleman that the people of the District of Columbia contribute more per capita than in the average city of its size.

Mr. COWHERD. It is upon that point that I want to ask the gentleman a question, if he will yield to me.

Mr. BABCOCK. Of course there are cities where it is more. Boston, according to the statistics, bears a higher rate per capita than any other city in the United States.

Mr. COWHERD. Right there I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COWHERD. From what source does the gentleman gather his figures upon which he makes his per capita statement in the report?

Mr. BABCOCK. They were figures compiled by the Department of Labor.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true in the 18 cities he has cited, in 15 of them he has taken only the municipal tax and shows that it is less than in the District of Columbia, and that there are only three where there is included the city and county tax, which shows a very much higher rate—Boston, New York, and San Francisco?

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that I was two or three weeks in securing them, or rather the Department of Labor was. I asked for as full a report as they could make, which the Department of Labor made a day or two since. I can get it and show it to the gentleman if he wishes it. I wished in connection with that to get everything that was contributed by the residents of a city in the shape of tax, because in the city of Washington we have practically the State, county, and all embodied in one tax; and in order to show in comparison with other cities I desired that they should have all these included. The Department of Labor say that the statement does include these figures and shows it all in detail. It was too long to read, but it is given at length in the report.

Mr. COWHERD. I know the gentleman does not want to mislead the House. I call attention to the fact that the Department of Labor reported on these matters in Bulletin 36.

Mr. BABCOCK. This is their report.

Mr. COWHERD. And by these figures it is shown that the municipal tax alone in 15 out of the 18 cities that he has stated is practically as large as the entire tax of Washington, and in the three cities that have a higher tax it is because the State tax and the municipal tax were all put in in one connection, so the Department of Labor was unable to make the computation.

Mr. BABCOCK. I can only say that in asking for the report on this subject I asked that it should be an exhaustive report, and I supposed that it covered every proposition the gentleman mentioned. I asked for all and I supposed I had been furnished it. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, this proposition as it came originally from the committee meant an advance of $10,000,000 to the District, and eventually a like appropriation, of course, from the Treasury of the United States. Therefore it is a bill carrying $20,000,000, and if for no other reason than the magnitude of it, the proposition is entitled to consideration by the House. If I understand the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the committee, it is to limit the advance to $6,000,000, which means an equal appropriation from the Government Treasury, or a total appropriation of $12,000,000.

Mr. BABCOCK. I wish the gentleman would explain to the House that proposition of $12,000,000.

Mr. COWHERD. For every dollar advanced of this $6,000,000 the gentleman's bill provides for, which he speaks of as extraordinary expenses, there is to be a like appropriation from the Treasury of the United States. The fact is this bill as it came from the committee and as it came from the Commissioners is an attempt to commit the Government to a lot of projects, some of which Congress has never approved of.

Mr. BABCOCK. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman does not want to misrepresent the matter to the House. I stated specifically, when I asked to have this amendment read, that this sum would cover only what had been authorized.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman did not understand me. I said as it came from the committee.

Mr. BABCOCK. It will take every dollar to pay for the proposed improvements already authorized.

Mr. COWHERD. I said as it came from the committee and the Commissioners it included projects that had never been authorized. As I take it the gentleman's amendment—and this comes up hurriedly and has not been considered—the gentleman's amendment for $6,000,000 includes the advances for the projects he mentioned, but that necessitates a like appropriation from the Treasury of the United States; so it amounts to $12,000,000.

Mr. BABCOCK. Just a moment. The District has paid out $1,600,000 to open streets and the Government pays no part of it. If it had not been for the street-opening cases, the District, instead of being indebted to the Government $1,900,000, would be indebted only $300,000. Over $1,600,000 to-day has been paid by the District that has not yet come back; for practically all the indebtedness of the District is for that purpose to-day, and the Government has not contributed a dollar, and will not.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman refers to street openings. I want the House to remember this proposition, that it is now asserted by the District of Columbia and their officers that the Government of the United States is indebted to the District, as the gentleman says, nearly $2,000,000.

In 1878 we relieved the people of the District of their reckless mismanagement by assuming one-half of the burden of $25,000,000, and I believe that when the ten or twenty years is up, these yearly payments having been passed and current years taking up current revenues, there will be the same unanimous sentiment in this District for us to relieve them of this obligation that there is to-day for them to create it, and the basis of it will be just what the gentleman now says, "You owed us the money at the time you made the advance."

That is one reason why I am opposed to any kind of a proposition that recognizes any particular amount of an advance to be made at this time. That is the reason why I am in favor of Congress holding in its own strong hand the entire situation, and making advances to the District as the District needs them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was going to take up the proposition as it appears to me, and that is this: Last year we increased the revenues of the District possibly $1,500,000 by personal property tax and saloon tax, and so forth. That means an increase of revenues of $3,000,000. A pretty big jump, gentlemen, for a city of this size—$3,000,000 in one year. The moment that increase comes, just at the time when the money is coming into the Treasury and the deficit decreasing, they come up here with a proposition to borrow $10,000,000.

Now, I do not say you never ought to borrow money. I do not say that other cities do not borrow money; they do. But this city is the one city in the United States that is so fortunately situated that it does not have to borrow money. The business man does not mortgage the future to meet his present needs unless the necessity demands it. This city does not have to mortgage the future, because this is the only city in this country that whenever extraordinary occasion demands extraordinary expenditures comes to the Congress of the United States and calls on the limitless resources of the nation to meet it, and Congress gives it that authority.

I appeal to you if the past has not shown a rule by which you may judge of the conduct of the future. I ask if it be not true that we have provided for necessary expenses of the government of the District of Columbia as they come up year after year, and when the District had not the money to meet them we permitted advances to be made from the National Treasury.

Suppose this increase of $3,000,000 in yearly revenues gives a surplus in the Treasury of a million and a half or two million dollars, why limit the returns to $500,000? Why not let the District do what any good business man would do, and pay the surplus on its indebtedness, whether $500,000 or $1,500,000, as it would do if the present arrangement were continued?

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that back of all this is still that feeling of resentment that ran like a wave over the District when the personal-property tax law passed this House of Representatives last year, and that, in addition to these expenditures proposed to be met, some gentlemen probably want to show that there is no necessity for that personal-property tax.

There could be no greater misfortune to this District or to any city than to have a large accumulation of money in the Treasury from year to year, inviting, as such a thing must do in any community, extravagant expenditures. And if this bill should pass, and the $3,000,000 that we raised last year should not be taken for extraordinary expenses, and should be more than enough for ordinary and current expenses, we shall either induce extravagance in the District or we shall come in here and take off the personal-property tax that we put on last year.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] says that the people of this District are more heavily taxed per capita than the people of any other city. I challenge those figures, and I assert here, and make the assertion on an official report of the Bureau of Labor taken directly from the census statistics of the Twelfth Census, that the citizens of the District of Columbia are more lightly taxed—yes, by 50 per cent—than the citizens of any other municipality in the United States of 200,000 people. [Applause.]

Now, here are the figures, and these are official. They are printed in Bulletin 36.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion in the line of what he is now about to take up. My view is that the per capita tax, so far as it affects a bill of this kind, is of little consequence. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the budget for the District of Columbia for the last year was $8,462,000; that is the cost of the municipal government; and if the rate had been fixed as suggested by the gentleman from New York, there would have been a corresponding application of one-half of that amount. One-half of that $8,462,000, as I understand, was assessed upon property in the District of Columbia——

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, the gentleman misunderstands. The budget does not mean that the amount has been raised by taxation. There was $300,000 and more raised from water supply; there was $100,000 or more from special assessments. The gentleman can not take the entire budget——

Mr. McDERMOTT. How much was raised by taxation?

Mr. COWHERD. Last year, something over $3,000,000; this year, I understand, a little over five millions.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I challenge the gentleman to find any city in the world of 270,000 inhabitants where the municipal government cost $3,000,000 last year.

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I have here the return for the city of Newark, N. J. The total revenues of that city—I mean from all sources—amounted to $6,080,707.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I do not know where the gentleman gets his figures.

Mr. COWHERD. Newark, N. J., is just a little smaller in population than Washington, D. C.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The city of Newark does not raise for all taxes, State, county, and municipal, $3,000,000. I do not know where the gentleman gets his figures.

Mr. COWHERD. I take them from the report of the Bureau of Labor——

Mr. McDERMOTT. They are absolutely untrustworthy.

Mr. COWHERD. And that takes them from the statistics of the Twelfth Census of the United States.

Mr. McDERMOTT. No such tax was ever imposed in the city of Newark. Take Jersey City——

Mr. COWHERD. Jersey City raises $4,946,000.

Mr. McDERMOTT. It raises about $2,000,000, and I have aided in compiling many budgets of that city.

Mr. COWHERD. Is the gentleman giving the total rates?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I want to say the gentleman is giving the wrong figures.

Mr. COWHERD. Is the gentleman giving the total rates?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. The official figures are $4,940,313.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The gentleman who compiled them must have been an idiot, for it would have made a 6 per cent rate of taxation in that city.

Mr. COWHERD. I do not know whether the gentleman is an idiot or not. He was an officer of the United States. He says he takes the figures from the Twelfth Census.

Mr. McDERMOTT. He must have included every bond that was sold.

Mr. COWHERD. No, sir.

Mr. McDERMOTT. And every bond that had anything to do——

Mr. COWHERD. No, that excludes cash on hand at the beginning of the fiscal year, and loans. It takes in property taxed, liquor licenses, other licenses, fines, franchises, waterworks, electric lights, which is nothing, special assessments, docks, wharves, bridges, etc.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The tax rate over in Jersey City on ratables of ninety-five millions this year is 2.70. The gentleman can compute the whole thing if he wants to.

Mr. COWHERD. And the tax rate in the city of Washington is 1.50, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] has figured that Newark, N. J., pays a tax per capita of 14.91 and that Washington pays a tax per capita of 17.98.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Simply because he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. BABCOCK. The assessment is nearly three times as much.

Mr. COWHERD. The assessment here is only 60 to 65. I will ask the gentleman what his assessment is.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Where?

Mr. COWHERD. In Newark, N. J.

Mr. BABCOCK. Here it is two hundred and sixty-six millions.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Our constitution demands that it shall be made upon the full market value. As a matter of fact, it is made on 70 per cent.

Mr. COWHERD. Then the assessment is higher there than it is here.

Mr. McDERMOTT. It is not higher. They pay 2.70 on 70 per cent.

Mr. COWHERD. And here 1.50 on 60 per cent.

Mr. BABCOCK. And the roll is ninety-five millions. The roll of real estate alone here is two hundred and nineteen millions, and of real estate and personalty two hundred and sixty-six millions—nearly three times as much.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman was afraid to make his comparison in the tax paid in different cities on real and personal property, but he makes it on a per capita basis, because Washington City, having no labor class, can make the best possible showing when it is taken per capita. Taking it on property in Newark, N. J., it is 2.70 on 70 per cent valuation, but in Washington it is 1.50 on 65 per cent.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman says the assessment is wrong.

Mr. McDERMOTT. You have about the same per capita in Jersey City that you have in Washington. It is practically less.

Mr. COWHERD. You mean for municipal purposes?

Mr. McDERMOTT. For municipal, State, and county.

Mr. COWHERD. No; you said 2.70, but here it is 1.50.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I know; but it has no possible relation to values. As I said last year, it is simply the result of the vagaries of your assessors.

Mr. COWHERD. The value on which they rest. They are assessed by an assessor in whom this House has shown confidence by putting in a particular provision in the bill to keep him in office. That gentleman made the assessment after a careful study of it, and after competent assistants had been furnished him by Congress. Now, there is no city in the Union where the people do not object to the assessment.

Mr. McDERMOTT. That is natural. Every man is going to complain if he is taxed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Why is it that the committee does not bring in a bill simply to permit the District of Columbia to float its own bonds, if the real purpose of the legislation is to let posterity pay its part?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I do not know why the District Committee has not considered such a proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is not that the proper way of accomplishing what is contended ought to be accomplished?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It may be that that is not what they want to accomplish, however. [Laughter.]

Mr. COWHERD. That is probably the ordinary way, but we have a better way, because the District of Columbia, when it runs into debt, can only go into debt by an order of this Congress, and when this Congress says to the District, "You can go into debt two millions, or five millions," this Congress in the very bill advances the money and then takes it back just as soon as the District can afford to pay it.

So that the District does not suffer. It does not have to bond posterity. And I want to say right here that is the argument upon the streets and in the press, that posterity ought to pay some of this. I do not believe in bonding posterity unless you have to. Posterity will want to make its own improvements, and it is never satisfied with the improvements that the former generation made for it. It will have burdens enough to bear when posterity comes on the scene of action. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Posterity will have troubles of its own.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, I just want to say one word in conclusion. I have taken more time than I intended. I want to controvert very strongly the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] that the people here are taxed more heavily than in other municipalities. I do that because when I have made the same assertion once or twice before, my statement has been challenged. Nearly every man in the District with whom I have talked on this subject has complained as to the enormous taxation here.

I have gone over the 18 cities that the gentleman used in his report. I have taken the figures furnished in Bulletin No. 36 of the Department of Labor, and I find this to be true; I find that in 15 of those cities the per capita tax for municipal purposes alone is practically as much or more than the total taxes in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GILBERT. And, besides, in those cities they pay taxes on money and evidences of debt.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; but I am talking about the total tax. The per capita tax in 15 of those cities under these statistics is equal to the total tax in the District of Columbia. In addition to that, in those cities they must pay a State tax and a county tax, must pay for the schools, the courts, and all the paraphernalia of State and county machinery as provided for, in addition to this tax that is equal to the total tax in the District of Columbia.

So, if the gentleman from Wisconsin had doubled the figures he gave, if he had said the per capita tax in the District of Columbia is about $18 and the per capita tax in other cities in the country is about $30, he would have been very near the truth. And if he will only look at this report, he will find that in New York, as he gives it, where the per capita tax is about $24, in San Francisco where the per capita tax is $25, and in Boston where it runs to over $30, it does so because the figures that he has used include the State and county tax on real and personal property. In the other cities, where he figures the per capita tax as less than in Washington, his figures include city tax only.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it seems to me this is in the best possible shape it could be when it is in the hands of each Congress to legislate for the District in accordance with its current needs, and to advance to the District all the money it needs, and to compel the District the next year to return whatever money can be saved by economical management.

Mr. MUDD rose.

Mr. COWHERD. I have used more time than I intended to, and I should like to yield the floor.

Mr. MUDD. I should like to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Maryland for a question?

Mr. COWHERD. I do.

Mr. MUDD. I want to get at the gentleman's position. Does he contend that the extraordinary objects and projects of improvement outside of the usual expenditures should be provided for or can be provided for out of current taxation?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. MUDD. Or that we should advance the money from time to time out of the National Treasury as the occasion may arise?

Mr. COWHERD. I contend that in large part they will be paid for out of current taxation. For instance, here is this sewage-disposal system, the work upon which has been going on for years, and every year the Committee on Appropriations has appropriated every dollar that was asked, as I understand it. This year they gave every single dollar. Here is the filtration plant, which will take three or four years—or at least a year or two—to complete. Here is the union depot, which we give them five years to complete. Here is the highway bridge, that the Commissioners guaranteed was to cost about $568,000, and for which they say now we will need a million dollars.

It will take several years to build that. Out of the current revenues, that we have increased this year $3,000,000, we will save a million or so each year that can be used in large part to pay these expenses, and what we can not meet in that way we will let the District draw from the General Government at 2 per cent.

Mr. MUDD. I ask the gentleman for information, because I thought, perhaps unconsciously, the gentleman contradicted himself. I understood him to say, in one part of his argument, that the annual taxes would pay for these projects, and I thought I understood him to say in another part of his argument that we should advance this money as we shall authorize the projects.

Mr. COWHERD. No; I do not say we shall advance the money. I say we will advance that part of it that can not be met out of the current taxation, out of the yearly revenue.

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman admits that we can not provide for all these things out of the annual revenues?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not admit that we can not provide for them. I say in large part they will be provided for out of the yearly revenues. I say that when we do not have sufficient revenue to meet them then we will make advances, but I deny that it is a good business proposition to make advances before you know that you will need them.

Mr. MUDD. You would make them from time to time, but not in a lump sum?

Mr. COWHERD. If it is necessary to make advances from time to time, make them when the necessity develops.

Mr. BABCOCK. While this matter is fresh in the minds of the committee I want to call their attention to this fact—that the gentleman from Missouri comes here and attacks official figures, the best that can be obtained, and which the Department of Labor has spent weeks in preparing.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman will permit me to say, with official figures from the same Bureau.

Mr. BABCOCK (continuing). And he presents, Mr. Chairman, nothing as a substitute for these figures. Now, I will show to the gentleman in just a moment his error, by showing the total amount of money raised from each one of the following cities. I hold in my hand a statement prepared by the Bureau of Labor; it has just been prepared. Taking cities like New Orleans, with 300,000 people, the total amount of revenue from property tax, franchise tax, liquor licenses and other licenses, fines, fees, and franchise grants, the city of New Orleans raises $3,849,000. Washington, with 290,000 people, raises $5,215,000. Where is your per capita tax there?

Mr. COWHERD. Does not the gentleman admit that New Orleans also raises in addition taxes for State and county purposes?

Mr. BABCOCK. This includes all property tax, both real and personal.

Mr. COWHERD. For municipal purposes.

Mr. BABCOCK. It covers everything contributed by the citizens of New Orleans.

Mr. COWHERD. For city purposes?

Mr. BABCOCK. This is the entire tax of New Orleans for all purposes. That is the report from the Department.

Mr. COWHERD. I wish the gentleman would put that report in the RECORD.

Mr. LANDIS. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin mean that that includes the county and State tax?

Mr. BABCOCK. That includes everything contributed in the way of taxes. Here is the city of Detroit, Mich., and if this statement is not correct I hope some gentleman from Michigan will correct me. It has a population of about the same as New Orleans—300,000. They raise $4,221,026. Washington, with 290,000, raises $5,215,000 this year. Milwaukee, Wis., with a population of 297,500, almost the same—with 7,500 more people—raises $3,397,886. Now, then, these are the officials figures submitted from the Department of Labor. I do not want to misrepresent anything. I have tried to get the best information possible. That is the source it comes from, and that is the result.

Mr. COWHERD. Now will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman comes from the State of Wisconsin, the city of Milwaukee is in Wisconsin, and has a county organization in that city, has it not, and State? Now, then, the city of Milwaukee levies a tax for municipal purposes and the county levies taxes for State and county purposes, do they not?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, I have the official report from the same Bureau of Labor, where it says in Bulletin 36, on cities and States, the receipts of the city from all sources, and it gives the property tax and liquor tax, etc., and then it goes on and gives the amount. Now, as to New Orleans and San Francisco it gives the State tax and the county tax; but when it comes to Milwaukee it gives only the tax for municipal purposes. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin say there is no State tax levied?

Mr. BABCOCK. There is very little State tax.

Mr. CANNON. The school tax.

Mr. COWHERD. And the total revenues of the city of Milwaukee in 1899—I take it that was the year, because this is dated 1900—included the property tax, the liquor tax, and the franchise, $4,349,656.

Mr. BABCOCK. Accept the gentleman's figures. That is all right. Four millions for a population of nearly 300,000——

Mr. COWHERD. And this does not include the State or county tax.

Mr. BABCOCK (continuing). And Washington, $5,215,000.

Mr. COWHERD. But out of that $4,000,000 you do not take care of the schools and the courts, and you do not take care of any State or county paupers, for which in nearly every State there is a tax. This is practically a municipal tax, and I think anybody will admit that. I now want to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT].

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. As I understand the gentleman, the entire expense to the city of Washington is from eight to ten million dollars per annum.

Mr. BABCOCK. The present appropriation bill as it passed the House carries $7,750,000, in round numbers.

Mr. OTJEN. Seven million six hundred and eighteen thousand dollars.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman why that is. I live in a city two-thirds the size of Washington, which is quite as well administered, has better water, is quite as well lighted, has an excellent police, and the entire expense of the city is a little over $2,000,000. Allowing for the difference in population, it would make the expense of the city of Washington about $3,000,000. Is it not possible that the expenses of Washington are too large, and that there is some extravagance in the city government? I do not see where the difference comes in.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I believe, so far as the municipal departments and the spending of the money appropriated is concerned, there has never been a criticism; not that any money was wasted, or that there was any fraudulent contracts.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; but there may be extravagance without fraud.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand, as far as that is concerned, that Washington has been an example for all the world in regard to municipal expenses. There are large expenditures here. This bill which passed the House carries two items amounting to twelve hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars for filtration plant and sewage disposal, and the gentleman has heard me state that the District has paid out seventeen hundred and ten thousand dollars for new streets. Those large items are extraordinary and not properly in the current expenses.

I admit that the criticism is true that the expense is large here, and it must necessarily be large. There is no city in the Union that has such wide streets; there is no city where practically all the streets are paved with asphalt. A large amount of money is necessarily expended on the streets.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but I do not see why it should be more than twice the rate of a well-administered city in the State of New York.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a suggestion? There is a million dollars of this expenditure for the sinking fund for the money that the United States and the District owe.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; and in the expenditure of the city of Rochester there is between three and four hundred thousand dollars' interest on the public debt that makes a part of the two million. Of course, if my friend from Illinois assures me that there is no extravagance——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no, no; my friend will not get me on that point. [Laughter.]

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from New York a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MUDD. Is the gentleman sure that his city as a municipality pays the expenses for courts, schoolhouses, and charitable institutions? Does not the State provide for those or some of them?

Mr. PERKINS. The city pays the expenses of the schools of the city.

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman might find many things of that sort that are not paid by his city which Washington City has to pay for exclusively.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, they would not amount to very much; they might amount to two or three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I want briefly, in opposing this bill, to do so from the standpoint of its necessity. I am opposed to the passage of this bill because I believe it is unnecessary. It is not expedient to do it, and I believe it would be a bad precedent. I have listened to the arguments for the passage of this bill and I have read in the newspapers every day for a month or two of the necessity for its passage. I do not know what is behind all this. I confess I have never before seen business men so anxious to run into debt and to encumber their property as some of them seem to be in the city of Washington. There is no question but what we all want Washington to be a beautiful city. We are all just as anxious for that and equally so as the people of this District.

Since 1878 Congress has been especially charged with beautifying this District and city, and no one can say but that it has made wonderful progress along that line. We want to continue to build up and develop and beautify this District. Now, I am opposed to this bill for borrowing this money because it is unnecessary to borrow it. I listened to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK] as to what the things were for which we needed this money. I have done more than that. I have gone into the report that he has filed—from 15 to 18 pages long—and I have read every single proposition, and yet am convinced that within the time that it is provided for in this bill that this money shall be paid back that we can have done three times as much permanent improvement on the money we shall have from the taxes from year to year.

The bill that passed the House the other day, just referred to, appropriated $7,617,000. The point has just been raised that it is an unusual amount. It was, but of that $7,617,000 one million seven hundred and odd thousand dollars was for permanent improvements. So we say that in that bill——

Mr. PERKINS. What sort of improvements?

Mr. BURKETT. I will read them to you.

Appropriations made in the District of Columbia appropriation bill in the nature of permanent improvements.

Books for library	$5,000
Permanent system of highways	2,500
Assessment and permit work	145,000
Paving roadways under permit system	10,000
Work on streets and avenues, per schedule	50,000

Mr. PERKINS. What is that $400,000 for?

Mr. BURKETT. B street and New Jersey avenue trunk sewer—part of the sewage-disposal system.

In short, in the bill of the other day we appropriated $1,788,600 for permanent improvements, according to the list that I have read.

Mr. PERKINS. How much of that went for street openings?

Mr. BURKETT. Well, there are items of $50,000 for streets and avenues, $10,000 for opening and widening alleys, $54,000 for county roads——

Mr. BABCOCK. None of that was for street openings.

Mr. BURKETT. No, sir.

In addition to this $7,617,000, we have a little over $3,000,000 left to spend here in the city, because our revenues available are $10,800,000. In the bill of the other day, as I say, we appropriated $7,600,000; and we have left over to-day $3,000,000 to improve the District with, to build the terminal, to make improvements here and there as they may be needed; in short, as the House can see, we have altogether for the coming year $5,000,000 to put into permanent improvements in this District. Now, sir, we propose in the present bill to pay this money borrowed back in twenty years.

Mr. BABCOCK. Five hundred thousand dollars a year.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, that would pay it in something like twelve years. Now, by the time this is to be paid back we shall have, according to the same proportion as now (because taxes will increase as the years go on and expenses increase), we shall have in twelve years, at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, $60,000,000 worth of permanent improvements, and we shall have every dollar paid for.

Now, in my judgment, that is the better way to do. Why, sir, in three or four years these permanent improvements which the gentleman from Wisconsin has specified will have been paid for, and before those improvements are completed we shall have, at the rate we are now going on, every dollar collected with which to pay for them.

Some one says that this will necessitate cutting down running expenses. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from New York to this point: We are collecting $10,000,000 annually, in round numbers—$5,000,000 from the city and $5,000,000 from the Government of the United States. Practically the $5,000,000 which the Government of the United States puts in is what we have every year for permanent improvements.

But some one says, "If you put in for permanent improvements $5,000,000 in the course of a year, that will cramp the city." It has been said here and in the press and on all sides that Congress has been niggardly with this District in its appropriations. But, sir, as I showed the other day on this floor, every single item necessary or important for the health of the city, or its development, or the education of the people or their protection within the District—every dollar of this kind that has been asked for was appropriated. I have a list here of the various purposes for which we made appropriations to the full extent of the estimates. This list, covering more than two pages, shows that we appropriated in all these cases exactly what the Commissioners asked for.

Estimates as granted—full estimates.

If there be no objection, I shall put this entire list in the RECORD without reading the whole, so that members may see that for all this score of items that I have gone over we appropriated every dollar that the Commissioners of the District asked us to appropriate. We have not scaled down the items in any particular.

Now, I also have a list here, which I will not go into at length, of the few items which we did not allow in full as asked for. I will state for example the first one. It is an item for repairs to county roads. One hundred thousand dollars was asked and we gave $80,000. Eighty thousand dollars was current law for the repair of county roads in this District, about 100 miles. It is possible that there are a little more than 100 miles, but in the examination it was stated 69 miles and afterwards corrected. All told, it is a little over 100 miles. For street sweeping we allowed current law. For cleaning off ice and snow we allowed current law. For the bathing beach we raised the estimate, and so on down through the list here. For the things that were necessary for the health, life, or protection of the people here in this District we gave them what they asked, and in these other items we gave what in the judgment of the committee they could use properly.

Now, I turn to this report of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], and I find that the $1,700,000 added to what the committee appropriated would leave, as they say, a deficit of $352,000. According to the report of the gentleman from Wisconsin, by adding all the things he says should be added, it would produce a deficit this year of only $352,000.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will read the report, he will find the report says that there is a portion only, and to that I wish to call the attention of the House—not all.

Mr. BURKETT. These are a portion. There are some in here, I want to say, that this House will probably never indorse or pass through. It will be cut down more than increase in that particular; but giving it as the gentleman puts it, and as do the Commissioners, the very highest possible estimate they have ever asked for, there is a deficit of only $352,000. Now, let me suggest another thing. The District owes to the United States on borrowed money $1,900,000 in round numbers. Six hundred thousand dollars of that is payable this year by the terms of the law.

In the estimate that we have made, which I have given you heretofore, we have figured on the District paying back this year one-third of that $1,900,000, or, in short, paying back $600,000. Yet they have come in here and instead of extending the time, if it is necessary, on this year's payment, they ask us to loan them $6,000,000 more, when all that is needed, according to their own statements, to make them come out even and $300,000 ahead, would be to defer this year's payment on what they borrowed in times past, when taxes were not as they are to-day.

Now, I am opposed to this proposition of letting this loan go through for another reason, and that is that it is very expensive to borrow money. Away back a good many years ago this District went into the money borrowing business. To-day they owe in round numbers $13,000,000 of bonded indebtedness. A few days ago I sent to the Treasury Department and had them figure up very carefully and accurately what that $13,000,000 which the District of Columbia borrowed was going to cost the District of Columbia by the time they paid it off.

After giving all the items, which I will not read through, but will insert in the RECORD, the final line is: "Total cost of the 3.65 per cent bonds, $37,883,579.61." In short, the $13,000,000 of improvements which the District made with that borrowed money is to cost the District, and they are paying for it to-day, over $37,000,000, and in the bill we passed the other day we appropriated $900,000 for that purpose.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE TREASURER,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1903.

Hon. E. J. BURKETT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In answer to your request of the 16th instant relative to the cost, including the interest and final redemption, of the 3.65 per cent bonds of the District of Columbia, a reference to the laws under which these bonds were issued may be interesting.

Act of June 20, 1874 (18 Stat., 116), bonds issued for board of audit certificates	$13,743,250
Act of June 16, 1880 (21 Stat., 284):
Bonds issued for board of audit certificates	684,400
Bonds issued for judgments of the Court of Claims	429,150
Act of August 13, 1894 (28 Stat., 277), bonds issued for additional interest at the rate of 2.35 per cent on board of audit certificates funded under the act of June 16, 1880, and for the redemption of 8 per cent certificates of indebtedness	112,500
Total issue to date	14,969,300

The act of June 16, 1880, provided that the total issue of the 3.65 per cent bonds should not exceed $15,000,000. The balance of $30,700 unissued will probably be absorbed in payment of judgments of the Court of Claims in cases now pending.

The bonds issued for board of audit certificates and for judgments of the Court of Claims carried interest from an early date, the greater part from August, 1874.

The bonds issued under the act of August 13, 1894, bore interest only from the interest period preceding the date of issue.

The total interest due and payable on these bonds, including the fiscal year 1903, was	$14,619,988.77
The bonds retired by the sinking funds amount to $1,989,900 and cost	2,292,318.84
Total cost to the close of the fiscal year 1903	16,912,307.61
Estimated sum to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1904, and annually thereafter to the date of maturity of the 3.65 per cent bonds, August 1, 1924, $975,408 for twenty-one and one-half years	20,971,272.00
Total prospective cost of 3.65 per cent bonds to the date of maturity	37,883,579.61

Respectfully,

ELLIS H. ROBERTS,
Treasurer of the United States,
Ex officio Commissioner Sinking Fund, District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman states that the District pays this all. Is he not mistaken? Does not the Government of the United States pay one-half of the borrowed money as well as one-half of the current expenses?

Mr. BURKETT. That is so by the terms of the undertaking of 1878, yes. Now, I want to add this in passing also. There is a limit of indebtedness beyond which a man should not go. My judgment is that a man should never go in debt to build a fine house. He can afford to go in debt to buy a farm, or his machinery, or the things with which he is going to do business, but he can not afford to go in debt to put on style. A city, when it is started out on the plains, must have certain things, and can afford to bond to pave a street, possibly; can afford to bond for waterworks or for electric lights, if necessary.

But I do not believe a city that is more than 100 years old, that has everyone of these necessary things, can afford to bond to beautify the city; in short, to put on the frills and the furls with borrowed capital. I do not believe that you and I, as guardians of the property of the people of this District, ought to permit them to go into debt for improvements of this character.

As I have said, there is a limit beyond which men and beyond which cities ought not to go into debt. I have here a report of the Department of Labor. I have gone through the list of 150 cities, and have found the limit of indebtedness that those cities have. I will say that it averages less than 5 per cent of the assessed valuation. That is the limit under the law.

Most of the towns in Pennsylvania, for instance, taking them as a whole, permit an indebtedness of 7 per cent of the assessed valuation. In Boston, Mass., they can not go into debt to exceed 2 per cent of their assessed valuation; Cambridge, Mass., 2½ per cent; Chicago, 5 per cent; Haverhill, 2 per cent; Indianapolis, Ind., 2 per cent, etc.; and, as I have figured it out, 5 per cent is a little more than the average indebtedness that the cities of this country permit themselves to contract by the laws passed by their councils or by the legislatures directly responsible to the people of those cities. That is the average; and of these 150 cities less than 15 have a larger per capita indebtedness than has Washington.

Now, I have taken the assessed valuation of the District of Columbia as it has been given to you by the chairman of this committee, and 5 per cent on that assessed valuation for the District of Columbia will figure out $13,292,000—within $200,000 of what we are already in debt, without counting the floating debt.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURKETT. In short, Washington is already in debt more than the average city of this country is permitted by its own laws and regulations to go into debt.

Mr. BABCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. In making that statement here of property valued at $219,000,000 the House should understand that that is only 46 per cent of the real-estate values of Washington. The Government owns 54 per cent of the real estate, so that, taking the gentleman's own rule, it would reduce the percentage rate more than one-half.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, here is another reason why I oppose the passage of this bill. As I have said, it is not necessary. As fast as these improvements are made we will have the money to pay for them. There may be a year or two when two or three extra things come in, when we will have to advance some out of the Treasury, just as we did last year.

Take it for example last year. Here came in a demand for a high-pressure water system. There came in a demand for the hurrying on of this filtration plant. There came in several of these things that had to be pushed, and pushed hard and quickly. What was the result? The Committee on Appropriations recommended, and the House and Congress appropriated, a large amount, advanced it out of the Treasury, and hurried that work on. Now, this year, as has been stated, the amount of the appropriation bill which passed the House was less than the amount carried last year. Why? Because we cut down the sinking fund appropriation this year $239,000. We cut down the appropriation for the high-pressure water system $200,000, and such items as that, and that is why it is decreased $800,000 for this year.

I say we will have the money just as fast as these improvements are made. This bridge will not be completed for five years. This railroad terminal will not be completed for five years. The filtration plant will probably be finished next year. It will take three or four years to finish up this sewer system that we have started, and we have given them every dollar they asked for, and we are pushing it just as hard as we can. We will have every dollar for them as fast as they are ready for it. We have enough this year and almost $1,000,000 to play on, in my judgment.

Here is the final reason why I am opposed to this loan, and why I am opposed to permitting this city to go further into debt, by way of bonded indebtedness or otherwise. We are not directly responsible to the people in this District. They do not vote for us. We and succeeding Houses never can feel the responsibility to the people here that we feel at home or that councilmen elected by the people of this District would feel toward them.

Precedent is a hard pusher. Whenever you establish a precedent for doing a thing you can always repeat the dose at the slightest provocation. If we establish a precedent now to permit them to borrow money without any more provocation than there is at present, time will go on and in years to come they will keep on increasing the indebtedness until they will confiscate the property of this District in time, or as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has prophesied, they will come in here on some great popular clamor and uprising in the District and will ask us to do exactly what we had to do once before, and that is absolutely to wipe out the indebtedness of the District by the appropriation of money from the Treasury of the United States.

I believe, gentlemen, in the face of these facts, that this bill ought not to pass. It is not necessary. We will have a surplus when the District appropriation bill has gone through this year, and in my judgment, estimating it carefully, with the things that are undertaken, we can make in the next five years $25,000,000 in permanent improvements. If we have to pay for all in one year that is now under contract there would not be more than half of this amount needed. In short, if all were completed next year, it would take but $7,000,000, and yet in the five years required for their completion we will have twenty millions to pay on the $7,000,000 worth of permanent improvements that have been suggested.

Mr. MUDD. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for information. Do I understand the gentleman to say that we will have twenty-five millions over the expenditures of the next five years?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MUDD. Twenty-five millions to be expended for extraordinary projects? Will we have five millions in excess of ordinary expenditures for each of these five years? Can the gentleman mean to say that?

Mr. BURKETT. I say that it costs $5,000,000, practically, in round numbers, for the mere running expenses of the District of Columbia, and we will have that other $5,000,000 for permanent improvements. There will be $5,000,000 this year to go into permanent improvements in this District, and if it does not cost any more than $5,000,000 the next year for the running expenses, that will be met by the tax levy and we will have $5,000,000 to go into permanent improvements every other year in the future.

Mr. MCCLEARY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak for or against the bill?

Mr. McCLEARY. Against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee, a member of the committee.

Mr. SIMS. If anyone wants to address the committee in favor of the bill, I prefer they do so.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak to a point that seems to be raised by everyone who opposes national aid to municipal government in the District of Columbia. We are told that the District is without representation. That is not its fault. If it had the representation, if it had political influence outside of this body, it might not find the difficulty that is found in obtaining exact justice. But it does seem as if it was the pleasure of Representatives from all parts of the United States to cry out that the District of Columbia having the Federal Government located here, it should pay all the taxes.

Last year it was asserted on the floor of this House that the District of Columbia should pay more than its apportioned share of the public burdens—in fact, all the municipal cost. Why? The District of Columbia pays out for her municipal government more than any other city of equal population in the Union. Why? Because the city is the national capital. You take the case of maintaining the police force in the District of Columbia. Why is it so great? Because you have to keep a police force here to guard United States property and to be ready for incursions that do not occur in any other city in the Union. You have to keep constantly on hand a larger police force than would be necessary in any other city of 270,000 inhabitants.

Take the avenues of this city. For one century we have been constructing upon the plan laid down by Major L'Enfant. What was the idea of that plan? That there should be a national city so constructed as to necessarily be expensive. What is the result? There has been a constantly recurring annual expenditure for maintenance that is not found in any other city in the United States. What other city maintains any such avenues? What other city maintains any such system of parks as the city of Washington?

Washington's municipal government is costly, not because of the private residents here. If they had control of the ordinary expenses of the municipal government they would not be called upon to maintain such avenues as they do to-day. They would not be called upon to expend so much on asphalt pavements in miles of wide streets. It is a beautiful city, but it is not a city of the residents of Washington. It was designed and built for the people of the United States, and the people of the United States occupy the same relative position to its beauty and its improvement that the French people do to the city of Paris, where it is enough to put up a sign, "This park belongs to the people of France," to prevent trespass upon public ground or desecration of public property by anyone who comes from the most remote part of the French Republic.

This city has been constructed on lines not for the financial benefit of the residents here. Its avenues, its magnificent streets, the immense outlay for asphalt pavements have not been solely for the citizens of Washington. It is true they get the incidental benefit of residence here, but the city was designed to be a national monument. Where else can you find a city where over 50 per cent of the value of the real estate is occupied by the National Government?

We know that ordinary taxation is on the theory that it excludes Government property from tax imposition. It is an elementary principle that tax on Government property shall not be imposed, but we can not apply that rule to the city of Washington, because the city itself is laid out, is constructed, and has been improved from the days of Washington and L'Enfant, not merely as a residence city, but as a monument to our national greatness.

As we go on in the march of that improvement I do not believe in imposing in any annual tax levy millions of dollars for novel and permanent improvement. It is not done in any other city in the world and should not be done here. The people of this District ask only for that which is accorded by every State legislature to cities desiring to make extensive and expensive improvements. Sound municipal policy has always, outside of this District, embraced plans for the graduation of the burdens of permanent improvements, and, whatever the fate of this bill, that policy is bound to find place in the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have got no ill feeling toward the people of the District of Columbia. I certainly take as much pride in this, our national city, as anybody. At least, I think I do, and I take it that I do in its favor all that I ought to, in view of my responsibilities as a representative of the people. I have not come here to say a word that will embitter anybody against the people of the city of Washington. I have no hard feelings against the people of this District, who, by this bill, are seeking to lighten their already very light burdens as compared with the burdens of other cities. Therefore it does not call for anything bitter, for anything that is unpleasant, to be said in considering this bill. I only want to take a plain, fair, businessslike view of the matter.

Let us look at the facts. But before going into those facts in an orderly way, I want to notice a few things said in favor of this bill in the nature of a reply. My distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. McDERMOTT] speaks about the system of parks in Washington. They are the finest I know of anywhere, of which we are all proud. I think on account of that system that this city receives more benefit from its parks than any city in the United States or elsewhere. All of that benefit, if I am correctly informed, is a gift to the citizens of Washington. The parks, as I stated, and the public spaces are kept up entirely out of the Treasury of the United States, and do not cost any citizen of Washington one farthing; and although he has not the exclusive use of them, he has all the benefits of them that he wants. Washington has the best system of parks of any city in the world, as far as I know, and it does not cost the people of this city one cent.

Mr. McDERMOTT. But you should substract the value of those parks from the value of property assessed for revenues.

Mr. SIMS. Do the people of this city not appreciate the fact in their favor that there is not a neighborhood in this District that the poorest person in it can not go out and enjoy the shade and quiet of the parks that are kept up by all the taxpayers in the United States for their benefit, without one cent of cost to them in the way of taxes, and yet this is made a matter of complaint that they are so blest.

What next? They claim on account of this large amount of park area that is kept up at the Government expense that they are deprived of that much real estate for purposes of taxation.

Now, let us look at that for a moment. What would this city be worth if the parks and the site of government were out of it? Would all this land of the area now covered by this city be worth as taxable assets what the area inhabited by private persons is now worth? The parks absolutely add in value to all the rest of the property, and without it it would shrink very materially. And when I hear gentlemen get up here and say that 54 per cent of the area of this city is covered by parks, and that they are deprived of that much taxable property that they otherwise would have, then I must reply to them that 100 per cent of the area without the Government would not be worth, for taxation purposes, what they have now.

Why not take a common-sense view of this thing? We are glad to have the parks, and we are glad to have our constituents keep them up. I expect to continue to vote for it, but I am sorry that I have continually to hear the complaints on the part of the people, who have almost exclusive enjoyments of the parks that they are enjoying by having the blessings cast upon them at the expense of my constituents and yours, say because you have done this for them you must do more. I think there has enough been said about that. Let us look at the situation as it is.

Every member of this House may know, but it is well to recall that on account of its being the seat of government, that on account of requiring greater expenditures, broader streets, and all that kind of thing, the Government of the United States, or the taxpayers of the United States, pay one-half of all the burdens, except street extension. Every improvement that is made, one-half is paid by the taxpayers of the United States, while the enjoyment is almost exclusively by the people of the city of Washington. Just let a member go and try, as I have been for the last few days, to buy a lot on which to build a house, or to buy a house, and to get within the precincts of Sixteenth street or Connecticut avenue or Massachusetts avenue NW., and see what it will cost him to get it. It appears that the value of the property in those localities is so much enhanced by the contiguity of these parks that there is no loss of actual financial benefit, but on the contrary a greatly added value. We are all in favor of these parks, and I do not want a backward step taken.

While one-half of all improvements made in this city is paid by the Government, I have never known an improvement authorized that had not been asked for by the Commissioners of this District in behalf of the people. Take the case of the municipal building. Very great interest was manifested by the people of the District for a magnificent municipal building, but when they asked for that improvement, did they not know that half the expense of that structure would be borne by them?

When they asked us to tax our people for one-half of the whole cost of that structure, did they not know that the other half, according to the agreement that they had made, and according to simple justice, should be paid by them? Such improvements are granted on the application of citizens; and then they come here and say, "You have saddled us with the expense of this improvement beneficial to the citizens of the District; now loan us the money to pay our one-half of the expense; and require us to pay only one-half the interest that citizens ordinarily pay upon money which they borrow for like purposes; and give us twenty years in which to pay the indebtedness." Now, does a proper spirit of liberality toward this District require that we should burden in this way the taxpayers of the United States at large?

I know it is claimed that a United States 2 per cent bond is worth more than par—is at a premium. I admit it. That bond carries with it certain banking privileges which adds to its value. But, sir, the United States could not to-day borrow at simple interest without issuing bonds, with the benefits attending those bonds, $100,000,000 at 2 per cent, I do not care what may be the solvency of the Government, sir. There is not a city in the United States to-day that can borrow money at 2 per cent. Yet, sir, when we thus pay one-half of the District expenses, we are asked to establish a permanent policy here of loaning money to this District at the rate of 2 per cent per annum. I ask, How does that look, when we consider the burdens of the citizens of the different States whom we represent?

Sir, this question has been so thoroughly ventilated heretofore, so far as the per capita taxation is concerned, that I do not think it worth while to go into it further. But when we come to impose these burdens upon your constituents and mine for the support of this District, we must look at the different forms of property of the different localities and the amounts at which they are assessed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has well and truly said that no bonds are taxed in this District; that the stock of no corporation is taxed in this District; that notes are not taxed; that mortgages are not taxed; that no evidence of indebtedness is taxed; that money is not taxed.

Now, when we come to compare the tax rate in Washington with the tax rate in other cities, we must make the comparison upon the basis of the same character of property and a similar assessment. I am not here to defend the theory of taxing evidences of debt. I believe that some of the taxation of this city is based upon a proper theory. The taxation of the gross receipts of corporations is, I think, correct; I advocate and defend it. But when you make a comparison between taxation imposed in Washington and some other city, you must bear in mind the character of property upon which this taxation is levied, taking into consideration both realty and personalty. Sir, if you would take the assessment roll of the District of Columbia, and consider the various kinds of personal properties which are taxed in other cities but not taxed here, you would probably bring the tax rate in this District down to $1 per hundred, even upon a two-thirds valuation.

Look at taxation in the different States. Why, sir, in a debate in this House several years ago the question was raised by some gentleman from Iowa in regard to the taxes paid for school purposes in his section. He stated, if I remember correctly, that the total taxation paid in his State upon the average was $4 or $5 per hundred—in other words, 4 or 5 per cent—and he undertook to draw a comparison to the disadvantage of the Southern States, because his section, as he claimed, paid an amount so much larger for school purposes.

But, sir, when you weigh the tax burden of different sections and compare it with the burden here, and bear in mind the fact that the taxation here is for municipal purposes alone, while in most localities in the States there is taxation for municipal, county, and State purposes, you must reach the conclusion that a tax rate of $1.50 in this District is extremely favorable to the citizens here. Take the State of Tennessee. There, when a man gives a note for borrowed money, taxes must be paid on that note, while the debtor pays taxes on the money owed. So on a vendor's lien note taxes must be paid, both note and the land for which it was given; so in the case of stock in corporations. The holder of the stock must pay taxes on it, while the corporation as such must pay taxes on the tangible property of the corporation.

You may say that this is double taxation. Granted. But I say when you undertake to compare the burden of people in other localities with the burdens borne by the people of this District you must make a reasonable, scientific, and just comparison. I do not know the city in the State of Tennessee in which the tax burden of the citizens will fall as low as $2 per hundred, yet we think we are bearing a very low and modest rate of taxation. I can say that I think it is a great advertisement for Washington City that the tax burden of her people under the existing system is lighter than the tax burden of any other city of the United States having 200,000 population.

Then why should we loan this money? Whose money is it that we will loan? It is the money of your constituent and my constituent. How does that constituent get the money which we loan? If he is delinquent and has to borrow, he has to pay from 6 to 10 per cent if he borrows straight; if he is delinquent in his taxes and does not pay them at the time appointed, damages are assessed equaling, perhaps, 25 per cent, and he must pay them. This committee comes in here and asks Congress to take the money out of the pockets of your constituent and my constituent and loan it to these people at a rate of 2 per cent interest. For a like loan your constituent and mine would have to pay from 4 to 6 per cent.

Now where is the justice in that? Where is the demand for it? Where is the plea for it? Where is the occasion that demands such a sacrifice of the interests of your constituent taxpayer and mine in order to further lighten the burdens of the taxpayers of the District of Columbia? I say this with no ill feeling toward these people. They have treated me nicely, and I like them. I wish I lived here, and then I would not have to pay taxes on my personal property, and by that I mean choses in action and things of that kind; but we have already adopted a precedent for it—and I take no credit for that, because I opposed it then—loaning even from one Congress to another at a rate of interest but one-half, at least, of what it would actually be if they had to borrow on their own bonds. Therefore I shall not oppose a loan in that way.

Are we not doing enough when we reenact from time to time, as emergency arises, proper legislation? Why should they borrow almost without limit, to be returned within twenty years, and at a rate of interest which the Government of the United States could not obtain if it were to borrow money as you or I or any city would have to borrow? I do not see any justice in this. I do not see anything that demands it. I think I have said enough on this matter. I opposed this bill when it came before the committee, notwithstanding every newspaper in the city published it as coming from the committee with a unanimous report, and has continued to do so ever since. Of course it is true that they might have regarded my opposition as amounting to nothing, but I feel it my duty to give this Congress the facts I have given them in this general way.

I am not going into details. That has been done already, and I do not want to consume the time of the committee and hold it here for further detail; but when your constituent and mine is taxed double what these people are and pay from double to three times the amount of interest on any money which he may borrow, why should we loan these people at the rate we do, to be paid within twenty years? I can not see why we should do so, and in not doing so I do not see that we prove recreant to the interests of the District or its citizens. Congress is practically the common council of the District of Columbia, and is in session practically all the time. Whenever an emergency has arisen in the past, it has never failed to come to the relief of the District. It will do so in the future, and let us have those who follow us in this House assume some of the responsibility.

I am not in favor of loaning money at all at 2 per cent. I would be in favor of raising the rate of taxation until they actually pay one-half of the burden, but the precedent has been established and I am willing to follow it. Cheap money means extravagance. With money at 2 per cent and the National Treasury to fall back on, extravagance will run riot in this city, and a debt will be piled up of such vast dimensions that some future Congress will be called on to assume it and take it bodily from the shoulders of the people of this District. Against such a condition of affairs I feel it is our duty to do all we can, and as a means to that end let us vote down this bill. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Let the problems of the future be solved by the people of the future.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have listened very attentively to the debate this morning, and, unless I am greatly mistaken, there is an absolute misconception of the proposition that is before the House. I am going to take just a few minutes to state the proposition as I understand it. Here is the District of Columbia, a District 10 miles square, a trifle over one-half of the real estate in which is owned by the Government and the other half by the citizens residing in the District. There is no Territorial form of government. Congress controls this District absolutely.

The people, some 300,000 in number, residing in the District of Columbia have no political rights. They have not the political rights that we have conferred upon the Filipinos, because the Filipino, if he complies with certain qualifications, can vote and can organize his town and city government. These people can not do that. These people have not even the right to be represented upon this floor, in either Chamber of Congress. More than that, we tax these people. We fix the rate of taxation which they shall pay. We determine upon what improvements shall be made. We appoint officers who control them. We appoint the Commissioners who take charge of the affairs of the District, and the people have not a single word to say about it.

They have not the rights which the Territories of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico, and even Hawaii, have on this floor, because the Delegates from those Territories are entitled to come here to talk for the interests of those Territories. More than that, we have provided that they may establish their own Territorial form of government, and we have given to their people what may be termed self-government. Now, these people pay the tax which we say they shall pay. They pay the rate of taxation which we say they shall pay. We determine what tax they shall pay, we take their money, and we put it into the United States Treasury, and we spend that money for them. We can make their tax rate any amount that we choose to make it.

The tax, as fixed by the laws now in force, amounts to about 1½ per cent. The assessed valuation is fixed by the officers of the United States Government, and not by the representatives of these people. Now this taxation, as appears in the report which you have before you, yields a revenue of about $5,000,000 per annum. If that revenue be sufficient, then there is no occasion for the passage of this bill. But one thing is important. These people have the right to know whether this tax is to be uniform or is not to be uniform. All that we seek to do in this bill is to provide that in the future when any great exigency arises in the way of any large expenditure, the United States Government shall carry on the debtor side some part of the obligation which we put on these people.

Is that loaning money? We have a perfect right, if we choose, Mr. Chairman, to say that next year, if the part which the people of the District should carry amounts to $10,000,000, that they shall pay the entire $10,000,000 in a single year. Do we want to do that? Do we want to carry out the proposition which was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to-day, of putting into the tax levy each year the amount which will cover what is necessary to take care of that part which the people of this District are called upon to pay? I say not. I want to ask the gentlemen of this House if, when you carry out any great improvement in your cities, you put it all in the tax levy? I want to ask my friends on the other side if, when they introduce in their municipalities sewerage or water systems or any other great municipal improvements, they put it all into the tax levy of a single year and make the people pay it?

What is the purpose of this proposition? The only purpose of it is to give some assurance to the people of the District of Columbia that the rate of taxation shall not be jumped from year to year until it becomes burdensome. So far as I am concerned, and so far as my opinion goes, I believe that it is the duty of Congress to do something for the development of the city of Washington. These people in Washington are finding no fault with the payment of a reasonable rate of taxation. The rate of taxation which they bear to-day is a rate as high as is paid by the citizens of my city in Massachusetts, and it is a rate higher than is paid by the citizens of the city of Boston.

Mr. SHATTUC. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHATTUC. Do you pay taxes on bonds and stocks in Boston, or, under the law, ought you to pay a tax on bonds and stocks?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. We do not pay any tax in Boston on stocks which are issued by domestic corporations. We pay upon all bonds, and we pay upon stocks that are issued by corporations created outside of the State.

Mr. SHATTUC. My judgment is that there is no city in the United States where the tax amounts to over 1 per cent on a par valuation of the property in that city. I know something about taxation, and I say that there is not a city in the United States, where they exempt bonds and exempt stocks, where the rate is 1 per cent on the par valuation. In other words, my judgment is that there is no city in the world that is as favored in the matter of taxes as Washington City is. There is not a city in the world that is so free from taxation as this. You ought to pass a law, I think, in favor of Congressmen, so that they could stay here. [Laughter.]

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Now, my friend from Ohio can not have any controversy with me on that proposition. I believe that the people living in the District of Columbia should pay a fair and reasonable tax.

Mr. SHATTUC. Upon what do you base that?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. A fair and reasonable tax may be said to be the average tax in cities of like size.

Mr. SHATTUC. I think that is fair.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Now, my friend will agree with me that it is the duty of Congress to see that these people are assessed a rate that is fair and equitable. I am not here to make any defense in behalf of the citizens of Washington, or in favor of low taxation. On the other hand, I believe they should pay a reasonable tax. I believe to-day under the present assessment they are paying a reasonable tax. But what I say is that, since they have no voice in fixing the rate of taxation which they shall pay, since they have no representative upon the floor of this House or upon the floor of the Senate, we ought to adopt at this time a policy which shall be in favor of making the tax uniform. By uniform I mean having it continue fair and reasonable. I maintain that the proposition that we shall put into the tax levy each year whatever sum we choose to assess these people in the way of taxes is unfair and unwise.

For one, while I am not a citizen of the city, I am interested in the growth of the city. Only a year ago we brought forward plans for the greater Washington, and they were sent throughout the country. They were approved. There was a national interest and a national pride in the development of Washington. People are coming to this city from all parts of the country. It has become the most important winter resort in America.

Only a year ago my distinguished predecessor, who served my district with distinction upon this floor, came to this city to make it his winter home, and he brought along with him a large amount of taxable property. He is a public-spirited gentleman, interested in the growth of this city, prepared to pay any reasonable tax. But I say he has a right to know whether his tax next year is to be a reasonable tax or not. I say he has a perfect right to know whether his tax is to be 3 per cent or 5 per cent, or whether he is to pay a tax of 1½ per cent, which is a fair and reasonable tax upon a fair and reasonable valuation. So I say that it is important it should be settled.

For one, Mr. Chairman, I would like to see the city of Washington become a city of art, a city of progress. I would like to see the capital city of this nation made a city to which wealthy men and wealthy women would resort. I would like to see the plan of greater Washington carried out. I read only a short time ago in a magazine article a statement that over $100,000,000 was expended every year abroad by American citizens who go there to study art and to visit the cities of the Old World. We, the wealthiest nation in the world commercially, have reached that stage where we can afford to have one city, at least, the national capital, so developed and improved as to induce our people to stay on this side of the Atlantic and allow them to expend their money here.

If you take the case of the French capital, the wisest investment the French ever made they made a generation ago when they converted that city into a center of art to which the American goes to spend his money. More than that. Take the example of the old Greek, he fully understood the wisdom of investments in art. For more than twenty centuries the world has been paying the Greek race tribute. All that is necessary to be carried out in Washington to make it a place the people will be proud of is to develop it along right lines. If you will adopt the policy such as the District Committee present here to-day, a policy which will undertake to make the taxes from year to year uniform in the city of Washington, people will come here from all parts of the country and all parts of the globe.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman favor a policy on the part of the United States Government that will induce millionaires to leave their respective States and bring property now taxable in those States here and then exempt them from tax in this city on that kind of property?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I certainly do not. I have stated once at least, if not more than once, that I do not believe any citizen should be permitted to live here unless his property is fairly taxed. What I say is, that if the tax to-day is not a fair and reasonable tax then it is our duty to make it so. I am not advocating a refuge here for men who would escape from taxation.

Mr. SIMS. Is it fair that he should pay no tax on stocks, bonds, mortgages, and money in this city, when they are taxed everywhere else?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. If that is true, it is not fair.

Mr. SIMS. That is the fact.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman states that his friend who came here from Massachusetts a year ago brought with him a great deal of capital and is willing to bear his share of taxation.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Exactly.

Mr. LANDIS. Is it not true that if he brought all he possessed with him he will not contribute in the way of taxes in Washington more than one-half of what he contributed in Boston?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I do not understand that is so. I understand under the present levy of taxes the tax here in Washington is exactly the same, or nearly exactly the same, as the tax throughout Massachusetts, and some higher than in the city of Boston.

Mr. LANDIS. I desire to ask this question. Now, I intend to vote for this bill, but I do not take any stock in the claim continually made that the citizens of Washington are unduly taxed.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I made no such claim.

Mr. LANDIS. The other day two gentlemen were talking, one from Indiana and one from Washington. The Indiana man lived in a house the value of which was $6,000. The Washington man lived in a house that he had recently bought and paid $14,000 for. The Indiana man's taxes were $150 a year. The Washington man's taxes were less than $75 a year. Now, that shows relatively the taxes that are paid by a man who lives in a little town in Indiana as compared with the taxes of a man who lives in Washington.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. That is not the fault, Mr. Chairman, of the people of Washington. They do not tax themselves. We tax them. If our method is wrong, let us change it.

Mr. LANDIS. I know; but it shows that there is no excuse for this continual howl that we hear that the taxation in Washington is unfair and is out of proportion to the taxation of other people in the country.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that I never heard the claim made by any citizen of Washington that the taxation here was unfair. On the other hand, from what I have seen of the citizens of Washington, they have expressed themselves as perfectly willing to bear their fair proportion of the taxes. The only thing that they have advocated is that the method of taxation should be, as far as practicable, uniform.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman complains that Americans go abroad to spend their money. I think his complaint is good.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I did not say that I had complained of it. I stated it was a fact. I did say that I thought it would be of more advantage to this country if they expended their money at home rather than abroad.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me suggest to the gentleman a remedy that is within the gentleman's power, as he is a member of the committee. Let him place the names of these people who go abroad and spend their money on the duplicate lists for the payment of taxes on personal property and he will remedy that defect immeasurably.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. That brings up again the proposition that these people are not fairly taxed. Whose fault is it? It is not the fault of the people of Washington, because you do not allow them to tax themselves. If it is anybody's fault, it is the fault of Congress. If our system of taxation is not a uniform system, let us make it so. If the taxation to-day imposed on the people of Washington is not sufficiently high, let us reform it; but do not undertake to force upon the people of Washington a project which says to them: "Your taxes this year will be 1½ per cent, and next year we are going to set on foot some new improvements in Washington, and your taxes will be 5 per cent, because you must pay it out of the levy, and we will put it into the levy." I ask you if the people are not right when they say that if you put upon them these large burdens you shall allow them to be extended over a term of years?

I heard some one say that they saw no reason why you should burden posterity; that they ought to take care of their own debts as they go along. I would like to have this gentleman point to a single progressive municipality in the United States that has ever yet undertaken a great improvement that they did not issue bonds to pay for it and provide a sinking fund and extend it over a term of years?

Massachusetts has loaned its credit and money to municipalities in the metropolitan districts of Boston, in order to assist them in making permanent improvements. Those of you who have visited the State of Massachusetts and gone over our metropolitan district, covering a large area about Boston, upon territory of which are over a million people, may have noticed our magnificent park system.

How did we develop that? We have taken the land along our rivers and reclaimed it. We have taken the rivers and streams and preserved them, making them for all time great waterways within that State. How did we do it? Why, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in her wisdom, loaned to these municipalities some $14,000,000, which to-day they owe the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. That is the way to make permanent improvements. You do not make permanent improvements by placing on the people a burden that will drive them outside of the State.

I can not imagine a more foolish or more unwise policy than the policy which says to the people of Washington, and says to the American people, that whenever the Congress of the United States wants to carry out a great improvement in the city of Washington it will make the people of the District of Columbia pay in a single year one-half of that expense, even though that one-half of the expense be ten or fifteen million dollars. There is not a municipality in this country that undertakes any policy of that kind. The true policy is to start your improvements and carry the expense of those improvements in such a manner that it will not be a burden upon the people for any single year.

Now, what is this proposition? It provides that whenever the Congress of the United States feels that the amount of taxation which it is imposing upon citizens of this District is larger than ought to go into the tax levy it may advance some portion of that money in order that the burden upon the citizens here be not too heavy. Is that wise? Will anyone say that this policy differs from the policy of any municipality in America? Every municipality other than Washington, when it undertakes any great improvement, issues its bonds, provides a sinking fund, and takes care of those bonds when they mature at the expiration of the specified period—twenty or twenty-five years.

If it be true that the ordinary tax levy is going to take care of all these large improvements, then there is no harm in passing this bill, because we may not, perhaps, advance a cent under it. On the other hand, if it be true that the ordinary tax levy will not take care of the improvements, then there is every reason why we should pass the bill.

I have a feeling, Mr. Chairman, that some gentlemen on this floor misapprehend the situation. We come here from all parts of the country, and many of us, perhaps, have taken part in municipal affairs in our home towns. We all get together here and undertake to run the great city of Washington exactly as we would run our home town. But, sir, I can not overlook the fact that there are in the city of Washington less than 300,000 people, one-third of whom belong to the colored class, and are unable to pay in the same ratio as others the burdens of taxation. I can not overlook the fact that thousands and tens of thousands of clerks residing in Washington do not pay a single cent of taxation—not even a poll tax. And when I take into consideration these facts, and also that the citizens of Washington turn over to the Treasury of the United States more than $5,000,000 in a single year, it seems to me that they are doing somewhere near their duty as citizens who have no political rights. For these reasons I trust that this bill will pass. [Applause].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LACEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7123. An act for the protection of the public forest reserves and national parks of the United States;

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. QUARLES, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following bills and resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 11127. An act for the relief of the Propeller Tow Boat Company, of Savannah;
H. R. 13358. An act granting a pension to Ellzabeth A. Wilder;
H. R. 14388. An act granting an increase of pension to Graham McClosson;

Senate concurrent resolution 63.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, and John Hanson, presented by the State of Maryland, 16,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 10,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maryland.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable copper-process plates to be bound with these memorials.

ADVANCES FROM THE TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will now ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. McCLEARY. Will the gentleman yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Chairman, before this debate closes I should like to state briefly what the real question is; for there have been many questions discussed here that have nothing to do with the case.

The question before us, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: Shall we, in the closing hours of the Fifty-seventh Congress, only a few weeks remaining, undertake to determine the policy for the Congresses that are to come; or shall we leave each of those Congresses to determine its own method of solving its own problems?

Mr. Chairman, opposition to the pending proposition does not raise the question whether there shall be made the needed improvements in Washington or not. This Congress has done its duty, or will soon have accomplished its duty, in this connection.

The next Congress will determine what it deems wise in the matter of improvements.

Opposition to this bill does not raise the general question whether advances should be made from the public Treasury, if such advances should be needed; in other words, we who oppose this measure do not oppose advances as they may be required. Opposition to this bill does not imply any variableness in the rates of taxation, as feared by my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS].

Now, let us look at the propositions under consideration. The bill as reported called for advances amounting to $10,000,000, to be paid in twenty years. This morning the chairman of the committee proposes that instead of advancing $10,000,000, we shall advance only $6,000,000, to be repaid in 12 annual payments of $500,000 each. We think that when this gentleman takes another step onward he will reach the right position. He has gone from $10,000,000 of authorization to $6,000,000. Now, we say, let the authorization be reduced to naught. In other words, let us defeat this bill and leave to succeeding Congresses the solution of their own problems.

This bill, as I have just said, calls for an advance of $6,000,000, or the authorization of an advance. How do we know that that is the right amount? Our friends themselves have varied in their judgment within twenty-four hours. How do we know that this is the right amount? It may be too much, or it may be too little. They propose that when the advance is made it shall bear interest at 2 per cent. How do we know that that is the right rate to be paid?

It happens that to-day the current rate which the United States Government pays on its most recent obligations is 2 per cent. But before the period of time for which this proposed loan is to run shall have expired circumstances may have changed, so that the Government of the United States may have to pay 3 or 4 per cent for the money that it requires; or, on the other hand, it may be able to obtain money at the rate of 1½ per cent or 1 per cent. This bill provides for annual payments of $500,000 annually. How do we know that the District always pays that sum? And how do we know that it will not frequently be able to pay more?

In other words, the elements of the problem are too uncertain.

If this bill should be defeated, as in my judgment it ought to be, we shall simply be in this situation: That when the next Congress convenes and takes up the problem of the expenses of the District of Columbia, it will be in a position to say what those expenditures shall be; and if in its judgment more money is required than is provided by taxation, it can, in its own way, provide for that excess by an advance from the Treasury.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, none of the things that our friends fear will follow if this bill should fail. We simply leave to succeeding Congresses the problems which they will have to face.

We can not bind them if we would. Here in the hearings before the committee last year the President of the Board of Commissioners reminded us that over and over and over again Congresses have failed to do what preceding Congresses have set for them to do. It will be just the same in this case. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely nothing to be gained by the passage of this bill except in a measure to tie or attempt to tie the hands of those who will succeed us.

My judgment is that we should vote this bill down and leave to the succeeding Congresses the solution of their problems in their own way.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this attempt to charge upon the public Treasury the burdens of the District of Columbia, whether occasioned by a false policy, mismanagement, or extravagance, is not unique or unusual, we are told. Instances can be found where the Treasury has been burdened in a positive and comparative form, but when you want to see this principle invoked in a superlative degree, you can come to the District and not be disappointed.

It is sometimes said that the District suffers by not having a Delegate in Congress. If a Delegate were here who would fly in the face of the influences that claim unjustly to represent it, and represent the real property owners and resident taxpayers, it would be an improvement, for such one would bend his energies to direct the District policy in the channel of "pay as you go," and would give his attention less to appropriations and more to raising revenues.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman from Indiana states that he feels Washington should pay as it goes. Is that the way Fort Wayne, the beautiful city in which the gentleman lives, secured that splendid new court-house?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that if Washington had a Delegate on the floor of this House he could spend his energies not in the line of securing loans which the District could never repay, but in securing more revenues. And now I ask the gentleman if he approves the system of the District of Columbia, which permits gentlemen from his district and from mine and from others to come to Washington with their hundreds of thousands of dollars and, relieved from taxation here and from taxation at home, pay no tribute of taxes.

Mr. LANDIS. I do not. Neither do I have any sympathy whatever with that line of argument which the gentleman seems inclined to follow, that whatever improvements are made by the city of Washington should be paid for as we go along.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, I do not think that could be done.

Mr. LANDIS. There is not a city in Indiana nor Ohio nor in any other State of this Union which has made any progress that has followed that policy.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, I do not think that could be done.

The real taxpayers of the District have cause to complain, and many do complain, but they are not represented either here or in the business bodies and organizations that assume to represent them. The body of citizenship has no credentials in these guardian organizations.

On the other hand, promoters and real-estate boomers who want to profit on a sale, the laying out of an addition, the opening of a street, or establishment of a site, such are charter members.

Our friends are omnipresent with this scheme for the beautifying of the city and that for an additional appropriation, and all done in the name of the people of the District. I read an account the other day that the Capitol building is here and the White House a mile and a half away because a dispute between conflicting property interests resulted in a compromise that left them thus widely apart. This influence, that has always sought to impress itself on Congress, has a hoary origin and has progressed till to-day no scheme of appropriation, however wild, is left without promoters and defenders.

These early real-estate promoters and their descendants, basking in the sunshine of the Treasury, and taking refuge in its shadow for so long, never feel quite at home out of its presence, and while the taxpayers lament and continue to pay the bills (if they can not borrow from the United States), their pretended agents and wellwishers continue to try to load them down.

The people have the right to petition Congress and the District Commissioners, and ought to do it, to the end that more attention be paid to raising revenue and less to appropriations. Those people who would make a paradise of Washington should pay their share to do it. They invite the people of the world and of the whole United States to come here, and they do so, and these sojourners accept the hospitalities, so far as they are able to purchase them, and Washington thrives, and must thrive, as the evidence of all back in the country will be who come and are able to get away.

But Washington's future is linked with the proposition of promoters.

What is the proposition? Originally to borrow $10,000,000; now by amendment $6,000,000. Under the rule slightly modified each of our Territories and their cities could likewise borrow from the United States Treasury. All could use it.

Where is the merit of the proposition?

John Randolph once rose to his full height in the Senate and said: "I have found the philosopher's stone that turns everything it touches into gold." Said he, "Pay your debts as you go."

I commend the words of this sage to those who stand for this measure.

The District for years did not have and did not ask to have—aye, stubbornly resisted till a year ago—a fair tax on personal property. By this she invited citizens from my district and others, to get the profit, to come to Washington, and, permitted as they were, they loaned hundreds of thousands in our country and were freed from tax tribute there and here.

Let us view this matter in another phase. When one seeks to borrow we should know the ability and disposition to pay. I have looked in vain in this report for the total valuation of personal and real estate in the District. It is silent. It likewise is silent on the proportion the assessed value bears to the real value and also on the tax rate per hundred on valuation.

I understand there is a two-thirds valuation and a rate of $1.50 per hundred, but the report does not disclose this useful information. In the absence of this in the report let us resort to the rule of experience as the test of ability and willingness to pay. In 1878 the District had an indebtedness of $22,000,000, in round numbers. In twenty-five years she has reduced it $9,000,000, leaving yet due $13,000,000.

If it took twenty-five years to pay $9,000,000, it will take thirty-three years to pay $13,000,000; add to this the additional seventeen years to pay this contemplated loan of $6,000,000, and it makes fifty years in all, two generations that posterity is mortgaged, when it is not necessary for the usual necessary and legitimate expenditures in the District, and this in a municipality rather inclined to run in debt than to pay. More appropriations and more debt seems to be the war cry.

The gentleman from Wisconsin is the archangel of this misguided policy of heaping a mountain of debt on the people of the District. Then, in the dual capacity of guardian of the District and watchdog of the whole people's Treasury, he would make one hand wash the other and would loan the money of his whole constituency to his select friends of the District of Columbia. Can any business man stand on this proposition with the facts as presented here? Can any conservative legislator favor it? Can any economist see merit in it? I submit it to the candid judgment of the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will proceed to read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until and including June 30, 1923, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, from time to time, on requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be required to meet the obligations of the District of Columbia on account of its share of the extraordinary expenses for municipal improvements authorized, or to be hereafter authorized, by Congress: Provided, That the total advances hereafter made under this act, taken in connection with those heretofore made under the acts of February 11, 1901, and July 1, 1902, shall not exceed the sum of $10,000,000, which said total sum so advanced shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States within twenty years from July 1, 1903, out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, at the rate of $500,000 per annum of the principal, together with interest upon the deferred payments at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer now the amendment that is in the hands of the Clerk as a substitute for the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the second section of the bill has not been read.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would say, simply to save time, that that is merely the repealing clause and it is a duplicate of the other. I will suggest to the gentleman that I will offer it as an amendment to the first section that has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, from time to time, to the District of Columbia, in the manner now prescribed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be required to meet the obligations of the District of Columbia on account of its share of the extraordinary expenses for municipal improvements heretofore specifically authorized or to be hereafter specifically authorized by Congress (and as appropriations therefor shall have been or may hereafter be made by Congress): Provided, That the total advances hereafter made under this act, taken in connection with those heretofore made under the acts of February 11, 1901, and July 1, 1902, shall not exceed the sum of $6,000,000, which said total sum so advanced shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States from and after July 1, 1903, out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, at the rate of $500,000 per annum of the principal, together with interest upon the deferred payments at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

"SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I will state that this substitute for the bill has been prepared and offered to make the provisions as clear as possible as to what the bill does. It does not appropriate a dollar, it does not authorize the expenditure of a dollar, but provides that if Congress appropriates this money, then and in that case, where it appropriates more than the District revenues, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to advance such sum over and above the amount raised by the District, and provides that the sum shall be repaid at the rate of $500,000 per year, with interest at 2 per cent.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman right there permit a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have in my hand here the District appropriation bill reported by the Senate, which, if enacted into law, will carry an appropriation of $9,396,000. I want to ask the gentleman if there is a single item that the District of Columbia needs or has asked for that the Senate has not put on this bill? Can the gentleman think of a single item necessary to the improvement of the District of Columbia that the Senate has not included in this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, that does not mean that that will be enacted into law. I have known a good many amendments to be made at the other end of the Capitol that did not finally become law. I want to say to the gentleman that the Senate committee have not only added about $1,700,000 to the bill, when this committee estimated that there should be added $1,741,000, but they have authorized contracts for more than $1,000,000 besides.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But if the gentleman will permit, conceding that the bill as it passed the Senate passes the House, carrying $9,396,000, the gentleman having conceded that the Senate has put into this bill every item that the District has asked for, then I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the District of Columbia still has a surplus of revenue. The estimated revenues for the current year in the District of Columbia is over $5,200,000.

Mr. BABCOCK. Last year they were $3,619,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. For the current year the revenues will be $5,200,000.

Mr. CANNON. And for the coming year $5,400,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And for the coming year $5,400,000, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] states. Now, you take the receipts for the current year, $5,200,000, and let the Government add that much, and what have you got—$10,400,000, when the Senate only proposes $9,386,000. I want to say that in this bill the Senate proposes a larger appropriation for the District of Columbia than has ever been made in the history of the Government.

If the gentleman will permit, I want to make this statement in this connection. If the gentleman will take the appropriations heretofore made for the District of Columbia, what have we? In 1892, $5,500,000; they had required less than $3,000,000. Take the next year, 1894, $5,500,000; in 1895, $5,500,000; and so on down to 1898, when it was $6,000,000; in 1899, $6,500,000; in 1900, $6,000,000 and a little over, and in 1901, $7,500,000; in 1902, $8,500,000, and this year should the bill be increased to $9,300,000, as proposed by the Senate, yet the revenue for the current year in the District of Columbia will result in a surplus. So I ask the gentleman, in view of these facts, should we go and borrow money or authorize the District of Columbia to borrow money when they are already raising more money than necessary?

Mr. BABCOCK. Is the gentleman ready for an answer?

Mr. HEMENWAY. What is the answer?

Mr. BABCOCK. There are two items not in there, one of about $700,000 due on the advances from the Treasury.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Which are drawing 2 per cent interest. That item is in here and a provision to repay the money to the District is in here.

Mr. BABCOCK. Not under the same title at all.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the committee, informs me it is in here.

Mr. McCLEARY. It is in the House bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Over $400,000 will also be required to open streets in the coming year. That is not in this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Whatever has not been provided for can be cared for by Congress next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I was going to ask that myself.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In that connection, if it will not interfere with the gentleman's argument, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not got the floor.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is shown here, in opposition to these advances of money, that the Senate has put a large addition on the appropriation bill, and that is used as an argument against the advances being made.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I did not catch the gentleman's statement on account of the noise here.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Indiana has reported that the Senate has put on to its bill a large addition; whether it is so I do not know.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has done so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. A large increase has been made on the appropriation of the House bill, and that is used as an argument against the passage of this bill to make the advances?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Not at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what I want to ask.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will allow me to answer.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will if the gentleman will allow this question at the same time. Is the Committee on Appropriations willing to recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Evidently not; but say that the bill was passed. This is the argument I am making, and I want the gentleman to understand it. Say that the House itself agreed to and passed the bill, giving every cent the Senate has put in, it would be $9,300,000, the largest bill ever passed for the District of Columbia, and still the revenues estimated for the current year for the District of Columbia is $5,215,000.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I notice that.

Mr. HEMENWAY (continuing). Or nearly a million dollars more than is necessary, the District paying half.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then the fact that the Senate has put on this additional appropriation is not an argument against the passage of this bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Ohio seems to be unable to gather just what I have said, and I will try to put it to him in a simpler form. The District of Columbia will receive for the current year $5,215,000. The Government pays one-half of the expenses, which will be $5,215,000 more, which will make a total of $10,430,000. We make the appropriations and then the District of Columbia would have enough money to meet every dollar of the other expenses without borrowing a cent. For that reason, I say, we are opposed to borrowing money.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was ready to permit me to answer the question he asked some time since?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman from Wisconsin himself yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman from Ohio asked the gentleman from Indiana a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has been asked and answered.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to know if I may be permitted to answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am ready.

Mr. BABCOCK. I am ready to answer it, and satisfactorily to the gentleman himself, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this is what I call juggling with figures. The proposition is plain and it is clear.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I read the figures from the gentleman's own report, and if there is any juggling with them he juggled them. [Laughter.]

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will permit me to answer the question. The proposition, as the gentleman states, is that the amount of revenue collected is $5,200,000. That is correct. But, Mr. Chairman, what the District pays to the Government is $671,000, which comes out of the District revenues, and what it pays for street openings, which will not be less than four or five hundred thousand dollars, comes out of the District revenues.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Right there, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. I decline to be interrupted until I finish my answer. Now, Mr. Chairman, the House will see at once that practically $700,000 to be paid to the Government and $400,000 for street opening will have to come out of that, and deducting it from $5,200,000 leaves a revenue of $4,100,000, which doubled amounts to $8,200,000, and the Senate bill which the gentleman talks about appropriates $9,396,000, leaving a deficit of $1,300,000. Those are the figures, and they are correct.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; but the gentleman is not correct. The $600,000 which the gentleman mentioned does not come out of that revenue. The District of Columbia does not have to pay it——

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, I admit they will not be in default if they do not pay it for the present year. But the intention was that it was to be divided into three payments, and one made each year for the whole sum of the $1,900,000 and not paid all at one time. Now, the gentleman, by a stretch of the imagination, says that the District will not have to pay it until the three years have expired. Of course they would not if they waited until the three years had expired.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman permit me right there? Does the gentleman mean to say to the House that the money is due at this time?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; it is not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then why does the gentleman say it must be taken out?

Mr. BABCOCK. Because under the advance of $1,900,000 it was the intention to pay it in three equal amounts, commencing on the first year after July, 1903, so that it should run three years, and not pay it all at one time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it proposed to be paid at all?

Mr. BABCOCK. It is proposed to be paid; it is the intention of the committee that it should be paid, and I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will say that that was the intention of the legislation—that it was to be divided into three items.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want an answer at this point? The act passed on February 11, 1901, so provided; but the act approved July 1, 1902, will be satisfied and complied with if no dollar of this advance is repaid until three years from the 1st day of next July.

Mr. BABCOCK. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that the District will not be in default if it is not paid until three years from next July. I admit that this can be done, but it is not the intention. You put a burden of over $2,000,000 in one year upon the District and they can not stand it. That is only another method of juggling with the figures. Now, I want to ask some questions, and I want the attention of the House to certain things. These gentlemen have attempted to show that the revenues were swelling and growing so that the treasury of the District was fairly bursting. They talked about twenty-five millions and thirty millions and twelve millions surplus until I did not know whether they were talking about the District treasury or the pension appropriation bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. BABCOCK. I only want time to complete one or two observations.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended until he concludes his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BABCOCK. The statement has been made by members of the committee on the floor of this House that the appropriation should be held within the revenues of the District, and that in order to provide for the extraordinary appropriations it was necessary to economize in certain other lines.

Mr. McCLEARY. Will the gentleman pardon me for an interruption?

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman will permit, I want to finish this remark.

Mr. McCLEARY. I want to ask the gentleman if he really meant to say that any member on this floor ever declared that all the expenses should be met out of the current revenues, and that there should be no such thing as an advance, under any circumstances?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to one item that will show how far this thing reaches and what the influence is. A few years since the Committee on the District of Columbia reported a bill to this House for opening all blind alleys and streets.

Twice the President of the United States, in messages to Congress, has called attention to the deplorable conditions that exist in the very heart of our city in what are known as "blind alleys." In one alley here there are 300 people living; and that blind alley is without drainage or sewerage. Such places are simply fester spots, so much so that, as I say, the President of the United States, in messages to Congress, has twice called attention to them. A year ago the Commissioners of the District of Columbia asked for an appropriation of $100,000 to deal with this evil. There was no money appropriated. This year they asked for $25,000, and the Committee of the House gave them $10,000, which the Senate Committee has since increased to $25,000.

Now, what is the result? Under the present law these alleys can be opened without a dollar of expense to the District or to the Government—opened, paved, cleaned, and made decent and healthful. But, Mr. Chairman, not one single alley can be opened for less than $25,000. The money must be advanced to pay for the improvement, which becomes a charge upon the property by reason of benefits derived from the improvement, so that it all comes back ultimately. An appropriation of 10 cents might just as well be made as an appropriation of $10,000; and the Senate, having taken that view of the case, has increased the appropriation to $25,000.

Now, sir, another item. Recently the District of Columbia has bought a "poor farm"—260 acres, down the river—for the care of the District poor. In our part of the country every county has a "poor farm" which is self-supporting. But in the case of this "poor farm" for the District not a dollar of appropriation has been made for buildings, because the revenues would not permit such an expenditure.

Another matter to which I wish to call attention is the workhouse, for which an appropriation of $100,000 has been asked. It is desirable that a new wing should be constructed for this building, and the Senate has put in the bill a provision for that purpose.

Now, what does the Board of Charities report? They report a most deplorable condition in that workhouse. They say that eight or nine people are huddled together in a single room, two in a bunk, and under such circumstances crimes are committed there day after day that I can not mention on this floor. Why, sir, for lack of additional facilities the condition of affairs there to-day is, I might say, worse than was the condition of the reconcentrado camps in Cuba. Yet the Congress is standing here to-day with their hands on the throttle valve and saying, "You shall not have the money to take proper care of the persons that you send to the workhouse." Sir, I could go on almost indefinitely with items of this kind. In order to take care of these extraordinary appropriations these things must be left unprovided for. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Committee on Appropriations has tried to evade its duty. Some members may not see things as others see them. The matters I have referred to I have investigated—I have looked into them—and I know whereof I speak.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Wisconsin does not apply to this bill, and I will tell you why. This bill appropriates for expenses of 1903. The estimate is for taxes for that year. Now, I read from the report of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and from the report of Mr. Macfarland, president of the Board of District Commissioners. What do we find disclosed? That according to the expectation of the Commissioners the revenues of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1903 will exceed the following estimate:

Tax on real property	$3,225,000
Tax on personal property	500,000
Licenses	640,000
Arrears of taxes	150,000
Miscellaneous	700,000
Total	5,215,000

Now, the Senate committee, in reporting the bill to the Senate, provides for an expenditure of only $9,396,000. If that it is not enough, it is the duty of the gentleman from Wisconsin to go to the Senate committee and get them to raise the amount, because they can appropriate $10,430,000. We can pass in this Congress an appropriation bill carrying that amount, and the District of Columbia can meet its one-half of that expense and never borrow a single dollar. Now, whoever heard of such a proposition as this? They come in here and ask Congress to authorize the District of Columbia to borrow money to meet expenses for 1903 when they will absolutely have money in the Treasury that they will have no use for, unless they pay back to the Government a debt not due. Why, sir, if we have $10,000,000 in the Treasury and we appropriate only $9,336,000, that is all they can expend. I say the bill, as reported to the Senate, can have $1,000,000 added to it and yet the District have for the year 1903, without borrowing one cent, every dollar to take care of its one-half of the expenditures.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Very well.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. If it be true that the revenues are sufficient, then there will be no money loaned under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. There will be no necessity for it so far as the expenditures of 1903 are concerned.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. And therefore no money will be loaned?

Mr. HEMENWAY. There will be no necessity for borrowing money, for the District can not expend more money than is appropriated; and if the bill now in the Senate were taken as reported, and the House agreed to every item, there would be an appropriation of only $9,396,000, while the revenues of the District in 1903 could stand a bill of $10,430,000, and then have money to pay every cent of its one-half of the expenditures.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. The question I desire the gentleman to answer is this: If his contention is correct, then no loan will be made; the Government will not be called upon to make any advance under the provisions of this bill——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Not one cent. And therefore why pass this bill, when the figures—and there can be no doubt about them, because I take them from the report of the District Committee—show an ample amount of revenue to be received by the District in 1903, taking the expenditures at the amount fixed in the bill reported to the Senate, and everyone can see that we shall not pass a bill carrying any more than that amount. Yet the District of Columbia will have money to meet every dollar of it, and if you put a million dollars more on top of this appropriation, then the District of Columbia could pay every cent of its one-half without borrowing one cent from the Government.

Under the circumstances why pass a bill authorizing the Government to advance to the District money, when on the face of the figures we have here, prepared by the District Committee, and everybody concedes them to be correct, if anything too low, the District will have every dollar of money necessary to meet the expenses proposed by the appropriation bill? I can not see any sense in authorizing the District to borrow money from the Government when the figures on their face show that there is absolutely no necessity for borrowing any money.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment. I think I have sufficiently answered the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, what are we voting on?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin to the first section of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise for a parliamentary inquiry. If the substitute should be adopted, then the vote would be upon the bill as amended, so that those of us who desire to vote against the bill can vote for the substitute or vote it down, and in either event we will then have a chance to vote against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly. The question now is on the adoption of the substitute amendment as offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COWHERD) there were—ayes 68, noes 95.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen gentlemen standing, not a sufficient number; tellers are denied.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise with the fragments of the bill [laughter] and report the same to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16761) providing for advances from the Treasury of the United States for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the report agreed to.

On motion of Mr. COWHERD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report, together with the statement of the conferees, on the bill (S. 569) to establish a department of commerce and labor, and ask that the same be printed in the RECORD, in accordance with the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa submits the conference report, together with a statement of the conferees, which will be printed in the RECORD, in accordance with the rules.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 569) "to establish the department of commerce and labor," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Page 2, line 8 of the amendment, strike out all after the word "Congress" to the end of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Auditor for the State and other Departments shall receive and examine all accounts of salaries and incidental expenses of the office of the secretary of commerce and labor, and of all bureaus and offices under his direction, all accounts relating to the Light-House Board, Steamboat-Inspection Service, Immigration, Navigation, Alaskan fur-seal fisheries, the National Bureau of Standards, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Census, Department of Labor, Fish Commission, and to all other business within the jurisdiction of the department of commerce and labor, and certify the balances arising thereon to the division of bookkeeping and warrants and send forthwith a copy of each certificate to the secretary of commerce and labor."

Page 4, line 3 of the amendment, strike out the word "Commissioner" and insert in lieu the word "Commission."

Strike out all of section 6 and insert in lieu the following:

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and a commissioner of corporations who shall be the head of said bureau, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner, who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum and who shall in the absence of the commissioner act as and perform the duties of the commissioner of corporations, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the secretary of commerce and labor or by the said commissioner. There shall also be in the said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law.

"The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the secretary of commerce and labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint-stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, excepting common carriers subject to 'an act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require; and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct shall be made public.

"In order to accomplish the purposes declared in the foregoing part of this section, the said commissioner shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations, joint-stock companies, and combinations subject to the provisions hereof as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said 'act to regulate commerce' and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths. All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said 'act to regulate commerce' and by 'an act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission,' etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplemental to said 'act to regulate commerce,' shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

"It shall also be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, including corporations engaged in insurance, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law."

Page 6, line 8, of the amendment, after the word "required," insert the words "by the secretary of commerce and labor."

Page 7, line 7, of the amendment, after the word "labor," insert the following: "Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the method of collecting and accounting for the head tax prescribed by section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate immigration,' approved August 3, 1882."

Page 8, line 25, of the amendment, after the word "in," insert the words "or by."

In lieu of section 10 of the amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. That all duties performed and all power and authority now possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department in and over any bureau, office, officer, board, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, or in relation to the duties performed by and authority conferred by law upon such bureau, officer, office, board, branch, or division of the public service, whether of an appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor.

"All duties, power, authority, and jurisdiction, whether supervisory, appellate, or otherwise, now imposed or conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by acts of Congress relating to merchant vessels or yachts, their measurement, numbers, names, registers, enrollments, licenses, commissions, records, mortgages, bills of sale, transfers, entry, clearance, movements, and transportation of their cargoes and passengers, owners, officers, seamen, passengers, fees, inspection, equipment for the better security of life, and by acts of Congress relating to tonnage tax, boilers on steam vessels, the carrying of inflammable, explosive, or dangerous cargo on vessels, the use of petroleum or other similar substances to produce motive power, and relating to the remission or refund of fines, penalties, forfeitures, exactions, or charges incurred for violating any provision of law relating to vessels or seamen or to informer's shares of such fines, and by acts of Congress relating to the Commissioner and Bureau of Navigation, shipping commissioners, their officers and employees, Steamboat-Inspection Service and any of the officials thereof, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to and imposed and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor from and after the time of the transfer of the Bureau of Navigation, the shipping commissioners, and the Steamboat-Inspection Service to the department of commerce and labor, and shall not thereafter be imposed upon or exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as inconsistent, hereby repealed."

Page 10, line 12 of the amendment, strike out the words "or the Interstate Commerce Commission," and insert the following: "from the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post-Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior."

Page 11, line 6 of the amendment, after the word "act," insert the words "other than those of section 12."

And the House agree to the same.

W. P. HEPBURN,
JAMES R. MANN,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

M. A. HANNA,
KNUTE NELSON,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report.

The substitute amendment of the House is agreed to with various amendments.

The first of these amendments is to strike out the provision in the House substitute in reference to the auditing of accounts and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Auditor for the State and other departments shall receive and examine all accounts of salaries and incidental expenses of the office of the secretary of commerce and labor, and of all bureaus and offices under his direction, all accounts relating to the Light-House Board, Steamboat-Inspection Service, immigration, navigation, Alaskan fur-seal fisheries, the National Bureau of Standards, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Census, Department of Labor, Fish Commission, and to all other business within the jurisdiction of the department of commerce and labor, and certify the balances arising thereon to the division of bookkeeping and warrants, and send forthwith a copy of each certificate to the secretary of commerce and labor."

This language more nearly conforms with the present law upon the subject of auditing accounts.

The second amendment to the House substitute provides for the transfer from the Treasury Department to the department of commerce and labor of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, the Bureau of Navigation, and the United States shipping commissioners.

The third amendment agreed to is to insert the word "commission," instead of the word "commissioner," in the description "Fish Commission," the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries being already included.

The fourth amendment agreed to inserts, after the word "required," in section 5, the words "by the secretary of commerce and labor," so as to provide that consular officers shall send reports, under the direction of the Secretary of State, as often as required by the secretary of commerce and labor.

The fifth amendment agreed to is to strike out all of section 6 of the House substitute and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and a commissioner of corporations who shall be the head of said bureau, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner, who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, and who shall, in the absence of the commissioner, act as, and perform the duties of, the commissioner of corporations, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the secretary of commerce and labor or by the said commissioner. There shall also be in the said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law.

"The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the secretary of commerce and labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations excepting common carriers subject to 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require; and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct, shall be made public.

"In order to accomplish the purposes declared in the foregoing part of this section, the said commissioner shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations, joint stock companies, and combinations subject to the provisions hereof as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said 'act to regulate commerce' and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers, so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths. All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said 'act to regulate commerce' and by 'An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission,' etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplemental to said 'act to regulate commerce,' shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

"It shall also be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, including corporations engaged in insurance, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law."

The sixth amendment agreed to is to insert at the end of the first sentence in section 7 (which provides for the transfer of the Bureau of Immigration to the new department) the following: "Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the method of collecting and accounting for the head tax prescribed by section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate immigration,' approved August 3, 1882."

The seventh amendment agreed to is to insert the words "or by" in section 9, so as to include in the transfer "all officers, clerks, and employees now employed in or by any of the bureaus," etc., transferred to the new department.

The eighth amendment agreed to is to strike out all of section 10 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That all duties performed and all power and authority now possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department in and over any bureau, office, officer, board, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, or in relation to the duties performed by and authority conferred by law upon such bureau, officer, office, board, branch, or division of the public service, whether of an appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor.

"All duties, power, authority, and jurisdiction, whether supervisory, appellate, or otherwise, now imposed or conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by acts of Congress relating to merchant vessels or yachts, their measurement, numbers, names, registers, enrollments, licenses, commissions, records, mortgages, bills of sale, transfers, entry, clearance, movements, and transportation of their cargoes and passengers, owners, officers, seamen, passengers, fees, inspection, equipment for the better security of life, and by acts of Congress relating to tonnage tax, boilers on steam vessels, the carrying of inflammable, explosive, or dangerous cargo on vessels, the use of petroleum or other similar substances to produce motive power, and relating to the remission or refund of fines, penalties, forfeitures, exactions, or charges incurred for violating any provision of law relating to vessels or seamen or to informer's share of such fines, and by acts of Congress relating to the Commissioner and Bureau of Navigation, shipping commissioners, their officers and employees, Steamboat-Inspection Service and any of the officials thereof, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to and imposed and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor from and after the time of the transfer of the Bureau of Navigation, the shipping commissioners, and the Steamboat-Inspection Service to the department of commerce and labor, and shall not thereafter be imposed upon or exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as inconsistent, hereby repealed."

The principal new matter inserted in section 10 as agreed to is for the purpose of transferring the present authority vested in the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to navigation and steamboat inspection service to the secretary of commerce and labor. The amendment enumerates various acts of Congress in which the Secretary of the Treasury is now named by that title, in order to more specifically transfer his present power to the secretary of commerce and labor.

The ninth amendment agreed to is to strike out of section 12 the words "or the Interstate Commerce Commission" and insert in lieu thereof the following:" From the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post-Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior." The effect of this amendment is to permit the President to transfer statistical or scientific work to the department of commerce and labor from any of the Departments named, but it does not permit him to transfer the Interstate Commerce Commission or the statistical work of the Department of Agriculture or the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The tenth amendment is to insert after the word "act," in line 3 of section 13, the words, "other than those of section 12." The effect of this amendment is to make section 12 of the act take effect immediately upon its passage.

RECORD OF DEEDS, ETC., IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report, together with a statement of the conferees, on the bill (S. 5678) providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, and ask that the same be printed in the RECORD, in accordance with the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York submits a conference report, together with the statement of the conferees, which will be printed in the RECORD, in accordance with the rules.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5678) "providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. S. SHERMAN,
JOHN F. LACEY,
JOHN S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. M. STEWART,
O. H. PLATT,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees is as follows:

The effect of this agreement is to accept the bill in the form in which it passed the Senate, defining the recording districts and places of record in Indian Territory.

ELI HIBBARD.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs may have time within which to present their views on the bill (S. 5879) to remove the charge of desertion from the Army record of Eli Hibbard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs have leave to present a minority report on the bill (S. 5879) to remove the charge of desertion from the Army record of Eli Hibbard. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report, together with the statement of the conferees, on the bill (H. R. 14050) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, and ask that the same be submitted in accordance with the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This will be printed in the RECORD in pursuance of the rules.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14050) to amend an act to regulate the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In section 4, in line 4, after the words "in its front," add "but where the site of a proposed building confronts a public space or reservation formed at the intersection of two or more streets or avenues and the course of said streets or avenues is not interrupted by said public space or reservation, the allowable height of the building will be determined by the width of the widest street or avenue;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. BABCOCK,
SYDNEY E. MUDD,
ADOLPH MEYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees is as follows:

The amendments of the Senate were prepared by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia with a view to making clear the provisions of law in relation to the height of buildings, to afford reasonable protection to property on residence streets against unusually high buildings. The limit of height on the wide business avenues is unchanged. There is no opposition on the part of property owners to the proposed legislation.

UNION STATION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the union station bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up a conference report on the bill (S. 1425) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask that the statement be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement be read without the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[For the text of the conference report, see page 1374.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The House recedes from its amendments Nos. 4, 42, and 47.

Nos. 4, 19, and 42 were clerical errors made by changing the name of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad to the Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington where the road under its old name was referred to.

No. 47 was intended to clarify the language used in the bill in regard to the taking of property. The original expression is deemed best.

Amendment No. 1 corrects a clerical error by inserting a comma.

Amendment No. 7 changes the phraseology used in the bill from the "United States Reform School" to the proper term, "Reform School of the District of Columbia."

Amendment No. 14 corrects a clerical error by changing the word "company" to "companies."

Amendment No. 23 does not enlarge the scope of the bill in any particular, but merely corrects the phraseology so as to put beyond dispute the streets to be vacated, abandoned, and closed.

Amendment No. 27 is a correction of phraseology.

That a portion of amendment No. 57 which relates to the location of a station near the Long Bridge places it in the power of the Commissioners to locate such station at the point that shall be determined upon by them as the most convenient for the passenger travel which will use it.

The amendments on which the conference committee were unable to agree relate to that share of the cost of the elevation of grade crossings which is to be borne, respectively, by the railroads, and the Government, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the report submitted by your conferees is a complete agreement, with the exception of two amendments adopted by the House. The Senate agrees to all of the House amendments with the exception of two, and the two relate to the compensation to the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad companies. The forty or fifty amendments that have been disposed of were mostly formal, but at any rate the Senate agreed to all of them except these two. This report is an agreement, with the exception of these two items.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House agree to the report of the conferees.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its amendments and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House insist upon its disagreement and ask for a further conference.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House instruct the conferees on the part of the House that they recede and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion properly is to recede and concur.

Mr. MORRELL. That the House recede and concur.

Mr. BABCOCK. I think my motion covers the entire ground, and, according to the rulings of the Chair on previous occasions, that a negative vote will defeat it. In either case the motion is the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the motion to recede and concur has precedence.

Mr. BABCOCK. I understood that the motion of the gentleman was to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He has withdrawn that.

Mr. MORRELL. My motion is to recede and concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House recede from its amendment and concur.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I should like to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I do not understand that is the rule. As I understand it, the gentleman can not be taken off his feet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair corrects himself, and agrees with the statement of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would say in the first place that it is not practical to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, even if it should be the unanimous judgment of the House to do so, for the following reasons: When the bill was amended in the House and went to the Senate an error was made in numbering the amendments. Amendment numbered 57 should have been 57, 58, and 59, but in the hurry and rush they were not put in, and this bill must necessarily go back to conference, whatever may be the desire of the House, in order to correct these two sections. There are two sections numbered 13, one in the old bill and one in the new bill, entirely different matters. If we recede and concur in the Senate amendments we strike out of the bill a section 13, which provides for the joint use of the union station and leaves the original Senate bill. And so, while I have no objection and do not want to offer any impediment to the House getting to a vote to determine what it desires to do, it will have to be done by some other method.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is very easy to solve that problem. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] can ask a separate vote on his motion to concur in the particular amendment that he desires to concur in, and then the other question will be left for the House to decide.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for a moment, I will state the facts as they are. Originally when these two bills were passed, in 1901, one appropriated a million and a half dollars in money for the Baltimore and Ohio road and the other a like amount in real estate to the Pennsylvania railroad. Now, these amount in the aggregate to $3,000,000—$1,500,000 in amount of real estate to the Pennsylvania and $1,500,000 in cash to the Baltimore and Ohio road. This sum of $3,000,000 was contributed as one-half of the cost of the elevation of the tracks and abolishing grade crossings. Now, I want the House to bear this point in mind: That the District and General Government proposed to pay one-half of the cost of constructing the elevation, not the depot, not the freight yards, not the tunnels, but one-half of the cost of elevating the tracks above grade. That is the present law contained in the two bills passed in 1901.

Now, when the proposition came up, Mr. Speaker, for a union station, plans were submitted by the railroad companies locating the station at C street back here on Delaware avenue. Delaware avenue is the avenue on which the street cars leave the Capitol grounds, turning then on to C street. This is the location where the Senate stables are. These were the plans as filed originally by the railroad companies for the union station. The Senate in its wisdom passed a bill locating the depot two blocks further back on Massachusetts avenue. Tbe House committee objected to the Massachusetts avenue site, because it cost the District and the General Government $1,600,000 more than the C street site.

After much discussion and hearings on the bill in the House committee the proposition was made by certain members of the District Committee who were opposed to the whole idea, if this amount of $1,600,000 was divided (which is done) to go to Massachusetts avenue, $500,000 of it to each railroad, dividing it into three shares, the District taking the greater bulk or $600,000, that they would agree to the Massachusetts avenue site. The representatives of the railways, after they had first desired to locate at C street and filed plans accordingly, notified the committee that they would not build at C street unless obliged to do so by law.

The committee agreed to this proposition and brought it before the House, where the facts were stated as clearly as could be, and the House agreed with the committee and passed the bill. This took from the Baltimore and Ohio Railway $500,000 of the appropriation in the act of February 12, 1901, for it, and in this exchange of location we took back from the Pennsylvania Railroad real estate valued at $1,285,000. That is what they received in lieu of money in 1901. In the bill as passed by the House we took back the property and gave them a million dollars in lieu of it.

The House amendments cut down the amounts granted the roads to one million each, but the Senate insists upon the original provisions in the Senate bill, which is a million and a half dollars in cash to each road. Now, your House conferees felt bound by the action of their committee and of the House, and the further fact that in the new construction thus taken up by the different lines of road we found brought out this statement of facts. These are the figures presented by the railroads themselves and the statements made by the presidents of the roads. So if the figures are wrong, and I think in some cases they are pretty liberal, they are the official figures as agreed upon, giving all the different items not only by the Commissioners, but by the railroads.

We find further by locating at Massachusetts avenue the saving to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad by this change, and having joined the Pennsylvania Railroad in the construction, is $1,340,383. This is saved the Baltimore and Ohio in its construction, and the House reduced the amount granted by $500,000 in our bill. Notwithstanding that, there is a net gain of $840,383. On the other hand, the Pennsylvania Railroad abandons its construction at its present site at Sixth street back to Virginia avenue, a short distance, and all other construction provided in 1901 is left as it is without any change at all. A tunnel is built that runs under First street, between the Capitol and the Library, which expense is shared jointly. The Pennsylvania joins the Baltimore and Ohio road in constructing the terminals and station, the viaduct on Delaware avenue, and the elevation outside of the city.

Now, under this bill, as one of the reasons why I opposed the Massachusetts avenue site is this: The elevation under the present law is about 24 feet. It cleared all the streets with plenty of room. This elevation, by going to Massachusetts avenue, is reduced on an average of 13 feet, so that instead of the streets going under the elevation on grade they are depressed from 8 to 15 feet, and one-half of the height of the elevation is saved. In other words, instead of building an elevation of 24 or 25 feet, the average elevation is from 11 to 13 feet. Instead of being built by one road it is built by two.

Then we abandon from C street to Massachusetts avenue two blocks of construction of 1,100 feet, moving the depot about two blocks. The estimated cost of that is $220,000. That does not have to be done at all. Also in these two blocks the land—perhaps I am not so familiar with it as the board of trade—they claim that the value of real estate is $600,000 saved by this change, but the estimated value of real estate for the union depot at Massachusetts avenue is a little over a million dollars, as compared with the Baltimore and Ohio depot alone at $1,250,000. So there is a saving of several hundred thousand dollars there.

Taking the figures of construction as given by President Loree, it shows a saving in construction of thirteen hundred and thirty thousand dollars. Now, Mr. Loree, in his figures brings in the additional cost of the station and tunnel that your committee does not agree to. In other words, the District and the Government never proposed to build a union station, or to build the terminal, or to build the freight yard. The public was dealing with the elevation, and endeavoring to pay one-half of the cost of elevating the tracks. So, if you pursue that policy, the saving, as I have stated, is thirteen hundred and thirty thousand dollars. The Pennsylvania road is put to more expense for the reason that they not only construct their own elevation but they come and join the B. and O.——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for order. It is impossible to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to know who put this large plat or map in front of the Speaker's desk.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is the plan of the union station.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We must have quiet here, and it is impossible for the Chair to preserve order with this large map cutting off his view. Let it be taken away and brought in when necessary.

Mr. BABCOCK. This statement of the Pennsylvania road, now the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad, submitted by President Cassatt, is as follows:

The expense under the act of February 12, 1901, is $4,392,656. The cost under the pending bill is $7,966,926. Now, in the item of cost under the pending bill one-half of the cost of the tunnel is $824,000; the additional cost of the station building is $778,000. The line to Magruder, which is the new cut-off, is $1,292,450, and one-half of the cost of the coach yard is $419,000, making $3,314,625 which is no part of the plan of the elevation. Deducting that from the cost in the present bill, it leaves $4,652,301 to be compared with the cost of $4,392,656 in the act of February 12, 1901, showing that it costs the Pennsylvania road $259,645 more than it would under the present law, as against the Baltimore and Ohio $1,340,383 less than under the present law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understand from the gentleman's statement that this bill takes from the Pennsylvania road land to the value of $1,285,000, and also adds, according to the gentleman's figures, several hundred thousand dollars of expense; and for that amount of over a million and a half dollars the House bill allows them a million dollars. So the Pennsylvania road would be out of pocket, by the gentleman's own figures, a half a million dollars by the change.

Mr. BABCOCK. I have endeavored, Mr. Speaker, to make myself clear as to the difference in value of the real estate. It does not make any difference how they get at it, whether it was given to them fifty years ago or not; they took the real estate in lieu of a million and a half dollars in money under the last act, and if we take it back we must consider it on the same basis.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; but in addition to the real estate you say they took under the last act they got a gift of a highway bridge and several other reservations in Washington.

Mr. BABCOCK. The part we are taking back was the original location.

Mr. OLMSTED. But with that land which the bill takes away from them they acquired Garfield Park and the highway bridge which they retain. But this land of the value of nearly a million and a half of dollars the bill takes away from them.

Mr. COWHERD. One million two hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the action of the House on this conference report—whether we instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate bill or not—I think the bill should go back to conference, so that these particular sections may be perfected, for I can see great difficulty in perfecting them by any motion which may be made here to concur.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question, for I want to understand this matter, as we all do. I understand that under the act of 1901 the total cost of the improvements of these two railroad companies would amount to $9,992,000—I have added the two items together. Under the pending bill the amount of the improvements proposed and arranged for would be to the two companies $13,850,476, making nearly $4,000,000 more expense to the companies under this bill than under the provisions of the acts of 1901. Now, what I want to ask the gentleman is this: What do the railroad companies get in the way of effective and useful and profit-producing railroad property out of this expenditure of $13,850,000 which they would not have secured from the expenditure of $9,992,000?

Mr. BABCOCK. The Pennsylvania road gets a new line out of the city of Washington, which permits them to run into the depot directly, without going through a tunnel.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Exactly; it permits them to get into the union station. But under the previous arrangement they could have run into their own station on the Mall.

Mr. BABCOCK. On their own line.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Is there any additional usefulness in that to them?

Mr. BABCOCK. Does the gentleman mean in the station or in the new line?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The station and the line. What advantage will there be over what they have or what they would have without this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. This will enable them to shorten the time between Washington and New York about fifteen minutes—a very valuable consideration.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The advantage, then, is in the saving of fifteen minutes?

Mr. BABCOCK. The improvement is in getting a beautiful union station; also in the tunnel that connects the five Southern roads with the Baltimore and Ohio system.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. In what respect does the gentleman differentiate the tunnel and an elevated track with respect to the public convenience and safety?

Mr. BABCOCK. The public has nothing to do with the tunnel; it is for the purpose of bringing the passenger traffic together. I am one of those who believe that two stations would be better than one station.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Perhaps the railroad companies think so, too.

Mr. BABCOCK. Possibly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a separate vote on the proposition that the House recede from amendments 39 and 41 and concur in those amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the two amendments to which the gentleman's motion refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 39:
On page 18, in lines 21 and 22, strike out "five hundred thousand."
Amendment 41:
On page 19, in line 1, strike out "five hundred thousand."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, this simply affects the Pennsylvania railroad, and upon this motion I desire the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. CANNON. The floor was not yielded to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, it is possible, but it is not at all probable, that the railroad companies would accept the propositions embodied in this act if the House amendments to this act were adopted. Their rights under existing laws are such that it is optional with them to accept or reject this legislation. They have vested rights which the courts will uphold. They are not here in the attitude of mere supplicants at the mercy of this House.

Suppose we make it against their interest to accept this legislation, will they accept it? They certainly will not. Can we compel them to accept? We certainly can not. What, then, would be the result of insisting upon an unreasonable and unbusiness-like provision in this legislation? Would it not be, in effect, to defeat it, while in appearance we enacted it? Would it not be to revive the legislation of 1901, which this legislation professes to repeal? If it were the design of gentlemen who so persistently opposed the acts of 1901 because those acts would preclude the possibility of getting a union station without the assent of the railroads themselves—if it were their design, I say, to perpetuate those acts and nullify this one, they could not accomplish that design more surely than by insisting upon the House amendments which make the bill unacceptable to the railroad companies.

Everybody knows that the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad were satisfied absolutely with the act of February 12, 1901, which granted them additional facilities at the terminals that they now occupy. It was only in deference to those who had a desire to beautify the city of Washington and enlarge on a new scale the Mall that the Pennsylvania Railroad agreed to remove its tracks to the new proposed site. In the same way everyone knows that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, in deference to that wish, expressed not only upon the part of those who had the duty of beautifying Washington in charge, but also in deference to all those interested in having a union terminal station, agreed to the proposition.

Gentlemen will remember that at the time the debate on this matter was in progress in the House the only cry was for a union station. The one cry was to not give these extra acres on the Mall to the Pennsylvania Railroad—do not give the additional facilities at C street to the Baltimore and Ohio—and why? Because that would absolutely eliminate the possibility of a union station in Washington. That question grew and grew and grew and that sentiment increased until out of deference to that sentiment it was agreed between the presidents of the two railroads and the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate that they would consider a proposition for a terminal station.

Never for one moment, when that proposition was under discussion, did they imagine that any portion of the amount of money which was to be given to each railroad would in any way, shape, or manner be lessened under this new agreement in view of the increased amounts of money to be expended by or the lessened facilities of the railroad companies under the union-station bill. On the contrary, that was taken for granted, and I consider that in the present instance they have an absolute contract and can insist on proceeding with their work under the legislation granted to them on February 12, 1901, if we do not in the present instance make every effort to meet them in this new bill—at least not deprive them of what we have already granted under the act of February 12, 1901. The amount asked to be restored is not large.

On the other hand, what have we in jeopardy? We have in jeopardy the realization of something for which every member of Congress and every citizen of the District and of the United States has long hoped and prayed for, viz, proper terminal facilities in Washington. It is not a time, Mr. Speaker, to be penny wise and pound foolish. We desire a station. The railroads have met us halfway—more than halfway. The Pennsylvania Railroad, to further this desire on the part of Congress and on the part of the District of Columbia, has been willing, according to its own statements, to spend over $3,000,000 extra. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in like manner is called upon to spend an extra amount of money, not so much perhaps as the Pennsylvania, but what is a contract with the Pennsylvania road is equally a contract with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, and I maintain can be equally enforced.

Mr. MUDD. I would ask the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, who made the contract.

Mr. MORRELL. There was no absolute written contract, except the contract that was entered into between the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Congress when those acts were passed, and what I maintain is that if this new legislation is not put in such shape as will be in justice acceptable to the railroads they can proceed under the legislation that was then granted to them on February 12, 1901.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman think that Congress can not change the terms of that last act and go ahead and enforce the contract in view of the act of Congress?

Mr. MORRELL. I should imagine there would be an equity to the railroads should they proceed under the act of February 12, 1901, which would put this matter into court, and we would perhaps for some years to come be without these terminal facilities which we so very much desire.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRELL. One minute. I desire to go on for a moment, as far as the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is concerned. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, perhaps, is not called upon to spend as large a sum of money as the Pennsylvania Railroad, according to the figures shown by the representatives of that road. Reference is made by the distinguished chairman of this committee to the lessened expense that they would be under by the viaduct being shortened the distance between C street and the Massachusetts avenue site and the reduction of 10 feet in height of the viaduct; but, Mr. Speaker, that reduction, which is but 10 feet, would be more than offset by the larger cuts which will be necessary at the lower end of the line as it enters the District of Columbia.

We may not, perhaps, be called upon to pay for the facilities that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad are deprived of in being obliged to move their freight sheds to Eckington from what is to-day the best freight terminal possible in Washington, and yet at the same time it must be taken into consideration when we are asking them voluntarily to surrender terminal facilities which were granted to them under the act of February 12, 1901, and with which they were perfectly satisfied.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD].

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to undertake at this time a discussion of the merits of these alternative propositions, whether we shall give as a Government contribution to the expenditure of each of these two railroads one million of dollars or one million and a half of dollars.

The railroads are not a party to this controversy in its present position. The conferees have been appointed by the two Houses to confer over the matter of what we should give to these railroads. The House, unanimous in its action as to this branch of the bill, has declared in favor of giving them $1,000,000 apiece, and it reduced the amount from one million and a half because the adoption of the present site, which the railroad companies insisted upon and demanded, entails a cost upon the District and National governments of more than a million dollars more than the one preferred and at one time decided upon by the House committee.

Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps not a parliamentary or a proper thing to state just what took place in conference, and I do not intend to do so; but I undertake to say here to-day that there never has been any request from anybody having anything to do with these items of disagreement, with whom the House conferees ever talked or had the right to talk, for anything more than splitting the difference and giving each railroad a million and a quarter of dollars; so that if this House this afternoon shall vote to give each of these railroads a million and a half dollars it will simply vote to donate $500,000 out of the National and District treasury for this purpose. It is not asked for by anyone having a right to ask it under the present circumstances. I undertake to say that in twenty minutes, yes, in five minutes, after this measure goes back to conference, if it shall go, we can get an agreement, if the House conferees shall be willing to do so, by which at least $500,000 would be saved, as against the proposition now made by a member of the District Committee, my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL].

All legislation is to some extent a matter of compromise. Compromise involves agreement, involves compact in some instances in a perfectly legitimate and honorable manner. When this bill was before the District Committee of the House for consideration, and these railroads came and told the committee that they would not build on the site which saved this Government more than a million dollars, we put them back where they asked to go, and unanimously agreed among ourselves that we would stand to this proposition, giving them a million dollars apiece only.

After having done that, when as I say the situation is open to us at this moment to get an agreement for a million and a quarter each, it seems to me a preposterous proposition that this House should be asked to repudiate its former action, to repudiate the action of its conferees, and to donate a half million dollars to these two railroads. I think I may say I know that we can get an agreement forthwith on a million and a quarter to each railroad. I say further that I think it is quite likely that we can secure the adoption of the House proposition.

I have every inclination, Mr. Speaker, to deal fairly and to deal liberally with these railroad companies in the legislation providing for the construction by them of a union depot in this city, but I can not commit myself to such a policy of stultification as to vote now for a return to the Senate proposition of a million and a half dollars to each. [Applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] is a member of the committee and desires to address the House.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD].

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, I want to take the floor only for a few minutes on this proposition, and I ask of the House that I may proceed without interruption.

I want to say that in my opinion the union station is not jeopardized by a further disagreement on this measure, and that the only thing that is jeopardized on the issue now presented is the Treasury of the United States. [Applause.] The gentleman was right when he said that the opposition we made to the railroad bills of 1901 was to their taking that piece out of the Mall, and also the fact that we did not have a union station.

It is true further that I opposed any contribution to the railroads, but the utmost that anybody ever asked that the railroads should have was 50 per cent of the cost of elevation, and I have a book here issued since those bills passed, where the railroad commissioners of the States met and a report upon that subject was made by a committee that had investigated it, and on the strength of that report I say that 35 per cent is more nearly the average given by the States, where anything is given, than 50 per cent.

Now, on this proposition, let me show you what we have done for these two railroads; and I want the House to catch these figures. In this bill the gift in land to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad is $1,464,280. We add to that a million dollars in money, or a total of $2,464,280.

In regard to the Pennsylvania Railroad, gentlemen must remember that we gave them the absolute title to that Long Bridge. They had the right to use the Long Bridge before, so long as they maintained a highway bridge for the people of this District and the adjoining State. We took that condition away absolutely and gave them the right to the highway bridge, and to-day we are faced with an appropriation of $996,000 to meet that gift that we made to the Pennsylvania road.

But aside from that I want you to remember that in the bill of two years ago the Mall was only a small part of the land given. They got 12 acres of Garfield Park and numerous streets and reservations in this city, all of which they retain, except the Mall, so that as this bill stands we give the Pennsylvania Railroad Company $1,786,476 worth of real estate belonging to the District and the Government here in the city of Washington. In addition to that we give them a million dollars in money.

Now let us see how the balance stands as between the railroads and the Government. You say we ought to pay 50 per cent of the cost of elevation. Well, everybody admits that this great union station is not to be a part of the cost of elevation. You have got two old shacks here now that would have to be torn down and rebuilt, whatever is done, and after this is over you will have one magnificent union station, serving all the roads that enter. Now the railroads are to spend $13,000,000, and of that $2,000,000 is given them by the Government.

So their expenses out of their own pockets are $11,000,000, of which $4,000,000 go into the depot itself. So that the total cost to the railroads to readjust the tracks and build the tunnel, and the Pennsylvania Railroad getting a new entrance into the city, that shortens the time between here and Baltimore and New York, the total cost for it all is $7,073,133; and the cost to the Government, when you include the value of the land given, the value of the contributions to the road, the cost of land purchased for the plaza, grades readjusted, damages, and the value of the bridge to be built, is $8,010,750.

The Government paying a million more for this change than the roads pay for everything when you take the depot out. Gentlemen talk about 50 per cent. There is more than 50 per cent of the total cost of all the improvements, the depot excepted, and I respectfully submit that this is a most liberal contribution and not another cent should be made.

Why, when the president or vice-president of the Pennsylvania road was before our committee—and it has been said that all cities give 50 per cent of the cost of elevation of the tracks and improvement of terminals—it developed that that road was to spend $50,000,000 in improving its terminals in New York. Do you know how much the city of New York was to contribute? Only a lease of a subway under the street, on which the road forever is to pay an annual rental.

I submit that not only the conferees ought to be sent back with a disagreement, but if they can not agree, and come back, they ought to be instructed not to consent to any additional gift to these roads, and the other branch of this legislative body ought to know that the House proposes to stand by its position in this measure. [Applause.]

I want to say here and now that in my humble judgment the railroad companies will be glad to accept the magnificent contribution that was made in the bill as it passed the House. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I recollect when this bill passed the House. It passed the House, as reported from the District Committee, with this very amendment upon it. I was against the bill. I found myself in the minority. No question about the desire of members for a union depot; no question about the desire of the railroad companies to have it pass the House with the House amendment. Nay, nay, not a particle. When it passed the House with the House amendment, it went over to the Senate. That much had been obtained.

Now, I fancy the party desiring this legislation said let us go for the balance, and get the million reduction in the House amendment stricken out. That is the position. A wayfaring man, though a fool, could read as he ran. [Laughter.] Now, I have nothing against the railroads; I am for them. They are quite as much of interest to the people they serve as they are to themselves. I believe in good terminal facilities; and I want to ask my friend right here whether the bridge over the Potomac, the Garfield Park, and the other contributions are not in addition—and damages that the District pays—about $4,000,000 in cash. Is that right?

Mr. BABCOCK. Practically that.

Mr. CANNON. Practically $4,000,000 donation, plus the bridge across the Potomac, and Garfield Park, how many acres I do not know.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no; that does not include the bridge across the Potomac.

Mr. CANNON. No?

Mr. BABCOCK. That included the cash contribution of $2,000,000, $1,600,000 damages for Massachusetts avenue site, and $170,000 damages in the lower part of the city near Virginia avenue; a total of $3,770,000.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. In addition to that is the bridge. In addition to that is the donation at Garfield Park, or four millions in cash outside of these other things! Query: Is not that enough? I will ask my friend, a shrewd business man and a representative on this conference committee, in his judgment, if the House stands by the House amendment, will the conference committee come to an agreement?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see that the gentleman from Illinois has changed his mind since we were discussing the other bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. One thing at a time. This is the thing that we are now talking about. [Laughter.]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, as one of the conferees on the part of the House, I hardly think it would be good taste for me to report to the House what might or might not be said in conference.

Mr. CANNON. I ask my friend's judgment. If the House stands firm, if this legislation is enacted with the House amendment on it, will it become a law and will it not be accepted gladly by the railroads? I want the gentleman's judgment on it.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no question about that proposition—that the bill will become law as it is if the House stands by its proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, gentlemen, choose ye whom this day you will serve. [Laughter.] [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have that motion stated clearly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House recede from the two amendments which have been read by the Clerk.

Mr. MORRELL. Amendments 39 and 41.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is the contribution affecting the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report them again; the Chair will not put any interpretation upon them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 39: On page 18 strike out the words "five hundred thousand."

Amendment 41, page 19, line 1, strike out the words "five hundred thousand."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MORRELL) there were—ayes 57, noes 107.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on my motion to insist and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands the previous question on his motion to insist and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs to the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the House further insist on all of its amendments and ask for a further conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Speaker pro tempore appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. MUDD, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. MEYER of Louisiana, indefinitely, on account of sickness in family.

Senate concurrent resolution 63:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound of the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson, presented by the State of Maryland, 6,500 copies, of which 5,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, and the remaining 1,500 copies shall be for the use and distribution of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maryland.

The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby authorized to have the copy prepared for the Public Printer, who shall procure suitable copper-process plates to be bound with these memorials—to the Committee on Printing.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. NEEDHAM was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of Charles D. Watson, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following change of reference was made: The bill (H. R. 16139) to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company to bridge the Tug Fork of Big Sandy River at certain points where the same forms a boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. MEYER of Louisiana has notified the Chair that he was called away on account of sickness, and that he will not be present.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I rose to my feet some moments ago and have been trying to get the attention of the Chair to offer a resolution to instruct the conferees who have just been appointed. I would like to have the resolution read.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a telegram has been received from Mr. MEYER of Louisiana asking for indefinite leave of absence, I suggest the next member on the committee, Mr. LATIMER, be substituted for Mr. MEYER as a conferee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will postpone that matter until to-morrow morning.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no knowledge of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has risen for.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to adjourn without any other business, as far as I am concerned. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania inform the Chair of his purpose in rising?

Mr. MORRELL. My resolution is to instruct the committee on conference appointed by the Chair on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Why, Mr. Speaker, one-half of the House has gone home, and I insist on a vote upon my motion.

The question was taken, and the motion of Mr. CANNON was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communication was taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a telegram from the governor of the Philippine Islands indicating the necessity of legislation regarding Philippine currency—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

STATE OF IDAHO, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Will H. Gibson, secretary of the State of Idaho, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and complete transcript of house joint memorial No. 1, by Flint, which was filed in this office on the 4th day of February, A. D. 1903, and admitted to record.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State. Done at Boise City, the capital of Idaho, this 4th day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.] WILL H. GIBSON, Secretary of State.

House joint memorial No. 1, by Flint.

Your memorialists, the legislature of the State of Idaho, in regular session, do protest against the repeal of the stone and timber act and the commutation clause of the homestead act, or against the passage of any laws depriving the people of the benefit of such acts as now existent.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

The secretary of the State of Idaho is hereby requested to forward this memorial to the Congress of the United States.

This house joint memorial passed the house of representatives on the 20th day of January, 1903.

JAMES F. HUNT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

This house joint memorial passed the senate on the 3d day of February, 1903.

JAMES M. STEVENS,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within house joint memorial No. 1 originated in the house of representatives of the legislature of the State of Idaho during the seventh session.

ROBERT M. McCRACKEN,
Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives.

State of Idaho. Received and filed February 4, 1903.

W. H. GIBSON,
Secretary of State.

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, Fenimore Chatterton, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed has been carefully compared with the original enrolled joint resolution No. 3, senate, State of Wyoming, and is a full, true and correct copy of same and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming. Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 6th day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.] FENIMORE CHATTERTON,
Secretary of State.

Enrolled joint resolution No. 3, senate, State of Wyoming. A joint resolution indorsing the irrigation investigation of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Wyoming (the house of representatives concurring), Whereas the irrigation investigations by the United States Department of Agriculture have proven to be of the greatest value to the arid and semiarid States; and

Whereas the rapid development of the West through irrigation enterprise has raised many questions which should be investigated at an early date; and

Whereas no other department of the Government is equipped to carry on this work to the best advantage: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we earnestly request and urge the honorable representatives of the State of Wyoming in Congress to support the recommendations of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Director of the Office of Experiment Stations relative to these investigations; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Congressional delegation from this State, with the request that they urge these appropriations before Congress.

C. A. GUERNSEY,
President of the Senate.

J. S. ATHERLY,
Speaker of the House.

Approved February 6, 1903.

DE F. RICHARDS, Governor.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of Bangor Lodge, No. 143, Order of B'rith Abraham, of Bangor, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to modify the methods and practice pursued by the immigration officers at the port of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. HOAR presented resolutions of the legislature of the State of Massachusetts, relative to the preservation of Castle Island as a part of the park system of the city of Boston; which were read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, in the year 1903.

Resolutions relative to the preservation of Castle Island as a part of the park system of the city of Boston.

Whereas the preservation of Castle Island as a part of the Boston park system is of great importance to the health and pleasure of the citizens of Boston and of the vicinity, and said island is an object of interest to visitors from all parts of the Commonwealth; and

Whereas it is proposed to place upon this island a depot for the Light-House Service, which will greatly interfere with the enjoyment of the island by the public: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in general court assembled, That the establishment of such a depot on Castle Island would be an injury to the people of this Commonwealth, and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to use every honorable means to preserve Castle Island for the enjoyment of the public, and to see that the light-house depot is placed elsewhere in Boston Harbor; and

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 28, 1903.

Adopted. Sent up for concurrence.

JAMES W. KIMBALL, Clerk.

SENATE, February 3, 1903.

Adopted in concurrence.

HENRY D. COOLIDGE, Clerk.

A true copy. Attest:

JAMES W. KIMBALL,

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7201) to increase the limit of cost for the public building at Evanston, Wyo., to report it favorably with an amendment. The bill consists of but 6 lines, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was, before the word "thousand," in line 8, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "seventy-nine; "so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a court-house and post-office building at Evanston, in the State of Wyoming, as fixed by act of Congress approved June 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $179,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER SUPPLY OF MONTROSE, COLO.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16731) permitting the town of Montrose, Colo., to enter 160 acres of land for reservoir and water purposes, to report it favorably, without amendment.

Mr. TELLER. This is a House bill, local in its nature, and I ask that it may be put on its passage.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCHFORD CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

Mr. GAMBLE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12952) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the Rochford Cemetery Association to certain lands for cemetery purposes, to report it favorably, without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM W. SMITHSON.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10355) granting an increase of pension to William W. Smithson, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of William W. Smithson, late sergeant and first lieutenant Companies K and C, One hundred and seventy-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLORADO COOPERATIVE COMPANY.

Mr. TELLER. There was a bill reported this morning from the Committee on Public Lands giving an extension of time to complete some desert-land entries in Colorado by a cooperative association. It was reported favorably, and I desire to call it up, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7288) extending the time for making proof and payment for all lands taken under the desert-land laws by the members of the Colorado Cooperative Colony for a further period of three years. The bill will be read to the Senate for its information.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND DEBATES RELATING TO TRUSTS.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the 7th instant, to report it with an amendment and to submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the recent publication of the Department of Justice entitled "Bills and Debates in Congress Relating to Trusts," as corrected and indexed by the compiler, be made a Senate document; that 100 copies of the publication be printed for the immediate use of the Senate, and the compiler receive a compensation of —— dollars for the preparation of said index, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate was to fill the blank before the word "dollars" by inserting "five hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. BURROWS on the 30th ultimo, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MASON introduced a bill (S. 7304) granting bounty to certain soldiers of the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MASON. I wish to ask a question for information. I do not know whether the bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Committee on Pensions. It proposes to grant a bounty to a certain class of soldiers who served two years.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire whether the bill should go to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER. It should go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MASON. Very well. I present a paper to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and accompanying paper will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 7305) granting a pension to Helen L. Wiggin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7306) granting an increase of pension to Charles M. Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 7307) to provide certain souvenir medallions for the benefit of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Association of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7308) for the extension of Massachusetts avenue extended northward between Joliet street and Fairview Heights subdivision, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURTON introduced a bill (S. 7309) to amend an act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WELLINGTON introduced a bill (S. 7310) to authorize the Anacostia, Surrattsville and Brandywine Electric Railway Company to extend its street railway in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEWART introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 165) to establish market stands in the city of Washington for farmers and others selling produce of their own raising; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 166) to provide for the improvement of the wholesale market square in the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with the accompanying letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 167) providing for a careful inquiry and report respecting the present operation of certain public-land laws; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the establishment in California of viticultural experiment stations, intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for the purchase of machine guns for the use of vessels in the Revenue-Cutter Service, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment relative to the enforcement and carrying into effect of the requirements and objects of the "Act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads," approved March 2, 1893, and relating to the equipment of trains with power brakes, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to contract with the Holland Torpedo Boat Company for five of its most improved type of submarine torpedo boats of the Adder class, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $16,933.33 to be paid to Henry V. Lester, administrator of Thomas Barr, deceased, surviving partner of the firm of Stewart & Barr, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPOONER submitted an amendment proposing to extend the limit of cost of the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Superior, Wis., from $225,000 to $300,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARMACK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7142) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, at an annual salary of $1,440, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

PORTLAND HARBOR (MAINE) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. HALE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of Portland Harbor, Maine, with a view to extending the channel from the present 30-foot contour through Fore River to the Boston and Maine Railroad passenger bridge, with a depth of 30 feet at mean low water;

Also with a view to extending the channel of 30 feet depth at mean low water from the present 30-foot contour to the Grand Trunk Railroad bridge at the entrance to Back Cove, and rectifying the same; and to submit estimates for each of the proposed improvements.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. QUARLES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

DISTRIBUTION OF CHEROKEE LANDS.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask to have printed as a Senate document a statement made on behalf of the Cherokee Indians relating to the rights of the intermarried citizens of the Cherokee Nation to share equally with native Cherokees in the final distribution of their lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made. Does the Senator desire any reference of the document?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred in the absence of objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire to say that a bill has been reported on this subject, and I trust the clerks when they get the number of the document will have it referred to on the Calendar for convenience when the measure is taken up by the Senate.

COURTS-MARTIAL IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE. If the regular order is completed, I ask that the resolution coming over be laid before the Senate, and if there is no further desire to speak on it I should like to have the motion to refer put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. RAWLINS on the 27th ultimo, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to inform the Senate what courts-martial have been ordered and held in the Philippine Islands, and what judgments rendered by them in consequence of the dispatch sent by the Secretary of War to Major-General Chaffee referred to in the memorandum of the Secretary of War for the Adjutant-General under date of April 15, 1902; also what action was taken by the President or the Secretary of War on the judgment of any court-martial so ordered, either approving or disapproving the same.

Also, that the records in full of the several following courts-martial ordered and held in the Philippine Islands be communicated, to wit:
That on Brig. Gen. Jacob H. Smith.
That on Maj. Edwin F. Glenn, Fifth Infantry.
That on Lieut. Edwin A. Hickman, First Cavalry.
That on Lieut. J. H. A. Day, Marine Corps.
That on Maj. L. W. T. Waller, of the Marine Corps.
That on Lieut. Preston Brown, Second Infantry.
That on Capt. James A. Ryan, Fifteenth Cavalry.
That on Lieut. —— Cooke.
That on Lieut. Julian E. Gaiyot.
That on Lieut. N. E. Cook, of the Philippine Scouts.
That on Lieut. W. S. Sinclair, battalion adjutant, Twenty-eighth Infantry.
Also, any record or reports of investigations which may be on file in the War Department relating to the case of the so-called "Father Augustine," alleged to have been put to death by Cornelius M. Brownell, formerly a captain of the Twenty-sixth Volunteer Infantry, at Banate, island of Panay, province of Iloilo, in December, 1900; also any investigations made by the Department of Justice into the facts of such case, together with any legal conclusions reached thereon and reported to the War Department.

Mr. LODGE. I renew the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. BURTON. Is the morning business through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is concluded, except that this resolution is a part of the morning business. The Senator from Massachusetts moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to have the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. As he has not voted, I withhold my vote.

Mr. KITTREDGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and withhold my vote.

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. The junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] is paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. We propose to transfer our pairs so that both the Senator from Florida and myself can vote upon this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], but under the arrangement proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I am informed that it is proper to transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN]. If that is done, I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BEVERIDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. I voted "yea." I find that the senior Senator from Montana is not here. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 23; as follows:

ESTATE OF DARIUS B. RANDALL, DECEASED.

Mr. HEITFELD. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3622) to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Perce Indians.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay $3,161 to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements situated on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation relinquished by said deceased to the United States for the use of the Nez Perce tribe of Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OLD POINT COMFORT IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6212) to compensate the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Va.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $135,000 to compensate the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Va., in accordance with plans which have been approved by the Secretary of War for improvements on the reservation.

Mr. PETTUS. Is there a report?

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to have the report read in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. KEAN on the 4th instant, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6212) to compensate the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Virginia, respectfully submit the following report:

It seems that the Secretary of War, by order made on the 7th day of June, 1902, revoked the license under which the Hygeia Hotel and the buildings appurtenant thereto on the military reservation at Fort Monroe, Va., had been erected and maintained, and ordered the hotel company to remove said hotel and its appurtenant buildings within two months. The said order is hereto appended as a part of this report. This hotel property and the appurtenant buildings at the time said order was made were owned by the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company, which company had purchased the same from the Hygeia Hotel Company on the 17th day of April, 1901, paying therefor the sum of $100,000. Between the said 17th day of April, 1901, and the date of the said order made as aforesaid by the Secretary of War the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company expended in improvements on the said hotel property the sum of $20,958.39. These facts appear by the affidavit of William Butler Duncan, jr., the president of said company, made on the 19th day of June, 1902, which said affidavit is also made a part of this report.

The bill was referred by the Committee on Claims of the Senate to the Secretary of War for his investigation and report. The Secretary of War referred the bill to the Judge-Advocate-General for his report thereon. The letter of the Judge-Advocate-General, with the indorsement of the Secretary of War thereon, is filed herewith as a part of this report. It will be noted that both the Judge-Advocate-General and the Secretary of War report that the hotel company did not have under strict legal right a claim against the Government enforceable in court. The Secretary of War, however, reported that—

"In the sense of having a claim for the consideration of Congress, I think the company has one, and that it would be but fair and reasonable treatment for Congress to provide indemnity for the unexpected destruction of value made necessary by the resumption of possession by the United States."

Your committee have come to the same conclusion arrived at by the Secretary of War, and believe that the value of the property unexpectedly destroyed by the Government was the amount actually paid for it and expended on it by the claimant company shortly before it was ordered to be removed by the Secretary of War, viz, the sum of $120,958.39; and your committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "thirty-five thousand dollars" in line 3 and inserting in lieu thereof "$20,958.39;" and that so amended the bill do pass.

Appended hereto as a part of this report is a memorandum showing the various military orders and resolutions of Congress under which these improvements from time to time have been made. It will be noted that the first military order set out in the said memorandum is the order of Maj. Gen. John A. Dix, dated May 1, 1863. It is believed, however, that said order was but the authority for the continuance of a condition which had long existed, for it is very certain that the hotel had been maintained on the reservation during many years long before that time.

The reservation at Fort Monroe consists of 250 acres, and was ceded to the United States by the State of Virginia pursuant to an act of its general assembly passed March 1, 1821, for the purpose of fortification and other objects of national defense. While the Government in granting the license for the erection and maintenance of this hotel reserved the right to vacate the license at its pleasure without liability to any claim for damages, it is equally true that the Government by the long course of dealing has recognized property rights in the licensee and has authorized and invited expenditures of money, creating values which in equity and good conscience should not be destroyed without equitable compensation. The circuit court of the United States in passing on the question as to whether the mechanics who built one of the hotels at Fort Monroe could acquire thereon a mechanics' lien under the laws of Virginia most aptly stated the conditions existing at the place. It said:

"The land at Old Point Comfort, derived by the United States from Virginia, has come, under various influences, to contain a good many inhabitants. Fortress Monroe is, in the inclosed area, one of the largest fortresses known to exist. It has been made the seat of an artillery school of instruction, which brings together an unusually large number of soldiers, officers, and their families. A very large hotel has been in operation there for many years, established first for the accommodation of army officers and their families, but grown since into a watering place and sanitarium for the general public. The eastern terminus of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad has been established on this land by the consent of Congress and of the State of Virginia. An electric railroad to Newport News of much importance has its eastern terminus on these grounds.

"Under the operation of these causes a considerable number of inhabitants find themselves sojourning, for longer or shorter periods, at Old Point Comfort upon land held by the United States."

It was necessary, in the nature of things, that some provision should be made at this point for the accommodation of persons not actually in the military service, but connected therewith or with persons who were in such service and stationed at the fort. While the proprietor of the hotel no doubt made a legitimate profit in the conduct of his business, it must be borne in mind that the maintenance of such a hotel on the reservation was also indispensable for the purposes of the Government and for the population necessarily on the Government reservation in connection with Government business there. The various licenses were granted in consideration of the necessities of the situation, and not purely for the benefit of the proprietor of the hotel. During the long period during which this hotel has been maintained and conducted, the proprietor of the hotel has been treated as the owner of the property, and has from time to time been assessed as such with a proper share of expenses necessary for maintenance of roads, for pavements, streets, lights, and general police, and for the maintenance of a sewer system. The property rights of the hotel company seem to have been specifically recognized in the act of Congress making appropriation for fortifications and other works of defense, approved on the 1st day of August, 1894, in which provision was made for a permanent system of sewerage on the Government reservation. Said act contained the following provision:

"For one-half of the cost of construction of a sewerage system for all the buildings at Fort Monroe, Va., $37,500: Provided, That the owners of the hotels and other nonmilitary buildings now at Fort Monroe, Va., shall bear one-half of the expense of construction of said sewer, and the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to equitably and justly apportion among, assess against, and collect from the said owners and to expend in the construction of the said sewer the moiety of the estimated cost thereof; and the Secretary of War is hereby further authorized to assess upon vessels using the wharf at Fort Monroe, Va., one-half of the actual cost of repairs rendered necessary by the ordinary wear and tear of said wharf, and any damage done to said wharf by any vessel shall be paid by the owner or owners of said vessels; and he is also authorized and directed from time to time to cause to be assessed upon and collected from the owners of nonmilitary buildings situated within the limits of the Fort Monroe Military Reservation, and from individuals or corporations engaged in business thereat, other than water navigation companies, one-half of such sum or sums of money as he may deem just, reasonable, and necessary for expenditure upon the repair and operation of such roads, pavements, streets, lights, sewerage, and general police as, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, should be constructed and maintained in order to protect the interests of the United States and the interests, health, and general welfare of the said nonmilitary interests now established or that may hereafter be established at Fort Monroe: Provided further, That all funds collected as above provided, or that may be received from other incidental sources, from and after this date, be, and are hereby, made special contingent funds, to be collected and expended for the above purposes in accordance with the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, who will render annually to Congress a detailed account of all receipts and expenditures.

"And any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the construction of a sewerage system at Fort Monroe made by the sundry civil appropriation act approved March 2, 1889, is hereby covered into the Treasury."

Pursuant to this act the said Hygeia Hotel Company has been annually assessed, under the direction of the War Department, for a certain sum for sewerage, street, etc., and has as regularly paid the same.

The annual amount assessed for the above-named purpose was for 1895-96 $1,077.95. It has never been less than that sum, and for the past one or two years it has been $1,220.68 per year. The method of making this annual assessment is evidenced by a copy of the notice furnished the owners of the Hygeia Hotel on the 10th day of July, 1901, by Captain Townsley, quartermaster at Fort Monroe, hereto annexed, marked "No. 1."

In addition to this annual assessment by the United States against this property, the hotel company was called upon by the Government and did actually pay toward the construction of the system of sewerage, etc., the sum of $10,057.50, all of which will appear by reference to Document No. 42, United States House of Representatives, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, copy of which is also hereto annexed, marked "No. 2."

It is apparent from the foregoing that the General Government has dealt with this hotel precisely as if it had been fee-simple property. It is impossible to consider its history without reaching the conclusion that it never was the purpose of the Government to order its removal or to otherwise interfere with its use, except to meet some great emergency, such as war, or some manifest necessity for the use of the property for distinctly military purposes, and that the parties in interest had the right to invest their money on that idea and with that understanding.

During the war with Spain it was frequently reported that the exigencies of the situation would require the removal of the hotel, but no such necessity arose. The owners of the property were by that very fact led to believe that they would be left in its undisturbed use and enjoyment. This was so true that only a few months before the order for its demolition was issued by the War Department, the property was sold to the claimant company, who entered into possession of it and made very extensive improvements. It transpires that the order for this removal was not only not necessitated by such an emergency as has been referred to, and that the hotel was not removed to make room for any extension of the fort, but was removed in order that a park might be made on the site whereon the hotel stood.

It must be inferred that it was the knowledge of this particular history of the property and the circumstances attending the order for this removal that the honorable Secretary of War was induced to recommend that the owners of this property should be compensated for it.

It may not be amiss to say that the cost of the hotel and appurtenant buildings was very considerable, as shown by the sale of the same a few years ago for over $300,000. Owing, however, to the shock which the locality sustained as a health resort by the conditions existing during the Spanish war, and especially in consequence of yellow fever which appeared about the same time at the Soldiers' Home in the vicinity, it was sold to the present owners for the very much smaller sum, which, together with the amount expended in improvements on it, constitute the basis of the present claim.

Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of War, has recommended that, in view of the circumstances of this removal, compensation be made the owners.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask if this report relates to the payment of a claim?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It relates to a claim, and the reading of the report, which is a very long one, has been called for.

Mr. ALLISON. It is manifest that the reading of the report will take considerable time, and I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa objects to the further consideration of the bill, and it will be returned to the Calendar.

AMERICAN EXHIBIT, SHANGHAI, CHINA.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the 26th day of January I gave notice that on the 10th day of February, after the routine morning business, I would address the Senate on the bill (S. 6125) for the erection and maintenance of an exposition building in the city of Shanghai, in the Empire of China, for the appointment of a commissioner in charge thereof, and for other purposes.

I did not know at that time that the statehood bill would have such persistency in holding its place before the Senate. As we have but a few weeks of the session left in which to consider general business and appropriation bills, it seems to me, Mr. President, that time should not be taken up in the consideration of the bill I have named, which I do not expect can be disposed of during this session.

I had proposed, therefore, this morning to ask that I might substitute the pure-food bill for the bill to which I have just referred, to be taken up for discussion during the remainder of the morning hour; but I am informed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that he has an appropriation bill which he desires to have considered immediately, and so I withdraw my notice of an intention to discuss the other bill this morning and will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me so that I may give a notice.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield in a minute. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with admendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it may be read for amendment, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations may first be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. ALLISON. I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. McCOMAS. I give notice that on Thursday morning next after the routine morning business—and I desire the attention of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]—I shall move to take up for consideration, not to interfere with the statehood bill, the bill (H. R. 3076) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or any Territory, or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes, which was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments. I shall only ask for the consideration of the bill until the regular order is taken up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I hope very much that the request of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor [Mr. McCOMAS] will be favorably considered. The bill referred to by him is a very important one, which has passed the other House from session to session. It has now been put into such shape that it is hoped that it may be satisfactory to all concerned. Great labor has been expended upon the measure, and there are a great many people in the country interested in it. I think that it will be very gratifying to many people if the bill shall be considered and passed.

Mr. QUAY. I sympathize with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. McCOMAS] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] in their anxiety for the speedy passage of the bill; but in view of the present condition of affairs in the Senate, I feel it to be my duty to say that I will interpose the statehood bill, and antagonize the other bill if it is called up until a day is fixed for a vote in the Senate on the statehood bill.

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to repeat the notice he gave or the request which he submitted. If he will do so, I shall be very much obliged, as I was unable to hear him owing to the confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. QUAY. I said that I would feel it to be my duty to antagonize any proposition to take up what is known as the eight-hour bill, sincerely anxious as I am for its passage, until after we fix a day for a vote upon the statehood bill.

Mr. McCOMAS. I suggest to the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. There is nothing before the Senate except that bill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

Mr. TELLER. I submit at this time an amendment which I intend to propose to the District appropriation bill; and, as the bill is now pending, I do not desire to have the amendment printed, but I ask that it lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and lie upon the table. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "General expenses," on page 2, line 17, after the word "each," to insert "temporary employment of additional assistant inspectors for such time as their services may be necessary, $2,400;" in line 19, after the word "dollars," to strike out "civil engineer or computer, $1,500," and insert "three civil engineers or computers, at $1,500 each;" in line 23, before the word "clerk," to strike out "two clerks, at $900 each," and insert "clerk," $1,200; clerk, $900; so as to read:

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to modify the amendment just stated by inserting "seven" instead of "four," so as to make the total amount of the appropriation $37,700.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified in the absence of objection. The question is on concurring in the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee an Appropriations was, on page 13, line 1, before the word "fire," to strike out "or" and insert "of;" so as to make the clause read:

No part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used for the payment of premiums or other cost of fire insurance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 14, to increase the appropriation for rent of office for department of insurance from $540 to $840.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 24, to insert:

To enable the register of wills to continue the work of preparing a card index of the records of his office, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 2, to insert:

For printing permit books, applications, various forms of permits, and a file case for the applications, stub books, and other records in permit clerk's office, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 5, to insert:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized hereafter, in their discretion, to grant leave of absence, not to exceed thirty days to any individual in any fiscal year, to regular employees appointed directly by the Commissioners and paid out of general appropriations, and whose service is continuous, but who receive per diem compensation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCOMAS. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], if he will not accept an amendment inserting these words:

Five hundred dollars to pay William S. Torbert for the preparation of an index to the code of the District of Columbia.

I have here a telegram from the court and the Bar Association of the District recommending Mr. Torbert as a most competent indexer. I understand he has very nearly prepared the index. It is well known that the present index of the code adopted by Congress is very deficient and almost unworkable. I have a statement here, which I shall not read, but may ask permission to print, from the leading lawyers of the bar, a request of the bar association, and a request of the court favoring the amendment, which I shall not read, but I trust the chairman of the committee will allow the amendment to go into the bill. As he well said to me, as the indexing has once been provided for, he did not feel like providing for another index unless it was a good one. Therefore I telegraphed to these gentlemen asking them to name a good indexer, and the gentleman I have named was suggested and he has been doing the work, which will be completed in a couple of months.

I hope the amendment I have suggested will be accepted by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. We paid $500 for indexing the code last year, and the index turned out to be a very poor one. The committee think it wise to wait until we see what sort of an index we are going to have, and, if it be acceptable, it can be paid for next year.

Mr. MCCOMAS. The gentleman who is preparing the index, Mr. William S. Torbert, is a very careful and very accurate man. He is making the index at the instance of the Bar Association. If he does not complete it we do not have to pay him, and if he does complete it, and it be approved by the court and the Bar Association, the work will be paid for. I hope the Senator will consent that the amendment may be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it would be premature to provide for that work now.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "Improvements and repairs," on page 15, line 23, to increase the appropriation for assessment and permit work from $145,000 to $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 7, to increase the appropriation for work on streets and avenues from $50,000 to $150,000.

For Sixteenth street, Morris street to Columbia road, pave, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 4, to insert:

For Twenty-second street, R to Decatur streets, pave, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 6, to insert:

For Twenty-second street, Decatur to S streets, improvement, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 8, to insert:

For Calfornia avenue, Columbia road to Phelps place, pave, $6,000,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 10, to insert:

For Clifton street, Eleventh to Thirteenth, grade, $5,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 12, to insert:

For Yale street, Thirteenth to Fourteenth, pave, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 14, to insert:

For Philadelphia street, Brightwood avenue to Eighth street, grade and macadam, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 17, to insert:

For Woodley road, Wisconsin avenue to Idaho avenue, grade and regulate, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 24, to insert:

That upon the dedication of Milwaukee street through the subdivision of Fairview Heights, District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to abandon the portion of Massachusetts avenue bounded by blocks 6, 7, and 8 of Fairview Heights, except where said avenue is included within the plan for a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities, and the portions of said avenue so abandoned shall revert to the owners of the lots abutting thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 9, to insert:

That in order to provide better grades and to save in the cost of grading and improving streets in Herman D. Walbridge's subdivision of Ingleside, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to make the following change in the location of streets in said subdivision without cost to the District of Columbia or to the United States, namely, first, to shift the location of Nineteenth street south of Grant street so that it shall run in a southeasterly direction from the intersection of Nineteenth and Grant streets to Kenyon street, and, secondly, to abandon Grant street west of Nineteenth street, the old location of Nineteenth street south of Grant street, and Joliet street west of the new position of Nineteenth street, the land in such abandoned streets to revert to the adjacent owners of the property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 24, to insert:

For grading and macadamizing Fourteenth street from its present terminus to the northern limit of the Saul tract (or its junction with Piney Branch road) and for paying for such land as may be condemned hereunder for the use of the District of Columbia and the removal of houses or barns not donated, $49,000: Provided, That no portion of the said sum shall be expended until at least 85 per cent of all the land for the extension of said street to the north line of the Saul tract, according to the highway extension plans, be dedicated to the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 10, to insert:

Condemnation proceedings shall be instituted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn such portions or pieces of land as may not be donated, in accordance with sections 484 to 491, both inclusive, of the code of the District of Columbia and as herein set forth: Provided, however, That upon the acceptance of any dedication by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the remaining portion of any parcel of land of any party or parties dedicating, or who may have heretofore dedicated, a portion thereof for the widening or opening of said Fourteenth street shall be exempt and exempted from assessment in respect to the cost of condemning any portion of said street and from any assessment or tax for benefits to such remaining land, or any portion thereof, for the condemning or opening, grading, or macadamizing of such highway, as hereby provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 2, to insert:

And the commissioners or jury to appraise, etc., shall assess upon owners not donating benefits as provided in said sections of the code, and including, if said sections do not, benefits to arise from the physical improvements provided for in this amendment; and in making their decision the commissioners, or jury, shall take into consideration whenever a part only is taken the benefit to the remainder of the tract, and shall give verdict accordingly; and whenever their decision is that the benefits exceed the damages, the amount of such excess shall be assessed against the remaining portion of the tract in the same manner that other special assessments are now made in the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the cost of securing the land necessary to complete said right of way shall be charged entirely to the revenues of the District of Columbia, and if the same shall exceed $7,000 the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, in their discretion, reject the award or awards to that effect, and this appropriation shall revert to the Treasury of the United States, except $500, which shall be chargeable with the costs of the proceedings herein authorized.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Child-caring institutions," on page 66, after line 22, to insert.

The Board of Children's Guardians is hereby directed to contract for the care and maintenance of 60 wards of the board at the Hart Farm School at the rate of $200 per annum each, and for this purpose the sum of $12,000 is hereby appropriated, and the Commissioners are required to report to Congress at the first regular session of the Fifty-eighth Congress a general plan for the future care of the delinquent and dependent children in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before this amendment is adopted, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the language is precisely or substantially the same as was in the appropriation act of last year.

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it is a little more direct.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was hoping that it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. That allowed them and authorized them to do it. This directs them to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. So the Senator from Missouri has no doubt in his mind, I take it, that those in authority will do precisely what this amendment contemplates?

Mr. COCKRELL. They will have to do it. There is no question about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. They did not seem to carry out the provision in the act of last year.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are now directed to do it, and they will have to do it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very glad to know that that is the case.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, line 7, to increase the total appropriation for Board of Children's Guardians from $54,600 to $66,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 14, to strike out:

For the care and maintenance of children, under a contract to be made with the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children, by the Board of Children's Guardians, not to exceed $9,900.

And to insert:

For the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children, maintenance, including repairs, $9,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, after line 4, to strike out:

For the care and maintenance of children, under a contract made with the German Orphan Asylum by the Board of Children's Guardians, not to exceed $1,800.

And to insert:

For the care and maintenance of children in German Orphan Asylum, not to exceed $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Temporary Homes," on page 68, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "and Spanish War Veterans, four thousand" and insert "five thousand five hundred;" and in line 18, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "and ex-soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war shall also be admitted to the Home;" so as to make the clause read:

For Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, $5,500, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and ex soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war shall also be admitted to the Home.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Water department," on page 72, line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out "two clerks, at $1,400 each," and insert," clerk, $1,500; clerk, $1,400;" so as to make the clause read:

For revenue and inspection branch: For water registrar, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,500; clerk, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,000 each; chief inspector, at $936; eight inspectors; at $900 each; messenger, $600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 19, to increase the appropriation for the salary of foreman of the distribution branch, water department, from $1,400 to $1,500, and in line 25, to increase the total appropriation for the maintenance of the distribution branch from $29,706 to $29,906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 5, to insert:

For introducing the card record system in the office of the water registrar, including cards, fixtures, labor, and other items necessary to install the same, $2,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 9, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 3. That until and including June 30, 1904, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, on the requisition of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, made in the manner now prescibed by law, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary from time to time to meet the general expenses of said District, as provided by Congress, and to reimburse the Treasury for the portion of said advances payable by the District of Columbia out of the taxes and revenues collected for the support of the government thereof: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall be so construed as to require the United States to bear any part of the cost of street extensions, and all advances heretofore or hereafter made for this purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be repaid in full from the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That all advances made under this act not reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States on or before June 30, 1904, shall be reimbursed to said Treasury from time to time out of the surplus revenues of the District of Columbia, beginning July 1, 1904, together with interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent per annum until so reimbursed; and all advances heretofore made under the act of February 11, 1901, and the act of July 1, 1902, and all other acts making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia shall also be reimbursed from time to time out of said surplus revenues: Provided, That interest on advances made prior to

June 30, 1902, shall in the accounts of the District of Columbia with the United States be computed for the fiscal year 1903, and if not reimbursed shall be stated then as part of the principal sum and so charged annually in said accounts until reimbursed, and the same rule of computation shall apply to all advances made for the fiscal year 1904 and subsequent years, and said interest shall be so charged annually hereafter. The Auditor for the State and other Departments and the auditor for the District of Columbia shall each annually report the amount of such advances, stating each fiscal year separately, and also the reimbursements made under this section, and the balance due the United States, if any.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 4, to change the number of the section from 3 to 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] submitted an amendment which I should like to have offered now.

Mr. TELLER. It is an amendment relating to Euclid place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 24, page 23, insert:

For the purchase of land necessary to extend Euclid street, in block 18, Meridian Hill, $18,664, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that it should read "Euclid place" instead of "Euclid street." I made that mistake in drawing the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Iowa whether he has any amendments to offer?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no amendment to offer that I know of.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have two or three amendments which I should like to offer to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments have been completed?

Mr. ALLISON. The committee amendments have been completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment, and I wish to make a single observation concerning it.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I think the regular order had better be formally laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on equal footing with the original States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside that the consideration of the appropriation bill may be proceeded with.

Mr. SPOONER. It is subject anyway to appropriation bills.

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside that the consideration of the appropriation bill may be continued.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the statehood bill subject to appropriation bills?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair it is not. To proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill is a privileged motion, but the privilege extends no further.

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection whatever to laying aside the pending order temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, after line 6, insert:

For continuing work on Arizona avenue sewer, $75,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say a word respecting the amendment.

The Committee on Appropriations considered the amendment very carefully, and for the reason that it will not be available after the sum is expended and that a considerable sum in addition will be required to finish this sewer, and it can not be used until it is finished, the committee thought it best to recommend larger appropriations for other sewers and to leave this entirely until next year, when we hope to recommend an appropriation sufficient to complete the sewer. It is a proper work, but money expended on it this year would be of no value until a further sum is expended next year. For that reason the committee did not recommend the sum estimated in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, upon that statement I am inclined to withdraw the amendment, but before doing it I wish to emphasize the necessity for this work. It is in Tennallytown, where there are 2,000 people, and they have no sewerage system. Typhoid fever has prevailed there to a very considerable extent, and beyond a question because of the fact that they are without sewerage.

I trust that this very desirable improvement will be amply provided for next year. It ought to be done. I withdraw the amendment, however, upon the statement made by the chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for grading and improving Wisconsin avenue.

I will say that the Commissioners have recommended this improvement, and I trust that the chairman of the committee will allow it to go into the bill for consideration by the committee of conference. It is a very desirable improvement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 19, page 19, insert:

For grading and improving Wisconsin avenue, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is a section of the city which is in great need of an improvement. It is in the vicinity of the Sprague property, on the way from the Soldiers' Home, as Senators will recall. Citizens have made a very important contribution by dedicating streets to the District or to the Government. The Commissioners say:

Since the date of their previous report in this case the abutting property owners have donated for public use that portion of Cincinnati street between Central avenue and a point a short distance south of Cincinnati street, and also the whole of Cincinnati street between Fourth and Seventh streets, so that practically the whole of the land proposed to be improved is under the control of the Commissioners, as indicated on the inclosed plat. It is understood that arrangements have been completed also for the donation of the triangular area in Seventh street near Keokuk, whereupon a continuous right of way will be had from the Bunker Hill road by way of Seventh and Cincinnati streets to Fourth street NE.

I think this matter was not presented to the Committee on Appropriations—at least this dedication had not been made when I offered the amendment. The Committee on the District of Columbia favorably acted upon it and recommend it to the Committee on Appropriations. It calls for an appropriation of $7,500. I ask that it may be allowed. I hope the amendment may go into the bill for further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 12, page 17——

Mr. GALLINGER. The line and page were very likely stated before the bill was reprinted. The clerks will put in the amendment at the right place.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 19 insert:

To grade, regulate, and improve Seventh street NE., from Michigan avenue (Bunker Hill road) to Rhode Island avenue, and Cincinnati street NE., from Seventh street NE. to Fourth street NW., $7,500.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations did not examine this question, their attention not having been called to it. So of course I can have no knowledge of such a specific character that would justify me in saying that the committee favor its going into the bill. I will not object to the amendment being placed in the bill for further consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all I ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 46, line 6, before the word "dollars," I move to strike out "thirteen hundred and twenty" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "fourteen hundred." The effect of this amendment will give to the lieutenants of police of this city, a limited number, $80 a year more than they are now receiving. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, line 6, before the word "dollars," strike out "one thousand three hundred and twenty" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one thousand four hundred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That changes the total. The clerks will change the total to correspond with the last amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The clerks will, I hope, change the total.

Mr. MCCOMAS. On page 15, after line 2, I move to insert:

Five hundred dollars to pay William S. Torbert for the preparation of an index to the Code of the District of Columbia, this sum to be paid after such index shall have been approved by the court of appeals and by the supreme court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. I have only to repeat what I said before. This was not estimated for. This work has not been completed. The person who prepared the index before was paid $500, and he made a very imperfect index. I had hoped the Senator from Maryland would allow this matter to go over until the work is completed. I shall offer no objection to it, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. McCOMAS. Since I spoke to the Senator on this subject I have had a communication which makes just that statement. At that time I did not know it. I had a telegram saying that the "Court and Bar Association recommend William S. Torbert as indexer." The suggestion was very properly made as I thought. There was an index before, but it is a very bad one. It simply makes the code very useless as it is now. But I have now received a letter which really complies with the very reasonable suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the committee.

It seems that a Mr. William S. Torbert—and I know him well enough to know that he is a very painstaking, industrious man, well fitted to prepare digests and indexes—has been induced by some of the court and bar to prepare a new and a good index. Here is what some of the leading members of the bar—Mr. William F. Mattingly, Mr. A. S. Worthington, Mr. C. C. Cole, Mr. J. J. Darlington, and Mr. R. Ross Perry—say of this index:

> We, as members of the bar of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, desire to bring to your attention the necessity for a proper index to the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, especially in view of the fact that a resolution is now pending in the Senate for the printing of 2,500 copies of the code.

I think I am right in saying that an order has already passed for the printing of those copies of the code. This is a necessary and proper provision now that they are to be printed. These leading men and the bar association and the court, I have no doubt, fully concur in this statement with the Senator from Iowa. They say:

> The present index is unsatisfactory, inaccurate, and incomplete, and of but little value.

Mr. President, if the index could be examined for a half hour it would be seen to be, what the Senator from Iowa has said, a very poor piece of work.

Now, that is the organic law of this District, and it is made inaccessible by a bad index. Who made it I do not know. I have tried to find out. It was probably given here to somebody in the Capitol who knows nothing about indexing and, it may be, wanted $500; but the work was very poorly done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just at that point I feel that I ought to say a word, inasmuch as the work was done under the direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia. The late Senator McMillan, who was a very careful man in all matters which came under his observation, and the very accomplished clerk of that committee are, I think, responsible for that work. They, I think, selected a gentleman whom they believed qualified to do the work. Now, I am not going to offer an opinion as to whether it was well done or poorly done, but it was not given to a clerk around the Capitol simply to give him a job.

Mr. McCOMAS. I did not mean to say that it was. I said that somebody wanted the money and made the index. Now, the late Senator from Michigan, or his clerk, the most efficient I ever knew in the history of Government work, would ordinarily do the best thing to do, but the man who made this index was not that accomplished and most useful chairman nor that very able clerk. The man who made the index made a very bad index. The proof is the index itself. It makes the code inaccessible to the people who need it and wish to know what is in it. Of course, the value of the code——

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not understand that there has been any objection made to the amendment. Why does not the Senator allow his amendment to be acted upon and have it passed at once, without any further discussion?

Mr. McCOMAS. I will not say a word further.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will make a point of order on it if he does not.

Mr. McCOMAS. I only hope that in conference this amendment will be retained, because the index ought to be in the copies of the code now being printed. I have nothing further to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was a point of order raised?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I did not make the point of order, if the Senator from Maryland would not discuss it further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

> For paving old Sixteenth street from Columbia road to Kenesaw avenue, $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Washington will explain this amendment. I understand that it has been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia and that it is to pave what is known as old Sixteenth street. I had supposed that the old Sixteenth street had been merged into the new Sixteenth street, and that we were providing for all there was of Sixteenth street. If there is a part of old Sixteenth street which it is desired to have paved, I wish the Senator from Washington would explain the necessity for it. I certainly had no knowledge that there was any portion of Sixteenth street not already provided for in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. What was formerly Sixteenth street above this particular point is now termed old Sixteenth street. New Sixteenth street is provided for in the appropriations made for paving. There is a large number of people living on what is called old Sixteenth street, many houses have been erected there, and the residents on that street are extremely anxious that it shall be paved. Hence the favorable report which was made on the improvement. The amendment was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has authorized me to report in favor of it. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not object to its adoption.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Washington will furnish the facts upon which the conferees on the part of the Senate can defend this amendment if it is put into the bill. They have no knowledge of it now.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. The principal facts in favor of the amendment are that a great many people live on the street, that new buildings are going up there, and those people are urging the improvement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. There is one other amendment which I desire to offer, which I send to the desk—to increase the compensation of the deputy collector of the district.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 4, after the words "deputy collector," it is proposed to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

> Deputy collector, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In the same clause, in line 12, I move to increase the total from "$19,400" to "$19,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, for what I think is an adequate reason, and which I believe the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations understands, I will make the request that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow morning. There is one matter which I feel quite confident I shall want to bring to the attention of the Senate in connection with this bill, but it will not be in shape for me to do so this afternoon.

Mr. ALLISON. Will it not suit the purpose of the Senator from New Hampshire to allow the bill to be reported to the Senate and the amendments which have been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole concurred in in the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. That will be entirely agreeable to me, Mr. President.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] now asks that the bill lie over until to-morrow morning. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. RAWLINS submitted the following report:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 149) to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:
>
> That the House recede from its amendments to said act, and agree to the same with the following amendments:
>
> Strike out the words "September, January, and," in line 6 of the said Senate act, and insert after the word "April," in line 6, the following: "and November and at Ogden City on the second Monday in March and September."
> Insert in line 7, before the word "terms," the word "other," and insert after the word "at," in line 7, the following: "said Salt Lake City and."
> Further amend line 7 by striking out the word "or," after the word "City" and before the word "other," and inserting the words "and at;" so that the said act, when so amended, will read as follows:
>
> "That the State of Utah constitutes one judicial district, which is known as the district of Utah. Terms of the district court shall be held in Salt Lake City on the second Monday in April and November and at Ogden City on the second Monday in March and September of each year: Provided, That other terms of said court may be held at said Salt Lake City and Ogden City and at other places in said district when deemed necessary by the judge."

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 9th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 3546) for the relief of L. A. Noyes; and

An act (S. 6278) to extend the provisions of chapter 8, Title XXXII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "Reservation and sale of town sites on the public lands," to the ceded Indian lands in the State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1471) for the relief of Henry G. Rogers;

An act (S. 2450) to establish a fog bell and lens-lantern light on the southeastern end of Southampton Shoal, San Francisco Bay, California;

An act (S. 4222) authorizing the appointment of John Russell Bartlett, a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 156) dedicating to the city of Columbus, in the State of Ohio, for uses and purposes of the public streets, part of the property conveyed to the United States by Robert Neil by deed dated February 17, 1863, recorded in Deed Book 76, page 572, etc., Franklin County records.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 569) to establish a department of commerce and labor.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5678) providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

UNION RAILROAD STATION.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreements of the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 43, 44, 46, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, and 56, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 4, 42, 45, and 47.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Between the words "railroads" and "properties," in said amendment, insert a comma; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 3 of the act, line 22, strike out "United States Reform School" and insert "Reform School of the District of Columbia;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7 of the act, line 3, strike out "company" and insert "companies;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In said amendment strike out "Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington" and insert "Baltimore and Potomac;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 12 of the act, line 5, strike out beginning with "in the city of Washington" down to and including all of line 11, and in lieu thereof insert: "Also, in the city of Washington, the following-named streets are hereby vacated, abandoned, and closed, to wit, Ivy street, between South Capitol street and a point 220 feet east thereof; Second street NE., between N street and Delaware avenue, and, between the north side of M street and the south side of L street, so much of the bed of Delaware avenue as lies west of a line drawn parallel with the east building line of said avenue and 40 feet westerly therefrom;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the section strike out the period, and at the beginning of the new matter strike out "except" and insert ": Provided, That;" and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 57: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to so much of the amendment of the House numbered 57 as involves striking out section 12 of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted to stand as section 12 insert the following:

"SEC. 12. That the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company shall establish and maintain a substation with suitable accommodation for passenger travel at a convenient location north of the Long Bridge and at a point to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia."

And the House agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 39 and 41, and on so much of amendment numbered 57 as relates to the striking out of section 13 of the bill and the substitution of matter in lieu thereof, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

J. H. GALLINGER,
W. P. DILLINGHAM,
THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. W. BABCOCK,
SYDNEY E. MUDD,
ADOLPH MEYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I want to make a single observation. The conferees on this bill have agreed as to all matters in dispute except the one item of a proposed reduction on the part of the other House of the amount of money to be contributed by the Government and the District of Columbia to these two railroads. That matter is still in dispute.

I have supposed, Mr. President, that it was not the proper thing, in presenting a conference report, to state the action of the conferees when they were considering a matter of this kind, but inasmuch as certain statements were made on yesterday in another place, to the effect that if this matter went back to conference again there would be no difficulty in securing a recession by the conferees on the part of the Senate, I desire to put myself on record as saying that the conferees on the part of the Senate have never said anything or suggested anything which would warrant that statement. The matter goes back to conference with that point of disagreement absolutely open for further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments which are still in disagreement, and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. MARTIN were appointed.

ELISE SIGEL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15659) granting a pension to Elise Sigel, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. FOSTER of Washington, and Mr. TURNER were appointed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7245) amending the act of June 19, 1888, providing for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn., to report it favorably without amendment. It is a very brief bill, and it is important that it should be passed immediately, for the work of construction can not proceed on the building without the passage of a bill amending the existing law. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him, which will be read to the Senate in full for its information.

Mr. QUAY. Before the bill is laid before the Senate, I desire to say that, in view of the statement of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], I shall not object to its consideration, but I shall object to the injection of any other bills into the belly of the statehood discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that for the purpose of permitting the construction, upon lands now belonging to the United States, of the extension to the post-office building at Bridgeport, Conn., authorized by the act of Congress approved June 4, 1897, so much of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the erecting of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn.," approved June 19, 1888, as provides that "the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys," shall be repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL-BANK RESERVES.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to House bill 7659.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7659) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes," and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. HANNA submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 569) "to establish the department of commerce and labor," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 8, of the amendment, strike out all after the word "Congress" to the end of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the Auditor for the State and other departments shall receive and examine all accounts of salaries and incidental expenses of the office of the secretary of commerce and labor and of all bureaus and offices under his direction, all accounts relating to the Light-House Board, Steamboat-Inspection Service, Immigration, Navigation, Alaskan fur-seal fisheries, the National Bureau of Standards, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Census, Department of Labor, Fish Commission, and to all other business within the jurisdiction of the department of commerce and labor, and certify the balances arising thereon to the division of bookkeeping and warrants and send forthwith a copy of each certificate to the secretary of commerce and labor."

Page 4, line 3, of the amendment, strike out the word "Commissioners" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Commission."

Strike out all of section 6 and insert in lieu the following:

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and a commissioner of corporations who shall be the head of said bureau, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, and who shall in the absence of the commissioner act as, and perform the duties of, the commissioner of corporations, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the secretary of commerce and labor or by the said commissioner. There shall also be in the said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law.

"The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the secretary of commerce and labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations excepting common carriers subject to 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require; and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct, shall be made public.

"In order to accomplish the purposes declared in the foregoing part of this section, the said commissioner shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations, joint-stock companies, and combinations subject to the provisions hereof as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said 'act to regulate commerce' and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths.

"All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said 'Act to regulate commerce' and by 'An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission,' etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplemental to said 'Act to regulate commerce,' shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

"It shall also be the province and duty of said Bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, including corporations engaged in insurance, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law."

Page 6, line 8, of the amendment, after the word "required," insert the words "by the secretary of commerce and labor."

Page 7, line 7, of the amendment, after the word "labor," insert the following: "Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to alter the method of collecting and accounting for the head tax prescribed by section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to regulate immigration,' approved August 3, 1882."

Page 8, line 25, of the amendment, after the word "in," insert the words "or by."

In lieu of section 10 of the amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 10. That all duties performed and all power and authority now possessed or exercised by the head of any executive department in and over any bureau, office, officer, board, branch, or division of the public service by this act transferred to the department of commerce and labor, or any business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, or in relation to the duties performed by and authority conferred by law upon such bureau, officer, office, board, branch, or division of the public service, whether of an appellate or revisory character or otherwise, shall hereafter be vested in and exercised by the head of the said department of commerce and labor.

"All duties, power, authority, and jurisdiction, whether supervisory, appellate, or otherwise, now imposed or conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by acts of Congress relating to merchant vessels or yachts, their measurement, numbers, names, registers, enrollments, licenses, commissions, records, mortgages, bills of sale, transfers, entry, clearance, movements, and transportation of their cargoes and passengers, owners, officers, seamen, passengers, fees, inspection, equipment for the better security of life, and by acts of Congress relating to tonnage tax, boilers on steam vessels, the carrying of inflammable, explosive, or dangerous cargo on vessels, the use of petroleum or other similar substances to produce motive power, and relating to the remission or refund of fines, penalties, forfeitures, exactions, or charges incurred for violating any provision of law relating to vessels or seamen or to informer's shares of such fines, and by acts of Congress relating to the Commissioner and Bureau of Navigation, shipping commissioners, their officers and employees, Steamboat-Inspection Service and any of the officials thereof, shall be, and hereby are, transferred to and imposed and conferred upon the secretary of commerce and labor from and after the time of the transfer of the Bureau of Navigation, the shipping commissioners, and the Steam boatInspection Service to the department of commerce and labor, and shall not thereafter be imposed upon or exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury. And all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are, so far as inconsistent, hereby repealed."

Page 10, line 12 of the amendment, strike out the words "or the Interstate Commerce Commission" and insert the following: "from the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post-Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior."

Page 11, line 6 of the amendment, after the word "act," insert the words: "other than those of section 12."

And the House agree to the same.

M. A. HANNA,
KNUTE NELSON,
A. S. CLAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. P. HEPBURN,
JAMES R. MANN,
WILLIAM RICHARDSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator, who is the chairman of the committee of conference, and who submitted this report, that it is a report of exceeding importance, and, if it concurs with his better judgment, that he allow it to be printed and go over until to-morrow. I expect to vote with the Senator for the adoption of the report, but I should like first to know exactly what I am voting for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the conference report may be printed and go over until tomorrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. RAWLINS. I present a memorial of the governor and the legislature of the State of Utah bearing upon the statehood bill now pending, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that the memorial which he sends to the desk may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senate joint memorial, memorializing Congress to pass the omnibus statehood bill, admitting Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma as States in the Union.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the governor and legislature of the State of Utah, respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States of America to pass the bill now pending in Congress to admit the Territories of Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma as States in the Union.

EDWARD M. ALLISON, Jr.,
President of the Senate.

THOMAS HULL,
Speaker of the House.

Approved this 2d day of February, 1903.

HEBER M. WELLS, Governor.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] would like to proceed at this time. I have no objection to his doing so, and I gladly yield to him.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I do not like to interfere with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] in the delivery of his continuous speech, which has so far been interrupted with a few parentheses of somewhat protracted character; and I would much prefer, if the Senator will do so, that he should conclude his remarks before I speak, because he has said some things here that I desire to answer, and I should like to have the benefit of all of the Senator's remarks before proceeding, if I could do so. I always feel uncomfortable in speaking in the time of another Senator for fear that I might possibly intrude upon his patience by the length of my own remarks, which are sometimes a little more protracted than other people like to have them. If the Senator from New Jersey will conclude his remarks——

Mr. KEAN. It is always a pleasure to listen to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I know; but it might not be so great a pleasure if I had the opportunity of replying to all the Senator has said and intends to say. However, if the Senator is entirely satisfied for me to occupy the floor as in my own time, of course without depriving him of the privilege, I will proceed with what I have to say.

I have for a long time, Mr. President, been an interested student, I may say, of the situation of the country that is called the arid part of America—west of the Rio Grande River and the country extending to the north of it. When a proposition was brought in here for the admission of the State of Washington into the Union I was very heartily in favor of it. The ground upon which I took a stand in favor of the admission of Washington State was, first, that it was a national duty. It must have been a national contemplation or expectation when we adopted the Constitution of the United States and had the Northwestern Territory as a part of the assets, I may say, of the old government—the government of the Confederation—which were turned over to us, that we would extend to the people of the different Territories then acquired or thereafter to be acquired all of the rights that the Constitution provides as belonging to citizenship of the United States.

Those rights as they existed in the original thirteen States and were transferred into the constitutions of the other States that followed them, now to the number of forty-five, were peculiar. They were important. They had never existed in any other country but this in concrete form. And the aggregation of those rights in what we call statehood was considered by our fathers to be the highest reach of human endeavor in the direction of free republican government.

Those original States, formed out of the colonies, had exercised many of the powers of sovereignty before the Union was formed. They had exercised full powers of sovereignty for eleven years, through their representatives in the Congress of the Confederation—much broader powers of sovereignty, indeed, than were left to them after the Constitution was adopted. They had conjointly exercised fully the powers of sovereignty in making treaties with Indians, and also in having systems of coinage, and in exercising various of the attributes of absolute and unqualified sovereignty.

When they were congregated into the Union, first 10 of them and then 3 more, they formed a Constitution, which was intended thereafter to demark, to delimit, and to define all the privileges of American citizens, and the American citizen who does not enjoy all the fullness of that liberty can not be said to be an American citizen in the proper meaning of that term.

The thirteen original States, recently colonies of Great Britain, were required to give up to the Federal Government, which was to be located in the District of Columbia, certain of their sovereign powers, particularly those which related to dealings with foreign countries. But for the purpose of providing for themselves, under the separate sovereignties that they enjoyed, they had the unquestioned right to elect all their officers, legislative, judicial, and executive, and to choose them in their own manner, so that the manner of choice should be republican in form.

It was considered that this combination between the two great sovereign powers, the one residing in the States and the other in the Federal Government, was, for purposes of domestic security and enjoyment and for purposes of external or foreign protection and progress, the very acme, the highest possible reach of free republican government; and so, Mr. President, it has been all the time since.

When the State of Washington was applying for admission into the Union with a feeble rap at our doors, and expecting possibly to be turned away without being admitted into these high privileges and rights, I thought it was for our own security as a nation, for our own development, for the benefit of the people of Washington, and for the promotion of their happiness, that it should be admitted as a sovereign State into the American Union.

I further thought, Mr. President, and so expressed myself, I believe, that the State of Washington, situated at the extreme northwest of our possessions, and looking across Puget Sound upon the possessions of Great Britain, would form a bulwark in that quarter which not only would attract the attention of the world, but would give needed strength to our institutions, physical, political, and moral, and that that was the place of all others in the United States where it was most necessary that all the aggregated powers of statehood and Federal sovereignty should be combined into a sovereign State to be admitted into the American Union. For these reasons I took great pride and pleasure in my advocacy of the admission of Washington into the Union.

At that time the political situation in Washington was unsettled, and there were hopes of Democratic success in the coming Presidential elections which were somewhat flattering, and I was somewhat berated by my Democratic colleagues because I did not pay sufficient attention to the probable dominance in the State of the Republican ticket in national elections. Nevertheless, I got my consent to go on with what I believed to be a duty to the entire country that rose above what other gentlemen supposed was my duty to my party.

Following on after that, within nine months, I think it was, from the date of the admission of Washington, five other great States were admitted into the Union. Thereupon I, having stood my ground and having voted for all of them upon the principles which I thought ought to control my action, the admonitions that came from my party were a little more pointed and a little more severe, as if I were really assisting in transferring the power from the hands of the Democracy, as it was expected, into the hands of the Republican party. I still held to my course because I believed it to be right.

Since that time, Mr. President, I have been amply rewarded for what sagacity I possessed, in seeing gentlemen on this floor who are Democrats, coming from those Northwestern States, and now I do not remember that we have any Democrat on the floor from that northern section of the country—I am now speaking of the isothermal line that runs across our country, the line of ancient division in our politics—who does not come from the mountain region of the six States admitted within the period of nine months.

Now, my position with regard to Arizona and New Mexico and Oklahoma has not the slightest taint of politics in it. I desire the admission of these States into the Union for the practical reason, the economic reason, for the national reason, for the reason of state, that influenced my vote in favor of Washington and her five sister States, admitted into the Union from the Northwest. So the gentlemen who choose to follow me in my remarks or to read them hereafter, if they ever shall undertake to do so, must exonerate me on this occasion from any expected political gain to my party as influencing me in the slightest degree.

But, being free to act myself, Mr. President, I will not make accusation against the gentlemen who are trying to keep these Territories out of the Union that they are controlled by party considerations. At the same time, they will have to confront accusations of that kind, whether they are just or unjust, because the people believe that that is exactly what is going on; that this is a play of politics and nothing else put a play of politics; that there is no reason of statesmanship which excludes these States from admission into the Union, and that if they are excluded now, having waited some sixty years to get them into a condition that might possibly suit the refined ideas of certain gentlemen as to what a people ought to be to have the blessings of American liberty, no one knows how long they will have to wait, at the rate we have been going, provided those Senators have a correct idea of the degradation which they insist has been suffered in New Mexico and Arizona, by granting to these people Territorial government and permitting them to ravel down at the heel in the way that they have done in the last sixty years.

When will they get any better, and when will we be ready to admit them? I think it will come to a pass after a while where we will have to exclude States from the American Union and turn others outside of the Union because we can not find any material that is good enough for these exacting to associate with. I judge that will be the result.

Now, this debate has been going on here, some one said yesterday, for six weeks—I believe it is two months—sawing along in the most leisurely possible way that I think I have ever seen in the Senate, and the Democrats have been so silent about it that I am afraid they are nearly dumb for want of exercise in the use of their voice in speech. They have been locked in here by what I may call a peaceful political blockade.

Mr. TELLER. A pacific blockade.

Mr. MORGAN. A pacific political blockade. It has been conducted in the very best of humor. Scarcely a ripple has arisen on the surface to agitate anybody at all, but the blockade has been kept up, and we do not know when it is going to end. Whether we shall have to refer it to some Hague which we will ourselves constitute to settle when this thing is to end and what is to become of it I do not know. We are, like the British and Germans in Venezuela, being starved to death to gratify the arrogant pride of our own guardians, the leaders, it seems, of the Republican party in the Senate. The country is stopped from the exercise of its own Government, to make a capricious minority more disagreeably conspicuous.

Here is the Senate of the United States engaged upon propositions which Senators have undertaken to discuss to their utmost, bringing up every possible phase and circumstance that can be thought of connected with almost everybody in these three Territories, beginning with the people, running up through the magistrates and justices of the peace, and judges of the courts, and the sheriffs and constables, and the legislatures and local administrations, and all manner of things, getting even into the religion of the people out there and their alleged taint of Mormonism. They are going through and trying to instruct the people of the United States in a knowledge of the situation in Arizona and New Mexico and Oklahoma, about which the people know practically ten times as much as any Senator on this floor; wasting the time of the Government, which is said to be precious, and keeping us from engaging in that discussion of a real topic which is looming up behind this matter—the trusts—which have afflicted the people of this country to the extent almost of absolute starvation in many places and of actual freezing in many others.

The discussion of the trusts has been kept back, and will be kept back until it gets too late for us to have any that is fair or intelligent, and we will be forced to accept a proposition that is coming to us from the House, possibly without amendment, and without the opportunity of explaining our votes against it if we do not agree with it, when we know and the whole world knows that that trust bill is nothing more than a mush poultice put upon some little pimple for the purpose of soothing some slight pain, when the disease is a cancer of the whole body politic.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Which trust bill?

Mr. MORGAN. The one that is coming to us.

Mr. President, the object of this long delay is not so much to defeat the statehood of these Territories. It is to defeat something else that lies behind it. It is utterly unjustifiable. There is no excuse for it, and so the people of the United States will pronounce when they get a chance to express their opinion upon it.

We have stood here in the presence of a solemn treaty duty for two months, after having stood in its presence for many years, and we have deliberately refused to perform it without having just cause or excuse. There is no substantial reason why these States should not be admitted into the Union. You may take Arizona or New Mexico and take all the Mexicans and all the Indians in those two Territories and replace them with negroes taken from Alabama and Mississippi and you will not have so enlightened a population as you have there now. Yet, I suppose that if Alabama or Mississippi or Louisiana were to ask for admission into the American Union now no objection would be made on account of the population, at least four-tenths of which in some of those States and a majority in others are negroes—uneducated, uninformed, incapable of participating intelligently in a republican and complex form of government.

In some of the Southern States the negroes are in the majority. So in Louisiana, so in Mississippi. What would become of those States, or Territories like them, if they were here asking to be admitted into the Union now, upon the basis of unfitness for participation in statehood? Who will not say that the Mexicans and the Indians in New Mexico and in Arizona are more intelligent, better fitted for participation in republican government than the negroes of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, or South Carolina?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not want to be interrupted by the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will not interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. MORGAN. I like to see the Senator on the floor, but he has been so much on it that I prefer to speak without being interrupted.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, we ought to have in this country, since we have got to be 125 years old or more under the Constitution, some sobriety of judgment and some respect for truth and facts, and we ought not to be led off by the demands of party requirements and under party alignment to do absurd and false things that are against the sentiment of the American people and are opposed to the Constitution of the United States.

Very little has been said about the basic fact which underlies our action here, and about the requirement of an obligation that rests upon us with a burden we can not possibly shake off if we have any possible self-respect. I propose to go into the subject of that duty; to ascertain where it comes from; to ascertain the measure of it, and to see if I can not persuade these gentlemen to join me in trying to perform it.

When we made the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo with Mexico, by the terms of which we acquired vast territory to the west of us, which was done in 1848, we put into it the ninth article, which reads as follows:

> The Mexicans who, in the territories aforesaid, shall not preserve the character of citizens of the Mexican Republic conformably with what is stipulated in the preceding article, shall be incorporated into the Union of the United States and be admitted at the proper time (to be judged by the Congress of the United States) to the enjoyment of all the rights of citizens of the United States, according to the principles of the Constitution, and in the meantime shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty and property and secured in the free exercise of their religion without restriction.

Three years later, when the Gadsden treaty came to be negotiated and we wanted more land down there, including a large portion of that which is now New Mexico and Arizona, we presented through our negotiators another stipulation which takes the place of the one I have just read, to make it more obligatory and broader. They say in that protocol:

> The American Government, by suppressing the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo and substituting the third article of the treaty of Louisiana, did not intend to diminish in any way what was agreed upon by the aforesaid article 9 in favor of the inhabitants of the Territories ceded by Mexico. Its understanding is that all of that agreement is contained in the third article of the treaty of Louisiana. In consequence all the privileges and guarantees, civil, political, and religious, which would have been possessed by the inhabitants of the ceded Territories, if the ninth article of the treaty had been retained, will be enjoyed by them without any difference under the article which has been substituted.

Now, let us see what it was that we guaranteed in the third article of the treaty for the Louisiana Purchase, which is substituted for the ninth article in the treaty of Guadulupe-Hidalgo by a protocol that was three years younger than it:

> The inhabitants of the ceded territory shall be incorporated in the Union of the United States and admitted as soon as possible according to the principles of the Federal Constitution to the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities of citizens of the United States; and in the meantime they shall be maintained and protected in the free enjoyment of their liberty, property, and the religion which they profess.

This can mean nothing else than a pledge of their admission to statehood "in the Union of the United States)" and that they shall be admitted "as soon as possible," not as soon as it may be convenient in a Presidential election.

Now, what else can that mean, when we say in this protocol that we do not change anything in the ninth article of the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo relating to the rights and liberties belonging to the people we took in there, and gave them the option of becoming citizens of the United States, and then we go and add to it what I have just read here from the third article of the treaty of Louisiana? Admitted to what? Citizenship. At the discretion of Congress as it was in the ninth article? No. The discretion is stricken out. It is a national obligation that they shall be admitted. Admitted to what? Statehood.

These very people comprised a part of one of the States of Mexico at the time they were admitted into our Union—the State of Sonora. The State of Sonora had its representatives in the National Congress of the Republic of Mexico. They had also their local government and governors elected by them. They had the right to the ballot, and there is not a male citizen 21 years of age in Mexico to-day—Indian, negro, white man, or Mexican—who is not entitled to vote in every election, and there never has been since the Republic was first established.

We took those people, citizens of a sovereign State of Mexico, with far greater powers of sovereignty than our States possess—very far greater—we bought them from Santa Anna; we paid him $10,000,000 additional for the Gadsden Purchase. But the question arose, What is to become of those people whom we were denationalizing and depriving of the liberties which they enjoyed under the Mexican constitution?

The treaty provided that they should have the option to remain in these Territories and own and keep their property under all circumstances. In addition to that, that they should have the option of becoming citizens of the United States or they should have the option of remaining citizens of Mexico. If they should prefer the last proposition, what they had to do is substantially what we required the people of Cuba to do. They shall register as Mexican citizens, that is all.

They expected to get as many liberties, as well secured by constitutional guaranties, under this Government as they had under Mexico. They had in Mexico all the blessings and benefits of statehood that we propose to extend to them. Was it our agreement that we should take them out of that statehood which they enjoyed in Mexico under a liberal constitution, where they were not sovereign in respect to foreign powers, but had all those rights and privileges which our States here enjoy; and, more, was it understood that we were to take these Mexicans out from under their constitutions, State and Federal, and transfer them to this lower condition of Territorial subordination and keep them there until it pleased the politicians of the United States, and in particular of New England, that they might come into the Union?

They could not deal with the United States personally. They were a conquered people. We made solemn promises to their Government to protect all the rights and liberties they enjoyed by giving them the full powers of citizenship of States in our Union, and because they were impotent to force our compliance with our pledges we upbraid them and rebuke them with scorn and contempt, because they even dare to petition us.

Our political assurances are as strong as possible, but our performance is contemptuous refusal.

Did we promise them perpetual subordination, as Territories, that should receive all their officers as gifts from the President? No, sir; no such contemplation was in that treaty; just the reverse of it; and when we fail to execute in behalf of the Mexican citizens there this third article of the treaty of Louisiana we violate our obligations to the Government, to God, and to man. That is what we are doing here.

We are denying the privileges that we solemnly promised them in the treaty, and we talk about it, Mr. President, as twittingly as we would to a canary bird that sings its song in a cage. What we shall do with these people is a mere by-play. They are supposed to be in the same condition as the Indians that we found on this continent when we landed here, and we are treating them just as if they were aboriginal Indian tribes. We are treating them precisely as Massachusetts and Connecticut and all New England down to Rhode Island treated the Indians when they first landed there, as the occupants of a soil that God had set apart for His elect, and then they voted themselves to be the elect and proceeded to govern it. That is the situation.

We agreed to treat them as citizens of the United States, and kept the promise by treating them as we did the alleged savages.

It is true, Mr. President, that there is no one to confront us with a demand that we shall do this right to these Mexican people, because Mexico is not able to do it. But if we had acquired these people from Great Britain or from Germany, with this guaranty in their favor, and had waited fifty or sixty years and then announced our determination to admit them whenever it suited a certain political party and not before, an inquiry would be instituted here, Why have you violated the obligation of that treaty? Why have you done it? What do you mean by putting those obligations in the treaty and then turning on your heel and saying that you would not execute it until the politics of your party got to suit your tastes in this matter? But we are compelled by a minority to stand here and violate these obligations in a cowardly way because we think that Mexico can not compel us to comply with them. That is what we are doing.

Now, what is a treaty with a foreign country? The Constitution of the United States defines it to be the supreme law of the United States. I can think of no higher grade of legislative enactment than that. I can conceive no duty that is more obligatory upon the citizens and upon the States than to obey the supreme law enacted by the Congress of the United States and the laws that are declared supreme by the Constitution of the United States; and treaties are so expressly declared to be supreme.

Can we evade these, Mr. President? What are we doing when we take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States if we intend to except from it all the treaty obligations with foreign countries that do not suit us? What becomes of that personal duty?

I ask again, what is a treaty? I have given one definition that ought to satisfy any American mind as to what it is and the obligations that it imposes. I will go further and I will inquire into the manner in which it is negotiated. A treaty with a foreign power is negotiated by a separate constitutional department of the United States. It is not the President, it is not the Senate, it is not Congress. It is the President and the Senate cooperating together as a special tribunal, the Senate acting by a vote of two-thirds of the majority of a quorum, advising and consenting as to what shall be done in respect of the ratification of a treaty that the President has negotiated as a convenience of the diplomatic part of our Government and has brought to us and submitted with a view to its ratification. That is the tribunal—peculiar, separate, having powers of its own—that enacts supreme law on our part.

Who is the other party to the legislative procedure by which this becomes supreme law? The foreign government. It may be Santo Domingo or Haiti; it may be Cuba; it may be Mexico; it may be some other country. That country, acting according to its own laws, whatever they may be in respect of the creation of treaties, informs us of its willingness to consider a proposition for a treaty proposed by the President of the United States, and thereupon the plan of the negotiation is drawn up and concluded, and the President submits it to the Senate of the United States, where it must get a two-thirds majority of a quorum; otherwise we can not ratify it and it can not become a law. Then it is taken to the other contracting party, and, according to the laws of that government, whatever they may be, it is acted upon there.

So whatever those laws may be, Mr. President, we invite that foreign government to cooperate with the Senate of the United States in the enactment of a law which will be the supreme law of the United States, and which, if it is violated on the part of the other contracting party, will be made supreme law over them at the mouths of our cannon if they refuse to comply with it. The real sanction of every treaty is arms, war, and nothing else.

This majestic system of laws thus pronounced upon by the Constitution of the United States in cooperation with a foreign government does not have a marshal or a sheriff to enforce it or a hangman to execute it. It has the power of the Army any Navy behind it, and either of the contracting parties has a right to resort to that power whenever that treaty is broken.

We thus get some conception of what is meant by these obligations, their majesty, their importance, the imperious duty of obeying them.

What is the reason that Mexico can not say to us to-day, "Why is it that you have delayed so long in bringing these people into the Union?" "It is because these two Territories are full of Greasers—full of Mexicans," we answer. "Who were there when you bought that country and made this promise? These same Mexicans," Mexico replies. "These men are the children and the grandsons of the very men with whom you made this stipulation, and it was their representatives in the Government of Mexico who entered into this engagement."

Now, we come and answer Mexico upon a demand of that sort and say, "That country is all full of Greasers, Mexicans, Indians, and Mormons, and we are under no obligation to admit such people as those into our Union." Mexico again replies: "If you are under no obligation, why did you make it? Why did you undertake it, and what are you doing but preying upon the imbecility of these people to help themselves and the disposition of Mexico to keep peace with you, or else because she thinks that the sacrifice is not worth the dangers that she will have to encounter before she gets through." These are not actual situations, Mr. President, but they would be actual if justice was done to these people.

We can not answer for this matter entirely to ourselves, because it is a treaty obligation and two Governments are parties to that treaty, and the Government of Mexico has as much right to say that that treaty and our promises under it shall be enforced as we have. The world has the right to accuse us.

We have a great many treaties, Mr. President. Under the express language of the Constitution we have made and ratified by the Senate of the United States 365 treaties with Indian tribes in this country, besides a number of contracts that we have made with them of equal obligation on our part since we changed the laws so that the tribal relation of Indians should not longer be consulted in making contracts with them, and all dealings with them have become a matter of private and personal contract, subject to the ratification of the two Houses of Congress.

The 365 treaties that I refer to were ratified by the Senate. The House had not anything to do with them. Up to that period of time we regarded them as nationalities, subordinate of course, appended to our nationality, our great Republic, but at the same time endowed by our Constitution with sufficient power and right to make a treaty with us; and a treaty meant a treaty with them as well as it did with Mexico. So it had to be ratified by the Senate.

When, however, wars with the Indians had progressed to that extent that we could declare by law, as we did in effect in the law we then enacted, that tribal organization no longer existed so as to authorize them to enter into treaty relations with the United States, from that time forward we ceased to make treaties to be ratified by the Senate, and we took up the subject and ratified them by law, and since that time there have been at least another hundred contracts made with Indian tribes, they voting by majorities, etc.

Now, we have made no contract with any Indian tribe, by treaty or otherwise, that is more obligatory upon us than this engagement that we made with the Government of Mexico. This engagement when it was made was first in the form that inured to the individual Mexican citizen, leaving his political rights out of consideration and subject to be dealt with and disposed of by Congress. Then we changed that and adopted for the government of this situation the third article of the Louisiana treaty, as I have read it, changing their rights from personal rights into political rights, so as to bring them up in the United States to the same standard they occupied under their own Government of Mexico, where they had rights as citizens of States and rights as citizens of a Republic. This change was agreed to by Mexico. I do not know by which of the contracting parties it was demanded.

So, Mr. President, the obligation of this treaty is more binding upon us, more imperative, than the obligations of the treaties we made with the Indian tribes, these 365 treaties that the Senate has ratified or those that have since been made and which have been adopted by acts of Congress, because the Mexicans were not under our power when we made it.

Now, Mr. President, are these trifling matters? Are these ordinary duties and privileges of legislation that we can kick off like an old shoe and go along quietly and suppose ourselves to be in the discharge of a duty? When we keep the Congress of the United States and the whole country for two months at a time in a state of mental anxiety and distress we refuse to do our duty and give no sufficient excuse for it. That is what we are doing.

All the political elections, resolutions, and conventions that will assemble from now until doomsday can not wash out this thing, Mr. President. Possibly it may carry elections; we do not know. But that is a poor atonement for a broken conscience and a wounded public spirit. An American Senator ought not to think of it for one second, especially when all political parties have pledged themselves to this plain duty.

What are these objections to statehood? Mr. President, if I were to go through the whole list I would have to take up everything imaginable and unimaginable that could be uttered in the form of an objection to admitting these people to statehood. To read these debates one would think, first of all, that they were entirely unfit, personally, physically, morally, mentally, and religiously, to keep company with the people in certain parts of the American Union. It could not be admitted for a second that they were fit people to keep company with the negroes in Alabama. Certainly not.

I represent the negroes in Alabama. If I were influenced by the same ideas these gentlemen have taken so much pains to speak about here, and who seem to feel the situation so sensitively, do you suppose, Mr. President, that I would ever permit the greasers from Mexico who made this treaty with us, who sold us this land, to come into the State of Alabama, or into our Union, and enjoy the rights of citizenship and associate with my constituents from Africa? How could I permit such a thing as that? It would offend the whole of my Congo constituency that such people coming from these degraded Territories into Alabama should presume to take their place by our side as citizens of the State and of the United States. They are such by the Constitution, but that is all a mere jest, an hallucination, that must have been put in there to deceive somebody. It was not a promise made in good faith, for the reason that it has not been kept. The best test whether a promise is made in good faith is whether it has been kept. I do not know of any other test that is as good as that. If we do not keep a promise, it must be because we never intended to keep it.

Here we are turning up our sanctified noses and refusing to admit to citizenship in the United States or to any sort of recognition the very men with whom we made that treaty. Many of those people were soldiers in arms, who fought us at Buena Vista, Palo Alto, and other places, preceding this great cataclysm in Mexico. New Mexico and Arizona, then a part of Sonora, furnished their quota of soldiers to the Mexican army, just as we were told here the other day by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] of three Mexican regiments that went out from New Mexico and behaved with remarkable courage and sagacity and endurance during our great civil war. We were dealing with men then, and we are dealing with them or their descendants now, who bore the arms of Mexico in battle, and for whom Mexico felt the deepest grief on parting and undertook to provide by treaty with an honorable nation that their people should have privileges in the United States equivalent to those they left under their own banner.

Some of the brightest and best spirits, Mr. President, on the continent of America were amongst that class of people, even in New Mexico and Arizona. They are there now—men of great ability; men of courage, accomplishments, of fine taste and high knowledge of statesmanship and legislation, and a still higher knowledge of honor, a sentiment that they claim and are entitled to claim—something that is not to be laughed at, Mr. President, or thrown aside at will.

The Indians in New Mexico are spoken of as a thriftless, vagabond race, unfit for participation in civil government, who can not understand the ballot, and who do not know enough to go through a court as a witness with credit; who can not perform any of the functions of social life without a prompter or an interpreter—a set of people who are better off, to be taken care of by the Government of the United States, than they would be inside of a State where they would be required to take care of themselves.

We condemn them to political ostracism and fix no period in the future for their restoration to civil rights until it shall suit the policy of certain States or certain statesmen who aspire to the Presidency of the United States.

Senators forget, Mr. President, if they ever knew—and I do not think they ever knew—the differences in the tribes of Indians in this country. Do they not know that the Mexican Indians whom we obtained under these treaties have been always self-sustaining people and are yet, and have never drawn any support from the Government of the United States, unless it might be at some moment when dire distress and famine had come upon them in a way that would excite the commiseration and pity of the hardest heart?

Take the Arapaho and their old chief, Geronimo; and take the Zuñi and their houses built up in the cliffs, the cliff dwellers, and the Navaho. Go amongst them as we have been going amongst them for fifty years, and what do we find? We find the Arapaho and Navaho out grazing their flocks of sheep, shearing off the wool, dying it with most beautiful colors, making it into blankets that they can sell at from $15 to $20. We find them and the Zuñi gathering melons and harvests of grain and storing it away in receptacles that they have carved in the rocks, and they keep it there from year to year, sometimes having as much as two years' supply on hand at one time. We find them going out and digging a hole in the ground 3 feet deep, planting grains of corn in them, and getting the moisture of the soil in that way, so that when the corn is in full ear and tassel it is just a little above the top of the ground, and out of such a soil in such a country making a good support, and coming here with no petitions even for support.

If the balance of the American Indians had been as industrious and thrifty as these Navahos and Arapahoes and Zuñis this Government would have been saved millions upon millions of money, and we would have a much more stalwart and self-dependent Indian population than we have to-day.

They have set us a high example, Mr. President, in Indian life and in Indian progress. They have arts to which we are strangers; they have facilities of handiwork and hand decoration that put us to the blush. They have had the courage to stand there and battle with the hot winds of the desert and the colder winds of winter through ages and ages. We can not trace their history back to its fountain source.

There they are, a steadfast, honest, God-fearing people. When I say "God-fearing," Mr. President, I mean that they have a God of their own, and he is a very good one for an Indian—a good moral contrivance, with a code of justice and mercy. They show both genius and skill in the creation of their divinities. They worship them with profound devotion, and it has been that worship which has kept those people to their duty, which has kept them in the line which the Almighty intended everybody to go—that is, of self-preservation and hard, honest, good work. When they are ready to receive it, and when we have done our duty, they will read from the sacred Scriptures with joy what they now learn from nature "as through a glass darkly."

Mr. President, we have not been doing justice to the Indian tribes in the United States. We have in recent years been very benevolent toward them, since we got rich, and this Senate has been the theater of some splendid actions in their behalf. There was one distinguished Senator, who has recently gone to his long and honored rest, who for forty years in Congress toiled and worked with his brethren to get them to have some idea of compassion upon the Indian people and to provide some measures suited to their convenience, their growth, and their progress, and at last he was the man to break down the Indian wars.

It was not our knives, our guns, our torches, or even our whisky that broke down those nations and caused them to submit to the rule of temperance, peace, and prosperity; it was the good labors of a noble heart like Henry L. Dawes, aided as he has been in a most conspicuous manner by the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]; but until those two great Senators got their hands and hearts together upon the work the knife, the cartridge, the torch, and the whisky jug were the weapons with which we always attacked the Indians all over this country. That has been changed. The homesteads which those Senators have caused the Indians to make, many of them, are blooming with prosperity and peace and contentment to-day. First one Indian went out, took his homestead, and made his selection upon the domains of a reservation where he had been located and kept in prison bounds, he and his tribe, for years and years together.

Then others came, and gradually this system has supplanted the old one, even in the estimation of the Indians themselves, until they have concluded it is best not to earn a living by hunting and by killing white people, but to earn it by cultivating the ground.

What has worked this great revolution in this land until now we never dream of such a thing as an Indian uprising? It is not because the Indian has changed his nature; it is not because he has become a coward; it is not because he has forgotten the enticements of the hunt or the foray, but it is because these men, and others working with them, have set such an example to the individual man that, seeing the better way, they follow it.

Mr. President, it is appropriate, just in point, for me to make some observations upon Indian characteristics at large and some slight allusion to the great currents of history that they have been floating in and upon for near four hundred years. It has been about four centuries that we have been dealing with those people. In 1620, or about that time, was the first encounter we ever had with them of a belligerent nature—four hundred years, practically—and in that time far more has been told than I could tell, and far more could be told than ever will be told to their credit, because the facts have disappeared. But we have been the historians of the Indians.

They have written no books; they could not write a book; they had to rely upon us for their history, and the men who have engaged in campaigns with Indian warriors and in teaching them have collected volumes of tradition of which I was speaking a while ago, have studied them closely, and learned their history, which has been most intensely interesting always. They have given us books. I do not know any Indian history in the United States which has acquired a character for being either uncertain or unreliable. I therefore go to our own historians to find out what the Indians did and what they said and how they said it and what sort of characters they were, and I propose to take a little time to-day to do that.

But before proceeding to do this, Mr. President, I wish to draw attention to a contrast between our method of dealing with the Indians and that of the Spaniards. The Spaniards were much wiser in their dealing with the Indians than we have been. Perhaps they had better reasons for being so, inasmuch as there was not much of actual Spanish colonization upon either the Northern and Southern Hemispheres of America or in Central America. What they got and what they held they had to hold by the strength of local Indian power—a very different situation. What we got up in New England and everywhere we got by the sword; we drove the Indians back.

England could spread her population over this country with ships and reenforce her colonies. That plan they had begun at Plymouth Rock or in that vicinity, and it has pushed its way, carrying the Indians in a body before it, until now it has reached across the continent to the Pacific Ocean, and we have got the Indians huddled up in the interior of the country, in the arid lands chiefly. But the Spaniards, Mr. President, knowing that the empire conducted by them must have the support of the local population, began by giving to all the Indians their homesteads, their localities, and their rights. I do not remember any Spanish history—and I do not believe anybody can cite an instance—where a tribe of Indians was taken by the Spanish Government and removed from one location to another.

Now, if there is any Senator within the sound of my voice who will cite me to an instance of that kind, I shall be very much obliged to him. My reading has not shown me any such instance, and I do not believe it exists. When the Spaniards found the Indians in a particular locality, they allowed them to remain there; they set apart homes for them, protected them in their homes, and gave them all the rights of citizenship so far as their property was concerned. Voting did not amount to much, for the Spanish monarchy was not controlled by elections and voting. There was no voting done in that country.

But another thing took place. The Spaniards are the only people in the world who have ever been able to make the American Indian give up his natural dialect and adopt their language. You may begin at the northern boundary of Mexico, amongst the blackest and poorest of Indians in that country, and go down to Patagonia, all through South America and Central America, and you will not find an Indian in all that country who can not speak more or less Spanish, and who does not use that as his mother tongue really. The Spanish language diffused itself throughout all the tribes of this vast country lying between Mexico—which then reached up far north of California, if it did not reach to Oregon, and they say it did, and rightfully, too—clear down through both continents and through Central America to Patagonia.

We have tried to get the Indians to speak our language, but we have had no success. They have refused to do it. I have been myself in Indian schools. I have been on the Indian Committee for a long time. We used to take little excursions down into the Indian country. We visited those establishments that the Government has built. One of them was away out above Fort Reno, in what is now Oklahoma—a handsome boarding house where the children were all taken care of, boys and girls.

The Indians around there were living in tepees. There was not an Indian in all that country who had a house; they all lived under tents. We would see these little boys and girls go to the blackboards and write off exercises in English, do sums in arithmetic, and make maps, and the like of that, the English teachers telling them what to do, what particular exercise to engage in, until we supposed it was really so, that they understood the English language very well, quite well enough to converse in it fluently; but if we spoke in English to those same little fellows out of doors they would no more listen to us than if they had been a lot of pigs. Nothing could induce them to say a word of English. They despise it, and they never would speak it unless it was under the rod of the schoolmaster. So it was and so it is with the grown-up Indian.

I recollect on one occasion we went on one of these excursions, looking into the condition of the Indian tribes, and we went down to the Creek country. A large, fine-looking man came in, black as he could be, evidently negroid—either that or else he belonged to some of those Moorish North African families. He was introduced to us as the speaker of the house of representatives, and we were told that he spoke the English language fluently and understood every word, but he brought an interpreter with him and set the interpreter down by his side. We put questions to him and the interpreter had to translate them to him, although he knew just as well as the interpreter exactly what we said, but it had to be done before we could get anything out of him.

He would answer us through the interpreter again and would ask the interpreter to put his answer into English. This went on a good while, when some of us objected and said: "Why, here, you can speak the English language, and you ought to do it; it is hardly fair to have this rigmarole going on of having the interpreter interpret our questions to you and your answering him, and he interpreting the answer back to us, when you know every word we say." All he said in reply was just this: "Gentlemen, you will have to excuse me;" and we did have to excuse him. They will not speak the English language, the reason being that they have got a contempt and an abhorrence for the men who speak it. That is the only version of it. I have known many an Indian who knew how to speak English well who would not say a word of it.

It is quite different with Spanish. The Indians do not have that feeling toward the Spaniards; they do not feel as if the Spaniards had entered their country for the purpose of robbing them of their homes and driving them off; and that is the difference between the two.

Now, I want to read from an accepted historian some little parts of their history, not very extensive any of them. I want to show that these people that we say are unfit for statehood, unfit to participate in civil government, and all that, have the characteristics that belong to true republicans. When you educate them they are not only intelligent, but they are true, virtuous, and reliable. Such are their natural characteristics.

I wish to quote from Turner's Traits of Indian Character. These are very old writings, written away back in 1834 and 1836; not new inventions by any means.

In civilized life, where the happiness and, indeed, almost existence of man depends so much upon the opinion of his fellow-men, he is constantly acting a studied part—

Putting on, as the girls say—

The bold, peculiar traits of native character are refined away or softened down by the leveling influence of what is called good breeding, and he practices so many deceptions and affects so many generous sentiments for the purposes of popularity that it is difficult to distinguish his real from his artificial character.

The Indian, on the contrary, free from the restraints and refinements of polished life and, in a great degree, a solitary and independent being, obeys the impulses of his inclination or the dictates of his judgment, and thus the attributes of his nature, being freely indulged, grow singularly great and striking. Society is like a lawn where every roughness is smoothed, every bramble eradicated, and where the eye is delighted by the smiling verdure of a velvet surface. He, however, who would study nature in its wildness and variety must plunge into the forest, must explore the glen, must stem the torrent, and dare the precipice.

These reflections arose on casually looking through a volume of early colonial history, wherein are recorded with great bitterness the outrages of the Indians and their wars upon the settlers of New England. It is painful to perceive, even from these partial narratives, how the footsteps of civilization may be traced in the blood of the aborigines; how easily the colonists were moved to hostility by the lust of conquest; how merciless and exterminating was their warfare. The imagination shrinks at the idea—how many intellectual beings were hunted from the earth, how many brave and noble hearts of nature's sterling coinage were broken down and trampled in the dust!

Such was the fate of Philip of Pokanoket, an Indian warrior, whose name was once a terror throughout Massachusetts and Connecticut. He was the most distinguished of a number of contemporary sachems who reigned over the Pequods, the Narrhagansets, Wappanoags, and the other Eastern tribes, at the time of the first settlement of New England—a band of native, untaught heroes who made the most generous struggles of which human nature is capable; fighting to the last gasp in the cause of their country, without a hope of victory or a thought of renown. Worthy of an age of poetry, and fit subjects for local story and romantic fiction, they have left scarcely any authentic traces on the page of history, but stalk like gigantic shadows in the dim twilight of tradition.

I ask leave to insert in my remarks some further extracts from this work. I do not want to weary the Senate by reading them, but Senators can read them for themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLARD in the chair). The extracts referred to by the Senator from Alabama will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

When the Pilgrims (as the Plymouth settlers are called by their descendants) first took refuge on the shores of the New World from the religious persecutions of the Old, their situation was, to the last degree, gloomy and disheartening. Few in number, and that number rapidly perishing away through sickness and hardships, surrounded by a howling wilderness and savage tribes, exposed to the rigors of an almost arctic winter and the vicissitudes of an ever shifting climate, their minds were filled with doleful forebodings, and nothing preserved them from sinking into despondency but the strong excitement of religious enthusiasm.

In this forlorn situation they were visited by Massasoit, chief sagamore of the Wampanoags, a powerful chief who reigned over a great extent of country. Instead of taking advantage of the scanty number of the strangers and expelling them from his territories, into which they had intruded, he seemed at once to conceive for them a generous friendship, and extended toward them the rites of primitive hospitality. He came early in the spring to their settlement of New Plymouth, attended by a mere handful of followers, entered into a solemn league of peace and amity, sold them a portion of the soil, and promised to secure for them the good will of his savage allies.

Whatever may be said of Indian perfidy, certain it is that the good faith and integrity of Massasoit have never been impeached. He continued a firm and magnanimous friend of the white men, suffering them to extend their possessions and to strengthen themselves in the land, and betraying no jealousy of their increasing power and prosperity. Such was Massasoit.

Shortly before his death he came once more to New Plymouth, with his son Alexander, for the purpose of renewing the covenant of peace and securing it to his posterity. At this conference he endeavored to protect the religion of his forefathers from the encroaching zeal of the missionaries, and stipulated that no further attempt should be made to draw off his people from their ancient faith. But, finding the English obstinately opposed to any such condition, he mildly relinquished the demand.

Almost the last act of his life was to bring his two sons, Alexander and Philip (as they had been named by the English), to the residence of the principal settler, recommending mutual kindness and covenants, and entreating that the same love and amity which had existed between the white men and himself might be continued afterwards with his children. The good old sachem died in peace, and was happily gathered to his fathers before sorrow came upon his tribe. His children remained behind, but experienced the ingratitude of white men.

His eldest son, Alexander, succeeded him. He was of a quick and impetuous temper and proudly tenacious of his hereditary rights and dignity. The intrusive policy and dictatorial conduct of the strangers excited his indignation, and he beheld with uneasiness their exterminating wars with the neighboring tribes. He was doomed soon to incur their hostility, being accused of plotting with the Narragansetts to rise against the English and drive them from the land. It is impossible to say whether this accusation was warranted by facts or was grounded on mere suspicions. It is evident, however, by the violent and overbearing measures of the settlers, that they had, by this time, begun to feel conscious of the rapid increase of their power and to grow harsh and inconsiderate in their treatment of the natives.

They dispatched an armed force to seize upon Alexander and to bring him before their court. He was traced to his woodland haunts and surprised at a hunting house, where he was reposing with a band of his followers, unarmed, after the toils of the chase. The suddenness of his arrest and the outrage offered to his sovereign dignity so preyed upon the irascible feelings of this proud savage as to throw him into a raging fever. He was permitted to return home on condition of sending his son as a pledge for his reappearance. But the blow his feelings had received was fatal, and before he reached his home he fell a victim to the agonies of a wounded spirit.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, Mr. President, I want to read from our historians some things that might possibly be called anecdotes. They are short statements of very important truths relating to the Indians, but they will serve, because the cases are perfectly authentic and the names are perfectly known, to show that in dealing with these people we have not treated them according to their natural characteristics and gifts, but we have treated them always as if they were not only inferiors, but as if they deserved to be kicked out of the world, and their homes, of course, taken away from them. They would not have deserved that if they had not had good lands, a pretty country, nice streams, magnificent forests, and good crop lands.

The first man to whom I call the attention of the Senate is the man for whom those beautiful mountains and the beautiful river beyond the Potomac were named—old Shenandoah.

This celebrated chief, whose life measured a century, died in 1816. He was well known in the wars which occurred while the United States were British colonies, and also in the war of the Revolution, as the undeviating friend of the Americans.

In his youth he was very savage and addicted to drunkenness, but by the force of reflection and the benevolent exhortations of a missionary to the tribe he lived a reformed man for more than sixty years and died in Christian hope.

In 1775 Shennandoh was present at a treaty made in Albany.

That treaty was made by Brandt.

At night he was exceedingly drunk, and in the morning found himself in the street, stripped of all his ornaments and every article of clothing. His pride revolted at his self-degradation, and he resolved never more to deliver himself over to the power "of strong water."

But Shenandoah remembered, as every other Indian has remembered, through his whole life that it was the white man who made the whisky. The Indian did not know how to make it. He could only die at the hands of the white man through that serpentine and insidious agent. That is the worst shame we have ever inflicted upon ourselves as well as upon the Indians.

Shenandoah's person was tall and muscular, but well made. His countenance was intelligent and beamed with all the ingenuous dignity of an Indian chief. In youth, he was brave and intrepid; in his riper years, one of the ablest counselors among the North American tribes. He possessed a strong and vigorous mind, and though terrible as the tornado in war, he was bland and mild as the zephyr in peace. With the cunning of the fox, the hungry perseverance of the wolf, the agility of the mountain cat, he watched and repelled—

What?

Canadian invasion. His vigilance once preserved from massacre the inhabitants of the then infant settlements of the German flats. His influence brought his tribe to assist the Americans in their war of the Revolution. His many friendly actions in their behalf gained for him among the Indian tribes the appellation of the "white man's friend."

To a friend who called to see him in his wane—he was then blind—he thus expressed himself:

"I am an aged hemlock—the winds of a hundred winters have whistled through my branches—I am dead at the top. The generation to which I belong have run away and left me. Why I live the Great Spirit alone knows. Pray to my Jesus that I may have patience to wait for my appointed time to die."

There is not a man, perhaps, in this Senate who could speak a prayer more intelligently or more touchingly than grand old Shenandoah spoke that prayer. He had been the friend of the white man, because he saw that the white man's road led to prosperity.

I will now read you the petition of Peter Harris to the legislature of South Carolina. I am trying to find what these men were thinking about and how they regarded the world around them, what opinions they formed of men and things as they went through in their careers.

The following touching petition from Peter Harris, one of the surviving remnants of the powerful Catawba Nation in South Carolina, was presented to the legislature of that State several years after the war of the Revolution:

To the council of South Carolina:

I am one of the lingering embers of an almost expired race. Our graves will soon be our habitation. I am one of the few stalks that still remain in the field, when the tempest of the revolution is past. I fought against the British for your sake. The British have disappeared, and you are free. Yet from me the British took nothing, nor have I gained anything by their defeat. I pursue deer for my subsistence; the deer are disappearing, and I must starve. God ordained me for the forest, and my habitation is the shade. But the strength of my arm decays and my feet falter in the chase. The hand which fought for your liberty is now open for your relief. In my youth I bled in battle that you might be independent, but let not my heart in my old age bleed for the want of your commiseration.

PETER HARRIS.

We may say that Peter Harris got somebody to write that. He may have done so; I do not know; but yet there were orators whose sayings were recorded by such men as Lewis Cass, De Witt Clinton, and others, who spoke quite as eloquently as this. But it was true. There was a man who, because he was an Indian, in his old age, like old Shenandoah, passed off out of the reach of history until some reason made it necessary, for the love of truth, and now permits me, to recall it here in the Senate of the United States. I thank God that it is my right, Mr. President, to speak a word for Shenandoah and Peter Harris in the midst of this august assembly.

The Indian sense of honor stood above every trait of his character. I knew it when I was a child. It was my fortune, Mr. President, to be thrown amongst the Indians for years when I was a boy from 8 to 12 years old, and I knew them well, particularly the Creeks and the Cherokees. I lived on the border line between the two, away far removed from any towns or settlements. I knew them in their homes. I knew them in a way that a boy knows a man when he begins to love him for his kindness, for his virtues, and for his goodness.

I am not a stranger to these people, and amongst them, from the very beginning of my experience, I saw, as everybody who ever had contact with them saw, that it was their personal integrity which they rested upon. Integrity was the Indian's standard of manhood, and he would put up with no man who deceived him and he would deceive no man except an enemy. With the man with whom he was engaged in a fight he would take the same liberties that our generals take in strategy and strict warfare, but beyond that he would not go.

I will read a little incident that occurred in the year 1824:

In the year 1824, while far in the interior of the country in surveying the initiatory ceremonies of the Indian Mertay—one of their mystic societies—we ourselves saw a Chippewa whose grave and serious demeanor attracted our attention. His appearance led to the inquiry whether any peculiarity in his situation impressed upon his deportment the air of seriousness—it was too evident to be mistaken. It was ascertained that he had killed a Pottawatomie Indian during the preceeding season, and the Pottawatomies had made the usual demand for his surrender.

On a representation, however, that he was deeply in debt and that his immediate death would cause much injustice to some of the traders, the injured tribe at length agreed to postpone his execution until another season; so that the products of his winter's hunt might be applied to the discharge of his debts. He had been successful in his exertions and had paid the claims against him. He was about to leave his friends and to receive—with the fortitude of a warrior—the doom which awaited him. He was now for the last time enjoying the society of all who were dear to him. No man doubted his resolution—no man doubted his fate. Instructions, however, were given to the proper officer to redeem his life at the expense of the United States.

That may be said to be an antiquated case. Some persons have not heard of such virtues amongst the modern Indians. The Senator from Indiana probably did not inquire amongst the Indians to find whether anything of that kind had occurred in Arizona or New Mexico. I know that such things have occurred in the Indian Territory. They are sworn to and proven by witnesses of the highest possible repute.

A young Indian was condemned to death for murder there. He was condemned to be shot. They shoot their murderers instead of hanging them. He took his case to the supreme court of the Cherokee Nation. They have a supreme court consisting of three judges, who render written opinions, and they have all the paraphernalia of any State supreme court. The judges are men of ability. The judgment in his case was affirmed. The conviction stood. He was to die. They did not confine him. They discharged him on his own recognizance. They fixed the day of his death. They required him to attend on that day to be shot, and he came to Fort Gibson on that day in pursuance of that judgment and was executed.

Mr. President, what was that? It was not cowardice. It was not the expectation that he could not flee into the woods and escape his pursuers, nor was it the hope that some pity might spring up for him from some unexpected source. It was not that. He went there because he had given his word as a man that he would go and stand the ordeal, whatever it might be, and that word was worth more to him than all the world.

I can not conceive of a higher phase of human integrity than that, and I would risk that man as my boon companion and fellow-citizen with my life before I would risk many a white man I know of.

There is another case of that sort. I am a little particular about proving this fact, because I want to show that in the Indian character there is native integrity. Individuals may fail, of course, as we see amongst ourselves, but I want to show that that race of men have as characteristics high motives and proper ideas of the very highest capacities and the highest duties of mankind. No Indian ever broke a treaty, and few wars have occurred in the United States that have not been predicated by the Indians upon the very proposition that we broke some treaty. From the beginning, in the days of Philip, down to the present time that has been the question; and, Mr. President, we have suffered by it in history.

An Indian, some time since, guilty of the murder of Old Philip, another Indian, was taken into custody by the deputy sheriff in 1827 or 1828. He had been apprehended by his countrymen and taken to the nation, where he underwent his trial, was found guilty, and brought back to the spot where the crime was committed to undergo punishment.

On his arrival he was suffered to go at large till the day appointed for his execution, and during the interim appeared to enjoy himself as much as his comrades. On the appointed day he walked to the spot selected by himself, situated back of this town, decorated with ribands, and after digging his grave, danced around it, singing his death song.

From the Galena Advertiser, published, I suppose, when Galena was in a Territory many years ago, there is this extract:

There is no class of beings on earth who hold a pledge more sacred and binding than do the North American Indians. A sample of this was witnessed during the Winnebago war of 1827, in the person of Dek ker re, a celebrated chief of that nation, who, among four other Indians of his tribe, was taken prisoner at Prairie du Chien.

Colonel Snellin, of the Fifth Regiment of Infantry, who then commanded that garrison, dispatched a young Indian into the nation with orders to inform the other chiefs of Dek ker re's band that unless those Indians who were the perpetrators of the horrid murders of some of our citizens were brought to the fort and given up within ten days Dek ker re and the other four Indians who were detained as hostages would be shot at the end of that time. This awful sentence was pronounced in the presence of Dek ker re, who, though protesting his innocence of the outrage which had been committed by others of his nation, exclaimed that he feared not death, though it would be attended with serious consequences, inasmuch as he had two affectionate wives and a large family of small children who were entirely dependent on him for their support, but if necessary he was willing to die for the honor of his nation.

The young Indian had been gone several days, and no intelligence was yet received from the murderers. The dreadful day being near at hand and Dek ker re being in a bad state of health, asked permission of the colonel to go to the river to indulge in his long accustomed habit of bathing in order to improve his health. Upon which Colonel S. told him that if he would promise on the honor of a chief that he would not leave the town he might have his liberty, and enjoy all his privileges until the day of the appointed execution. Accordingly he first gave his hand to the colonel, thanked him for his friendly offer, then raised both his hands aloft and in the most solemn adjuration promised that he would not leave the bounds prescribed; and said "if he had a hundred lives he would sooner lose them all than forfeit his word or deduct from his proud nation one particle of its boasted honor." He was then set at liberty.

He was advised to flee to the wilderness and make his escape. "But no," said he. "Do you think I prize life above honor or that I would betray a confidence reposed in me for the sake of saving my life?" He then complacently remained until nine days of the ten which he had to live had elapsed; and nothing heard from the nation with regard to the apprehension of the murderers, his immediate death became apparent. But no alteration could be seen in the countenance of the chief. It so happened that on that day General Atkinson arrived with his troops from Jefferson Barracks, and the order for the execution was countermanded and the Indians were permitted to repair to their homes.

I will cite another authentic case:

In March, 1823, a Choctaw savage, calling himself Dr. Sibley, belonging to a wandering tribe of his nation in the Arkansas Territory, while in a state of intoxication stabbed to the heart another Indian, who instantly expired. This act called for revenge, founded on the lex talionis—that invariable custom of the aborigines. A brother of the deceased called upon Sibley and told him that he was come to take his life in atonement for the death of his brother. With the composure of a philosopher and the courage of a Roman, Sibley, readily and without a murmur, yielded assent, only desiring the execution might be postponed until the following morning. This was granted, the execution was postponed, and Sibley left at large under no restraint whatever.

When the morning came Sibley went out with the rest of the party and with perfect apathy aided in digging a grave for the murdered Indian. The work being finished, he calmly observed to the bystanders that he thought it large enough to contain two bodies, signifying at the same time a wish to be buried in the same grave. This, too, was granted; and the murderer deliberately took a standing position over the grave with outstretched arms, and giving the signal to fire, the brother drove a rifle ball through his heart, and he dropped into the hole he had assisted to make. Such are the wonderful workings of the human mind from impressions early instilled into it, as is the custom of savage life.

[We are told nothing here of the death song, but we are confident it must have taken place, as it is held indispensable under such circumstances.—Ed.]

I have read enough to show the intrepidity of these men, even to the sacrifice of their lives, in maintaining their word, and of course men who have such an idea as that of the strict faith of obligation naturally become aroused, indignant, and ferocious when they treat with a great neighbor and that neighbor, after being paid in full for all that he promises, turns his back on the Indian and scouts him and treats him as a usurper and as a man whose rights are to be taken from him just as may suit the neighbor's pleasure.

It is transactions of this kind which have kept in organization the great society of the most eminent men in the United States, and women, too, from the earliest stages of our history down to this date, who have their annual conventions in a place in New York, the name of which I do not remember for the moment, and who are headed by some of the bravest, ablest, truest, and some of the wealthiest men in America. What is it they are trying to do? To ameliorate the condition of the Indian. That has been their purpose always—to help the Indians along in civil life, so that they may follow, as they say, the white man's road and become accustomed to it in a way that will make them contented and happy.

These men have brought instance after instance in the history of Indians, perfectly authenticated, to the attention of this Government. I have been on the Indian Committee now for twenty-five years in this body, and have heard the story from year to year until I have become thoroughly convinced that much the larger part if not nearly all the wars we have engaged in with the Indians, which nnmber hundreds and hundreds of splendid battlefields, have been the result of the Indians attributing to us that we had broken faith with them in our treaties.

That is a terrible burden of accusation, Mr. President. I do not bring it. These American citizens, male and female, organizing themselves into committees, with annual meetings and meetings still more frequent than that, bring these complaints to us and urge them upon this body and upon the House and upon the President from year to year; and there must be something in all this worthy of our consideration, Mr. President.

Let me say something more about leading Indian chieftains.

Chief McIntosh lived in Alabama, what was then the great Mississippi territory. He was a very noted man. The McIntoshs and the McGillvarys and others of the Creek Indians there seem to have intermixed with the Scotch immigrants who came in, and all of those men became very distinguished. McIntosh was one of the first Indians in that tribe who ever sold any land to the United States, and the Indians were so suspicious of the United States at that time and so opposed to the mutilation of their domain that one of them killed McIntosh. It created, perhaps, the greatest excitement that ever occurred amongst the Muscokee tribe of Indians, then a very powerful body of men.

I read from Turner's books on Indian characteristics:

This address was pronounced by a chief, the leader of a party concerned in the murder of McIntosh, principal chief of the same nation with himself. McIntosh had been the prime instigator of forming a treaty with the United States, by which a portion of the Indian country was ceded to the States, a transaction which gave great umbrage to a numerous party in the Indian nation.

When I was a boy I heard of this great affair of McIntosh. The Indian who committed that crime—who killed McIntosh—makes this justification at a council of his tribe:

Brothers, McIntosh is dead. He broke the law of the nation—the law which he made himself. His face was turned to the white men who wished to take our land from us. His back was to his own people. His ears were shut to the cry of our women and children. His heart was estranged from us. The words of his talk were deceitful. They came to us like the sickly breeze that flies over the great river.

Brothers, McIntosh was brave. The deeds of his youth were valiant. But his heart became changed. He spoke the words of deceitfulness. He walked in crooked paths which his brothers knew not—paths which led down to death. He deceived us, and we slew him. The land is red with his blood and with the blood of his frends. Our vengeance is satisfied. We bury the hatchet of revenge. Let us obey the Great Spirit, that he may lead his children to the path of their wandering.

Who but a man who understood all the terrible blackness of treason to his tribe and to his God could have made that speech, and who but a great man could have made it? Brutus when he slew Cæsar could not have had imputed to him by the bard of the world prouder expressions and more eloquent language than that.

Joseph Brandt was a very highly educated man; for an Indian, he was remarkably well educated. He belonged to a Canadian tribe. But Joseph Brandt was the friend of the white man, and he has planted upon the history of this country monuments for himself grander than any we will ever be able to build for him in marble, and yet Joseph Brandt's name has gone down with infamy to coming generations because he dared to fight for his own people. I wish to read an incident in his life:

At the battle of "The Cedars," 30 miles above Montreal, on the St. Lawrence, Colonel McKinstry—then a captain in Patterson's regiment of Continental troops—being twice wounded, was taken prisoner by the Indians. The intrepidity of McKinstry as a partisan had rendered him alike the object of their fears and unforgiving resentment. The British officers were too much in dread of their savage allies, on account of their vast superiority of numbers, to risk an interposition of their authority to prevent the horrid sacifice they saw preparing. Already had the devoted victim been bound to the tree and surrounded by the faggots intended for his immolation. Hope had fled, and, in the agony of despair, he uttered that mystic appeal which the Brotherhood of Masons never disregard.

He was a Freemason.

When, as if heaven had interposed for his preservation, the Chieftain Brandt understood him and saved him.

Brandt had been educated in Europe, and had there been initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry. The advantages of education and his native strength of mind gave him an ascendancy over the uncultured sons of the forest that few other chiefs possessed. Situated as he was, the impending danger of a Masonic brother must have forcibly brought to mind his obligation to support him in the time of peril. His utmost endeavors were accordingly used, and they were, happily, successful in obtaining for him an immediate respite and an eventual ransom.

We can not suppose that a man like Brandt, who would do a thing of that sort, could go off for the mere sake of murder or mischief or arson or cruelty and perpetrate wrongs and hardships upon innocent people belonging to the white race. You can not suppose it. It is inconsistent with his character and his nature. But it was entirely consistent with the laws of war as they were understood by the Indians. They had their laws of war as we have ours. They practiced them. Yet in their practice they were scarcely more cruel than some of the practices we have inflicted upon people in the progress of their civilization in the Philippine Islands and elsewhere.

Here is a story told by General Knox. I am reading these things for the purpose of illustration and to bring the minds of Senators to an appreciation of the actual characteristics of these people.

In the city of NewYork, 1789, General Knox, then Secretary at War, gave a dinner to a number of Indians who had come on a mission from their nation to the President of the United States. A little before dinner was served up, two or three of the sachems, with their chief or principal men, ascended to a balcony which commanded a view of the city, the harbor, and Long Island.

They remained but a short time and returned apparently dejected—especially the chief. This was noticed by the Secretary, who said to him, "Brother, what has happened? You look sorry. Is there anything to distress you?" "I'll tell you, brother," said the chief. "I have been looking at your beautiful city, the great water, your fine country, and I see how you are situated. But I could not help reflecting that this fine country and that great water were once ours.

"Our forefathers lived here. They enjoyed it as their own domain. It was a gift from the Great Spirit to them and their children. At length the white people (meaning the Dutch) came in a great canoe and only requested permission to tie it to a tree, lest the waters should carry it away. We consented. They next said that some of their people were sick and they were desirous to land them under the shade of the trees. Their desire was granted. The ice now came and they could not go away. So they begged for a piece of ground on which to build a wigwam for shelter against the cold and storms of winter. This was also granted. They next asked for some corn, they promising to go away when the ice was gone. The corn was given. And when the ice was gone our fathers told them they must go away with their big canoe. But they pointed to their big guns around their wigwams and said they would stay there and we could not make them go away.

"Afterwards more came. They brought with them strong and maddening drink, of which the red people became very fond. They persuaded the red people to sell them some land. Finally, they drove them back, time after time, into the wilderness, far from the water and fish and oysters. They have destroyed the game. Our people have wasted away, and now we live miserably and wretched, while you are enjoying our fine and beautiful country. This makes me sorry, brother, and I can not help it."

Mr. President, that was the city of New York, where these people were located. The sale of a hundred acres in the heart of the city of New York to-day would yield more money to the United States than we paid out for every acre of ground we bought from the Indians east of the Mississippi River. If you will measure off a hundred acres in the city of San Francisco, it will sell for more money than enough to pay for every acre of ground that we have ever bought from the Indians from the Pacific to the crest of the Rocky Mountains.

It makes no difference whether our civilization has brought this about, what right have we to say that if we had conceded to these people the rights of human beings even, if we had won them by exhibiting before them our integrity and our sense of justice, that they would not have cooperated with us in these works as fully and freely and have done as much service or more service than the African negroes brought from the coast of Guinea?

No, sir; our policy was laid out in the wars of King Philip in New England. The first fight we had there was an outrage upon the Indians and a violation of plighted faith in return for hospitality. It spread and spread until Philip, the king of those tribes, had to take the matter in charge, and when he took it in charge then began all the methods of Indian warfare which have spread out through this country, and the result of every war of any prominence has been that the Indians must move from the ground where the battle was fought and yield it and their country to the white people.

The Mexicans when they had wars with the Indians did not do that. They allowed them to remain upon the ground where they lived, and learn their language and cultivate their good will, and that is the reason why Porfirio Diaz, who has 90 per cent of Indian blood in his veins, and why Juarez, who was a full-blooded Indian born of an ordinary family in Queretaro, was able to marshal those Indian forces against the powers of Europe and drive them from his coast.

And Castro, another Indian in Venezuela, has a hold upon those Indians who live at the foot of the Andes to such an extent that the pacific blockade is going to be more and more peaceful until it ceases, not because they have not the power to bombard those forts and destroy them, but because Germany and England combined will not dare to ascend those mountains and engage in a conflict with those Indians commanded by Castro. There is heroism and power in their character because there is integrity among them in respect of their national rights. I return to our Indians.

Captain Bryan was the commander of an excursion that went out to make some surveys and examinations among the Virginia military land lying in the territory northwest of the Ohio.

While engaged in completing a chain of surveys extending from the headwaters of Brush Creek to those of Paint Creek (now the central part of the State of Ohio) his provisions became scant, and at length entirely exhausted. He directed his hunter—who had been unsuccessful on a recent excursion—to make another attempt to procure subsistence, and to meet him at a particular point then designated, where, after closing the labor of the day, he should encamp with his chainmen and marker.

Toward evening the men became exhausted with hunger. They were in the heart of a solitary wilderness, and every circumstance was calculated to produce the greatest dejection of spirit. After making great exertions to reach the point designated, where they were to encamp upon their arrival, they met their hunter, who had been again unsuccessful. Feeling for himself and his comrades every emotion of a noble heart, he was alarmed for their situation. The hunter declared he had used every exertion in pursuit of game, but all his attempts were of no avail; that the whole forest appeared to him to be entirely destitute both of birds and beasts. Under these awful apprehensions of starvation, he knew that it would be a vain attempt to reach the settlement; he trembled, and shed tears.

Captain Bryan, at this critical juncture, felt his spirits roused at the reflection of their desperate situation; he thrust his Jacob's staff in the earth and ordered his men to prepare a camp and make a good fire; he seized the gun and ammunition of the unsuccessful hunter and darted forth in pursuit of game. The weather had become exceedingly cold, for it was in the depth of winter—every rivulet was bound in ice. He had not proceeded far before he was gratified with the cheering sight of three elks, making toward him. He succeeded in killing two, and shortly after a bear. He now called for his men and ordered his game to be carried to the camp. No one but those similarly situated can conceive the feelings excited on such an occasion.

But, perilous as the situation of the surveyor and his party might appear, there were others who were threatened with the like appalling distress. Three or four Indians, who had been out on a hunting excursion, hearing the report of Captain Bryan's gun, made immediately in that direction, and had arrived at the camp before Bryan returned. On his appearance there they informed him, as well as they could (some of them speaking a little English), of their wretched situation. They told him that for three days their whole party had subsisted on one skunk, and that was exhausted. They described the absence of the game, in the language of the hunter, as if "the whole forest was entirely destitute both of birds and beasts."

There came along a party of Indians, who were mistaken for enemies, and their approach was watched with very great caution. But after a while they made it known that they were very harmless, and Bryan determined that he would welcome them to his feast of venison and elk meat and bear. They told of their sufferings and described the difficulty of obtaining any meat by their hunting, and they were nearly starved.

They were informed by Captain Bryan that he had plenty for himself, his men, and themselves; desired them to fix their camp, make a good fire, and assist his men in flaying the bear and elks, which were now brought into camp, and then to cut, carve, and cook for themselves. Their very looks were expressive of joy—they now felt for a deliverance so unexpected; nor did they spare the provisions. Their hunger was such that as soon as one round was served, another, another, and another, in succession, was greedily devoured.

A fine-looking, tall, dignified savage then approached the surveyors' camp—rather young in appearance than otherwise. He very gracefully stepped up to Captain Bryan (who was now reposing in his camp on account of rheumatism occasioned by his recent exposure) and informed him that the old man in his camp was a chief; that he felt under great obligations to the Great and Good Spirit for so signal an interposition in their favor; that he was about to make a prayer and address the Good Spirit and thank Him; that it was the custom on such occasions for the Indians to stand up in their camp, and that his chief requested the captain and his men to conform in like manner by standing up in their camp.

The captain replied that his men would all conform and order should be observed, but as for himself his affliction would compel him to keep his seat, but this must not be construed into disrespect. The captain remarked to me that he was not himself a religious character, though a man of feeling.

The old chief raised himself upon his feet, as did those around him, and, lifting up his hands, commenced his prayer and thanksgiving in an audible voice. And such an address to Deity, on such an occasion—as far as I could understand him—I never before heard flow from mortal lips. The tone, the modulation of his voice, the gestures, all corresponded to make a very deep impression upon us.

In the course of his thanksgiving—as I gathered from the Indians—he recapitulated the doleful situation in which they were so recently placed, the awful horrors of starvation with which they were threatened, the vain attempts they had made to procure food, until He, the Great and Good Spirit, had sent that good white man and had crowned his exertions with success, and so directed him and them to meet and to find plenty.

Who can fully describe the abundant overflowings of a grateful heart! He continued in his vehement strain for about half an hour, "when," remarked Captain B., "my own men, reflecting on their own recent situation, retrospecting what had taken place, and beholding the pious gratitude of a 'Child of the Forest,' feeling the same sensations, they were melted into tenderness—if not into tears."

The person who so gracefully addressed Captain Bryan in behalf of his Chief was Tecumseh

The young Indian who was wandering in the forest and came up to this party at that time and became an interposer for the sake of humanity was Tecumseh, the man who was sent by the Northern nations from the North down to the South to stir up the Creek and the Cherokee and other Indians to hostility. He succeeded with the Creek and Seminole and the Choctaw and Chickasaw to some extent.

Tecumseh had then become not only a great warrior but a great prophet. He told those Indians that on a certain day the sun would be darkened. He was an informed man and knew that an eclipse was to take place. He told them the sun would be darkened, and that it would be because the black banner of war had been spread by the Six Nations in the North, and it would be the signal for those Indians in the South to join him. The eclipse came and proved to the satisfaction of the Indians that he was a prophet.

An earthquake had occurred, a terrible earthquake, that sank more than half of a county in southeast Missouri. They asked him what was it that made that great commotion in the world and "shook the very body of the earth until we could not stand on our feet." What was it? He said it was the voice proclaimed by the Six Nations that peace had ended and war had begun.

Thus availing himself of these two natural phenomena, Tecumseh, with an eloquence and a power and an influence that few men have possessed, caused the Creeks to go into that bloody war, which, it seemed, was the opportunity of bringing to the front the greatest man who has lived in the United States, next to George Washington—Andrew Jackson. It required Jackson, with his intrepidity and skill and power of endurance and combination, to conquer those people.

Mr. President, I feel a greater interest in these things, because I lived upon the ground where Jackson fought his second battle. His first battle was at Tallahassee and his second at Talladega. I lived there upon the ground where he fought his battle, so I happen to have a knowledge of the situation. I knew about Tecumseh. I knew how that war had been started. I knew Opothle Yoholo, his great right-hand man, and Osceola, and other great Indians who were in his command.

So, Mr. President, I have not grown up with the impression that these were inferior men like the negro race, but that they were men of power and spirit, and that they showed their spirit in their work, their power in their arms, in war, and their honor and integrity on all occasions and under all conditions.

The Indian character has been illustrated by the examples I have read to the Senate. I will now read how Tecumseh appeared at Vincennes:

In the meantime—

Says the author—

we shall transcribe here some gratifying information derived from a Tennessee periodical published in the spring of 1826—

Their own periodical, published as far back as 1826—

Some curiosity having been expressed as to the laws of the Cherokee Nation, the following sketch of them may not be unacceptable to our readers:

They prohibit the introduction by white men of spirituous liquors into the nation.

As far back as 1826.

They have laws establishing and regulating turnpikes, prohibiting theft and rape; requiring white men if they take a Cherokee wife to be legally married to her, and then the property of the wife is not thrown into the hands of the husband but remains at her own disposal; nor do they permit one man to have more than one wife.

This shows the characteristics of those people in their legislation.

Now, we have what Tecumseh said illustrative of these views in an interview that he had at Vincennes:

It is said that, at the last conference at Vincennes, he found himself at the end of a long and animated speech unprovided with a seat. Observing the neglect, Governor Harrison directed a chair to be placed for him and requested him to accept it. "Your father," said the interpreter, "requests you to take the chair." "My father," replied the chief; "the sun is my father and the earth is my mother; I will repose upon her bosom," and saying this, he adjusted himself on the ground in the Indian manner.

A qualified remark has been made upon his courage; but the manner in which he conducted himself during the war is sufficient to establish the point beyond controversy.

The same may be said of the fearlessness shown in his visits to Vincennes and especially in the exposure of himself upon that occasion, though he must have perceived that he was feared, suspected, and even guarded by bodies of troops drawn out for that express purpose. It is very illustrative of the apparent diversity in the character of Eiskwatowa and his own in this respect that when the Delawares sent a deputation of chiefs to break up the prophet's settlement at Tippecanoe the latter would not deign to give them an interview, but dispatched his brother to them, whose threats or persuasions were sufficient to drive back the chiefs with strong indications of apprehension and terror.

When General Proctor began to prepare for retreating from Malden, Tecumseh, having learned his intention, demurred, and, in the name of all the Indians, delivered an animated speech. If the spirit which it manifests could have had its intended effect in inducing the General to fight before he retreated, the result must have been at least less inglorious to his cause.

Father, he began, listen to your children. You have them all now before you. The war before this our British father gave the hatchet to his red children, when our old chiefs were alive. They are now dead. In that war our father was thrown on his back by the Americans, and our father took them by the hand without our knowledge. We are afraid he will do so again this time.

Listen! When war (the last war) was declared, our father stood up and gave us the tomahawk and told us he was then ready to strike the Americans; that he wanted our assistance; that he would certainly get us our land back which the Americans had taken from us.

Listen! When we last met at the rapids, it is true, we gave you little assistance. It is hard to fight people who live like groundhogs (alluding to the American fortifications).

Father, listen! Our fleet has gone out; we know they have fought. We have heard the great guns [Perry's victory], but we know not what has become of our father with one arm [Commodore Barclay]. Our ships have gone one way, and we are astonished to see our father tying up everything and preparing to run away the other without letting his red children know of his intentions. You always told us you never draw your foot off British ground. But now, father, we see you are drawing back, and we are sorry to see our father doing so without seeing the enemy. We must compare our father's conduct to that of a fat dog, that carries its tail upon its back; but, when frightened, drops it between its legs and runs off.

Father, listen! The Americans have not beaten us by land; we are not sure that they have by water. We wish, therefore, to remain here and fight. If they defeat us, we will then retreat with our father.

Father! You have got the arms and ammunition which our Great Father sent for his red children. If you have an idea of going away, give them to us and you may go, and welcome, for us. Our lives are in the hands of the Great Spirit; we are determined to defend our lands, and, if it be His will, we wish to leave our bones upon them.

That was Tecumseh's speech at Vincennes. That is enough to show that he was a very much greater man than the Englishman whom he was speaking to.

Mr. President, my observations of the tribe of Creek Indians, whose language I spoke when I was a boy, extends from that time to the present state of their development, when they have a king or a ruler elected by themselves, a written constitution written by themselves. They have institutions of justice, a supreme court, circuit courts, judges of ordinary, magistrates, and a mounted constabulary that rides over the entire district.

They have several very handsome institutions of learning, endowed by themselves, furnished comfortably for schoolrooms, large buildings, in which there are pianos and blackboards and other appliances for the instruction of their children. Their native girls are required to produce nothing for their support but their clothing, which is a uniform. Their tuition is given to them free. Their books are provided for them, and their board is free. They educate their children in that way, following our example, but having their own institutions.

I have been inside of their schoolhouses, and they were models of neatness and excellence as schoolhouses.

These people have a regard for me because I can trace my life back to childhood and identify it with many of their Indians. I have told them the story of Arkeeche, the little son of Fosachfixico, who was an old Indian chief who lived upon a beautiful piece of land not more than a mile from the town where the land office was kept, and where quite a number, probably 700 or 800 people, of the white race were assembled to deal with them for their lands.

This little boy Arkeeche was hunting blackberries with me one day and he was bitten by a rattlesnake and died. Dr. Holman, a Presbyterian divine, a most noble, worthy, excellent, and amiable gentleman, came to see Forsachfixico, and spoke to him familiarly, for he knew him. He tried to administer some of the comforts of Christian consolation to him, and asked him if he did not believe in Jesus Christ.

He says, "Is that the man you speak of as your God?" "Yes." "Was he a white man?" "Yes; he was a white man." "Did the white men kill him?" "Yes; they killed him." "An Indian never killed his God. I have no faith in a white man's God if he killed him. An Indian can not kill his God. He never sees him. He sees the resemblance to him." "Well," says Mr. Holman, "we will not dispute about that. I have come here to sympathize with you. Are you not very sorry about losing Ar kee che?" "No; I am not sorry." "Are you mad?" "No; I am not mad." "How do you feel?" "I am damned 'shamed." "What makes you ashamed?" "That reptile, that snake, bit my beautiful Ar kee che, and the Great Spirit let him go, not because he hated Ar kee che, but because he wanted my boy."

Now, of course, a man raised under these ideas and learning the language of those people and finding them when he comes into the Senate of the United States appealing to him for justice can not very well meet the burden of that demand without explaining to his fellow-Senators the reasons that move him to demand justice for these people. They deserve it, whether we feel it or not.

There was Red Jacket. I want to read a speech Red Jacket made at Buffalo Creek. He was of the Northern Indians:

At a council of Indians held on Buffalo Creek in the spring of 1811, application was made for the purchase of their rights to certain reservations of lands lying within the territory, commonly called "the Holland purchase." The application was answered by a speech from a chief of the Seneca Nation named Sagoua Hah (i. e., The Keeper Awake), but whom the whites called Red Jacket. It was delivered with great emphasis, and which, together with another that follows it, may be accounted literary curiosities.

Brother!

We opened our ears to the talk you lately delivered to us at council fire. In doing important business it is best not to tell long stories, but to come to it in a few words. We therefore shall not repeat your talk, which is fresh in our minds. We have thoroughly considered it and the advantages and disadvantages of your offers. We claim your attention to our answer, which is not from the speaker alone, but from all the sachems and chiefs now around our council fire.

Brother!

We know that great men as well as great nations have different interests, have different minds, and do not see the same object in the same light, but we trust our answer will be agreeable to you and your employers.

Brother!

Your application for the purchase of our lands is, in our minds, very extraordinary; it has been made in a crooked manner; you have not walked in the straight path pointed out by the great council of your nation. You have no writings from your great father, the President. In making up our minds we have looked back and remember how the Yorkers purchased our lands in former times. They bought them, piece after piece, for a little money, paid to a few men in our nation and not to all our brethren, until our planting and hunting grounds have become very small; and if we sell them we know not where to spread our blankets.

Brother!

You tell us your employer has purchased of the council of Yorkers a right to buy our lands. We do not understand how this can be. The lands do not belong to the Yorkers; they are ours and were given to us by the Great Spirit.

Brother!

We think it strange that you should jump over the lands of our brethren in the East to come to our council fire so far off to get our lands. When we sold our lands in the East to the white people we determined never to sell those we kept—which are as small as we can live comfortably on.

Brother!

You want us to travel with you and look for new lands. If we should sell our lands and move off into a distant country toward the setting sun we should be looked upon in the country to which we go as foreigners and strangers, and be despised by the red as well as by the white men, and we should soon be surrounded by the white people who will there also kill our game, come upon our lands, and try to get them from us.

Brother!

We are determined not to sell our lands but to continue on them. We like them—they are fruitful and produce us corn in abundance for the support of our women and children and grass and herbs for our cattle.

Brother!

At the treaties for the purchase of our lands the white men, with sweet voices and smiling faces, told us they loved us, and that they would not cheat us, but that the King's children on the other side of the lake would cheat us. When we go on the other side of the lake theKing's children tell us your people will cheat us. These things puzzle our heads, and we believe the Indians must take care of themselves and not trust either in your people or in the King's children.

Brother!

At a late council we instructed our agents to tell you that we would not sell our lands, and we think you have not spoken to our agents, or they would have told you so, and we should not have met you at our council fire at this time.

Brother!

The white people buy and sell false rights to our lands, and your employers, have, you say, paid a great price for their rights. They must have a plenty of money to spend it in buying false rights to lands belonging to Indians. The loss of it will not hurt them. But our lands are of great value to us; and we wish you to go back with our talk to your employers and to tell them and the Yorkers that they have no right to buy and sell false rights to our lands.

Brother!

We hope you clearly comprehend the ideas we have offered. This is all we have to say.

Red Jacket went to war and the whole northern frontier, including Canada, felt the stroke when Red Jacket struck, for he was a great man. A man who speaks that way about his rights is bound to be a great man if he has got any manhood in him at all.

I could read many, many authenticated stories and speeches of these people, but I will not detain the Senate to do so.

Red Jacket made another speech at Albany, N. Y. He was the chief of the Seneca tribe, and in the last four or five days the Senate has been legislating about the Seneca tribe and their lands.

At a council held for the purpose of purchasing from his tribe the reservation commonly called the "Holland Purchase," Red Jacket made a shrewd and very able speech in opposition to the sale. The spirit and eloquence with which he invariably resisted the efforts of the priests to Christianize his tribe may be gathered from the following extract from one of his speeches, delivered at Albany:

Here he met with the priesthood, and spoke to them in his Indian way:

Brother!

Listen to what we have to say. These men (the priests) do us no good. They deceive everybody. They deny the Great Spirit whom we, and our fathers before us, have looked upon as our Creator. They disturb us in our worship. They tell our children they must not believe like our fathers and mothers, and tell us many things we do not understand, and can not believe. They tell us we must be like white people, but they are lazy and won't work, nor do teach our young men to do so. The habits of our women are worse than they were before these men came among us, and our young men drink more whisky. We are willing to be taught to read and write and work, but not by people who have done us so much injury.

Brother!

We wish you to lay before the council fire the wishes of your red brethren. We ask our brothers not to blot out the law which has made us peaceable and happy, and not force a strange religion upon us. We ask to be let alone and, like the white people, to worship the Great Spirit as we think best; we shall then be happy in filling the little space in life which is left us, and shall go down to our fathers in peace.

That was a protest, Mr. President, against an invasion that no ignorant race and scarcely any civilized race has ever yet been able to resist—the priesthood.

I have now closed with respect to the characteristics of these Indians, but I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate to a few names that you will remember, for they have become historical. They had no pen with which to write their own praises; they had to take them from the lips of their enemies. They forced the praises of the men whom they fought; and there can scarcely be a higher tribute to humanity or a higher achievement than that.

Black Hawk.
Brandt.
Canastogo.
Comanche.
Egeromont.
Ensamore.
Jim Fife.
George Sagamore.
George Guess.

He was a Cherokee. When I was a little boy George Guess was pointed out to me. He was then a middle-aged man, and I was told that he had invented an alphabet. He was a Cherokee and lived not far from my father's house, not more than 5 or 8 miles. He was a spare man, a rather ungainly looking Indian, and very dark. He had invented an alphabet, I think, of 48 characters, an alphabet not of letters, but of syllables. He syllabized the Cherokee language, much of which is guttural, hard to express in letters, and hard to spell.

This man's analysis ran through the whole course of the language. He was entirely without learning; he did not know the English alphabet or that of any other language. He adopted some of the English characters or very nearly so—the Roman characters of that alphabet. He is now known as Sequoia, and the big trees in California, the largest in the world, are named for George Guess, whose Indian name was Sequoia.

How did he happen to invent this alphabet?

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, several Senators have suggested that they desire an executive session.

Mr. MORGAN. In one moment, when I get through with this little narrative, I will yield.

How did George Guess happen to write that alphabet? After General Jackson's triumph at New Orleans, when the news came back and spread over the country as to how Jackson had assembled his forces at New Orleans, Guess said he did it by writing some characters on a paper. "I can do that; I can write characters which the Cherokees can read." And he wrote them. It is stated in a book which I have before me, and it was stated then, that a Cherokee youth in three days after he got hold of the characters of that alphabet could write a letter to his friends, so simple was it, so perfectly natural, so perfectly adapted to the syllabic pronunciation of the Cherokee language.

George Guess passed off in poverty, and his very place of burial is lost; nobody knows it; and yet no greater man lived in this country than George Guess, tried by the tests with which we measure human capacity.

When I saw him and looked at him and was told he had written an alphabet I could not quite well understand it. I tried to comprehend that he had written our alphabet, and was told that was not so. I could not comprehend how there could be two alphabets in the world. I doubt if he knew that there were others.

Now I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me so that I may submit a conference report?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Missouri for that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the conference report on what is known as the staff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2, page 3 of the bill, after the word "emergency," insert the word "or;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "or" of said amendment insert the word "of;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

After the word "and," in the second line of said amendment, insert the following: "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;" and after the word "brigadier-general," in line 3 of said amendment, insert the following:

"And when the next vacancy occurs in the office of brigadier-general of the line, it shall not be filled, and thereafter the number of brigadier-generals of the line, exclusive of the Chief of Artillery, shall not exceed 14;" and the Senate agree to the same.

F. M. COCKRELL,
J. V. QUARLES,
J. B. FORAKER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
WM. SULZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the language employed there as to the Secretary of War in the part we amended the other day?

Mr. COCKRELL. The way it reads now is:

That the chief of staff under the direction of the President or of the Secretary of War under the direction of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 11, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 10, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE RECORD.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to a special order adopted on the 5th of February, wherein leave to print was given in the following words:

And that all members have leave for five days to print on the subjects of either of the bills referred to in this order.

Now, sir, on page 2006 of to-day's RECORD there begins a matter—I suppose it is called a speech—which amounts to vituperation and vilification of a successful candidate for membership of this House, and not one single word in the whole speech is directed to the subject in accordance with the order.

Now, to save what is in that speech, or any part of it, from going into the permanent RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the whole speech, beginning on page 2006 and ending on page 2012, be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] asks unanimous consent to strike from the RECORD of the proceedings of February 9 the speech of Hon. JOSEPH A. CONRY——

Mr. STEELE. I did not mention the gentleman's name.

The SPEAKER. But that statement will be necessary in order to make clear the motion of the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to strike from the RECORD of the proceedings of February 9 the speech of Hon. JOSEPH A. CONRY as having been made in violation of the order of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. CONRY] is not here this morning. I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana further than to suggest that it be made when my colleague can be present and can make his own statement with reference to the matter. I am as much surprised at the speech as anybody——

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this matter will go over to another day.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONRY] is not here, I object to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, in order that the matter may go over until the gentleman from Massachusetts is present.

The SPEAKER. Without losing its place—this is a matter of privilege—it will, if there be no objection, go over until a subsequent day. The Chair hears no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF A CONFEREE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a telegram, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., February 9, 1903.

Hon. ROBERT C. DAVEY,
Washington, D. C.:

Account serious illness my brother am detained here. Please ask leave absence for me.

ADOLPH MEYER.

The SPEAKER. Leave of absence was granted last evening to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER]. The absence of that gentleman causes a vacancy upon the conference committee on what are called the "terminal matters," and hence it is necessary that the Chair appoint another conferee. The next gentleman to the gentleman from Louisiana upon the committee is the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER], whom the Chair designates as a conferee in the place of the gentleman from Louisiana.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES OF LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, covering a statement showing the receipts and disbursements of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company for the month of December, 1902, furnished by the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Commission, in pursuance of section 11 of the "Act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana Territory," etc., approved March 3, 1901.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 9, 1903.

DEATH OF HON. THOMAS H. TONGUE.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the House to fix a time for memorial addresses upon the life, character, and services of Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, deceased, late a member of this body. For that purpose I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House meet on Sunday, the 22d day of February, at 12 o'clock noon, for eulogies upon the life, character, and services of the Hon. THOMAS H. TONGUE, deceased, late a member of this House from the First Congressional district of Oregon.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; which was adopted.

CHARLES F. WOODFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 8663) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Charles F. Woodford and grant him an honorable discharge.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LEVI L. REED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 10095) for the relief of Levi L. Reed.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

ELISE SIGEL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with an amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 15659) granting a pension to Elise Sigel.

The amendment of the Senate was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the House nonconcur in this amendment, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. APLIN, Mr. HOLLIDAY, and Mr. NORTON as conferees on the part of the House.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 7659) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes."

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate, and ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. FOWLER, Mr. HILL, and Mr. TALBERT as conferees on the part of the House.

GEORGE N. M'MURRAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15911) granting an increase of pension to George N. McMurray, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New Hampshire that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AURELIA M. POWER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7110) granting an increase of pension to Aurelia M. Power, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ADA S. KAEMPFER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10672) granting an increase of pension to Ada S. Kaempfer, with Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AUSTIN A. VORE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9107) granting a pension to Austin A. Vore, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN CONTAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5101) granting an increase of pension to Bejamin Contal, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

GRACE A. NEGLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3504) granting an increase of pension to Grace A. Negley, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

OPENING OF LANDS IN OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave to file the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 16280) to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the minority may file views on the bill H. R. 16280, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16280) to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this request will be granted. [After a pause.] The chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE BETWEEN STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for reprint of the report, No. 3377, of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the report of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill 15331, to amend an act to limit the effect of regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases, approved August 8, 1890.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, this request will be granted.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask that 10,000 copies be printed, 5,000 for the use of the Judiciary Committee and 5,000 for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the additional request that the reprint consist of 10,000 copies of this report, 5,000 for the House, and 5,000 for the Judiciary Committee. Is there objection?

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman what this bill is?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, what is the title of the bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the title of the bill be again reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the Clerk will again report the title of the bill.

The Clerk again reported the title of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would ask whether it is the bill or the report that the gentleman desires to have reprinted.

The SPEAKER. The request is that there be a reprint of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the gentleman that if this printing costs more than $500, it can not be ordered by the House by simple resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. There are only two pages of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If there are 10,000 copies to be printed it may cost more than that.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. There are only two pages to the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection to it.

Mr. STEELE. I should just like to ask the gentleman if he does not think he ought to have 8,000 copies for the use of the committee and only 2,000 for the House?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. No; I think not.

Mr. STEELE. Just so you can get along. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RUMPLE.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That when the House meets on Sunday, the 22d day of February, it shall consider appropriate resolutions and hear eulogies upon the life, public services, and character of the Hon. JOHN N. W. RUMPLE, deceased, late a member of the House of Representatives from the Second Congressional district of the State of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 569. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up a privileged report. The Clerk will report the title of the bill upon which this report is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to omit the reading of the report, and that the statement only be read. If there is no objection this course will be pursued. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

[For text of the conference report and statement see record of the House proceedings of February 9, 1903.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the gentleman from Iowa will allow a separate vote on section 6, which is known as the Nelson substitute.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is impossible to do that. I have no power to do so.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. By unanimous consent will you allow it?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I think not. I think it had better go in the usual course.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will you be willing, if the report of the conferees is voted down, to instruct the conferees to leave out section 6, which is the Nelson substitute?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I do not care to make any contracts or agreements of that kind.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suggest to my colleague that if we vote down the conference report, then it would be in order to instruct the conferees; but you would first have to vote down the conference report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I understand that to be the parliamentary rule, and I ask, further, of my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that he allow me more than five minutes for the discussion of that substitute.

Mr. HEPBURN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Not an unreasonable time. I should like an hour.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not think we ought to do that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. We were in conference a week on this question, and I would like very much to have that time allowed me to express my views fairly of what is known as the Nelson substitute.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would not be inclined to extend the time so as to give the gentleman all of my time. That is all of the time I have. I want to reserve a few minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I hope the gentleman will not be so uncharitable as to limit me to only five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no; I have no desire to do that. I will yield to the gentleman thirty minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I was unable to agree with the distinguished conferees with whom I have been associated, representing the majority of this House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], on the measure known as the Nelson substitute; but after a conference extending over several days I found myself in a position of radical difference with those gentlemen upon the natural, fair, and just construction that I think this substitute justly bears. I shall not resort, Mr. Speaker, to strained construction to arrive at the true meaning of the substitute. It speaks for itself in its own words.

I take this occasion, Mr. Speaker, to say that I do not believe that any Democrat can sustain himself before the people in opposition to a measure that proposes to give any relief against the evils of trusts and monopolies simply because it has a Republican origin or comes to us with a Republican stamp and Republican approval. I go still further than that. I do not believe that any Republican can hereafter give a satisfactory explanation to the people as to why he supported a measure that on its face claims to regulate and control trusts and monopolies and suppress their evils, when in fact the measure does not regulate and does not control, but leaves the trusts to the enjoyment of all their lawless powers and abundant opportunities to accumulate unparalleled wealth at the expense of the toiling masses of this country, as they have been doing with our people for years past.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country in all sections of the Union are sufficiently intelligent and sufficiently informed as to the workings, management, and effect of the evils of the trusts—and to know that they are not only a menace, but an actual injury to their interests—to place the responsibility where it properly belongs if we fail to grant the relief that they demand from the evils of these trusts. We may stand here on the floor of the House to our heart's content and applaud the fervid expressions on either side of the Chamber. The able and distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] may repeat, as he has heretofore stated on this floor, "To undertake to revise the tariff at this period of unparalleled prosperity would be the height of legislative madness." The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] only a few days since said in the presence of this House, in substance, that the Dingley schedules were so sacred and hallowed that they ought not to be touched by the hand of revision. He warned us to be careful, but he failed to suggest anything looking to the relief of the onerous burdens of the people.

These matters will all come before the people of this country very soon—to pass upon our honesty and sincerity and the opportunities we had to give relief, and whether we met or failed to come up to the full measure of our duties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I dissent most earnestly and sincerely from this Nelson substitute. I believe it to be an ultra dilution of a homeopathic dose of so-called antitrust legislation. I believe it to be a travesty upon what its friends represent and claim to be its only virtue—publicity. Why do I say that? I am in no manner responsible for the studied efforts that you and I on both sides of this House fully understand are being made to make it appear that this Nelson substitute is hostile to the trusts, and especially to the Standard Oil Company. Gentlemen of this House will not be influenced by this consideration. They look at it for themselves. In my opinion, the trusts, the corporations, the combines, and all other monopolies of all characters and description have no reason to fear any harm from this Nelson substitute. I will now read section 6 in the House bill for which the Nelson amendment is a substitute, and will read also the Nelson substitute.

SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and the chief of said bureau shall be appointed by the President and shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau such clerks and assistants as may from time to time be authorized by law. It shall be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning such corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law.

This is the Nelson substitute:

Strike out all of section 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 6. That there shall be in the department of commerce and labor a bureau to be called the bureau of corporations, and a commissioner of corporations, who shall be the head of said bureau, to be appointed by the President, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. There shall also be in said bureau a deputy commissioner, who shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum and who shall in the absence of the commissioner act as and perform the duties of the commissioner of corporations, and who shall also perform such other duties as may be assigned to him by the secretary of commerce and labor or by the said commissioner. There shall also be in the said bureau a chief clerk and such special agents, clerks, and other employees as may be authorized by law.

"The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the secretary of commerce and labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint-stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, excepting common carriers subject to 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce, and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require; and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct, shall be made public.

"In order to accomplish the purposes declared in the foregoing part of this section, the said commissioner shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations, joint-stock companies, and combinations subject to the provisions hereof as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said 'act to regulate commerce' and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths. All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said 'act to regulate commerce,' and by 'an act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission,' etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplemental to said 'act to regulate commerce,' shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

"It shall also be the province and duty of said bureau, under the direction of the secretary of commerce and labor, to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing business within the limits of the United States as shall engage in interstate commerce or in commerce between the United States and any foreign country, including corporations engaged in insurance, and to attend to such other duties as may be hereafter provided by law."

There can be no question that this section 6, that the Nelson bill is a substitute for, provides for publicity. Does the substitute provide for publicity? Let us analyze it from a standpoint of plain common sense. It is before you, and you have read it. No law has ever been enacted yet that has not an aim and an end in it. What is this? I propound it to both sides of this House. The purpose and object of this measure or of this substitute is to enable the President of the United States to do what? To take, under the supervision of the secretary of commerce and labor, action against the trusts? No. It is to provide a way to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation. I say that this substitute has the same characteristic that the chased and pursued fawn instinctively possesses that is being hotly chased by the hunter. After being pursued through circuitous route, through the woods, over the hills, and through the valleys, it returns at evening to the place where it started. When all the conditions precedent are complied with and the President sees proper, he will, in the sweet by and by, ask Congress for legislation to regulate commerce trusts. We are to pass the Nelson substitute, and when the President gathers up the data, under the qualifications and limitations that I have explained, he is to come back to Congress and ask for additional legislation.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that condition is directly antagonistic and contrary to every declaration that has been made, and the threats that we have been regaled with in the morning papers at the breakfast table—at the dinner table—that if some legislation is not enacted by this Congress, the present Congress, that will enable us really to regulate the trusts and subordinate them to the laws of the country that an extra session of Congress will be held.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

The said commissioner shall have power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the secretary of commerce and labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination.

For what?

So as to enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation.

Why not enact that legislation to-day? The country knows the conditions. Congress should act at this session. Why delay? What reason and occasion is there for us to ask the President of the United States to secure data about the great steel trust. Suppose he should find out in his investigation that the products now made and controlled by the steel trust are sold cheaper in Europe than they are to our home folks. If he should ascertain the fact that the steel trust last year exported fully ninety-three millions of their products to foreign countries, and, after paying expenses of transportation, sold these products cheaper to foreigners than to our own people, that would be no news, no startling intelligence. If he should further get data showing that in March of last year the beef trust sent abroad nearly $9,000,000 worth of American meats, and yet beef in April following sold at 14 cents a pound in London and brought 24 cents per pound in New York City, do we not all know that now? It is shown by current price lists. Why go to the superfluous and the meaningless task and delay of requiring the data about that which shows as plain as the sun above our heads? We know, and the country knows, the vast difference in the price in foreign markets and the price at home of plows, cultivators, wire nails, and other necessaries of life.

I say that this measure, with all due regard for the honesty, ingenuity, and ability of the conferees who framed and ratified it, is entitled to be characterized as a pretext and subterfuge; and if I do not characterize it as that, I will say, at least, that in my humble opinion it is but an echo and expression of the opinion of that great Republican who has announced the Republican policy relative to all antitrust legislation to be "stand pat," do nothing. This substitute comes up to the full measure of that policy. In that connection I beg leave to read a statement, and I consider it as a semiofficial Administration statement. It comes from the Evening Star, and it is about this Nelson substitute.

PUBLICITY FOR THE TRUSTS.

However, the chief interest in the action of the Commerce Committee is in the adoption of a sort of publicity feature for all corporations except railroads. The opinion prevails that if this amendment becomes law it will constitute about all the antitrust legislation which can be expected at this session of Congress, besides the paragraph in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. The text of the section as perfected by the committee is as follows:

You will note the Star says significantly and somewhat authoritatively, "It will constitute about all the antitrust legislation which can be expected at this Congress," etc.

A "sort" of publicity! What does "sort" mean in the English language? Why, it means a "feint," it means a pretense, it means a stagger at something that you say you are going to do, but do not intend to do. It implies under the most charitable construction a doubt as to whether the thing claimed is there. All on earth that the friends claim for this substitute is a "sort" of publicity. It provides for no penalties.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us go a little further in a fair and just analysis. I was glad, a few days since, when I saw a solid vote, a remarkable spectacle in the House of Representatives of the United States. The House—Republicans and Democrats—gave a solid vote for a real, genuine antitrust act—the Littlefield bill. I was glad that a united and solid Democratic vote stood for that measure, because it relieves us forever of the false and groundless charge that we are here simply as a party of objection, a party of obstruction. We have come and joined hands with the Republicans, who, after months of labor and toil and after many consultations of their ablest statesmen, reported the Littlefield bill, and said to them, we join you in this measure to relieve our country of the evils of the trust. It is true that the bill did not fully meet the requirements and demands of our side of the House, but it was a long step in the right direction.

Take this Nelson substitute and compare it in the matter of publicity with the first section of the Littlefield bill, which reads as follows:

That every corporation which may be hereafter organized shall, at the time of engaging in interstate or foreign commerce, file the return hereinafter provided for, and every corporation, whenever organized, and engaged in interstate or foreign commerce shall file a return with the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending December 31, whenever, and at such time, as requested by said Commission, stating its name, date of organization, where and when organized, giving statutes under which it is organized, and all amendments thereof; if consolidated, naming constituent companies and where and when organized, with the same information as to such constituent companies, so far as applicable, as is herein required of such corporation; if reorganized, name of original corporation or corporations, with full reference to laws under which all the reorganizations have taken place, with the same information as to all prior companies in the chain of reorganization, so far as applicable, as is herein required of such corporation; amount of bonds issued and outstanding; amount of authorized capital stock, shares into which it is divided, par value, whether common or preferred, and distinction between each; amount issued and outstanding; amount paid in; how much, if any, paid in cash, and how much, if any, in property; if any part in property, describing in detail the kind, character, and location, with its cash market value at the time it was received in payment, giving the elements upon which said market value is based, and especially whether in whole or in part upon the capitalization of earnings, earning capacity, or economies, with the date and the cash price paid therefor at its last sale; the name and address of each officer, managing agent, and director; a true and correct copy of its articles of incorporation; a full, true, and correct copy of any and all rules, regulations, and by-laws adopted for the management and control of its business and the direction of its officers, managing agents, and directors. Nothing herein contained shall be construed as relieving any corporation from making, in addition to the foregoing, such returns as are now required by the "Act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all amendments thereof; but the provisions of this act, as to signing and making oath to returns and making answers on oath to written inquiries, shall be applicable to returns and such answers made under said act and amendments thereof.

So far as any return may be a duplicate of one already filed, that fact may be stated, and the details, which are in such case duplicates, need not be repeated. Upon its being made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commission that without fault on its part it is impracticable for such corporation to furnish any of the items aforesaid, it may, by a written order of said Commission, be excused from furnishing such item or items.

Said Commission shall cause to be prepared a blank return for the use of such corporations, containing the foregoing requirements, and shall make such rules and regulations as may, in its judgment, be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act. The President, treasurer, and a majority of the directors of such corporation shall make oath in writing on said return that said return is true. The treasurer, or other officer of such corporation having the requisite knowledge, shall answer on oath all inquiries that may be made in writing on the direction of said Commission in relation to said return. Any corporation failing to make such return, or whose treasurer or other officer shall fail to make the answers aforesaid, may be restrained, on the suit of the United States, from engaging in interstate commerce until such return is made. Suit may be brought in any district of the United States at the election of the Attorney-General.

I ask the members of this House and the country to compare this diluted dose of antitrust legislation with sections 5, 6, 7, and 11 of the Littlefield bill which has some gist in it. The comparison exposes what this substitute is. It pales into absolute insignificance. Compare it with the eleventh section of the Littlefield bill which gives any injured citizen, regardless of the President of the country or anyone else, the right to go into the courts and complain of the workings of these trusts. These sections are as follows:

SEC. 5. That any person, carrier, lessee, trustee, receiver, officer, agent, or representative of a carrier, subject to the act to regulate commerce, who, or which, shall offer, grant give, solicit, accept, or receive any rebate, concession, facilities, or service, in respect to the transportation of any property, in interstate or foreign commerce, by any common carrier subject to said act, whereby any such property shall, by any device whatever, be transported at a less rate than that named in the tariffs published and filed by such carrier, as is required by said act to regulate commerce, or shall receive any advantage by way of facilities or service, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000.

SEC. 6. That no corporation engaged in the production, manufacture, or sale of any article of commerce, violating any of the provisions of section 5 of this act, or attempting to monopolize or control the production, manufacture, or sale thereof, in any particular locality, by discrimination in prices, or by giving special privileges or rebates or otherwise, in order to destroy competition therein, in such locality, shall use, either directly or indirectly, any of the facilities or instrumentalities of interstate commerce, or in any way engage in interstate commerce, for the purpose of aiding or facilitating, either directly or indirectly, such production, manufacture, or sale, with such intent; nor shall any other person or corporation use any of the facilities or instrumentalities of interstate commerce, or in any way engage in interstate commerce, in buying, selling, or disposing of any such article of commerce, for the purpose of enabling such first-mentioned corporation to engage or to continue to engage in such production, manufacture, sale, or control, with such intent. Every corporation or person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished, on conviction, by a fine of not less than $500 and not exceeding $5,000.

SEC. 7. That any common carrier, lessee, trustee, receiver, or transportation company, engaged in interstate commerce, now subject to the provisions of said act to regulate commerce, knowingly transporting any property produced, manufactured, or sold in violation of the provisions of this act, or in violation of the provisions of "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, in interstate commerce, shall be subject to a penalty of not less than $1,000, to be recovered by the United States, in any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, which suit may be brought in any district in which such common carrier, lessee, trustee, or receiver, or transportation company has an office or conducts business.

SEC. 8. That all prosecutions, hearings, and proceedings under the provisions of this act, and under the provisions of "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, whether civil or criminal, no person shall be excused from attending and testifying, or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents before the courts of the United States, or the commissioners thereof, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, or in obedience to the subpœna of the same, on the ground, or for the reason, that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him, may tend to criminate him, or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said courts, commissioners, or Commission, or in obedience to the subpœna of either of them, in any such case or proceeding.

Testimony of witnesses under the provisions of the act to regulate interstate commerce and amendments thereof, and of this act, before said Commission, or any member thereof, shall be on oath, and either of the members of said Commission may administer oaths and affirmations and sign subpœnas.

SEC. 11. That any person or corporation injured in business or property, by any other person or corporation, by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant or defendants reside or are found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages sustained and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

Now, Mr. Speaker—

To gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce and to report such data to the President when, from time to time, as he shall require—and the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct, shall be made public. I ask most solemnly, if anything is really contemplated by this substitute, why not require the President to turn over his information to his Attorney-General and require him to act at once? The cloven foot shows itself here.

I appeal to the honest construction that any man will give to the ordinary English language—what does that mean? "As much thereof as the President may direct shall be made public." He can suppress all data, every scintilla of information. He can hold it secret and stand pat and say and do nothing, and no law can move him. Is that publicity? Do you propose to put into the hands of one man the autocratic power to pass on the question that involves the great interests and welfare of all the people? What wonderful power do you place in one man's hands. It can be used in a most dangerous manner. Suppose Carroll D. Wright, whose Department has been transferred to the department of commerce and labor, should appeal to the President for data concerning the cost of transportation and the cost of producing coal.

The Department of Labor has been transferred to the department of commerce and labor. It is under the supervision of the secretary of that department. It is a part and parcel of this great new department of commerce that is to be established. Yet, if Mr. Wright, the Commissioner of Labor, should seek such information upon the vital matter of the costs of the transportation of coal in order to compare it with cost of production, he would be told that he would have to look elsewhere for his information, because the Nelson substitute "excepts common carriers" from its provisions. Then, again, if Commissioner Wright went to work and undertook to get up data and information, the President could forbid the publication "of the information so obtained, or as much thereof as the President may direct," because the Nelson substitute in its relation to "An act to regulate commerce" is limited by the words "subject to the provisions hereof"—that is the Nelson measure.

The Labor Department has had the right to gather its own statistics. There it is subjected to the crucible of the will of the President. I say that autocratic power placed in the hands of one man is against the spirit and policy of our free American institutions. I say, Mr. Speaker, that is a power that ought to be put in the hands of no man under our republican form of government. How do you or I know who is to be President? It is frequently said to me, "The President is honest and sincere." I am far above making any criticism of him. How do you know, how do I know, that the present incumbent will be the next President of the United States? We are not legislating for any man. Suppose a great trust magnate were to be made President under the power of this law. What investigation could follow; what inquiries could be made? How helpless the country would be.

Why, Mr. Speaker, that latter clause, "or so much thereof as the President may direct shall be made public," is not publicity. Does any man contend that it is publicity? Section 6 in the department of commerce bill provides that these matters of information should be published without restraint. It reminds me of what is said down in my section when a man wants to make a thing absolutely secure and safe; he says it is equal to a "stake and rider fence." That is defined down in our country to be a fence, horse high, bull strong, and pig tight; you can not get over it, nor under it, nor around it, nor through it.

That last clause, "or so much thereof as the President may direct shall be made public," is a stake and rider legal barrier or fence. [Laughter.] Suppose a man goes there and wants to make a complaint before the President. It would simply be a physical impossibility for the President to hear all the complaints that would be made. Not only that, this Nelson substitute provides that the President shall suggest the data that the commissioner of the bureau of corporations is to collect, and for fear he might collect some data that ought not to go to the public, the measure, as a matter of precaution to prevent accidents, says that "so much thereof as the President sees proper shall be made public." I know that it is an ordinary provision to say that certain duties shall be under the control of the secretary of a department. For the Secretary of the Interior to supervise the Director of Census or the Secretary of Agriculture to supervise gathering of farm statistics is a harmless provision. That is right; but this authority put in the position it is here, making barriers, is a different proposition. What are the barriers to investigation? The secretary of the department of commerce and labor has first to have his say at it. Next, the President may tell him what data he must get. Next, when the President gets that data and information about these trusts in his hands, holding them in the hollow of his hand, it is for him to say whether he will publish them or not.

There never was, in my judgment, in the history of this great Government of ours such an autocratic power placed in the hands of one man, placed there on a subject that concerns the welfare and the interests of all the people of this country. It can be used as an engine of power. I do not mean to say that it would be used with reckless disregard of the rights of the people for and in behalf of the trusts. We all know that the President has repeatedly said that there are "good trusts and bad trusts." Who should be the judge on such a question? It should not be one man. It should be the law, under the rules and regulations prescribed for eliciting truth. This is a government of law. I have always believed that the least left to the discretion of a public official is the best law for the rights and interests of the people.

Why should the Littlefield bill be doomed to a languishing death in place of this Nelson substitute? That is the question that we have got to answer before the people. 'Tis said that it will surely die.

I will refrain, Mr. Speaker, from entering into a discussion of the tariff question. Gentlemen have heard enough of such discussion already. I want to read something that the distinguished Secretary of War, Mr. Root, said in a speech to the Union League at New York on the night of February 6. I read it, Mr. Speaker, with much concern. It bears its significance when it comes from such a source.

Secretary Root congratulated the veterans of the club upon having "woven a thread into fabric of the great life of this country."

"There are," he added, "many problems coming up to-day on which the safety of this Government depends. There are to-day situations of possible evils for our country that call for devoted patriotism. First, division between the rich and the poor under which wealth controls legislation and poverty is trying to stir up a war of classes, but every good citizen should declare that never in this free land shall we have a war of classes."

Ought not the great Secretary to have supplemented that statement by saying that in order to prevent this deplorable war of classes we should undertake by law to curb the greed of the trust? That is what brought about this condition; it is what is leading us to this prophesied war of classes. What has made the division between the rich and the poor—made it so marked in our country in the past few years? Wealth controls legislation, and it behooves the Congress of the United States to recognize these conditions. It becomes us, as men who love the institutions of our country, to see to it that the great power of wealth shall not be used against the interests of the masses. No man has the right to denounce or impair the right of every man to acquire honest wealth. It is what we all strive for. Let every man have an equal and fair chance in the race of life for the goods of this world. Let us stand to, rechristen, and rededicate the great fundamental principles of our republican form of government, "equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

Mr. THAYER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. THAYER. I am not entirely conversant with the provisions of the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission. I notice that this bill in section 6 confers upon the bureau of corporations, that is to be created, the same authority which is conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission relative to common carriers. Now, my friend, in your opinion, if this bureau should be appointed, would it have authority to get the information which in our antitrust bill we have directed to be obtained? For instance, could it inquire of a corporation whether it had had any rebate, whether it had sold to one party at a lower price than to another, whether it had overcapitalized? Could the inquiries be made to reach any of those important matters?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts I will say that if he will read the Nelson substitute closely he will see that he says "subject to the provisions of this act," which, in my humble judgment, makes inapplicable the provisions for the investigation of these trusts as is provided by the act to regulate commerce, and is one of the chief barriers that will stand in the way to prevent such investigation. It was placed there. I think, just to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman does not really believe that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes, I believe it; and if you will give me the time I can demonstrate it. What power can the Interstate Commerce Commission have to secure these returns if we make that Commission subject to the provisions of the Nelson substitute. This provision is, in my judgment, a carefully worded, well-considered, artistically framed device for preventing the accomplishment of the very thing that the people of this country are demanding to-day—the control and regulation of the trust.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the Nelson substitute apply to existing corporations?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. In regard to this Nelson substitute, let me say, as was said by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] the other day, that to leave out the Interstate Commerce Commission from the department of commerce would be like playing the great Shakespearean play without the character of Hamlet. Yet this Nelson substitute, though pretending to regulate these trusts and combinations and organizing a bureau of corporations, leaves out the railroad corporations; it does not embrace them at all; and I say that a law which in thus undertaking to regulate corporations leaves out the railroads does not only enact the great play of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet omitted, but it puts upon the boards a roaring farce.

Mr. Speaker, I am not an extreme advocate of what is known as tariff revision. I would not of my own free will disturb, nor do I believe that my party would disturb, the interests or the business of our country in any improper way. The people of this country are conservative. They have felt the evils of the trust, and they expect and are entitled to relief. The law that we may make here ought to meet the demands to protect competition, which is the surest way and the strongest instrumentality for breaking down and preventing monopoly. It should not only do that, but it should reduce the tariff reasonably to a moderate revenue basis, and especially upon those products that are controlled by the trusts. It should protect the small industries and corporations of this country against unjust rivalry and competition. Those are plain principles. It should prevent unjust and unlawful capitalization. The law should provide for reasonable publicity—such publicity as would not stimulate or allow an inquisitorial investigation. We want reasonable, just laws that apply to all alike.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Iowa to allow me five minutes more.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to my colleague on the committee five minutes more.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I say, too, Mr. Speaker, that the conservative sentiment which I have just enunciated comes from Republicans—leading Republicans of this country—as well as from Democrats. I read the language of one such:

> We Republicans of Iowa are all protectionists, but we insist that the tariff must be removed on articles in which monopoly has been established. We call upon Congress to place legislative obstacles in the way of the tendency of modern combinations to destroy competition. Competition is the fundamental law of industrialism, and we are not willing to have the tariff used in throttling or perpetuating it.

That comes from the distinguished governor of Iowa—Governor Cummins. It is a sentiment that pervades all sections of our country. We must have genuine work—no dodging behind the bush now.

I read again from the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]:

> For years we have been telling the people that we would do something toward broadening trade by means of reciprocity treaties. We have had the power in all branches of the Government, but we have done nothing. The Republican party has got to stop a lot of its conversation or to take up these treaties and some of the tariff schedules and do something toward satisfying expectations. The Republican party on this question is like a ship with all sail set and anchor fast. It is time to take in sail or pull in the anchor.

In common parlance, that means "shoot, Luke, or give up the gun." You have been aiming at the trusts long enough; fire now or give the Democrats the gun. That is what it means for 1904, and if you adopt this homeopathic, diluted concoction for the Nelson substitute the sentiments of Senator DOLLIVER, uttered in his own State, will come back to annoy you and harass you. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I understand the parliamentary situation of this matter, it is that the conference report will have to be voted down in order to reach this subdivision 6. I know there is great difficulty in that. I know there are gentlemen on both sides of this House who are interested in the establishment of the department of commerce and labor which this bill proposes to establish. I have frankly given my views upon the Nelson substitute.

I do not believe that anything good for the people against the trusts can come out of it. I was anxious to have and requested a separate vote on this substitute. This was declined or refused. I think that there is nothing whatever in it to alarm the trusts, and I do not think they are alarmed. The Republican party is responsible. No one should be allowed hereafter to say to us that we obstructed or hindered any legislation that promised or claimed to check the trusts. In that spirit I shall vote for the conference report. Surely no man who is honest and sincere in advocating the broad, conservative, legal, and just principles enunciated in the Littlefield bill can say for a moment that this Nelson substitute ought in justice to take the place of such a bill. If the Littlefield bill fails, then the people will answer in 1904.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker,

> The four first acts already past,
> A fifth shall close the drama with the day:
> Time's rottenest offspring is the last.

First. In the closing hours of the Fifty-sixth Congress the Republican party presented, as a means to destroy the trusts, a constitutional amendment to confer added power upon Congress. The Democrats opposed that amendment, insisting that there was ample constitutional power in the Congress of the United States to destroy every trust in the Union. The Republicans have receded from the position which they took at that time, and the President and a Republican Attorney-General are now agreed that Congress has the necessary power.

Second. We had in the closing hours of that Congress what was known as the Littlefield bill, which was a measure calculated at least to seriously embarrass the trusts. That went through this House with a whoop and died, because there were but four days, as all the members of Congress knew, in which the Senate could consider it, and it had been held back for that purpose.

Third. We had heralded in the newspapers during the past summer the fact that the eminent gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] was preparing a "trust buster" under the auspices and direction of the President of the United States, who had promised "to shackle the cunning of the trusts." After consultation with the powers that be the gentleman from Maine brought in a bill, and it was submitted in this House, and in the language, forceful but true, of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], when the committee brought that bill back they had "cut the dog's tail off right behind the ears."

Fourth. We had the emasculated Littlefield bill, which was passed in this House a few days ago with apparent seriousness and good faith, voted for by every member upon both sides of the Chamber, although its authors knew and the members upon that side of the House knew that it was not the intention of the Republican party at this session or any future session of Congress that even as mild a bill as that should become law or to pass any effective trust legislation.

Fifth. Mr. Speaker, we have had trumpeted from the White House the fact that the Administration has changed its programme; that it is now anxious to get through what is known as the Nelson bill and the Elkins bill which passed the Senate of the United States without any discussion or consideration whatever; and the newspapers are pretending to say that the Standard Oil Company is sending in telegrams and protests against the passage of these homeopathic doses to the trusts.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that John D. Rockefeller has sent any message to any Senator of the United States, or anybody else, in opposition to these measures, which are hardly equal to a dose of "soothing sirup," much less calculated to destroy the trusts. These bills are mere makeshifts, a hippodrome, to help get the Administration out of the hole into which its pretended trust-destroying efforts have placed it. If the President is sincere he is powerless, because he finds behind him a subservient Republican party which is not honest in its efforts to destroy the trusts. It is now the purpose of the Republican party to rush through the Nelson and Elkins bills to deceive the public and cover up the Administration's failure to get through legislation proposed by it and defeated by the trusts. Vote down this report, because if you adopt it, and then the Elkins bill, there will be a flourish of trumpets that, over the opposition of the Standard Oil and other trust concerns, the Administration has secured trust legislation.

There is nothing in this amendment of any value whatever. It creates a bureau of corporations at a considerable expense to gather information for the President, who makes public such as he sees proper. It is, in fact, no legislation whatever. When passed the suppression of trusts will be as far off as ever. Vote down the conference report and instruct the conferees to insist upon an amendment containing at least the publicity features of the House bill passed a few days ago, which is being smothered at the other end of the Capitol. In this way only will it be possible to have any legislation of value passed at this session of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five or ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he desires the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. MANN. I shall not use all the time that is allotted to me, Mr. Speaker, principally because my physical condition is such that I am not able to speak without great effort. The purpose of the House in inserting in the bill the section for the bureau of corporations is most fully justified by the Nelson amendment, which we have before us in the conference report. I may say, in reply to the suggestions which have been made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] in reference to the so-called Nelson substitute, that the statements made by them are not borne out by the wording of the substitute; and I say, Mr. Speaker, without question that the Nelson substitute confers a greater power upon the commissioner of corporations to make investigations of so-called trusts than has been proposed in any other bill or in any other proposition brought before Congress. The objection was made by one of the gentlemen interested in trust legislation that the Nelson amendment was too drastic, that it went too far.

Mr. Speaker, it confers upon the Executive an absolute power to make complete investigation in reference to all phases, all conditions, all control of any corporation engaged in interstate commerce which the Secretary may desire to have investigated. That information and that investigation are public. It is true that the Nelson amendment does not propose to punish violations of any law which we create. The Nelson amendment proposes investigation in order to obtain information. I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the other side of this House, which has always talked for trust legislation, now when it comes to the point where we can actually enact legislation, draws back afraid to put upon the statute books any legislation upon the subject. So long, Mr. Speaker, as the House is engaged in passing a bill, the gentlemen on the other side urge it. While the Senate is engaged in passing another bill, the gentlemen on the other side urge it; but when it comes to having the House and the Senate join in passing the same bill and the question is presented to the gentlemen, they hesitate and gag.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. I should like to ask the gentleman the question that I asked the gentleman from Alabama. Do you believe that if this bill passes you could, under the provisions of section 6, compel any officer of any corporation to reveal what is demanded of him in the antitrust bill, namely, whether they are overcapitalized; rebates, whether they have paid or received any, and the manner of the conduct of their business?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have hardly any belief on that. It is so plain that I think I may say I know if Congress has the constitutional authority under any circumstances to ask these questions of a corporation, that authority is conferred to the fullest extent by this bill upon the commissioner of corporations, and all the power Congress can confer upon anyone to make investigations of corporations is conferred upon the commissioner of corporations by the Nelson amendment.

Mr. THAYER. One question further.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. The only authority conferred in this bill is the authority that is conferred in the Interstate Commerce Commission in dealing with railroads and common carriers. Is there any provision in the statute to which this refers to compel a corporation to reveal the conditions I have stated?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, the gentleman knows that the authority conferred upon the commissioner of corporations, in reference to these corporations, is that conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commissioners now in reference to railway corporations. The authority is full and complete. The authority in the interstate-commerce act covers the question which the gentleman has asked about, and the authority conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commissioners is absolutely as full as can be conferred by language.

Mr. THAYER. Why did they not put it in, then, in the same language as the language in the antitrust bill, so that something definite and substantial could be discerned?

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman will notice, the antitrust bill refers to certain provisions in the act to regulate commerce. It never has been the custom of anybody to copy all of these provisions over again. The gentleman laughs and shakes his head. Perhaps he has not read the bill.

Mr. THAYER. Oh, yes, I have.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps the gentleman has not read the law. If he has read the law, then I suspect that he knows that the question he asks is answered completely by the law. The authority conferred upon the commissioner by the Nelson amendment is definite and certain. He will possess all the power which Congress has as to making investigations of corporations. The manner and method of exercising that power are now indicated by the interstate-commerce act. The language we have used is plain and unambiguous.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, may I not ask the gentleman in the interest of fairness to withdraw the statement he made against the Democratic side of the House upon this subject of trust legislation in view of the record of hypocrisy made by the other side in the Fifty-sixth Congress?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, whenever I withdraw any statement made in reference to my friends on the other side on the basis of the truth of their claim of hypocrisy on this side I hope I may land in a lower and not an upper world. [Laughter.] We all have become used to the argument that is made by gentlemen on the other side, which simply is abuse. I never heard one of you make a speech upon the floor of this House in reference to trust legislation that did not denounce the Republicans as a band of robbers and thieves.

Mr. FLEMING. You have not been in your seat all the time, then.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to except the gentleman from Georgia, who is always fair and courteous in his language; and there are other exceptions, I am glad to say.

But your speakers usually say that the Republicans are a band of robbers and thieves. They say we act at the behest of the trusts. And yet I do not know a gentleman on that side of the aisle who believes it. There is no gentleman on that side who believes gentlemen on this side of the aisle are not actuated by purposes as honest, as noble, as truthful as theirs; and I would not claim that gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House are not earnest and sincere in their work against the trusts. They are now only seeking political capital. We are responsible for what we do; they are not held responsible for what they say. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman a question before he sits down?

Mr. MANN. Well, if it is a question in reference to the bill, I will take time to answer it; if it is a mere political question——

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to know if the gentleman has ever seen me ask any other question since my service in this House?

Mr. MANN. I think that is true. The gentleman is sincere.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. What I want to know is if the gentleman does not think it would have been better to have required the commissioner of corporations to lay his report before Congress rather than before the President; because it is not so important, as I view the matter, that the President should be enabled to make recommendations as that Congress should be enabled to enact some intelligent effective legislation.

Mr. MANN. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the commissioner of corporations is under the department of commerce and labor, which has a secretary, and the secretary is required to make an annual report, which of course means that the statement that the commissioner of corporations makes in his report to the secretary would be included as a part of his report.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. In that same connection I apprehend that this provision of the amendment which says it shall lie in the discretion of the President as to what shall be made public of these reports would preclude the commissioner from laying before Congress what the official report developed in his investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I wish I had time; I think I could explain that to the gentleman's satisfaction.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Georgia, a member of the committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not like to appear in antagonism to my distinguished friend on the committee, the gentleman from Alabama, who was one of the managers on the part of the House. However, I do not desire that any vote that I may cast shall be construed into an indication of lack of knowledge that the provision discussed by the gentleman from Alabama, known as the Nelson substitute, is a delusion and a snare, a hollow mockery, thinner than thin air, weaker than water, the meanest sham, the most contemptible fraud and false pretense, because it seeks to deceive constituents who send members here.

But we are put upon notice, at least by the newspapers, which everybody knows are always truthful, that this is the only antitrust measure that the "trust busters" are going to permit to pass at all. I do not propose to go before the country in the attitude of opposing the only antitrust legislation that we are served with notice can be enacted. I shall not oppose the report of the managers on the part of the House on that account. I know the managers on the part of the House have been diligent and patient. I know something of the difficulties they encountered. I accept their report as the best that can be secured under the circumstances, and shall contribute with great pleasure to creating the department of commerce and labor by voting for the adoption of this report. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report, and on that demand the previous question.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman one question before he demands the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield for a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to ask the gentleman if this report—and I have read it very carefully—in reference to insurance companies does anything more than to authorize the Commissioner to gather statistics in reference to insurance companies?

Mr. HEPBURN. Nothing in the world, so far as I understand.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then there is nothing in this measure that contravenes the votes of the House on that subject.

Mr. HEPBURN. All I mean to say is this, that it simply authorizes information being secured. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I do not want to debate.

Mr. HEPBURN. I prefer not to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman decline to yield for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks for the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HEPBURN. On that question, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 252, nays 10, answered "present" 4, not voting 85; as follows:

Mr. BRISTOW with Mr. MIERS of Indiana.
Mr. DWIGHT with Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6848. An act to establish a life-saving station at Cape Nome, Alaska;

S. 3638. An act for the extension of Eighth street northwest, or Wright's road, District of Columbia;

S. 4922. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew C. Smith;

S. 5219. An act to grant an honorable discharge from the military service to Robert C. Gregg;

S. 6048. An act granting a pension to Lillian G. Elkins; and

S. 7186. An act granting a pension to Mary C. Smith.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16731. An act permitting the town of Montrose, Colo., to enter 160 acres of land for reservoir and water purposes;

H. R. 10678. An act for the relief of the Florida Brewing Company;

H. R. 10355. An act granting an increase of pension to William W. Smithson;

H. R. 12952. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to the Rochford Cemetery Association to certain lands for cemetery purposes; and

H. R. 12411. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Bart.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 57.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 3,000 copies of a Congressional Directory which embraces the biographies of all members of Congress from the Continental Congress to the Fifty-seventh Congress, inclusive, compiled by O. M. Enyart, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

PORT OF NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 16885) to extend to the port of Niagara Falls, N. Y., the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURTS, KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 7642) providing for the holding of terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States at Kansas City, Kans., and for other purposes.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. JENKINS. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

RECORD OF DEEDS, ETC., IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. LACEY. I call up the conference report on bill (S. 5678) providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. I ask that the reading of the conference report, which has been printed in the RECORD, be dispensed with, and that only the statement of the House conferees be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask whether all the conferees have signed this report.

Mr. LACEY. They have. It is a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the statement only will be read.

The statement of the conferees was read, as follows:

The effect of this agreement is to accept the bill in the form in which it passed the Senate, defining the recording districts and places of record in Indian Territory.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5678) "providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. S. SHERMAN,
JOHN F. LACEY,
JOHN S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. M. STEWART,
O. H. PLATT,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the House bill on this subject authorized the judges of the courts to divide the Territory for the purpose of making registration districts. The Senate bill specified the divisions of the Territory. The House conferees yield and accept the Senate bill, thereby agreeing to the divisions as embraced in that bill.

The question being taken, the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering House bill No. 17202, known as the sundry civil appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] whether we can not now make some arrangement as to the duration of the general debate.

Mr. MCRAE. I think we on this side can agree to accept an hour, as I have applications for only a part of that time.

Mr. CANNON. Then I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill close in not exceeding two hours. I think I shall not want an hour for myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate on the sundry civil appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole be closed in not exceeding two hours. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The motion of Mr. CANNON was then agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. TAWNEY in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the Committee of the Whole for only a few minutes touching this bill and some matters of especial interest to the committee and the House, to which I wish to call attention.

This bill is accompanied by Report No. 3427, which explains the bill, its new provisions, and its changes of existing law, where the same are recommended.

The bill by its recommendations carries in round numbers $78,000,000 upon estimates of $80,000,000, the recommendations being $8,000,000 less than the regular and supplemental estimates, and $17,000,000 in round numbers more than the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

The increases in the bill over current law are referred to in the report; and the merit of the same will no doubt be explained and debated, paragraph by paragraph, under the five-minute rule as we proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Your committee have put much labor upon the preparation of this bill and feel that, complying with legislation over which they have no control—touching rivers and harbors, touching public buildings, touching light-houses and life-saving stations, and all along the line of public service—we could not recommend less than we have recommended from the standpoint of existing legislation and sound public policy. We have failed to recommend here and there appropriations that Congress has power to make under the rules of the House and the Senate upon general bills, because, in the judgment of the committee, appropriations here and there ought not to be made to the full limit proposed by the estimates.

Now, without further discussion of the bill, I crave the attention of the House to amendments that have been discussed by the Appropriations Committee, and which have been investigated at the last session and the present session of Congress; and while we have not reported in this bill items covering the matters to which I shall refer, I have it in mind—I think with the approval substantially of the committee, and certainly of my own judgment—to move at the appropriate places the items to which I now desire to call attention.

Mr. Chairman, the progress of the Republic is wonderful. If we stop to think about it, it overwhelms the individual and all of us. I am not an old man—I fancy I am not—but it is within my recollection as a boy, after I had begun to take some notice of public affairs as they were referred to in the few newspapers that we had away back in 1850, as a lad of 14, reading that Congress had authorized the extension of the Capitol building; then year after year progress was reported on the Dome, this wing, the other wing, and finally, as I recollect, there was substantial completion—not full completion—along in the early sixties, when my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] presided over the House.

Mr. GROW. We did not have any roof on.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says that no roof was on. He will recollect with more accuracy than myself as to when the two wings of the Capitol were occupied. But at the time the extension of this Capitol was determined upon we had 23,000,000 people in the United States, 30 States—a population of 23,191,876, to be exact. The membership of the House, including Delegates, was 173. Each Representative represented 134,000 people. There were 36 committees of the House. The minimum membership of any committee was 3 and the maximum 9. The number of States represented in Congress was 31. In 1900 the population of the country was 76,000,000 plus. The membership of the next House, the Fifty-eighth Congress, will be 389, as against 173 a half century ago. Each Representative will represent 190,000 people. There are now 45 committees of the present House, as against 31 of the House of half a century ago. The minimum membership of the committee is 5 and the maximum 17, as against 9 of a half century ago.

The number of States now represented in Congress is 45. I don't know that it is necessary for me to say more touching the increase of population and the growth of the country, a country that had within its boundary and its institutions the material for everlasting differences and contention ripening ten years later in civil war—the greatest war, the most expensive war in blood and treasure, the most heroic war that was ever waged in the history of the race, involving an expenditure of $8,000,000,000 and a resulting expenditure in a pension roll of $140,000,000 a year. And the end is not yet.

To-day we have a reunited country with material progress such as it has never experienced before, such as the world never before saw. Then we had the great unsettled West, what is now the Middle West and what is now the West, reaching out to the Pacific coast, an unknown country, presumed at that time to be of but little value, a land of desert, of wild beasts and wild men, abounding substantially in agriculture alone, not much of railways, not much of river and harbor accommodations, not much of improvements of inland navigation—not necessary. Then we had Chicago, with 50,000 people, minus; now it is a city of nearly two million. New York had a comparatively small population; Cincinnati less than a hundred thousand. Nothing at San Francisco, while the thousands of prosperous villages that reach out along 200,000 miles of railway, trading places as they are, with elevators and factories, were not.

Mr. Chairman, no prophet could have foretold what has happened in that half century.

Now, to the gratification of all of us, however we may throw words and sentences back and forth for partisan advantage, which I do not deplore, because ours is a government through parties, after we have fought our partisan fight, there is no man in the House upon either side who is not glad and glories in the growth and greatness of his country, its material prosperity, its intellectual wealth. Without boasting, no population on earth can equal it. We are first in agriculture still, but in diversification of industry, through the enterprise and the industry and the cunning and the judicious use of capital, sometimes, perhaps, injudicious it appears as we try to solve some of the problems that present themselves, we leap forward in competition with all the world until this country of ours to-day, for capital, is many, many, many billions of dollars ahead of any nation on earth; and while we remain first in agriculture, as far as manufactures are concerned we have, by virtue of the skill of our people, an annual product more than equal to the combined product of Great Britain and France and Italy and Austria.

Now, I have thought proper, as an American citizen and as a member of the House of Representatives, to speak of this material condition, because in almost thirty years of public service I have seen the country grow. Here we have our Capitol, everybody proud of it, this great building of wonderful architecture, beauty, and excellence—we are proud to say, perhaps, the best capitol building on earth, everything considered. Yet, Congress by Congress and decade by decade, with the increase of members, it becomes more and more insufficient for the purposes of the Congress of the United States, enlarged as it has become in the legislation and the business of the whole country.

I never have been an advocate of extravagant expenditures. I have always believed that enough was as good as a feast. Yet, in common with every other member, from one Congress to another, I have had the feeling that something ought to be done to enable the people's representatives especially, because we are the large body, as well as the popular body, to be better equipped in the Capitol and about the Capitol for the transaction of our legislative duties. [Applause.] The salary of a member of Congress is the same now that it was some time ago, a little less by twenty-five hundred dollars a year than it was when I entered Congress thirty years ago. Five thousand dollars is a large sum; yes. I have always lived at a hotel. I have never been able to keep house, I felt, in justice to myself and my family, because that meant entertainment. It meant expenditures for rent, in the absence of money to buy a house. It meant living in the house, and if you did as others did who keep house, economical though you might be, without frills, it meant the taking of from three to five thousand dollars of the salary, and then living in a very plain way, quite as plain as we would in our respective homes where our citizenship is.

But I do not desire further to refer to the pay of members. I wish to say that, owing to the increase of the price of living and the increase in the duties of a member of Congress—which I think I can safely say, from personal experience for thirty years, have been multiplied at least by three—it becomes necessary to live somewhere, in a leased house or an old house, or at a hotel or a boarding house, and it becomes necessary for every member of Congress, in the performance of his business as he ought to, in justice to his constituents, to have, outside of the place where he sleeps and receives friends in a modest room or little parlor, an office—a place to put the help, a place to put his papers. Many members for many years have complained, "Why, I have to go here or there and lease an office. My constituents do not find me when they come, unless they find me at the House of Representatives or at my home. Why can not something be done," they say, "to enable Representatives in Congress, in the performance of their official duty, to be found by their constituents?"

Now, your committee have given that matter investigation, and in connection with the investigation they have been assisted by the Superintendent of the Capitol, a most praiseworthy, honorable, vigilant, competent official, with the knowledge that a first-class architect ought to have and the common sense and practicability that few architects do have. He serves this House; and the Committee on Appropriations set him to work over a year ago, and he investigated touching the cost of an office building that would accommodate the House.

It will be seen at once that an office building ought to be in the vicinity of the Capitol. You can not put it on this reservation without doing injustice to the architecture of the Capitol, and what is it—the perspective? My friend from Missouri [Mr. BENTON], who is an authority on the subject, nods his head, and I know I am right always when he does that. [Laughter.] So that it has necessarily to go off of this reservation.

Now, the Architect of the Capitol, in making his investigations under the consultation of the committee, concludes, and I think rightly so, that if an office building is constructed for committee rooms and offices for Representatives for official purposes, it ought to be somewhere on one of four blocks, commencing on this one toward which I point, which I will describe as the Congressional Hotel block, or the next one or the one that runs down to the corner where the cars turn as we begin to ascend the hill. You could not have it at the other end very well, north of the Senate, because that would not be convenient for us. You could not properly go farther away, either east or west, because it ought to be convenient to the Hall of the House of Representatives, and, in my judgment, from any of the four locations of which I have spoken it ought to be connected with this Capitol by a subway.

Now, this report was made in the last Congress. The Superintendent of the Capitol proposes three plans. The committee that investigated this matter believe that neither the lowest nor the highest one should be taken, but the one between; and devoting myself to that plan I will say that it is believed that a site can be procured at the outside for $750,000. It is believed that it can be procured for half a million dollars; but as the appropriation, in the event it is authorized, must be sufficient to cover the cost of condemnation, to enable the proceedings to be effective, we put in not exceeding $750,000 for a site and to begin building.

That plan requires an area of 81,500 square feet. I believe there are 43,000 square feet in an acre, so that it is a little less than 2 acres. If constructed on either of the large squares which I have just referred to, this requirement could be met with proper distance surroundings. The building would have a floor space of more than 136,000 square feet. It would be three stories high, with a subbasement. It would contain 96 rooms on each floor, and allowing for storage and heating purposes in the subbasement, will afford from 374 to 410 available rooms. I do not mean including that, but allowing for that there would be that many rooms left, 374 to 410. The subbasement would be well lighted by courts and suitable for storage purposes. The size of the office rooms would average 17 by 20 feet. Assuming that all materials can be contracted for and delivered promptly, it is believed the building can be finished in about two and one-half years after acquisition of site. It can be connected with the Capitol by a tunnel. Let the question of outside finish, whether to be of marble or granite, be settled by the proposed commission. These are little memoranda that I made from the report. Now, a building in the locality referred to should be a building that would fairly correspond with the Capitol in appearance. You can not put a cheap-John building there. It is right here at the Capitol.

This building can be completed with architecture that fairly corresponds with the Capitol—such as it ought to be—and with granite or marble finish, with 400 rooms for committee rooms and offices for official purposes with room for heating, if thought wise, subsequently to furnish the electricity for lighting and the steam to heat this Capitol as well, with a subbasement that would be sufficient for the folding room and the document room of the House. If any gentleman wants to know whether the books in our present document room ought to be placed somewhere else, and whether the room that is now occupied is fit for that purpose, just let him wander down there with or without a candle. He will need a candle in some places and will not need it in other, if he wanders down through the rooms.

Here, with rooms well designed and ventilated, with 400 rooms for committee rooms and offices, room for the document room, and large enough, if the Senate wanted to be accommodated, for the Senate, and accommodate it as well as the House for a document room. Now, that building, all complete, heating and light, and of the kind that I have described, to correspond, as it ought to, with the Capitol, can be built for $3,000,000, I am informed, covering, the court and all, about 2 acres of land. In addition to that, the site would have to be bought, for, I believe, about a half a million dollars, although we will propose $750,000, so as to cover it. Now, so much for the office building.

Mr. WATSON. That is $3,000,000 for the office building alone?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BOWIE. Is that in this bill?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that the bill does not contain this provision. I believe the Committee on Appropriations are substantially in favor of it; and I will be entirely frank with the House, I think we would have reported it had it not been that it is perfectly evident to everybody that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MORRIS. Would you allow us to move to suspend the rules? [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Well, I am going to say that, after thinking the matter over thoroughly, I believe the consensus of opinion on both sides of the House favors the construction of such a building [applause] and I will move at the proper place in the bill to insert the provision to authorize it. [Applause.] I should be very glad if we take it up by unanimous consent. If somebody else had made the motion, I would not have felt at liberty to make the point of order, although I do make them, have got to do so in justice to the House, and make them substantially all along the line. But this is a matter that runs to the comfort of all the members and affects their efficiency as Representatives. Therefore I would be glad to take the opinion of the Committee of the Whole upon it, and shall be glad if it passes upon the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not hear all the gentleman's remarks, but indorse the latter part of them. I ask him if this building should be alone for the use of the House of Representatives?

Mr. CANNON. The office building? Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman give his assurance that the Senate will not claim an interest in it?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that we will specify that this is for the House. The Senate is a small body of 90, holding near one-half of this Capitol, the Supreme Court having a little room and space, and the Maltby Building, which was bought for the use of the Senate and is fairly well cared for. Then, too, if the House asks that an appropriation be made for an office building for its use, under the practice that obtains between the House and Senate, that whatever goes to the comfort and efficiency of the two bodies, respectively, lies in the discretion of the respective bodies, I do not think there will be any trouble.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What assurance can the gentleman give us that the building will be ready for use and occupation in the political lifetime of the present members?

Mr. CANNON. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. I stated it while he was out. It is understood that the title can be obtained in five months. Now, the Architect of the Capitol states that from the time the title is obtained, with authority to contract, that the building can be completed in two years and a half.

Now, then, I want to drop that and go to one other matter that I have in mind to offer for the consideration of the House. The Capitol building, the extension was designed by Mr. Walters, who died many years ago. You know what it is. It was never completed. The eastern projection, the size of which I will give you, by the original plan, was never built.

I will just read it. For proposed extension of the Capitol as authorized it will make a total of 108 feet. That is on the east of the old building to the wall of the extension; giving an addition of 352 feet north and south, with not less than 66 rooms, 33 for each House. It will also add to the floor space of the building, 65,247 square feet. If accommodations for the Supreme Court room are provided in this proposed extension, the number of rooms available added will be reduced to 55, instead of 66. Further, the size of these rooms will be about that of the room of the Committee on Appropriations, about 25 by 28 feet, corresponding to the rooms now in the House wing of the building.

The central extension would have 55 feet beyond the wall line of the present wing. Now, gentlemen will notice that the western extension has lately been put into committee rooms for the House and Senate. That was completed according to the original design. The corresponding extension on the east was never built. If gentlemen want to verify—if it needs any verification—if you will go out and look at the Dome on the east side, looking at the main wall of the building, you will see that the Dome extends 9 or 10 feet beyond the main wall to the east.

The whole plans are in existence. There is a drawing, which I do not care to bring in here, that was made by Mr. Walters when the original design was made, with complete plans in every respect for the extension of the building.

Now, I submit that the time has come, not only for an office building for the House, but for the completion of this Capitol. [Applause.] It will cost two and one-half million dollars to complete it. It can be completed in about the same time that it will take to build and complete the office building. If larger and increased room is wanted for the Senate, with or without the Maltby Building, it will give the Senate all the rooms that it will ever need. Because while this body will increase as the population increases, we have pretty nearly reached the limit as to the number of States of the Union. It would add to the architectural effect. It would give us the much-needed room for the transaction of business. But, say some, it costs a good deal. Yes; but, gentlemen, these new wings cost $8,000,000; and let me tell you something: The intelligent and patriotic and industrious service by every Congress for two years, well equipped from every standpoint and with every aid, would more than save the cost of the Capitol extension and the office building in appropriate legislation and appropriate legislation for the public service.

So it is really economy instead of extravagance. Now, in my judgment, a provision to finish the Capitol according to the original design would probably not be subject to a point of order. I have it in mind that this is the proper place in this bill to move an appropriation to commence with that work and authorize it by contract, because, as the gentleman from Tennessee asked, "How long will it take?" We want it in this life, and we can not build—build as fast as we can, we can not more than half keep up with the increase in population. A large expenditure? Yes; about three and one-half million, four million, six million dollars. Now, let us build the office building and put in the heating apparatus for the Capitol in the new office building, put in the mains that bring the heat and the steam and the electricity to this Capitol, clean out the old document room and get rid of the smells and the foul ventilation that is offensive to everybody, our constituents as well as others, have the Capitol as it ought to be, a clean, healthy place with room enough in which to transact the public business, and do it as citizens do who transact much less business than we do on their motion, and be prepared for it.

Have we the money? Yes. I think this is the time for action. In my judgment, if action is not had at this session of Congress it is liable to go over a decade and possibly longer than that, and we go crippling along with our insufficient surroundings. We have got a very considerable surplus in the Treasury. You can prove by me that there are a great many people in the United States that want to relieve the Treasury of that surplus. [Laughter.] There is the river and harbor bill, the public buildings bill, in the main well done. But once in a while there is an unwise appropriation, but in the main pretty well held in hand. In the main the appropriations not justified are denied. But in my judgment, having the money and the wherewithal for these amendments, if they are adopted and enacted into law, no better expenditure of $6,000,000 in the next two and a half years can be made than would be covered by these amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has sixteen minutes remaining.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I have very little criticism of the pending bill. It is exceptionally free from new legislation. It does not abound with increases of salaries for new offices. I believe it has no increases of salaries nor any new offices at all—no new legislation that is not beneficial, and none except along the lines of proper limitation upon expenditures.

There is one paragraph in the bill to which I will call attention, not for the purpose of adverse criticism, but in order that the committee may understand that the paragraph is here, and why. I refer to the paragraph which seeks to give $3,000,000 to relieve distress in the Philippines. I regret that it is necessary that we should make this appropriation, but it is a necessary result of the policy that we have adopted for these new possessions. Without regard to whether this country should have been annexed, these people are a part of our country and entitled to the protection of our flag, and it is as much our duty to relieve distress there as in any part of our country. We have many precedents for such appropriations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the gentleman's attention to the subject adverted to by him on page 111 of the bill. It is as follows:

> Philippine Islands: For the relief of the distress in the Philippine Islands, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Philippine government in such proportions as they deem wise, in the direct purchase and distribution or sale of farm implements, farm animals, supplies, and necessaries of life, and through the employment of labor in the construction of government wagon roads, railroads, and other public works, to be immediately available, $3,000,000.

I certainly join with the gentleman in the regret for the necessity that makes this appropriation in his judgment and in the judgment of the committee necessary. I would like to ask him what was the opinion of the committee as to the theory upon which this sum of three millions to be granted to the Philippine Islands. Was it upon the theory that the granting of this for relief of the distress was to prevent disorder and trouble there to the military of our Government, or is it upon the theory of a pure gratuity in the line of relieving distress?

Mr. McRAE. The hearing before the committee consists of course principally of the statement of the Secretary of War or those of his Department who are familiar with the facts, the Philippine Commission, and they are all agreed that the people are in distress. Thousands of them are dying from disease, many of them suffering for food and clothing, and the appropriation is here for the purpose of relieving the distress and caring for the sick.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman how extensive the examinations of this committee were and how unanimous the evidence upon the proposition of the necessity for this large appropriation for the Philippine Islands?

Mr. McRAE. We have only one way of obtaining information from the Philippine Islands, which is through the Commission and the War Department. We have the statement of the Commission and the recommendation of the Secretary of War, and we accept those as true.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is all the evidence in favor of it?

Mr. McRAE. Both concur in the statement that the distress exists and that the relief ought to be granted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman whether the hearings before the committee show the cause of this destitution?

Mr. McRAE. Sickness is the principal cause.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend be willing to reserve the balance of his time and let me resume the floor and take the balance of my time? My colleague on the committee [Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts] has to leave the House. I should like to yield the remainder of my time to him and he would like to talk now.

Mr. McRAE. Yes; I will do that.

Mr. CANNON. Very well. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for sixteen minutes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, that which entitles a member to a hearing in this House, on any subject, is long experience or long study of that subject, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] so well exemplifies on this bill. I wish to impose a few remarks upon the committee from exactly the opposite ground, from the standpoint of a novice. I have just served my first term on the subcommittee framing one of these large appropriation bills, and I thought it would be pardonable to give to the House a few of the first impressions which the various hearings have produced on my mind. There were some of them quite startling.

I do not think I have any special disposition to be parsimonious in spending other people's money, and at the same time I think any member serving his first term on one of these subcommittees and listening to the hearings can not fail to be made conservative and to feel that the ordinary metaphor is seriously true which compares the public Treasury to a crib, to which innumerable applicants are constantly fighting for subsistence. And I am simply going to recount a few of the incidents in the hearings which especially surprised me, and which it seems to me would strike the House as extraordinary and instructive.

The first instance I will refer to is what seems to me an act of insubordination or disobedience, or perhaps it would be more fair to say indifference on the part of a great department to the command of Congress. In the last sundry civil bill Congress appropriated about $1,000,000 for the construction of certain prescribed buildings. This year the gentlemen who had charge of that construction came before our committee and asked, I think, $600,000 more for the completion of those very buildings for which the House last year appropriated over $1,100,000. They were asked why it was that they had not observed the orders of Congress and built those buildings which we specified for $1,100,000, and all they could say was that the money was not sufficient, that their plans were too large, and that they needed this $600,000 more to complete what we ordered last year to be done for $1,000,000. They had commenced on too grand a scale and had not been willing to reduce their expensive plans to the limitation imposed by Congress.

Now, what were we to do? We could not deny this appropriation, for here were the buildings, which were useless unless completed. We have no power over these officers, because we did not appoint them and we can not remove them, and if we should refuse to make this appropriation they would not be the sufferers, but the sufferers would be the innocent people for whom these buildings were planned. So we could simply do again what we did last year; that is, say that certain buildings should be erected for this money, and then wait and see whether in the next Congress they will again disobey our mandate and use up this $600,000 and still ask for more.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. Why did you not put it in your bill that the money shall not be used for any other purpose?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It was put in the bill last year. It was specified that they should build a certain number of buildings, and they did not do it, because they started with such expensive plans that the money would not hold out. They ought, of course, to have changed to simpler plans. What can we do? How can we punish them? Whether that exemplifies a whole series of smaller acts which are constantly going on under the different departments, evading the purpose of Congress, I do not know, but I confess when there is one such glaring offense of this kind, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, I can but suspect that in small ways there may be many appropriations we make which are diverted from their intended purpose.

Another case similar to this came before us. An appropriation was asked for of, I think, $20,000 or $30,000 to put in elevators in a building which was just finished. We asked, "Was not that elevator provided for in your plans of the building?" "Certainly." "Why did you not put it in?" "There was not money enough." "Why did you not make your plans so that the money appropriated would complete them?" There could be no answer. Of course the purpose was to make the building a little better than they could for the sum Congress appropriated and then trust to the good nature of subsequent Congresses to supply the deficiencies they left.

I understand that in some States there are laws making it a crime for an officer to exceed the authorized expenditures. I incline to think it would have a very beneficial effect here. I know of one case, not in this bill, where Congress appropriated $20,000 to build a couple of houses, just alike. The Government official who had control of the building advertised for bids. He could not get anybody to build the two houses for less than $21,000 or $22,000. What did he do? Did he revise the architect's plans and make smaller buildings, to conform to the purpose of Congress? Oh, no; not at all. He wanted these particular buildings. So, inasmuch as no contractor would build them for $20,000, he went on and said: "I will build them by the day," regardless, apparently, of the limitation.

He went on by day labor and built one building, and by the time it was finished had spent about $15,000, and then he used up the rest of the $20,000 on the other building, and diverted to it some appropriations which belonged to an entirely different department; and then, when he found he could not finish the other building, even with that assistance, he came back to Congress, and we gave him an amount sufficient to complete the two buildings at an expense of about $25,000, I think. I do not know how common such systematic violations of our laws are, and I do not think this House is aware of them, and it is well that these extreme cases should come to your attention.

Now, these are cases of plain violation of our laws. There is another series of cases that is quite different, and that is the tendency of departments to come before Congress and get all the money they can, without any apparent thought of economy. One is a case before us in this bill. There is an appropriation for $2,000,000 for Army barracks. There was a similar appropriation last year, I think. There is an appropriation of about the same size in the Army bill of this year, and I believe was last year. I find our Army to be provided with barracks consists of about 57,000; about 20,000 of these are in the Philippines, leaving about 37,000 men in this country. About 14,000 of these are in the coast artillery, which leaves about 23,000 men in this country outside of the coast artillery. Yet the officers in the War Department report to us that there are barracks to-day in this country, outside of the coast artillery, for 31,000 men; and yet they want $4,000,000 more for barracks.

Now, undoubtedly many of these barracks are old and could be vastly improved. They have not the modern conveniences, and yet I question very much if, when we have existing barracks for 31,000, we ought to go on, when we have only an Army of 23,000 who need them, and spend millions of dollars every year providing new barracks. I found that one of these cases was right here at the Washington Barracks, and I thought I would go down and see what was being done. There is where they are going to build the new War College, which the present administration of the Army is so much interested in. I suppose each administration gets interested along different lines. I have no doubt that a War College is a most admirable institution; but perhaps a few years from now the administration of the Army will not care much about a War College and will be pursuing some new fad. But just now the War College is greatly in favor, and so I find they have gone down here to this point of land on the Potomac, where there are now barracks and officers' quarters for the engineers, and have decided to put this War College there.

There was apparently plenty of land for them at this end of the yard. The barracks and officers' quarters now occupy the extreme southern end of the point of land, and there is a large portion of land between there and the entrance, which is unoccupied; and naturally you would think that if they were going to put the War College there, they would put it at this end on the unoccupied ground. But no, they go down there and decide the War College must go where the ground is all covered with barracks and officers' quarters, and that they are going to raze to the ground all the present barracks and officers' quarters and make a new open field and put up their buildings for a War College. Then they are going to put up new barracks and new officers' quarters for the engineers at this end of the grounds now vacant.

I have no doubt the present officers' quarters and barracks are old and have not modern improvements. I suspect they are about as good as the men and officers would have in civil life, and I expect they would live fairly well as they are. And it looks to me like an instance where the Department, with undoubtedly the purest intentions and highest purpose, entirely disregards economy and only studies to get the very best results for themselves without regard to expense. They are going to tear down an army hospital only ten years old, apparently doing very good service, in order to carry out the wholesale plan of obliterating everything there and building up anew, and then they want several hundred thousand dollars from us for a new hospital to take its place.

There is another whole series of expenditures which attracted my attention, the appropriations for the Geological Survey and the Smithsonian Museum. I confess it does not seem to me that it is wise for this National Government to spend money simply for scientific researches which do not promise any direct material advantage. I should think gentlemen on the other side of the House might think it was unconstitutional for the Government to spend money for scientific research. At any rate, I think it is not wise and not the part or purpose of this Government to be spending money purely for scientific and educational purposes. We have a great Museum there.

That Museum seems to be of great interest to all of the people of the United States who come to the capital, and ought to be continued and kept up, and I think it ought to have a new building and be handsomely housed, but I do not see why it should cost $170,000 a year simply to take care of that Museum.

Then we appropriate $40,000 a year for investigations in ethnology. I have no doubt very learned results have been produced, of great value in that field of research, but I ask myself, Why should this Government be paying for it? There is, I believe, a theory that this money is spent to instruct Congress, and particularly the Indian Affairs Committee, how we should treat the Indians, but I doubt if members get their inspirations for that legislation from this department, and certainly the success of our legislation does not testify to its value. But however valuable it may be to the scholar, I do not think it is a proper object for Government support.

Then we appropriate $10,000 each year for studies in paleontology. Why should we study that? How does paleontology interest the Government of the United States? It means, I believe, a study of fossils. Now, if they would study the numerous fossils connected with the Government, and find out some way to eradicate them, I would make no criticism. [Laughter and applause.] But to spend $10,000 supporting some learned and excellent men in the study of fossils out in our West seems to me wrong. But it has gone on year after year and has become a regular practice.

There is another appropriation of $15,000 for astrophysical researches, or the effect of the sun on the earth. I have no doubt that it, too, is a most desirable result to have accomplished somewhere, but I do not see why the United States Government should appropriate money to carry it on. A most learned, and accomplished, and genial, and delightful gentleman is in charge of it, one whom we are all proud to see connected with the Government, and yet it seems to me the purpose of this Government is not to make these discoveries. We had a request for $25,000 for a collection of butterflies, which I have no doubt would still more adorn the collections of the Museum. I do not think we ought to spend much money to make these collections scientifically complete. They interest the public; let us keep it interesting and not try to make it scientifically perfect.

Now, the last Smithsonian report attracted my attention. I have no doubt it attracted the attention of every member, if you had as many letters from constituents asking for it as I have. I understand the reason was that soon after it was issued there appeared in the press all over the country a uniform and highly complimentary notice of that report, suggesting that we could furnish it on request, which brought to us all many more applications than we could comply with. I looked at the report, and I find that the report proper of the Director occupies 52 pages. Next come 100 pages of appendices, which relate to the business of the office. Then follow 600 pages of miscellaneous articles, reprinted from magazines and newspapers, profusely illustrated. This document is published by the Smithsonian Museum as a Government document. I do not think the publication of such books is a proper use of the privilege of the Institution. I do not think that this is any proper part of their report. I do not think it ought to be printed and distributed at public expense. It is undoubtedly interesting to our constituents. I notice, for instance, one article——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate may be extended for twenty minutes on each side.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], reserving one minute.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I only want a few minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Take all the time you want. I have no other applications for time.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This one article that attracted my attention was an article by Fournier, automobilist, giving an interesting account of the automobile races from Paris to Berlin. This is profusely illustrated by pictures of automobiles with the crowds along the way. What has that to do with our Smithsonian Institution or with the advancement of science? It seems to me all this ought to be struck out. It is interesting, of course, because it has all been printed in magazines, etc., before and has been tested. But it is not a proper part of a Smithsonian report, and I think such publications are an abuse.

In this way my attention has been attracted to various reports which exemplify another abuse, the profuse indulgence in illustration, which ought to be stopped. For instance, here are the annual reports of the various Territories, and the one feature of them which I think is growing to be an abuse consists in the illustrations which they contain. I can not stop to describe the numerous pictures, but here are one or two. Here is the report of the Territory of Alaska, in which I find one illustration entitled "The Eskimo haymakers at Unalaska." It is a picture of 15 or 20 men with scythes, rakes, etc.—not particularly different from any other haymakers, but the picture tends, perhaps, to make up an interesting report. Sprinkled all through the report are illustrations—photographs, expensive, of course—absolutely useless, except to attract the eye and make the report, if possible, entertaining. Whether they succeed in that respect or not, they certainly make it expensive.

Here in the report from the Territory of Oklahoma is a group entitled "Picking cherries on an Oklahoma fruit ranch." It is a picture of some good-looking young women on ladders—such a group as you might see not only in Oklahoma, but in any other Territory or in any State of the United States.

In the report from the Territory of Hawaii I find a large-sized picture of a beautiful girl, and it is entitled "Hawaiian woman." This is gotten up at Government expense, with the object, doubtless, of attracting attention to Hawaii, and if this were a fair specimen of Hawaiian women I have no doubt it would stimulate a large immigration of young men.

Then, here in the report from the governor of New Mexico I find one picture entitled "Normal school basket-ball team, Silver City, 1901." It is a picture of a group of about a dozen plump and comely young women in bloomers; it is the great basket-ball team! I suppose the object is to show us that the West is rivaling the effete East in modern civilization, and that those people are well entitled to admission into the Union. Next year I presume we shall have pictured in this way the football team of the normal school, and then there can be no question of her title to statehood.

Now, here is a document which possibly some of you gentlemen have seen—the report of the Boundary Commission upon the boundary between the United States and Mexico. It is a beautiful album, containing nothing but a series of photographs—large photographs on handsome paper—making an elegant book. When you come to look at it you find that the first picture is of Boundary Stone Marked No. 1, and the next is Boundary Stone Marked No. 2, and so it goes on till the last, where we find Boundary Stone Marked No. 258. There is a separate photograph of each one of these boundary stones between the United States and Mexico. They have tried to make this interesting by putting in the mountains in the background, sometimes in one direction, sometimes in another; here they have the picture of a cactus tree, and here is a group of farmers; here is a horse; there is a cow. They tried to make variety, but the whole collection is simply a series of pictures of boundary stones. They might just as well have gotten up a series of pictures of the milestones along the Pennsylvania Railroad or the gravestones at Arlington Cemetery, decorated by an artist with a few accompanying objects. It must have cost thousands of dollars to make simply the photographic plates for this publication.

This publication you will be surprised to learn, emanates from that seat of economy and frugality and unselfishness—the United States Senate; it is printed as a Senate document. That particular abuse of course we can not check, but I think there ought to be some committee with the power to act as censors over the public printing and to cut out these useless, if ornamental, photographs, to restrict our printing to what it naturally should be. I must admit that the departments have large excuse for extravagant printing when they look at the printing of Congress. I presume the Smithsonian director would say, and say very truly, "My report is infinitely more interesting and useful than most of the reports of Congress which you are constantly publishing."

I will admit the truth of that retort. We are just as much to blame as they are. There ought to be in Congress some committee which should see to it that our reports are not printed as they are now—everything, either valuable or useless, of the same amount and of the same variety and same number—but that they ought to be in some way checked and prevented.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will my friend permit a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman not think that the grossest abuse in the matter of printing is permitting an extension of remarks in the RECORD and permitting members of Congress to print long speeches that were never delivered on the floor of the House, and to which every gentleman gives his consent?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not. I differ from the gentleman there. I think that probably nine-tenths of the speeches delivered here—and I suppose the gentleman from Illinois will say that mine should be included among the rest—were better printed than delivered.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; I would never make that remark about any of the gentleman's speeches.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. But I really think that the rule of allowing speeches to be printed is a great refuge, that it saves the time of this House and accomplishes just as much as if they were orally delivered. It seems to me that where the great abuses creep in are in these enormous numbers of documents which are filling up the whole Capitol and which I am sure are encumbering us very much to know what constituent would ever look at them, and which are, most of them, absolutely wasted. That is an enormous expense to the Government.

It seems to me that the whole subject of printing is one that requires investigation. I was particularly struck, when the Public Printer was before us, to find that here is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, one of the largest newspapers in the country, published daily, and yet there is not a typesetting machine in the whole Government Printing Office, with its splendid new building and modern equipment. It is all done by hand as it was years ago, whereas, I suppose, every other enterprising paper in the United States has these time-saving machines. Whether the public printing is as expensive or economical as we generally hear, I do not know. It is a subject much discussed and which, I think, ought to be investigated. It was called to my attention within a few days by another incident. A gentleman who was a member of one of the departments of the Government showed me two blank books and asked me if I could tell which was the better. I could not see much difference between the two. He replied that if he ordered one of them he could get it in the public market for 30 cents, and the other one would cost at the Government Printing Office $1.40.

Now, I have an impression that almost all Government business is transacted at about double the expense that it would be outside, but I did not suppose that any department of the Government was compelled to pay from four to five times as much as outside. That may be a mistake. There may be a vital difference in the two books which I did not see, but it corroborated to some extent much of the gossip which we hear about the expense of that department of the Government. Now, I wish to say, before sitting down, that most of these expenses of the departments, the scientific departments in particular, are not due to any malfeasance on their part or to any ill intentions on their part; are not due, perhaps, to extravagance. It is simply due to the fact that they are enthusiastic in their departments; that they see great possibilities which they can accomplish; that they see great advances to science and culture and civilization, and doubtless think we are sordid in demanding material returns for our money.

That enthusiasm is most commendable. It is only by such enthusiasm for this work that any department can be successfully carried on, and we can not expect that they will stint themselves when their imaginations see such possibilities, but it is for us, when they come to the question of appropriation, to look at it in the cold light of taxation and not to allow the enthusiasm of any department to run away with us. It is for us, looking at all the different departments of the Government, to say how much shall be given to each one and to try to make each appropriation commensurate with the results which are the best for the Government, and that is what the different departments do not do and probably can not be expected to do. That is probably what, owing to the constitution of humanity, we would not even want them to do. Therefore what this House ought to do, it seems to me, is to carefully scrutinize and suspect the estimates that come in, and ruthlessly cut them if we think they ought to be cut.

I suppose I ought not to reveal anything that goes on in a committee, but I think it is no betrayal of confidence to say that not once in all the framing of this bill was it suggested in the committee that there was any danger that any one item which we passed would be cut down by the House. The only danger in considering any item was whether the House might not make it larger. I think each member is too apt to look at his own particular district and wishes and not to weigh what the country as a whole requires.

Now, I thought before I had become petrified on the committee by service, before I had gotten quite accustomed to distributing $80,000,000 in a few days and throwing a hundred thousand dollars here and there, I would express the effect which is produced on me by hearing this testimony. I wish that the House could give more minute attention to it and observe how the different departments are each enthusiastically grasping for what money they can get, and then consider whether it is not the duty of this House to carefully retrench these annual expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to a matter which affects the western boundary of the State of Arkansas—a question recently brought to the attention of the public by the passage of a concurrent resolution through the general assembly of the State of Arkansas. The claim is that Arkansas is entitled to a strip off of the east side of the Indian Territory 40 miles wide. In order that all of the facts as to why this strip of territory was attached to Arkansas Territory and how it was given to the Indians may be fully understood by Congress, by the people of Arkansas, by the people of the Indian Territory, and by others who may be interested, I desire to call attention to certain statutes and treaties relating to the organization of the Territories of Louisiana, Orleans, Missouri, and Arkansas, and affecting the boundaries of Arkansas, both as a Territory and State.

The act of March 20, 1804, provided for the organization of two Territories in Louisiana Territory, acquired from France, one to be called Orleans and the other the Territory of Louisiana.

SECTION 1. That all that portion of country ceded by France to the United States, under the name of Louisiana, which lies south of the Mississippi Territory, and of an east and west line to commence on the Mississippi River, at the thirty-third degree of north latitude, and to extend west to the western boundary of the said cession, shall constitute a Territory of the United States under the name of the Territory of Orleans.

* * * * * * *

SEC. 12. The residue of the province of Louisiana, ceded to the United States, shall be called the district of Louisiana. (2 Stat., 283.)

The act of June 4, 1814, provides:

That the Territory heretofore called Louisiana shall hereafter be called Missouri. (2 Stat., 743.)

The first section of the act of March 2, 1819, provided for the establishment of a separate Territorial government for the southern part of the Territory of Missouri, to be known as Arkansaw Territory, and I call attention to the fact that in this act the name is "Arkansaw," not "Arkansas:"

That from and after the 4th day of July next all that part of the Territory of Missouri which lies south of a line beginning on the Mississippi River, at 36° north latitude, running thence west to the river St. Francis, thence up the same to 36° 30′ north latitude, and thence west to the western Territorial boundary line, shall, for the purposes of a Territorial government, constitute a separate Territory and be called the Arkansaw Territory. (3 Stat., 493.)

By the act of March 6, 1820, the State of Missouri was admitted into the Union with the following boundary:

That the said State shall consist of all the territory included within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at the middle of the Mississippi River on the parallel of 36° north latitude; thence west along that parallel of latitude to the St. Francois River; thence up and following the course of that river, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the parallel of latitude of 36° 30′; thence west along the same to a point where the said parallel is intersected by a meridian line passing through the middle of the mouth of the Kansas River where the same empties into the Missouri River; thence from the point aforesaid north along the said meridian line to the intersection of the parallel of latitude which passes through the rapids of the river Des Moines, making the said line correspond with the Indian boundary line; thence east from the point of intersection last aforesaid along the said parallel of latitude to the middle of the channel of the main fork of the said river Des Moines; thence down and along the middle of the main channel of the said River Des Moines to the mouth of the same where it empties into the Mississippi River; thence due east to the middle of the main channel of the Mississippi River; thence down and following the course of the Mississippi River, in the middle of the main channel thereof, to the place of beginning. (3 Stat., 545.)

The act of May 26, 1824, is the one to which I especially wish to call attention, because that is the one which extended the western boundary of the territory of the State of Arkansas 40 miles west:

That the western boundary line of the Territory of Arkansas shall begin at a point 40 miles west of the southwest corner of the State of Missouri, and run south to the right bank of the Red River, and thence down the river and with the Mexican boundary to the line of the State of Louisiana, any law heretofore made to the contrary notwithstanding. (4 Stat., 40.)

This extension was supported in the United States Senate by the distinguished Senator from the State of Missouri, Mr. Benton, and passed that body with very little opposition. Mr. Benton argued that the proper national policy was to make Arkansas strong—make her a first-class State, both for her own sake and that of the Union, and equal to all the exigencies of her advanced and frontier position. In the House the bill was advocated by Mr. Clay, who represented the hardships of the circumstances of the settlers. He said the new Territories were younger daughters of the common federative family and, as such, were entitled to an indulgent policy, and urged the policy of making Arkansas a strong State.

Mr. Conway, the Arkansas Delegate, remonstrated against 40,000 Indians turned in among the settlements of Arkansas to turn out those who had subdued the wilderness and were surrounded with improvements, the fruit of their own labor. He contended that the limits of the Territory should be removed farther to the west, to allow room for these Indians having a separate home from the whites and to give strength to Arkansas as a future frontier State.

This was a wise policy deliberately adopted, and it was a great misfortune to Arkansas when it was abandoned without the consent of her people or Congress.

I now refer to the treaty of Washington, made May 6, 1828, and found on page 311 of the seventh volume of Indian Treaties, which recklessly and unconstitutionally amputated the Territory in question:

ART. 1. The western boundary of Arkansas shall be, and the same is hereby, defined, viz: A line shall be run, commencing on Red River, at the point where the Eastern Choctaw line strikes said river, and run due north with said line to the river Arkansas, thence in a direct line to the southwest corner of Missouri. (7 Treaties, 311.)

In discussing the binding effect of this treaty, Mr. Benton said:

The proper objects of treaties were international interests, which neither party could regulate by municipal law, and which required a joint consent and a double execution to give it effect. Tried by this test—and this Indian Territory lost its supremacy. The subject was one of ordinary legislation, and especially and exclusively confined to Congress. It was to repeal a law which Congress had made in relation to Territories, and to reverse the disposition which Congress had made of a part of its territory. To Congress it belonged to dispose of territory, and to her it belonged to repeal her own laws.

Said he—

The law of May 26, 1824, has never been repealed by Congress, unless the treaty of 1828 had that effect. On the question of the expediency of the treaty, Mr. Benton said:

The inexpediency of the treaty was in the question of crippling and mutilating Arkansas, reducing her to the class of weak States, and against all the reasons which had induced Congress for years before to add on 12,000 square miles to her domain, and to almost double the productive and inhabitable capacity of the Territory and future State by the character of the country added. I felt this wrong to Arkansas doubly, both as a neighbor to my own State and because, having a friendship for the Delegate as well as for his Territory, I had exerted myself to obtain the addition which had been thus cut off.

Thus crippled, mutilated, and shorn of a substantial part of her strength in the beginning of her Territorial life, it is not surprising that she has not at all times been "equal to all the exigencies of her advanced and frontier position." When we consider the fact that for eighty years she has had on her entire western border an unorganized Indian Territory, without government or law, and for most of the time the hiding place for criminals from all the States, it is no wonder that she has not increased in wealth and population as fast as other States with less natural resources.

With this unjust and illegal treatment on the part of the treaty-making power of the General Government, the people of Arkansas Territory naturally sought relief from Territorial servitude by securing statehood on any terms she could get it. Under the enabling act of June 15, 1836, she was admitted, but required to accept as her western boundary "the line described in the first article of the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation." The following is the boundary, as described in that act, and which she was compelled to accept or remain a Territory and subject to still further reduction by treaty:

That the State of Arkansas shall be one, and is hereby declared to be one, of the United States of America, and admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever; and the said State shall consist of all the territory included within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning in the middle of the main channel of the Mississippi River, on the parallel of 36° north latitude; running from thence west with the said parallel of latitude to the St. Francis River; thence up the middle of the main channel of said river to the parallel of 36° 30′ north; from thence west to the southwest corner of the State of Missouri; and from thence to be bounded on the west, to the north bank of Red River, by the lines described in the first article of the treaty between the United States and the Cherokee Nation of Indians west of the Mississippi, made and concluded at the city of Washington on the 26th day of May, A. D. 1828, and to be bounded on the south side of Red River by the Mexican boundary line to the northwest corner of the State of Louisiana; thence east with the Louisiana State line to the middle of the main channel of the Mississippi River; thence up the middle of the main channel of the said river to the thirty-sixth degree of north latitude, the point of beginning. (5 Stat., 50.)

Having, however, accepted statehood, with the boundary fixed by the treaty of 1828, the State is estopped from asserting a legal claim to the territory in question. Yet, in view of the unjust and illegal method of wresting it from her, and considering the great injury inflicted upon the State by it, our people feel that they have a stronger and more equitable claim to it than any other State or Territory. They feel that Congress now has the opportunity and that it should right the wrong of 1828. The question of what shall be done with the Indian Territory is now being seriously considered by both branches of Congress. The political status of that country must soon be fixed by Congress. Treaties have been made, which provide for the abrogation of all Indian tribal governments in 1906. Various suggestions have been made for disposing of it. A Territorial government, single statehood for it and Oklahoma, and separate statehood for each, all have advocates, but none appear to satisfy both Congress and the people of the Territory.

I have lived all of my life in a district adjoining the Choctaw Nation, and from some acquaintance with them I am satisfied that a majority of the people of that country would be willing to be attached to Arkansas. The people of Arkansas would be glad to add to their State the whole of the Indian Territory, if in the wisdom of Congress it is thought best not to divide it. But whether the whole or a part is annexed, Arkansas promises the people who may come just and fair treatment under a system of laws not surpassed by any of her sister States.

We invite them to a State free from debt and one that is now entering upon an era of prosperity in agriculture, horticulture, manufacturing, mining, and railroad building unknown in the history of the State. The people of Arkansas are looking to the future with hope and a resolution that insures success, but I earnestly desire to see her obtain at least the lands that once belonged to her so that she may become what Benton, Clay, and the other great men who aided in bringing her into the Union intended her to be—one of the greatest of the States of this great Union.

Mr. CANNON. How much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used fourteen minutes of the twenty.

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is a bill pending in the House, reported favorably and unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs, for the ratification of a treaty with the Rosebud Indians in South Dakota, ceding something over 400,000 acres of land in Gregory County and opening the same to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead law. It is a bill of great importance to the people of my State as well as to the Indians, and I hope that it may receive consideration and be passed during the session of this Congress.

The legislature of South Dakota unanimously passed a memorial to Congress urging the passage of this bill, and a copy of the same was transmitted to me by the secretary of state and duly certified, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Secretary's Office.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of South Dakota:

I, O. C. Berg, secretary of state of the State of South Dakota, do hereby certify that the attached instrument of writing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 7, passed by the legislature of 1903, as the same appears of record in this office, and of the whole thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota. Done at the city of Pierre this 29th day of January, 1903.

[SEAL.] O. C. BERG, Secretary of State.

A joint resolution by the House and Senate of the eighth legislative assembly of the State of South Dakota memorializing the Congress of the United States to ratify the existing treaty with the Rosebud (Sioux) Indians for a cession of all that portion of their reservation lying in the county of Gregory, S. Dak., and praying that provisions be made for opening said tract to homestead settlement.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That whereas one James McLaughlin, a United States Indian inspector, did, on the 14th day of September, anno Domini 1901, make and conclude an agreement with the male adult Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, for a cession of certain described lands lying and being in Gregory County, S. Dak.; and

Whereas said body of land, comprising approximately 416,000 acres, is reputed to be fertile in soil and rich in all natural resources, needing only settlement and development to transform it into one of the choicest spots of our great State; and

Whereas in its present state the coveted land brings no revenue to the Indians, and they desire to cede it, as evidenced by their treaty; and

Whereas the acquisition of this territory to the taxable area of the State would mean the addition of thousands to our population and the enlargement of Gregory County, which is now so small it can not maintain a county government without an annual deficit, even with an excessive tax levy: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, in justice to both the Indians and our State, implore the Congress of the United States to hasten a ratification of the existing treaty and to provide ways and means for the early opening of this splendid body of land to homestead settlement, under such restrictions and conditions as they may deem wise.

The Commercial Club of Bonesteel, in Gregory County, where the land proposed to be opened to settlement is located, adopted resolutions favoring and praying for the passage of the Rosebud bill, which resolutions are herewith submitted.

RESOLUTION AND PETITION.

At a regular meeting of the Bonesteel Commercial Club, held on Friday evening, January 23, 1903, the following resolution was introduced and adopted by a unanimous vote:

RESOLUTION.

Whereas a treaty entered into by and between the United States and the Rosebud Indians for a cession of all their reservation land lying within the defined limits of Gregory County, S. Dak., is now pending in Congress awaiting a ratification by that body; and

Whereas we know said body of land to be fertile in soil, abundant in water supply, and rich in every natural resource, awaiting only settlement and development to make it one of the choicest portions of our great State; and

Whereas the present area of Gregory County is less than 150,000 acres, making a taxable territory altogether too small to sustain a county government without an excessive tax rate and an annual deficit in revenue; and

Whereas the opening of the land proposed to be ceded to the Government by the Rosebud Indians would enlarge Gregory County to a size contemplated by our State constitution and add thousands to its inhabitants besides materially increasing its assessment valuation; and

Whereas in its present state said tract of land is unused by the Indians and returns to them no profit or revenue, but on the contrary has proven a fruitful field for large stockmen who trespass upon its broad acres with thousands of head of cattle, much to the annoyance of the Indians and detriment to the nutritious grasses growing there; and

Whereas in its unsettled and undeveloped state it is a constant menace to the industrious and ambitious citizens of the settlement adjoining on the south and east by reason of the vast prairie fires that annually sweep across it and because of the rendezvous it affords for thieves and criminals; and

Whereas the existing treaty is fair in all its provisions and offers the Government an opportunity to add a magnificent body of land to its public domain at a minimum price; and

Whereas thousands of people are anxiously awaiting the opening of this tract, and justice to them and the settlement adjoining demands speedy action to that end; and

Whereas it is the judgment of this Commercial Club that opponents to the passage of the pending bill are not fully advised in the premises and are unconscious of the importance of the matter to the Indians and the State of South Dakota, as well as a waiting multitude of people: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge Congressmen BURKE and MARTIN and Senators KITTREDGE and GAMBLE to relax no effort to secure a ratification of said treaty and the passage of a bill opening the land for settlement during the present session of Congress; that they be appealed to to labor, individually and collectively, as well as unceasingly, making any reasonable concessions as to conditions under which the same shall be opened for homestead settlement, in order to secure favorable consideration of the matter during the present Congress; and

Be it further resolved, That in view of the exigency of the situation and the incalculable benefits that will accrue to Gregory County and the entire State by the opening of these lands, that we respectfully request our honored governor, Charles N. Herreid, to go to Washington and lend his best energy and influence toward furthering the passage of the pending bill; and

Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Senators KITTREDGE and GAMBLE and Representatives BURKE and MARTIN, and a copy transmitted to the Hon. I. H. Welch, member of the legislature from this district, with a request that he present the same to Governor Herreid and appeal to him to heed its prayer.

We hereby certify that the above and foregoing resolution was unanimously adopted by the Bonesteel Commercial Club at their regular meeting held on Friday evening, January 23, 1903.

ED. HAAKINSON,
Acting President.

Attest:
J. D. KELLER,
Secretary.

Those resolutions were indorsed by about 200 citizens of Gregory County, who signed the following:

"We, the undersigned petitioners, hereby certify that we have read the above resolutions and heartily indorse its sentiment and prayer."

Mr. McRAE. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present to the consideration of this House a matter of importance. It is the proposition as to whether it is not advisable at this time to purchase the Hermann Strecker collection of butterflies and moths, and the library belonging thereto. In introducing this subject I wish to have read by the Clerk, as a part of my remarks, the following communications:

First. A communication from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Second. A communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, under whose jurisdiction the National Museum is.

Third. The Report of the Custodian of Lepidoptera of the National Museum.

I think careful attention to the reading of these reports will convince members that this is a matter of importance at the present time, because its acquisition will give to the National Museum a collection of butterflies and moths or lepidoptera greater than any in the Western Hemisphere and equal, perhaps, to any in the world. To-day the collection that the United States owns of this branch of science is small and incomplete, and the scientists of the National Museum testify to the fact that this collection of butterflies, which in itself is the largest in America, will unite with the present collection of that institution and will not only make a first-class collection, but one of the grandest in the world. That is the reason I say to you that it is important.

If the United States does not purchase this collection it will not in a century be able to have another opportunity to purchase a collection of this kind and make the museum collection one of the first in the world. This chance rarely, if ever, occurs. For fifty years this man has gathered his collection together, and if gentlemen of this House will read what the scientists say, I am satisfied they will be convinced that there is great propriety in incorporating into the present sundry civil bill the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury and of the people connected with this branch of science in the National Museum.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Where is this collection now?

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. In the city of Reading, Pa. That is the reason, perhaps, why I have been asked by the scientists to present this matter to the consideration of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLLECTION OF BUTTERFLIES AND MOTHS OF THE LATE HERMANN STRECKER.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution submitting an estimate of appropriation for purchase of the butterflies and moths of the late Hermann Strecker.

June 18, 1902.—Referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 17, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, of the 16th instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation, $25,000, for the purchase for the National Museum of the collection of butterflies and moths of the late Hermann Strecker, of Reading, Pa., together with his library relating to the same.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.
Washington, June 16, 1902.

SIR: My attention has been called to the importance of securing for the National Museum the collection of Lepidoptera (butterflies and moths) of the late Hermann Strecker, of Reading, Pa., together with his library relating specially to these families of insects; and in view of the fact that it is impossible to acquire these from the regular appropriation of $10,000, provided for the purchase of specimens for the Museum, I respectfully request that the accompanying item be transmitted to Congress for insertion in the bill making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

Although the offer of this collection presents an opportunity which should not be lost to the Government, since its acquisition would place the National Museum in the very first rank in this branch of entomological science, it is not my wish that any provision for it shall prejudice what is hoped may be the favorable action of Congress in respect to the items for the Smithsonian bureaus in the sundry civil bill now in conference.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. P. LANGLEY, Secretary.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

ITEM.

For the purchase of the collection of Lepidoptera (butterflies and moths) of the late Hermann Strecker, of Reading, Pa., comprising about 100,000 specimens, together with his library relating to the Lepidoptera..... $25,000

NOTE.—Since the estimates for appropriations for the bureaus under the Smithsonian Institution were transmitted to Congress, the attention of the Institution has been called to the opportunity of securing, for addition to the National Museum, the collection of butterflies and moths brought together by the late Hermann Strecker, of Reading, Pa. The collection, which is now offered for sale for the sum of $25,000, embodies the results of a lifetime of labor and the expenditure of very considerable sums of money by this eminent specialist. It comprises about 100,000 specimens, all in an excellent state of preservation, and is one of the largest and finest private collections of butterflies and moths in the world. If purchased by the Government it would add materially to the value of this branch of the national collections, since it contains many specimens needed to supply deficiencies in the series, as well as about 400 types of mostly North American species, in many cases rare or obscure. The sum stated in the estimate covers also the purchase of an extensive library relating especially to this department of entomological science and containing many rare volumes, some of them unrepresented in any library at the nation's capital.

This collection of world-wide fame will probably go into private hands or into the custody of some foreign institution unless immediate provision is made by Congress for its purchase. The price asked is a very moderate one, and the acquisition of this valuable material would place the National Museum in the first rank in this branch of science in America.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, U. S. A., January 13, 1903.

SIR: In my communication to you of the 6th instant I omitted to refer to a special item submitted to Congress, through the Secretary of the Treasury, on June 17, 1902, and printed as House Document No. 667, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, but on which no action was taken during that session. It relates to the purchase for the National Museum of a collection of Lepidoptera brought together by the late Hermann Strecker, of Reading, Pa., a distinguished entomologist. While the aquisition of this collection is still regarded as of importance, I beg to repeat what was said in my former letter, that it is not my wish that any provision for it shall prejudice what is hoped may be the favorable action of Congress in respect to the items for the Smithsonian bureaus contained in the regular estimates for the sundry civil appropriation bill for 1904.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. P. LANGLEY,
Secretary.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Report of custodian of Lepidoptera, United States National Museum, on "The Hermann Strecker collection of butterflies and moths, and library accompanying it."

For the purpose of furnishing accurate information of the subject, I examined the collection in Reading, Pa., December 27, 1902.

The specimens constituting it are particularly adapted for a union with the present collection in the National Museum.

So united the Smithsonian collection would be a credit to the institution, and not only the largest and best in America but one of the greatest in the world.

The United States has an opportunity of purchase which rarely, if ever, presents itself, and for this reason prompt and favorable action is urgent and desirable.

Description of collection.—The collection is remarkable for the perfection of the specimens composing it. The number in any way injured is insignificant, which, from the nature of its insects, is most unusual and shows great care in selection of specimens.

A careful estimate, without counting, places the number of specimens at 100,000. They are contained in eleven cabinets having about 1,000 dust-proof glass-covered drawers or boxes. They are handsomely and substantially mounted, and each specimen is neatly labeled with its name and locality, often with remarks. In many instances, where the under and upper sides differ widely, they are mounted to show both.

The collection could be removed to the National Museum without repacking and without danger of being injured in transportation.

The collection is remarkably full of rare and expensive specimens, especially from the oriental and occidental Tropics, which furnish the most beautiful specimens of Lepidoptera.

The South American States and the West Indies, Mexico, and Central America, as well as Africa with Madagascar, the East Indies and Asia with India, Siam, and the Malacca Peninsula; the Philippine Islands and Australia have contributed many specimens of their brilliant and curious moths and butterflies.

Types.—The collection contains upward of 400 type specimens—through the description of which by Mr. Strecker the scientific world received its first information of the existence of the species of insects. The British Museum values these type specimens at $5 apiece more than other specimens of the same kind.

Freaks and aberrations.—It is particularly rich in hermaphrodites, in which the male and female are combined in a single specimen, and in aberrations differing in color and form from the normal insect. Such specimens are very valuable and rarely ever to be duplicated.

Special specimens.—Quite a number of the specimens came from the noted exploring expeditions, those of Livingstone, Ross, and Peary, and such specimens could not be duplicated.

The Colias boothii is from the Ross expedition in search of Sir John Franklin in 1828—only nine specimens are known to exist. But five or six specimens of the Parnassus acco are known. Two superb specimens are in the collection; they come from the summit of the Himalaya Mountains, and $1,000 are said to have been offered for them.

Looking over the catalogues of the largest dealers you will find in this collection many specimens which are not on sale and can not be obtained at all, and you will also find specimens of about all the rare and expensive flies and moths listed, showing this is no common or average, but an exceptional collection.

Largest and best in United States.—Taken by itself the collection, in both quantity and quality, considered the best in the United States.

Edwards collection.—The Edwards collection in the American Museum of Natural History in New York may be compared with it, but many specimens are mutilated and in an inferior condition.

Neumoegen collection.—Another large American collection is the Neumoegen collection in the Brooklyn Institute, which has about 40,000 specimens and was purchased for $15,000. There are but few other large collections in this country.

Foreign collections.—The European collections are the largest and best in the world. Among them may be mentioned that of the British Museum, the Staudinger at Dresden, the Oberthur at Rennes, France, and the Tring at Tring, England.

A short list taken at random from recollection gives some idea of the character of the more valuable specimens:

	Unobtainable.	Cash value.
Ornithoptera rubidus	1
Ornithoptera dohertyr, 1 male, $11.25; 1 female, $18.25		$29.50
Ornithoptera magellanus	1
Ornithoptera miranda, 1 male, $18.50; 1 female, $12.50		31.00
Ornithoptera lydias, male, $50; female, $40		90.00
Ornithoptera crœsus, 3 pairs, at $23		69.00
Ornithoptera priamus, 3 pairs, at $16.25		48.75
Ornithoptera posudon	1
Ornithoptera victoræ, 1 male, $100; 2 females, $40		140.00
Ornithoptera regis, 1 male		150.00
Ornithoptera tithonus, 1 pair		175.00
Ornithoptera trojana		75.00
Ornithoptera paradisea, 2 males	2
1 female, $15		15.00
Papilio neumoegeni		25.00
Papilio androcles, at $10		20.00
Papilio dorcas	1
1 pair Papilio zagraens, 1 male		8.00
1 female	1
2 Papilio bachus		20.00
1 Papilio homerus, almost extinct	1
3 Papilio antimicus, at $30		90.00
1 Prepona buckelgiana		30.00
1 Agrias claudias	1
1 Agrias sardanopolis, at $20		40.00
2 Agrias amadon, at $15		30.00
2 Agrias amadon, female	1
1 Agrias phalcidon		20.00
1 Agrias stuarte	1
3 Agrias ugens, lat $16.25		48.75
1 drawer of zeuxidia, at $10, 14 flies		140.00
3 Morpho lecaba. (Mr. S. paid $125 for poorest one in 1901)		375.00
1 Morpho helena	1
1 Morpho retinor		15.00
1 Cocinera hercules	1
4 pairs Dynaster napoleon, at $40		160.00
3 drawers of Papilio turnus. All these flies are rare aberrations or freaks, some being half male and half female; others are half dark and half light. There is also a 5-winged fly.
2 pairs Armandia litterdali, 2 females	2
2 males, at $8.25		16.50
1 pair Papilio blumei		25.00
1 pair Papilio admantius, 1 male	1
1 female		7.00
2 pairs Armandi thardinea, 2 females	2
2 males, at $7.50		15.00
2 pairs Parnassus actius	4
1 pair Parnassus charltonius	2
4 pairs Parnassus romanovi	8
1 pair Parnassus evermannii, male		15.00
3 males, at $15		45.00
1 pair Parnassus tibitanus		15.00
1 pair Parnassus poeta	2
1 pair Acco. (Only 2 in America)		1,000.00
1 Colias boothii. (Only 9 known and has 1)	1
1 Colias ladikensis	1
Total	36	2,969.00

Price.—In my opinion the price asked—$25,000—is reasonable, as it is an average of from 20 to 25 cents a specimen, according to the value put upon the accompanying library and correspondence. Estimating the value of such collections is very difficult, but in a general way I find from an examination of the leading catalogues the average price of specimens which are on sale is from 70 cents to a dollar. Such prices would make this collection worth much more than the price asked. Seventy-five of the specimens are listed at $2,969. Thirty-six on the small list above can not be bought, and there are no doubt more that can neither be bought nor duplicated.

Library and correspondence.—Accompanying the collection is a library containing nearly 300 volumes treating of the subject, several of which are not found in any of the libraries at Washington, also manuscript letters from noted collectors and others said to number from four to five thousand. The principal works in this library are named below, and when given in the recent catalogues of dealers I have added prices.

HARRISON G. DYAR,
Custodian of Lepidoptera, U. S. National Museum.

JANUARY 19, 1903.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen who have listened to the report of the custodian of lepidoptera will see that he has gone into the matter of the examination of this collection with a great deal of care, and presents his views, which I suppose we must all defer to, as this is his specialty, not only as to the price of the collection, its character and compass, but as well that of the library connected with it.

I wish to emphasize his statement in two matters. One is that this is an opportunity that perhaps will never occur again to the United States to purchase a collection of this character.

Second, that if this collection is purchased it will make the department of lepidoptera in the National Museum better than any in the United States, and one of the finest in the world.

A few words on the history of this celebrated collection. Hermann Strecker, one of the most distinguished entomologists of the world, lived, and about two years ago died, in the city of Reading, Pa. For fifty years all his leisure time was spent in studying, collecting, and mounting butterflies and moths. Every dollar earned during these years, except so much as was required for the support of himself and small family in the most modest way, was invested in this collection. Before he died two of his desires with regard to the great collection representing the labor of his lifetime were:

First. That it should be preserved as a whole and not dismembered.

Second. That it should be disposed of to some great scientific institution, preferably the United States National Museum.

In deference to these two wishes of the distinguished scientist, this collection has been offered to the United States.

The price asked for it is admitted to be exceedingly small compared with its real value. From the statements made in the report above set forth it is worth twice or three times the amount asked.

It could be parceled out among collectors and a far greater amount of money realized than that asked for the collection entire.

Upward of 400 types or specimens from which the original descriptions known to the scientific world were taken are in this collection. For these the British Museum has a standing offer of a guinea apiece beyond the actual value of the specimens. This alone would amount to nearly $2,000. They could not be labeled for a like amount. Mr. Strecker bought the rarest specimens of each group, and comparing the specimens of his collection with the catalogues you find he has secured the rarest and most expensive flies. Many can never be duplicated.

This collection belongs in the National Museum, and Congress should not leave the opportunity slip by of purchasing it. It would be a great ornament as well as of great utility there, as well as in direct line with the recommendations of President Roosevelt.

THE NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The President, judging from the recommendations contained in both his messages, seems to have an entirely different idea of the utility of the functions of this great institution than that entertained by the Appropriation Committee of this body.

In the message of December 3, 1901, we find the following:

> The advancement of the highest interests of national science and learning and the custody of objects of art and of the valuable results of scientific expeditions conducted by the United States have been committed to the Smithsonian Institution. In furtherance of its declared purpose—for the "increase and diffusion of knowledge among men"—the Congress has from time to time given it other important functions. Such trusts have been executed by the institution with notable fidelity. There should be no halt in the work of the institution, in accordance with the plans which its Secretary has presented, for the preservation of the vanishing races of great North American animals in the National Zoological Park. The urgent needs of the National Museum are recommended to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

Again, in his second message, of December 2, 1902, we find the following:

> I again recommend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the plans of the Smithsonian Institution for making the museum under its charge worthy of the nation, and for preserving at the National Capital not only records of the vanishing races of men but of the animals of this continent, which, like the buffalo, will soon become extinct unless specimens from which their representatives may be renewed are sought in their native regions and maintained there in safety.

The speech made this afternoon by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], a member of the House Appropriations Committee, voices the views of the controlling spirits of that committee, which I was, to my astonishment, first made aware of when I presented the report of the custodian of entomology, above referred to, and made a few remarks on the desirability of the purchase of this collection.

The first interrogation put to me by the chairman was as follows: Of what use is a collection of this kind to the Museum; they can not be eaten or worn; of what earthly use are they?

Following such a strictly utilitarian measure of any collection which would be desirable to be placed in this great institution, it will be many years before the hopes of the President and the people, that of making the Museum worthy of the nation, will be realized, if ever.

The British Museum was never founded and built up upon any such narrow ideas, nor that of any other great national scientific institution.

The great nations of the world are expected to furnish to the scientific world through their great collections of specimens in every department of science—collections great and expensive beyond the means of the scientist and the private scientific institution—knowledge which could not have been procured in any other way.

Every great nation has its great collections and collectors, and the United States has not in the past and must not in the future be an exception to this rule.

As in everything else, it must be in the very front rank of scientific investigation, and no opportunity should be lost to place it there.

Mr. MCRAE. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I would like to have an extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

[Mr. SMITH of Arizona addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, as I listened to the eloquent and instructive remarks of the chairman of the committee reporting this bill [Mr. CANNON], and followed him in happy revery as he went over his review of the history of the country, marking its growth and progress, I thought how, notwithstanding the country has grown rapidly, marvelously, the growth of appropriations has outstripped the growth of the country; that extravagance, as marked by legislative action, has been even more rapid in its progress, more phenomenal in its achievements, than the growth of the country itself. And, Mr. Chairman, I could not help thinking while contemplating the picture painted by the eloquent gentleman from Illinois—and a very interesting picture it was, too, and is—how we may in the near future have to deal with other things calling upon the Treasury of the country and swelling tremendously the appropriations made by Congress.

This suggestion comes in part from a somewhat remarkable bill introduced at the other end of the Capitol, one having somewhat remarkable objects in view. I refer to the bill for pensioning the slaves, the black men and the black women of the South. This bill provides that every person, man or woman, who was a slave and has attained the age of 70 years shall be given upon its passage $500 and a pension of $15 a month so long as he or she shall live after that time; that those over 60 and not having attained the age of 70 shall be given $300 and pensioned at $12 a month; that those over 50 and under 60 shall have $100 and a pension of $8 a month, and that those who, perhaps, were infants in arms during the time of the war, those under 50, shall have a pension of $4 a month.

I do not know whether this bill is going to pass; I do not know whether it was designed or expected that it should pass. It is a curious piece, however, in the study of the passing drama of statesmanship and politics. It is rather a seductive picture held out for the black brother, North or South. It has attachments, too, that will reach not only the colored brother, but ought, if it were made a law, to be beneficial to some of those who hurried and scurried South shortly after the war and associated themselves, for purposes of their own, very greatly to their own profit and very greatly to the injury of the communities in which they dwelt, with the colored brother. There are vague passages in the bill under which and by which those who have "supported" the colored brother might get the pension in place of the colored brother. [Laughter.] I think they will not only take in the child who may have properly supported an aged father or an aged mother, but I believe the bill can be so expanded and so applied that it will take in these gentlemen—the carpetbaggers—who, in political association in the South, have, perhaps, not strictly supported the colored brother, but who claim they have supported him, and who certainly were supported by him. [Laughter.]

Possibly this bill is of more value as a piece of political maneuvering than as a piece of prospective legislation. It carries with it, it seems to me, to the broad nostrils in black the pleasant aroma of the barbecue, borne upon the swift breezes of anticipation. It carries with it the suggestion that our Uncle Samuel is not merely going to kill the fatted calf in order to afford a feast for his black children, but that he is going to slaughter the choicest of his flocks and herds. In this anticipation, in this pleasant looking forward, in this delightful sniffing of the breeze which bears in anticipation and in imagination the odor and flavor of this barbecued meat there appears to be something political. It seems to me that in comparison the "glad hand" is not in it. [Laughter.]

And then, what, in the estimation of the colored brother, is the pleasant smile in the drawing-room as against baked 'possum and taters in the kitchen? [Laughter.]

Of course the gentleman who introduced this bill, as we understand upon his own authority, is not and will not be a candidate for the Presidency. We understand upon the same authority, however, that there are no trusts; and so, putting the one statement with the other statement and drawing our own conclusions, we may wonder whether or not a certain play for the favor of the colored brother has not been met, and more than met, by another play for the favor of the same colored gentlemen. We know that when it comes to the nomination of a Presidential candidate by at least one of the great parties of this country the colored delegate is a very important factor—a factor to be played for, a factor to be dealt with, a factor to be bargained for; and there is nothing like making preparation in good time, so that the yearning of the colored brother may be directed in the proper channel, so that the colored brother may look to the proper source for relief and benefit when, in good time, his friends come into control. Of course, his friends have been in control for a great many years, but so far he has been living very largely upon promises.

Now, the old promise, the old suggestion of 40 acres and a mule, is entirely discounted, is out of sight and belittled, in view of the present promise of $500 and a pension of $15 a month.

I do not know how this is going to come out. I do not know what it is going to result in, but it does appear to me that upon the political checkerboard, where there seem to be rather more of the colored spots than is usual in the forming of checkerboards, a very interesting play is going on. Those of us who are not in the game, those of us who are not particularly interested in the result of the game, can watch it; and meantime, as we hear disclaimers from this source and that, we can put those disclaimers side by side with others and form our own conclusions as to what they are worth.

From one point of view, not of course from the political point, where, I judge, it appears very practical, but from certain points of view all this would seem to be almost farcical. But even these farces sometimes have a solemn side, and I can imagine how the old negroes of the South, male and female, will now be the prey of the sharks who, in order to "promote" legislation, in order to bring in the millennium, in order to hasten the coming of the good time promised in this bill—promised also otherwise and in other ways—will give up their small earnings from their scanty hoards, and then in their time of want will do as they have been doing these many years, as they long since learned to do, and as they long will do—turn to their natural and best friends, the white people of the South, for substantial relief, entirely free from the politician's frills and furbelows, which are designed simply to catch the colored voter and not to help him. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman may proceed with the reading of his bill.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say a word and then we can proceed with the reading of the bill. I always listen to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] with great pleasure. He can construct better sentences in colder blood than any man of my acquaintance, and I have listened this time with great pleasure to him while he talked about a bill that the newspapers state was introduced by request. I have never seen the bill. There is lots of that kind of thing done. It is substantially equivalent to a petition. The right of petition, the right of hearing, runs to all the citizens, great and small, wise and unwise, sane people and cranks. They have the right of hearing and petition, and the right to ask bills to be presented; but it is not necessary for me to refer to that.

While the gentleman was talking, it did seem to me that if he would listen to an exhortation that the gentleman and myself have heard the like of many times, of the importance of repentance and of individual forgiveness before one could be saved, and before one was entitled to be an evangelist, that possibly he would first have addressed himself to the beautiful condition that is to be found in the opposition party. I was going to say the Democratic party, but I would have to apologize to Cleveland and Olney and Hill and Bryan, and all the hosts, you know; not so many but what they are in a very decided minority. So I will not say Democratic party, because I would have them all bowing, you know, looking different ways. [Laughter.] I think the gentleman might first set his own house in order, before he goes off to chasing a will-o'-the-wisp and saying it belongs to other folks.

I am now ready to have the bill read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. To be serious about the matter.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman may not know that at this very moment companies are being formed and circulars are being sent out through the South, inviting the poor, ignorant colored people there to send their contributions to designing men who are seeking to build up fortunes out of this proposition; and I think the gentleman ought to join with us in saying, in order that the colored people of the South may not be misled and robbed, that there is no reason now why they should be sending their quarters and 50-cent pieces and dollars to any company or any combination of men anywhere with the expectation of advancing their chances to get pensions. I will say to the gentleman that that is being done now.

Mr. CANNON. My friend talks seriously about the matter. I was answering the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], who never lets an opportunity pass or an assault upon an opportunity to say what he has to say. But now, seriously, in reply to the gentleman, to every citizen of the Republic, rich or poor, black or white, ignorant or cultured, there is but one great guaranty that runs to each and all, and that is equality before the law, equality of opportunity, protection in person and property, and then each unit to work out his own salvation. [Applause.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CANNON. I always do.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to repeat the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee and the question which he asked—that is, whether the gentleman from Illinois is willing to join in the assurance suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee that these poor colored people in the South had better keep their money instead of frittering it away upon this pension bill—that as a matter of fact it is not intended seriously to pass the bill which has been introduced. If the gentleman can give that assurance, it may be worth a good deal to these poor colored people. If, upon the other hand, this legislation is likely to be enacted, it will perhaps be a source of great comfort to have that assurance from one so high in authority as he is. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Tennessee was in earnest.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I am in earnest, too. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. I am glad to be assured that the gentleman from Missouri is in earnest, for he himself hath said it. [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. This matter raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, suggesting that the colored people of the South are now being fleeced out of their hard earnings and scanty hoard in order that some adventurers may be enriched, has nothing of levity about it. I do not think of anything more serious, and I do not see how the gentleman from Illinois can consider it as anything else than a decidedly serious matter. I think that the gentleman from Illinois might say something which might preserve maybe hundreds, maybe thousands, or tens of thousands of dollars for these poor people of what they can not afford to give away for nothing, and prevent a large number of adventurers from getting that for which they do nothing. If the gentleman has anything to say, I hope he will say it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, the gentleman, I understand, speaks of the matter seriously, and if necessary I will further seriously answer. As an individual Representative, and that is merely my best judgment, and as standing for my own action, along with other private Representatives who agree with me, I supposed that in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, I had been entirely frank and had covered the ground. But it seems that I have given an answer even my very good friend from Missouri can not understand, and perchance some poor ignorant citizen with a black skin may be as unable to understand as my good friend from Missouri. [Laughter.] I say to him, courteously and in all candor, that in my judgment no such bill will pass; and if there be adventurers that would swindle the colored citizen, all things ought to be done by their brethren that surround them and citizens elsewhere that would instruct them to the contrary. It is known that swindling goes on in all our cities, North and South; the sharper and even the swindler is there, and once in a while even people that belong to the Anglo-Saxon race are swindled. I do not know that I can say anything in addition to what I have said. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Greensboro, N. C., court-house, post-office, etc.: For completion of extension under present limit, $41,650.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 9, after line 21, insert the following:
"Rental of temporary quarters for the accommodation of certain Government officials at Greensboro, N. C., and for expenses incidental thereto, $3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Holyoke, Mass., post-office: For continuation of building under present limit, $33,750.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, after line 16, insert:
"For the complete establishment of an immigrant station, and the erection of the necessary buildings at Honolulu, Hawaii, on land owned by the Government, adjoining the wharf known as Channel Wharf, and for each and every purpose connected therewith and necessary to complete said station in all of its details within the sum hereby appropriated, $30,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Los Angeles, Cal., rent of buildings: For rental of temporary quarters for the accommodation of certain Government officials and all expenses incident thereto, and for electric current for power purposes, $9,700.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had further disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, numbered 39 and 41, and so much of amendment numbered 57 as relates to the striking out of section 13 of the bill and the substitution of matter in lieu thereof, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 149) to provide for holding terms of court in the district of Utah.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4825) to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7659) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. ALDRICH, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 15659) granting a pension to Elise Sigel, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. FOSTER of Washington, and Mr. TURNER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 15, page 13, after the word "dollars," the following:
"For the erection and completion of an addition to the public building at Tyler, Tex., the sum of $25,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will have to make the point of order that it is not authorized.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will not the gentleman reserve the point of order and let me make this statement?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, a very great public necessity at Tyler, Tex., has suggested the amendment which I have just sent to the Clerk's desk. The public building at Tyler, Tex., was erected some twelve or fifteen years ago. Since that time there has been a very great increase in the public business there. The building was originally constructed to accommodate the post-office and Federal court at Tyler. It was sufficient at that time to meet the purposes for which it was then erected. Since that time the necessity for this amendment has been made manifest by the increase of public business, which has resulted not only from the development of the country, but from new legislation from Congress. A very large amount of the court business of eastern Texas is returnable to Tyler. The establishment of rural-delivery routes has very greatly increased the postal service to be performed there.

The rapid settlement of eastern Texas gives promise of a phenomenal development, at least, in the postal service, which will justify the adoption of the present amendment. I have received letters from the custodian of the public building at Tyler, from the district attorney of the district in which that town is situated, from the deputy marshal of the Federal court there, and from other Federal officials conversant with the facts, which justify me in making the statement that the present building needs an addition to make it sufficient for the public uses. If the point of order suggested by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee shall prevail, I shall feel myself justified in offering this amendment at every opportunity presented during the life of this Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not controvert the statement of the gentleman from Texas at all. It may be a very apt and appropriate measure, and I presume it is, but we have so many public buildings here to be provided for that I am compelled to insist on the point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask unanimous consent that the matter may be passed over until I can present more data.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been ruled out of order and there is nothing more to pass upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Waco, Tex., court-house and post-office: For completion of extension under present limit, $75,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, after line 9, insert the following: "For rental of temporary quarters for the accommodation of certain Government officials at Waco, Tex., and for expenses incidental thereto, $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yerba Buena Island, California: For construction of an oil house at Yerba Buena Island, $8,000.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Insert after line 2, page 25, the following:
"Fog bell and lens-lantern light on the southeastern end of Southampton Shoal, San Francisco Bay, California: For establishing on the southeastern end of Southampton Shoal, San Francisco Bay, California, a fog bell and lens-lantern light, $30,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I think that legislation has been provided for.

Mr. KAHN. The bill has been signed by the President. This is in compliance with that bill.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, this is in compliance with the law.

Mr. MADDOX rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. MADDOX. I want to inquire if the gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn his point of order?

Mr. CANNON. No; I reserved the point of order for the purpose of ascertaining whether this was subject to a point of order. I asked the gentleman from California whether the legislation has been enacted. He says it has passed both Houses and has been signed by the President at this session of Congress. So, if that be true, no point of order would lie. I have some familiarity with the merit of this matter and I know that it is meritorious and appropriate, and if it has been authorized I have nothing further to say.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 22, line 16, for the purpose of submitting an amendment to which I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is 5 o'clock.

Mr. PEARRE. I want to say to the gentleman that this is a very important matter, to which I called his attention a day or two ago, and since then I have received additional information.

Mr. CANNON. What does the item relate to?

Mr. PEARRE. The condition of the subtreasury in Baltimore city, where they have not room to transact their business.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we can take that up to-morrow. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17202, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HOAR. I present a petition of the presidents of 10 colleges and 11 college professors praying that a committee be appointed to inquire into conditions in the Philippine Islands so that the American people may know the exact state of affairs in those islands.

Mr. President, I ask leave to say that these petitions, of which this is one of a great number, represent the desire of a vast number of the highest educational institutions in this country, if their presidents and professors may be taken to represent them, and it seems to me that, without the slightest consideration of the differences of opinion as to the policy which has prevailed in the past in regard to that remote dependency, it would be a wise and admirable thing to establish a commission in which these petitioners themselves, who are men of high character and patriotism, should be represented, who would report to Congress the present conditions.

We are in the habit of granting like requests to persons interested in manufacture, in commerce, or in agriculture, and certainly men could be selected either by the Senate or by the President from these petitioners in whose absolute moderation, calmness, and sobriety, as well as veracity, the whole country would have confidence.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

HEIRS OF THOMAS J. ROBERTSON.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MCLAURIN of South Carolina March 10, 1902, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to J. Caldwell Robertson and Edwin W. Robertson, sole heirs of Thomas J. Robertson, formerly a Senator from the State of South Carolina, the sum of $6,543.38, due him as Senator of the United States in the Fortieth Congress, from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 24th of June, 1868, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEIRS OF J. W. FLANAGAN.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. BAILEY March 12, 1902, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Webster Flanagan, James W. Flanagan, Mrs. Fannie Swan, Mrs. Emma Flanagan, Mrs. Marion Gates, R. B. Flanagan, and Mrs. Laura Stewart, or to their legal representatives, heirs of J. W. Flanagan, formerly a Senator from the State of Texas, $5,356.16, due him as Senator of the United States in the Forty-first Congress from the 4th of March, 1869, to the 29th of March, 1870, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

WILLARD WARNER.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. PRITCHARD April 11, 1902, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Willard Warner, formerly a Senator from the State of Alabama, the sum of $6,543.38, due him as a Senator of the United States in the Fortieth Congress, from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 24th of June, 1868, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ESTATE OF JOSHUA HILL.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. HOAR April 18, 1902, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to the personal representatives of Joshua Hill, deceased, late a Senator of the United States fram the State of Georgia, $6,602.79, as Senator from March 4, 1867, the date upon which the vacancy he was elected to fill began, to July 29, 1868, from which date his compensation as Senator began.

ESTATE OF H. V. M. MILLER.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CLAY April 22, 1902, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Hooper Alexander, administrator of the estate of H. V. M. Miller, deceased, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, $6,602.74, due him as a Senator of the United States from March 4, 1867, to July 28, 1868, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. I submit a report to accompany the resolutions which have been indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed.

Mr. BURROWS. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] is not present and desires to submit minority views in relation to the resolutions. I trust that that right will be accorded to him at any time he may desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the views of the minority may be submitted at any time.

CHARLES W. CARR.

Mr. MASON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14164) for the relief of Charles W. Carr, to report it favorably without amendment. It involves but $83, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay $83.71 to Charles W. Carr, former postmaster at Englewood, Ill., being the amount deposited by him to cover a deficiency arising in his office in the year 1894, which deposit was made to cover a loss caused by the payment by a clerk of two forged money orders.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE REGISTER OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted by Mr. CLAPP on the 30th ultimo, reported it without amendment, submitted a report thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to procure for the use of the Senate 2,000 copies of the "Executive Register of the United States, 1789 to 1902," provided the price shall not exceed the sum of $1.25 per copy.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 7311) granting an increase of pension to Jefferson Hoover; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 7312) to authorize the abandonment of W street northeast, Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PROCTOR introduded a bill (S. 7313) to provide for the settlement of certain claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss or destruction, without fault or negligence on the part of said officers and men, of property belonging to them in the military service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 7314) for the relief of the First Presbyterian Church, Dalton, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURNHAM (by request) introduced a bill (S. 7315) to amend an act to authorize the establishment of an academy and gallery of art in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions.

Mr. MCCOMAS introduced a bill (S. 7316) to refer to the Court of Claims the claim for the Monocacy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BURTON. On behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], who is not able to be present on account of illness, I submit an amendment to the general sundry civil appropriation bill.

The amendment, proposing to appropriate $500 to pay Harry

C. Robertson for extra services performed for the subcommittee of the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7142) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARKING OF GRAVES OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the adoption of an order to print additional copies of a report. There have been a great many applications for the document referred to, and it will cost only a few dollars.

The order was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 2,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 2589, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, being a report to accompany the bill (S. 6486) to provide for the appropriate marking of the graves of the soldiers of the Confederate Army and Navy, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of public act No. 62, "An act to amend an act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898.

EMPLOYEES AT MALTBY BUILDING.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the engineer at the Maltby Building be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum and the three firemen at the rate of $1,000 each per annum; and that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to appoint a skilled laborer at the rate of $800 per annum; the above changes to take effect on the 1st day of July, 1903.

INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask that there may be printed as a Senate document the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Lone Wolf, principal chief of the Kiowas, and others, appellants, v. Ethan Hitchcock, Secretary of the Interior, and others. It is a very important decision, affecting the title to Indian lands throughout the United States. The copies which can be had from the clerk of the Supreme Court are entirely exhausted, and there is a great demand for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the opinion of the Supreme Court which he sends to the desk may be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not have 1,000 copies printed for the use of the Senate, or does the Senator wish to have copies sent to all the Departments?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think if it is printed as a document there will be enough copies.

Mr. STEWART. I am afraid not. There is a great demand for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed as a document and let 500 extra copies be printed for the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I think we had better make the number of additional copies 1,000. It is a very remarkable decision. It is the Dred Scott decision No. 2, except that in this case the victim is red instead of black. It practically inculcates the doctrine that the red man has no rights which the white man is bound to respect, and that no treaty or contract made with him is binding. Is not that about it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not wish to discuss——

Mr. QUAY. I think we ought to have at least a thousand copies of the opinion printed for distribution outside of those for the use of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not wish to discuss the propriety of the decision at the present time.

Mr. STEWART. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania is mistaken. I think the converse of that proposition is true.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. All I ask is that it may be printed because there is such a demand for it. I am perfectly willing that my motion shall be modified so to have it printed as a Senate document, and that 1,000 additional copies be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut now asks that the opinion be printed as a Senate document, with 1,000 additional copies. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECORD OF DEEDS, ETC., IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5678) "providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

WM. M. STEWART,
O. H. PLATT,
JAMES K. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. S. SHERMAN,
JOHN F. LACEY,
JOHN S. LITTLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

LANDS IN ALASKA.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The other day the bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1, of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska," was considered by the Senate and the bill was read through. There was a controversy over the proposed amendment. An agreement has been reached as to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was before the Senate a few days ago as in Committee of the Whole and read at length, and certain amendments to the amendment reported as a substitute by the Committee on Public Lands were acted upon. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. QUAY. I will not object if the bill does not elicit discussion and debate. If it does I shall be compelled to do so.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I do not believe there will be any debate, Mr. President.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment reported as a substitute by the Committee on Public Lands as amended.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment. On page 2, line 7, after the word "Interior," I move to strike out the remainder of the amendment down to and including the word "district," in line 11, and to insert:

And no indemnity, deficiency, or lieu land selections pertaining to any land grant outside of the district of Alaska shall be made, and no land scrip or land warrant of any kind whatsoever shall be located within or exercised upon any lands in said district.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed. The Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr, QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the statehood bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when I was taken off the floor yesterday by an adjournment, I was mentioning the names of some of the prominent leading Indians in the United States who had participated in the great wars between them and the white people and also in the making of the 365 treaties that were ratified by the Senate before we changed the law in respect of dealing with these Indians in their tribal relations.

I had also asserted, and I think established, that every one of those wars on the part of the Indians had originated in an alleged breach of faith on the part of the United States toward them, guaranteed in those treaties.

I had also alluded to the fact, and established it by authority and by incidents which I read at my desk, that the characteristics of all of the tribes in the United States in their tribal actions were those of sincerity and honor in dealing with their enemies, whether they were white people or whether they were other bands of Indians.

The incidents which I cited showed that they were a chivalrous race of men, strong in their manhood, fertile in their fancies, eager in the pursuit of what they conceived to be their rights, and indomitable in their perseverance in the prosecution of their rightful demands as they understood them.

They were also a reverential people. There was not a band of Indians in the United States east of the Mississippi River of whom we have not very distinct records of the fact that they held themselves responsible to a superior being, the Great Spirit, as he was called. It seemed to be an impression that they had everywhere, under all conditions, in every part of the country occupied by them, that there was a ruling spirit which was dominant over the affairs of men, both in their individual and in their national capacity.

They did not derive that impression from us, Mr. President. We found it here when we first reached these shores, and there is not a writer who speaks of any communication with the Indians who does not give instances in which in the most solemn manner they avowed their responsibilities to this high authority.

That authority, the Great Spirit, Mr. President, taught them uprightness of conduct in their dealing with their fellow-men, and they abominated theft, they punished it with ignominious punishment, whether it was private or whether it was public; and as to faith-keeping in respect of treaties, there was no people I ever read about who had a higher regard for national obligations and duties in the maintenance and observance of their treaty engagements.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that even the Senate of the United States might learn some lessons of value in respect of the obligations of treaties and in respect also of the solemnity that ought to attend their ratification and the duty we owe not to our country alone but the nations of the world in maintaining a high attitude in respect of treaty making and the careful consideration of subjects that enter into treaties with foreign countries.

I had referred to the fact that a treaty is an act of legislation between two countries, in which the Senate and the President participate as a peculiar tribunal, the Senate acting by a majority of two-thirds, and not without such a majority, in the ratification of the treaty, and that the other country acted according to its laws or constitutions, if it has constitutions; and that the two bodies, one foreign to us, the other peculiar under our Constitution, were the enactors of the supreme law of the land, the law that would ride down State constitutions, and so decided by the Supreme Court, and the law that is preeminent over all laws previously enacted with which they come in conflict, the effect of the treaty, as decided by the Supreme Court, being to repeal acts of Congress antecedent to its ratification which stand in the way of, or which contradict, or in anywise impugn the treaty itself.

I was referring to the distinguished men amongst the Indians who had entered into these engagements and who had defended their rights under them with arms. I mentioned the fact that they had no historians except ourselves, and we not being very much impressed with a sense of friendliness and love toward them after the many barbarous and savage wars which were conducted in this country, our own historians must give at least an account that we can afford to accept when they set forth, as they do on almost every occasion, the national virtues and the private virtues of this large body of men whom we have now swept out from the coast of the Atlantic back into the deserts of the West, not leaving them a place where they have a foothold, so far as I remember, except in one place, and that is a reservation in the State of New York for the Seneca tribe. Over that tribe we are now having litigation in the courts as to what their rights are, and we are legislating in respect of that tribe, so as to dispose of lands that we have conceded to them, without even consulting their wishes.

Now, Mr. President, the historians have dwelt upon this subject to such an extent that the names I will read from the list which I happen to have before me will indicate to every mind familiarly the importance of the men who have conducted Indian affairs in behalf of the Indians in the United States for the last three centuries.

Old Jethro, well known to the people of the Northwest.

Keokuk, equally as well known, a man of great ability and majestic character.

Kastaloge, another prominent man.

Logan. Who has not heard of Logan? What schoolbook history in America does not speak in the praises of Logan as a man of great ability and noble character and bearing, and one who, in his speeches, taught humanity, if he did not even teach Christianity, to the men who were dealing with him?

Colonel Lowry, an eminent Cherokee, whom I happened to know when I was a child, a man who had the reputation of great ability and excellent education.

Massasoit.

McGilvary.

Metacomet.

Miantanomah, for whom we have named one of our war ships.

The McIntoshes.

McQueen.

Musculatublee, the grand Choctaw chieftain.

Niniquet.

Opikancano, one of the leading men who used to pitch his tent upon the ground where we are now assembled in the Senate. His name has not lapsed so that the world has forgotten it. We understand the virtues of that great and powerful man. He is being celebrated now in some of our most acceptable historical novels as one of the leading characters among the Potowomacks.

Path Killer.

Pawgas.

Passacus.

Powhatan.

Pontiac.

Pocahontas, whose blood is now claimed as a sort of type of nobility among the first families of the grand old State of Virginia.

Red Jacket.

Major Ridge, of the Cherokee Nation, a man who was powerful and prominent in the great wars of the Cherokees, and who was the friend of the white people in those wars, even with the Creek Indians, their neighbors.

John Ross, an educated, refined, cultivated man, whom I also had the pleasure of knowing when I was a boy, who reared an elegant family of people, educated them in the highest style at different places in the United States as far back as 1832, 1835, and 1836.

Old Roundhead, who was another Cromwell.

Sussacus.

Shingis.

Sibone.

Tammany, for whom a great political society in the United States has been named, with its sachems and its other officials with Indian titles.

Tecumseh, of whom I have already placed incidents in the RECORD.

Weatherford.

White Thunder.

Micanopy.

Osceola.

David Vann.

Geronimo, to whom our Lieutenant-General is indebted for the brilliancy of his career in history.

Chief Joseph, of the lava beds.

Sitting Bull, who must be admitted to have been a great strategist and an able general.

Rain in the Face, one of his chief lieutenants.

Colbert, who had written his name upon the rocks of the Tennessee rivers at the shoals, about which we know so much and about which we have had so much legislation in this body and elsewhere.

McAllister, for whom an important mining town in the Choctaw Nation is named, a great merchant and a gentleman in every respect.

Quaua, a man who is commanding now the last remnant of the tribe of Comanche Indians, of which he was, I believe, the last chief in Texas.

Tustenreggee, a great Seminole warrior.

I now turn to another department—those lawyers of high distinction, Pleasant Porter, now belonging to the Creek Indian tribe in that nation; Elias Boudinot, whom we have known familiarly in these legislative Chambers, and R. B. Owen, well known to the Supreme Court of the United States and also to the Senate and House of Representatives.

I merely refer to these, Mr. President, as leading characters, distinctive men, but not all the distinctive men of the Indian tribes, by any means, to show that the Indians of all the great tribes in this country have been progressive and, at the same time, conservative men. If we had acted toward them as they claim to have acted toward us, in perfect good faith, much bloodshed would have been spared, rapine would not have occurred, and money would not have been expended in millions that we have wasted upon the Indian wars.

Mr. President, dealing with men like these, the question arises, What particular feature of our policy is it that they have antagonized in this way? Admitting, as we are bound to admit, that their antagonisms have been in good faith, because they have been fought out in front, and they have been fought out to the bitter end, what particular point of difference has there been between us and all these tribes? They allege violation on our part of our treaty obligations made with them, and I think I might easily challenge any gentleman in the Senate to-day to point out a single instance in which a war has been commenced by any Indian tribe against the people of the United States unless it was upon the allegation that we had violated our treaty engagements with them and that they were set at liberty to make such war as they were able to make.

Such men as I have mentioned, had they been possessed of the resources of the white man in education, in arms, in money, in food products, and such as that, would never have yielded all this vast region of country to us and have gone down until now the remnants of ten or twelve of the most noted tribes are collected in what we call the Indian Territory, in the Cherokee Nation, or just to the north of it, in a corner of that region of country. Go into that part of the country and you will find there men who represent these nations, each one maintaining his distinctive title to the honors of his race, and they are engaged in the pursuit of agriculture and are prosperous.

One of the richest nations in the world per capita is situated in that northeastern corner of the Indian Territory. They have more money in the Treasury of the United States and in the value of their lands per capita than any people in the world. They have husbanded what they had as well as they could, and they have it now to rely upon for the maintenance of a glow in the embers so rapidly dying out through which their nations are being lost.

Take that grand old Indian whom we call Split Log, who is well known here. I believe he is a Delaware Indian. I forget his precise tribal connection. That man had a piece of land somewhere adjoining Kansas City and sold it for a considerable sum of money. He went down into this corner of the Cherokee Nation of which I speak with the remainder of his band, and there he turned to building a railroad.

Out of his own resources he built a railroad that I am told is about 100 miles long and perfectly equipped. Split Log has told me himself that he has machine shops for the repair of the machinery of that railroad which he built or had built, which are entirely run by Indians. He would not admit white men to go among them.

We see, Mr. President, in characteristics like these great capacity for good, and yet we see that these very people have been driven from their lands in every section of the country, until nothing remains of them except the memories that have been preserved in the names of the streams and the mountains. They implanted those beautiful names upon this continent and we all take pride in them.

We, Mr. President, have had our wars with each other of the most terrific character, and those wars arose out of alleged breaches of Constitutional rights, not treaty rights, but Constitutional rights. They even brought forth amendments to the Constitution of the United States at their close. In the fourteenth amendment there is the following:

SECTION 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

The Supreme Court decided that this applied only to negroes, and not to Indians, and great joy came to the States that held a majority in the Senate for the new company which they found in their citizenship, as it would seem from the exclusion of these Indians as being unfit for these great privileges and the admission of negro slaves to these high privileges.

Now, read by its four corners, the fourteenth amendment in the provision that I have quoted refers to "all persons born or naturalized in the United States;" but even our great Supreme Court found reasons for saying that that did not include the Indian tribes, and yet the Indians were born in the United States and they were subject to our jurisdiction—more subject to our jurisdiction in practice than any people have ever been.

We have enacted laws from time to time to confine the Indians in prison bounds on their reservations and to make it a highly penal offense that they should break away from their reservations and go out and exercise the liberties of citizenship. This is surely subjecting them to our jurisdiction. If they were so subject, then by the decree of the Supreme Court, for I can not call it a judgment, Indians can not be persons "born in the United States."

They must be things that were not born, but grew up like evil weeds.

No Indian court would ever have recorded such a decree under such a constitution against the white people or in favor of the negroes.

They are, in fact, incorporated in the bosoms of various States, and some of the States have been sufficiently kindly and indulgent to them to permit them even to vote. But, Mr. President, it was decided that the fourteenth amendment did not apply to them, because they were Indians. They are not citizens of the United States, and we have recently passed an enactment in the Dawes bill, and also in another bill, making all the Indians who select lands in severalty citizens of the United States and of the State in which they reside.

The Indians by and large in the Indian Territory have been made citizens of the United States by an enactment of Congress. So there are large bodies of them who are not recognized as citizens of the United States, yet they are subject to our jurisdiction and were born and raised in this country.

They came here, or were created here, before our fathers came; they occupied this country under a title which was derived from the Great Creator of the heavens and of the earth, but we denied it, and we reduced it to a mere right of occupancy, and we reduced them to a condition very far beneath that of the subjects of a monarchy, very far beneath even that of the free negroes who were imported as slaves from Africa and had been emancipated in the various States. We have degraded the Indians by every possible act that we could perform, and we have done it with injustice. There is no justice in it; there never was any justice in it. But that is their situation now.

Now, while we are pursuing this course toward them, Mr. President, we turn to the Indians who were in Arizona and New Mexico at the time we made the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo and the subsequent Gadsden purchase treaty. We found them there; they were citizens of Mexico; they were voters in Mexico when they resided within States and many of them resided within Sonora.

We took them in that plight and attitude in which we found them, and we stipulated with the Mexican Government, a republic, and the Mexican senate or legislature ratified the stipulation, that they were citizens of the United States if they chose to be such simply by remaining in the Territory. So they are still citizens of the United States.

Thus the Arizona and New Mexico Indians stand upon a footing distinct from those who are excluded from the benefits of the fourteenth amendment by the decree of the Supreme Court. Our treaty obligation with them, therefore, must rise, if possible, even to a higher grade and degree of obligation than with the general mass of the Indians with whom we made treaties, afterwards disregarding them and driving them across the Mississippi or else into extinguishment.

I am here, Mr. President, for the purpose of asserting these treaty rights and insisting that the Senate of the United States shall respect them. I am aware, sir, that I am here in an atmosphere—I do not speak of the Senate particularly—but an atmosphere that pervades all the country, which is getting more and more tainted with the conception that a treaty, like a fort, is something that is made to be destroyed if it becomes inconvenient, something that is made to be broken, something that is made to be avoided and not observed.

One of the leading newspapers in Philadelphia, which has had some very earnest, and doubtless conscientious, views about a matter that we have been negotiating for some time, speaking of this subject, says:

[Philadelphia Inquirer.]

BUILD THE CANAL FIRST AND VOTE AFTERWARDS.

Here are some extracts from a letter signed by a correspondent, who describes himself as a Western lawyer, which appeared yesterday on the editorial page of a New York newspaper, and which are reproduced as an indication of the drift of public sentiment on the important subject to which the letter relates. The writer said:

"All the so-called Republics of Central and South America are under the deepest obligation to us for preventing European aggression upon their territory. Common decency would require Colombia to give us freely the narrow strip of land we ask. But for the announcement of President Monroe and our readiness to stand by his doctrine, the whole southern continent would long ago have been colonized by European powers. In return for this protection, Colombia is now attempting to "sandbag" us.

"We have assumed a species of sovereignty of these countries, and as long as they profited thereby they have gladly acquiesced, and it seems to me that we would be morally justified should we begin the canal at once, using such force as may be necessary, and submit the question of damages to some respectable tribunal, such as the one at The Hague, taking into consideration as an offset the benefits derived by Colombia from the construction of the canal; in short, exercise a sort of eminent domain over that territory."

This very well agrees with the opinions upon this question which are entertained by the Inquirer and which it has more than once, and no later than this week, taken occasion to express.

It is of momentous importance, not only to the United States, but to the whole world, that the isthmian canal be constructed along the best route available. Now, the great superiority of the Panama route over that by way of Nicaragua is not seriously disputed by any honest and instructed person, and it is intolerable that the rapacity or the ignorance or the merely mulish obstinacy of such a State as Colombia should be permitted to prevent the realization of a project in which all civilization is interested.

Individuals are not allowed to block the path of public improvement in the name of their rights, and the time has come and the occasion has arisen to apply to the obstructive government the same principle which is applied to the obstructive property holder, the principle that the interests of the majority must prevail.

It is reported now that the President is about to abandon negotiations with Colombia, giving his reasons to Congress in a special message, which is expected to be interesting, and that he will then turn to Nicaragua in compliance with the terms of the law under which he is acting. It is possible that Nicaragua may prove no more amenable to right and reason than Colombia. And then there is Costa Rica, which also must be reckoned with.

Difficulties may be encountered there. Suppose it proves no more practicable to arrange satisfactory terms for a Nicaragua Canal than it has been for one by way of Panama? Is the United States prepared to give the whole thing up?

No one will say so, and thus there is seen the possibility that the canal may have to be built in any case through the exercise of a superior force and through the denial of the right of an unprogressive government to obstruct the movement of civilization.

There is a good deal of nonsense talked about the inviolability of the rights of a sovereign State. Those rights depend upon consent, and may be abrogated morally by the manner of their use, and if it be objected that it is wrong to use force, the answer is that it is upon the use of force that the whole fabric of civilization is established.

Mr. President, teachings like that cause men of wisdom and prominence and power, to say nothing of other men and the youth of the country, to feel that we have no obligations of honor in respect of making or keeping our engagements, and that whoever stands in the way of the desires or of the covetousness of the United States must give way.

It must be a low state of public opinion that seems to justify us or this great newspaper in the advocacy of doctrines like these, and treaty obligations are of no worth whatever if they are entered into under such conditions as are here mentioned, and with such reservations as are here alluded to—the reservation of the right of seizing a country without any treaty, or, after we have made a treaty, of putting our own construction upon it and doing what we please about it. We are admonished that the American system and American sentiment require that we shall push our adventures to any extremity, justifying the result by the supposed necessity.

I protest, Mr. President, against any such looseness of public opinion, and I protest against any such looseness of construction of our international duties and of our treaty engagements. urO treaty engagements made with Mexico in behalf of these Indians and in behalf of the Mexicans who were there at the time, are as solemn as any the Government of the United States ever entered into. They are plain, unquestionable, and are entitled to our respect; and the enforcement of them is all that is demanded in the bill that is before the Senate. They were not to be construed according to our caprice or our advantage.

I had intended, Mr. President, to address my remarks to some other propositions in connection with this subject, which are appropriate and very closely akin to what is now being considered, but I do not wish to excite any feeling or arouse any unpleasant sensibilities by reference to other parts of our history.

I will remark, however, that the people of the United States to-day are in an attitude of extreme delicacy, and I may say of extreme danger, lest we shall be induced by unwise counsels to convert ourselves into a nation of conquerors, draw the sword, fling away the scabbard, and march out among the nations of the earth, taking what we choose to appropriate.

We have next to us here the island of Santo Domingo, with two governments established, two Republics, which we have recognized and with whom we have treaties. The constituency of those Governments comprise as low a character of people as exist anywhere in the world except at Panama. Those people are the lowest.

It is asserted, Mr. President, upon what I think is good authority, for I have seen it repeated time and time again and never denied, that the people of that island, particularly those of Santo Domingo, are so depraved that they still maintain the practice of cannibalism.

They rise from that low degradation, until the upper classes there are considerably educated and somewhat refined; but that Republic represents the whole of those people, and in making a treaty with that Republic all of those people, by the negotiations of their representatives, have entered this Chamber upon their proposition for the ratification of treaties; we have conferred with them, and we have treated with them in making the supreme law both of Santo Domingo and of the United States.

Having done that, Mr. President, with people such as I have described and whose characteristics are well known, or better known to the Senate than they are to me, why is it that we disdain to execute a treaty that we have already made with Mexico because some of her population are said to be of low caste, ignorant, and untaught in the English tongue, uneducated in the knowledge of our institutions after sixty years of kindergarten instruction?

We decline to comply with and to execute solemn treaties we have made with Mexico upon grounds of this kind. Why did not such considerations enter at once and in the first instance into the making of the treaty with such people? Why did we not know that fact and ascertain and act upon it when we solemnly agreed that these men, brought in by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo and the Gadsden treaty, should not only be citizens of the United States, but that they should be incorporated into the American Union as States? That is the meaning of it. Why did not we consider all this at that time? The facts were before us.

But, then, Mr. President, we were in a state of agitation such as we are having now about other transactions with which we are connected that did not furnish to us a convenient opportunity for proper deliberation. Perhaps if we had thought the thing over more maturely we would not have admitted those people by solemn covenant into the rights of statehood; but we wanted that area through Arizona for the purpose of carrying, as we supposed we could do, a railroad between San Francisco and the eastern parts of our country, around the lower borders of the great mountains there, upon a plain.

That was our chief motive for it. We did not want to buy those arid deserts, of which we then knew nothing as to their power of production in agriculture. We did not even know of the mines of great treasure that were hid away in their mountains. But we wanted a railroad route, and we pressed the subject earnestly, and with a proposition to Santa Anna of $10,000,000, with which he expected to make himself the Emperor of Mexico.

The hasty action we took at that time is now repented of by the Senators who oppose statehood. Do they say we ought not to have made that treaty? That would impeach the treaty. Do they say these people are worse off now than they were at the time we took them in and made them a Territorial government? That would impeach the Territorial government and the wisdom of Congress. What do they say?

They say, not that those people have degenerated, but that after sixty years of trial they have not yet become fit for American citizenship in its full plenitude, citizenship of the United States, and also citizenship of a State, which is quite a different matter from that of citizenship of the United States—a much more important one to the individual man. That is the attitude of Senators.

Now, Mr. President, we ought either to cede these lands back to Mexico and give the people who occupied them at the time we acquired them the right of representation in Sonora and in the Republic of Mexico which they then had, or else we ought to obey our treaty and admit them into the Union as we promised to do, and give them the benefits of statehood.

Senators have said that when you have done this the act is irrevocable, and therefore it must not be done; that we must wait for a time—an indefinite number of years—before we shall get our consent that we will comply with our obligation made in 1848 and 1853.

We must wait upon it. How long does it take an honest man to comply with his contract? I need not ask any other question than just that to characterize this proceeding. Why did we make the contract if we did not intend to keep it? Have we kept it? No. According to indications here now we do not intend to keep it. We stand here and we impeach the honor of our own Government by claiming that it is a present duty to nullify—not to repeal, not to abrogate, but to nullify—a treaty we made in 1853, giving to these people positive and distinctive rights which we have continuously from that time to the present refused to them.

And yet every political party in the Union, when it has met in its quadrennial convention, has committed itself to the immediate admission of these States into the Union, but when they come to the test they find excuses on this side and the other for not having complied with their requirements.

I have argued all the excuses that have been urged, so far as I think it proper or necessary for me to do so, the arguments really having been exhausted by gentlemen on the other side and on this side of the question, for the arguments on the other side of the question have been of such a character that they have answered themselves, and need no reply. They come down now to the great moral proposition that some few of the people in Arizona and New Mexico are Mormons. That is a very striking argument when taken in connection with the fact that one of the twelve apostles, I think it is—is not Mr. Smoot an apostle?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Smoot is, I believe.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church has been elected and certified to this body as a member of it. Mr. Smoot is a Republican.

I would never think, Mr. President, of opposing Mr. Smoot's admission into this body because he is one of the apostles of the Mormon Church or because he is a Republican. I believe if I had my choice of objections I would put it on the fact that he is a Republican, for religion in this country is protected by the Constitution, is intended to be free, provided it is not a cover for crime.

I will read something about religion in another quarter of America. I read from a concordat that is made an organic law:

ART. 34. A marriage contracted in conformity with the rites of the Catholic religion annuls ipso jure a purely civil marriage previously entered into with another person.

ART. 35. For purely civil effects the law recognizes the legitimacy of the children conceived previously to the annulment of the civil marriage, in accordance with the provisions of the last preceding article.

ART. 36. The man who, after having contracted a civil marriage, afterwards marries another woman according to the rites of the Catholic Church is required to provide subsistence to the woman and his children by her until she marries canonically.

If I had found that provision in the constitution of Mexico and happened to be in the Senate of the United States, I never would have voted for the admission of any part of Mexican territory into this Union subject to that provision.

Let us compare that with the Mormon doctrine. What is it? Here are a man and a woman who have united themselves to each other according to forms of law in the United States, a civil marriage, or who have had the ceremony performed by one of the bishops, we will say, of the Episcopal Church or of the Methodist Church, or by one of the greatest ministers of the Presbyterian or the Baptist Church, and he read in the service which was performed on that interesting occasion, "whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder," as an admonition drawn from the sacred Scriptures, to stand as a warning to nations and to men that that sacred tie, bound at the altar, was not only respected of all men and of the angels in heaven, but that none of the powers of earth or hell should prevail against it.

There is no relation that belongs to any individual in society, I care not where he may be, that is so delicate, so necessary, so important, and so inviolable as the marriage contract voluntarily entered into by two persons capable of making it. Yet we find this act incorporated into the organic law of a republic, whereby it is stated:

A marriage contracted in conformity with the rites of the Catholic religion annuls ipso jure a purely civil marriage previously entered into with another person.

They may have been married elsewhere, or in that country by a civil officer, and yet when they approach the country where this law is paramount and is organic, they find that it annuls the marriage because it was not performed by a Catholic priest.

Then the law goes on to prescribe what shall be the fruits of this destruction of the contract, and makes a disposal of the family and of the children whenever either of those parties, for any reason whatever, chooses to say to the other, "Depart, for we stand here in the presence of a supreme law of a Republic which annuls the marriage between us. I propose to marry another woman," says the man, or "another man," says the woman, "and as for these little children of ours, we turn them over to the tender mercies of this law."

Mr. President, we are making treaties all around. I mentioned the treaty we have with Santo Domingo. We have treaties with Cuba. If such a law as I have quoted to-day was the organic law of Cuba, would she stand any chance of having a treaty ratified with her until she had repealed that law? Gentlemen speak of Mormonism, which is intended in its worst feature to spread the rights of matrimony over a number of females included in a family, not to destroy matrimony by an organic law that dissolves the marriage and sets the parties free from each other and bastardizes their issue. I will not ask you which is the worse system.

We are very anxious now to make a treaty with a country that has this provision in its organic law. We are anxious to get the exclusive control of a strip of territory in that country for purposes of our own. We are anxious that we shall have the right of carrying into that country laborers and engineers and officers and citizens who may desire to do business there, and yet when they arrive on that land, if we shall succeed in getting a foothold there, they are confronted by that law.

And while we are pressing with might and main every energy of this great Republic to accomplish these results, and while the President of the United States knows that he will be encountered with this act when he does accomplish this purpose, we go ahead with our treaty making.

And what do we intend when we have made such a treaty? Do we intend to submit to this law? We intend to put the heel of contempt upon that law and trample it under foot, and yet it is the organic law of Colombia. We are treating with these people with the intent and purpose of destroying that law without saying a word about it, or else we are treating with them under circumstances that will disgrace the United States.

I would not make a treaty with any nation that exists in this world to acquire temporary or permanent control of any part of its territory under the jurisdiction of the United States if that jurisdiction is to be exercised in conformity with that infamous statute. How did that get to be a part of the law of Colombia? By a concordat, which I hold in my hand, signed in 1888 by the President of Colombia and by Pope Leo XIII of Rome. Why was it that a law of that sort was imposed upon the people of Colombia by her authority?

Sir, do we forget the strife between the Church party and the Liberals in Mexico through which they had 62 Presidents in fifty years, with one continual uproar of insurrection, turmoil, and bloodshed, until a full-blooded Indian, Juarez, born in Guadalajara of a common Indian family, took up the task of expelling the power that had produced this commotion in Mexico, confiscated their vast estates accumulated at the expense of the Mexican people and Government, and drove the Jesuits and other orders out of that country?

He succeeded in his grand work, but he did not succeed until France and Austria had united their forces for the purpose of sustaining that church party in the domination of Mexico, out of which grew the empire of Maximilian, and were driven from Mexico.

This same war has been waged in every part of South America. It exists to-day in Venezuela, and it exists in a subdued form in Colombia. Recently it was flagrant and bitter. To-day it is smoldering in Colombia, ready to be fanned into a flame when opportunity offers.

Since 1898 Colombia has had no Congress. She has been at war with her own people, the church party arrayed on one side and the liberals on the other; and the bone of contention, the great controversy between them, has been these infamous three articles which I have just read.

In addition to those there are others almost quite as bad. Article 28 provides:

The Government shall return to religious bodies such of their sequestrated property as has no distinct destination; but if the owner does not come forward, or if he fills no ecclesiastical office, it may be sold and the proceeds applied to pious and benevolent objects, according to the most pressing needs of each diocese, the proceeding in such cases to be in accord with the ecclesiastical authorities.

The property of the church that had been confiscated in these wars Colombia agrees in this concordat shall be sold, and the proceeds shall be applied by the Government to what they call "benevolent purposes," under the direction of the priests.

I turn back to articles 11 and 12:

ART. 11. The Holy See will lend its support and cooperation to the Government for the establishment in Colombia of religious institutions, giving preference to those for charitable purposes, for missions, for the education of youth, and for general education, and to other works of public utility and beneficence.

ART. 12. Public education and instruction in universities, colleges, schools, and in other centers of instruction shall be organized and directed in conformity with the dogmas and moral teachings of the Catholic Church.

Article 13 provides:

Consequently, in such centers of instruction the respective diocesan bishops, either by themselves or by special delegation, shall exercise the right, in whatever concerns religion or morals, to inspect and revise the text-books in use in the same.

The archbishop of Bogotá shall prescribe the text-books relating to religion and morals to be used in the universities; and to insure uniformity of teaching on those subjects, said prelate, in connection with other bishops, shall choose the text-books for the other schools of official instruction.

The Government shall see that no lectures are delivered on literary, scientific, or general subjects in any branch of learning that inculcate ideas contrary to Catholic dogmas or calculated to lessen the respect due to the church.

I will mention in this connection that the Government of Colombia, in immediate acceptance and ordination of this concordat, enacted a series of very harsh laws for the purpose of punishing all persons who might in any respect or at any time venture an opinion which was considered to be a criticism upon the priesthood in Colombia or upon the dogmas and ordinances of the Catholic Church. These statutes are there. Any Senator can read them who wants to look at them.

ART. 14. If, in spite of the orders and precautions of the Government, the moral and religious teaching (in universities, colleges, etc.) shall not conform to Catholic doctrines, the respective diocesans may withdraw from the offending professors and masters the privilege of teaching in such branches.

I read from article 17:

All persons professing the Catholic religion desirous of contracting marriage, should have the ceremony performed according to the rites of the church.

The civil effects of marriage, in respect to the persons and property of the contracting parties and their descendants, can only be secured when the marriage is performed in accordance with the prescriptions of the council of Trent. This celebration shall be witnessed by the functionary who may be designated by law for the sole purpose of verifying the entry of the marriage in the civil registry. But in cases of marriage in articulo mortis, when this formality might be difficult of observance, it may be dispensed with, and other proof substituted.

It being the business of the contracting parties to secure the intervention of the civil functionary for the registry, the duty of the clergyman is limited to an admonition as to the requirements of the civil law.

Article 18:

In order to give marriages celebrated at whatever period, according to the prescriptions of the Council of Trent, civil effect, suppletory evidence of ecclesiastical origin will be given preference.

Article 19:

Matrimonial causes affecting the married relation, cohabitation, and the validity of espousals pertain exclusively to the ecclesiastical authority, the civil consequences of marriage to the temporal.

Do we propose that these laws shall affect our people in any port of Panama that we may occupy under concessions from Colombia?

That is what we agree to, if no exception is made that will secure to them a clear exemption from this concordat.

What have we done in the pressure for treaty relations that we have heretofore sought to prevent this degradation? I am not speaking of the treaty before the United States Senate now; I am speaking of that treaty which Mr. Hay pledged Mr. Concha in 1892 he was ready to sign, by command of the President, and Mr. Concha asserted he was ready to sign. I will put those agreements in my remarks without stopping to read them. That is the treaty of which I am speaking, and it did not save us from this concordat.

The matter referred to is as follows:

LEGACION DE COLOMBIA,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1902.

SIR: Confirming the conclusions reached as the result of the conference held between yourself and Mr. Cromwell and adopting, as far as practicable, your valuable suggestions, I beg leave to hand you the concessionary convention or treaty (in Spanish and in English), embodying the amendments agreed upon in the conference referred to.

My previous communication of March 31, 1902, proposing the concessionary convention or treaty in behalf of my Government, and the expository communications of myself and Mr. Cromwell, under the same date, apply equally to the inclosures.

Awaiting the pleasure of your excellency, I have the honor to renew the assurances of my high consideration.

J. V. CONCHA.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State of the United States, Department of State.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 21, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt at your hands of a communication dated the 31st of March, 1902, and another of the 18th of April, inclosing a proposal of the Republic of Colombia for a concessionary convention or treaty between the Republic of Colombia and that of the United States of America respecting the completion, maintenance, operation, control, and protection of an interoceanic canal over the Isthmus of Panama.

I am directed by the President to inform you that I shall be ready to sign with you the proposed convention as soon as—

First. The Congress of the United States shall have authorized the President to enter into such an agreement; and Second. As soon as the law officers of this Government shall have decided upon the question of the title which the New Panama Canal Company is able to give to all the properties and rights claimed by it and pertaining to a canal across the Isthmus and covered by the pending proposal.

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

JOHN HAY.

Señor DON JOSE VICENTE CONCHA, etc.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF COLOMBIA,
Washington, D. C., April 23, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the reception of your excellency's communication of the 21st instant, by which you are pleased to inform me that you are authorized by the President of the United States to sign with the Republic of Colombia the treaty relative to the opening of the Panama Canal, and the other details connected with the said work, in accordance with the draft I submitted to the Government of the United States on the 18th instant, and that you will proceed to do so as soon as permission shall have been given by the Congress of this Republic and as soon as the official lawyers shall have given their opinion regarding the title of the new canal company for the transfer of its rights.

When the occasion to sign the above-mentioned treaty shall arise, I will present, according to usage, the full powers authorizing me to do so.

Accept, excellency, the sentiments of my high consideration.

JOSE VICENTE CONCHA.

Hon. JOHN HAY,
Secretary of State of the United States, Department of State.

Mr. MORGAN. In that treaty no exception was made in favor of the people of the United States who may go there to live, for ages to come, with respect to this concordat and these infamous laws which obtain in Colombia and control the marital relations and the education of the children.

We are to have joint tribunals, according to the treaty which Mr. Hay said he was ready to sign, judicial tribunals, comprised of Colombians and Americans, to be appointed I suppose under the acts of both of these Governments, for the purpose of deciding all questions that arise between Americans and Colombians, civil and criminal. When we get into the joint tribunal, with our two or three or five judges and they have theirs, Mr. President, they will be acting under this law in respect of all marriage rights and contracts and the rights of education of children and the right to establish Protestant schools in a canal belt.

Colombia will be found contending for their organic law, which is not displaced by any treaty. We will be contending for the Constitution of the United States, which goes with our people wherever we have the right of occupancy and possession, by treaty or otherwise. Who is to reconcile these things?

Who, Mr. President, can prevent the return of the hostilities that are apparently now suppressed and are said to be closed between that old Church party, who maintain these dogmas and these organic principles in their law, and the Liberal party, who have been fighting them in every country in America that ever belonged to Spain? They have been fighting them from 1812 down to the present time almost without any intermission, except when the Church party has been compelled to give way, to yield to superior power.

It has yielded to superior power in every country in South America except Venezuela and Colombia. It has yielded to superior power in all the States of Central America and in Mexico. The wars have ended. Peace has returned. Prosperity has attended the peaceful relations that have been established in all the Spanish-American States by the Liberal party, but the Liberal party is to-day crushed beneath the foot of the dictatorial and war power in Colombia, and we are treating with the Church party that is bound to this concordat.

Now, when we speak of Mormonism as existing among a few individuals in New Mexico and Arizona, and as a matter of religious faith, what are we to say in respect of ourselves when we are urging treaties upon a country that has this marriage-destroying concordat in its organic law?

Are we so poor in spirit or so intoxicated with the supposed advantages of a bargain or a speculation that we forget the duties we owe to our own people when such a temptation is presented?

Mr. President, is it not time that we should pause to reflect a little? Are we prepared to sacrifice every principle of religion and every principle of the Constitution of the United States to the demands of this priest of unrighteousness, that takes the marriage contract and tears it to pieces by an act of law, bastardizes the children, distributes the property, and when the children even of those who are married according to the ritual of that church and all others in Colombia are held subordinate to the priesthood in their instruction and in the text-books which they are to read, and when it is made a drastic and heavy penalty of the law that those shall suffer who undertake even to criticise this act or undertake to evade it in any respect?

Sir, if I were an American citizen speaking in a canal zone in Colombia to my own fellow-citizens at a place that belongs to us by occupancy under a treaty, I would be liable to punishment for the words I have dared to utter in the Senate in criticism of it. And yet we, driven by a feeling of ambitious covetousness, are rushing headlong, and our President of the United States is pledging us that we shall make an agreement with a country that has laws of this kind, without making an effort to escape their power.

Sir, we do not intend to obey those laws. We do not intend that they shall be of force. But we will make our treaty knowing that they are there and making no effort to remove them. What, then, are we doing? Subordinating our people to a very much worse condition than ever existed in Utah in respect to Mormonism and polygamy, certainly much worse than exists in these Territories now on that question of religious belief, with the reserved and concealed purpose of defying those laws after we have accepted them.

I abhor the idea of the Mormon Church and of polygamy. I admire the laws of the Cherokees, which I quoted yesterday, which as far back as 1826 prohibited polygamy, before we thought of doing so. I believe in the righteousness of the Indian laws on that subject, which we have adopted. I believe also in the rights of women to their property, which all the States of the Union now, I believe, have virtually adopted after the Cherokees in their enactment in their council, in 1826, proclaimed as law. They are the authors of it. They inspired the thought that made the woman independent of her husband in regard to the ownership of her own property.

It has been attempted here to show that the Mexican Government is winking at the immigration of Mormons into its territory and that they are practicing polygamy in Mexico. Such a thing as that, Mr. President, did not exist when this treaty was made; and if Mexico sees proper now to admit such a thing, and I do not believe a word of it, still we have no right of complaint.

When we brought these people into the United States we gave them the guaranties of our Constitution, and under the powers of that instrument we have abrogated Mormonism as a legal establishment or a church establishment in Utah and elsewhere. The polygamous features of it have been swept out by opposing statutes.

Now, while we are arguing here and objecting to this treaty on the ground that some of those people are still addicted to Mormonism in respect of their belief and not of the practice of polygamy, we are still here urging the acquisition of a country to the United States, and it is no less than an acquisition, at least for the period of a hundred years, where the law that I have been reading prevails.

Let us look over the whole field. Let us do justice to ourselves, our own institutions, and our own history, while we are considering this subject, and let not the Senate of the United States suppose that the people of the United States are going to listen to our clamors about Mormonism in New Mexico and Arizona when we are straining every nerve and using every power that we possess for the purpose of getting a treaty under which our people will be subjected to the horrible condition that is provided for in articles 24, 25, and 26 of the concordat with Pope Leo XIII.

The heart of the war in Colombia has been in those three articles. Take the testimony of Mr. Restrepo, who is known here and who was the agent of the insurrectionary forces in Colombia, and from Madrid published his opinions boldly to the world—to take his testimony, not only was this unholy union between church and state, then incorporated in this act of 1888, forced upon the Colombian people, but that, in the war which since that time has covered many a battlefield with dead Colombians, this concordat has been the cause of it.

Mr. Restrepo asserts that San Clemente, practicing upon the new Panama Canal Company, extracted from them, in April, 1900, a million dollars, which he stuck into his pocket, and now Marroquin, the present President, is going to get another—the man who imprisoned Silva, the minister to this country, when he returned to Colombia recently, because he could not make him obey his will. That is the situation there, and we are treating with him; we are anxiously pursuing a treaty engagement with him.

I say, Mr. President, if we have a mind to halt anywhere we ought to halt right here in our dealings with countries that are thus affected, and see whether or not some mischievous consequences may not arise. But when we have made treaties that are honorable and just and are not affected by such conditions I appeal to the Senate of the United States, and I appeal to the people of the United States, to sustain me in my demand that we shall observe those treaties in good faith. If we admit these States into the Union because we have engaged to do it, and it is a duty we owe to those people and to our own obligations, we will have done no more and no less than our duty.

I ask the leave of the Senate to annex the concordat from which I read in my remarks as a part of them. It is very brief.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to annex to his speech a certain concordat. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The paper referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 95, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

CONCORDAT BETWEEN COLOMBIA AND POPE LEO XIII.

The concordat between Colombia and Pope Leo XIII, promulgated February 24, 1888, and article 34 of law 30 of 1888 of said Republic of Colombia. January 19, 1903.—Ordered to be printed. Concordat between the Republic of Colombia and Pope Leo XIII.

Mr. Walker to Mr. Bayard.

No. 95.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Bogota, March 7, 1888. (Received April 6.)

SIR: As a subject which may be of interest to the State Department and important to some of our citizens coming to this country to reside, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy, in Spanish, of the "Concordat" recently celebrated between the Holy See of Rome and the Colombian Government, with a careful translation.

In making this translation I regretted that I did not have access to the original Latin text in which it was drawn up and signed, but had to content myself with the Spanish translation, which in some of the articles is vague and ambiguous. The first clause of the seventeenth article is so much so that in my translation I was forced to be paraphrastic rather than literal.

As a part of the same subject I herewith transmit a copy, with translation, of law 20, passed by the legislative council on the 25th of February last, which virtually annuls all civil marriages celebrated at any time in the past, unless the ceremony was also performed canonically. The annulment of the marriage, however, does not illegitimatize the children of such marriage.

I am, sir, etc.,

JNO. G. WALKER.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 95.—Translation.]

CONCORDAT ENTERED INTO BETWEEN POPE LEO XIII AND THE REPUBLIC OF COLOMBIA.

[Concluded December 31, 1887. Ratified by the legislative council of Colombia February 24, 1888.)

In the name of the most holy and indivisible Trinity, the Supreme Pontiff, Leo XIII, and the most excellent Rafael Nuñez, President of the Republic of Colombia, by their respective representatives, to wit, on the part of His Holiness, the most eminent Monsignore Mariana Rampolla del Tindaro, cardinal presbyter of the most holy Church of St. Cecelia and papal secretary of state; and on the part of the Republic, His Excellency Joaquin Vélez, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary near the Holy See, who, after a mutual exchange of credentials, have concluded the following convention:

ART. 1. The Catholic, Roman, Apostolic is the religion of Colombia, the public authorities of which shall recognize it as an essential element of social order, and they bind themselves to protect it in all its rights and privileges, and to cause it and its ministers to be respected.

ART. 2. The Catholic Church shall be free and independent of the civil authority and shall freely exercise all its spiritual authority and jurisdiction, conforming in its administrative government solely to its own laws.

ART. 3. Canonical legislation shall be free of the civil, and shall form no part of the latter, but will be respected by the latter.

ART. 4. The church, represented by its hierarchical authorities, is recognized by the State as a true and legitimate entity, with capacity to exercise and enjoy all rights pertaining to such.

ART. 5. The church has the right of acquiring, possessing, and administering real and personal property, in accordance to general laws, and its lands and establishments shall be no less inviolable than those of the citizens of the Republic.

ART. 6. Ecclesiastical property may be taxed in the same manner and to the same extent as the property of private individuals, except edifices for public worship, theological seminaries, and the residences of the clergy, which are exempt from all taxation, occupation, or appropriation to other uses.

ART. 7. The secular and regular clergy shall not be required to perform public duties incompatible with their ministry and profession, and at all times shall be exempt from military service.

ART. 8. The Government shall enact such laws as will protect the sacerdotal dignity whenever, for any cause, a minister of the church may figure in criminal trials.

ART. 9. Diocesan bishops and parish priests may claim from the faithful the emoluments and ecclesiastical fees canonically and equitably established, either by the immemorial custom of the diocese or by the rules of religious services; and in order that such acts and obligations may produce civil effects, and that the temporal authority may lend its support, the bishops shall proceed in accord with the Government.

ART. 10. Competent ecclesiastical authority has the right in Colombia to establish religious orders of both sexes, to be governed by suitable constitutions. But in order to secure the enjoyment of the rights of a lawful corporation and the protection of the laws they must present to the civil authorities the canonical authorization issued by their ecclesiastical superior.

ART. 11. The Holy See will lend its support and cooperation to the Government for the establishment in Colombia of religious institutions, giving preference to those for charitable purposes, for missions, for the education of youth, and for general education, and to other works of public utility and beneficence.

ART. 12. Public education and instruction in universities, colleges, schools, and in other centers of instruction shall be organized and directed in conformity with the dogmas and moral teachings of the Catholic Church.

ART. 13. Consequently, in such centers of instruction the respective diocesan bishops, either by themselves or by special delegation, shall exercise the right, in whatever concerns religion and morals, to inspect and revise the text-books in use in the same.

The archbishop of Bogotá shall prescribe the text-books relating to religion and morals to be used in the universities; and to insure uniformity of teaching on those subjects said prelate, in connection with other bishops, shall choose the text-books for the other schools of official instruction.

The Government shall see that no lectures are delivered on literary, scientific, or general subjects in any branch of learning that inculcate ideas contrary to Catholic dogmas or calculated to lessen the respect due to the church.

ART. 14. If, in spite of the orders and precautions of the Government, the moral and religious teaching (in universities, colleges, etc.) shall not conform to Catholic doctrines, the respective, diocesans may withdraw from the offending professors and masters the privilege of teaching in such branches.

ART. 15. The Holy See has the right to fill vacancies in the archbishoprics and bishoprics, but the Holy Father, as an evidence of special deference and to the end of preserving perfect harmony between the church and the state, agrees that in filling such vacancies the previous consent of the President shall be obtained. To that end, when such vacancies occur, the President may recommend directly to the Holy See such ecclesiastics as in his judgment unite in themselves the gifts and qualifications necessary for the episcopal dignity; and the Holy See, on its part, before making the appointment, shall always communicate the names of the candidates for promotion in order to ascertain whether or not the President considers the candidates civilly or politically disqualified for such positions, vacancies in the bishoprics to be filled as soon as possible, and in no case to remain unfilled for more than six months.

ART. 16. The Holy See may erect new dioceses, or change the limits of those existing, whenever it is thought opportune and useful for the better care of souls, previously consulting the Government and admitting such suggestions as may be reasonable and just.

ART. 17. All persons professing the Catholic religion, desirous of contracting marriage, should have the ceremony performed according to the rites of the church.

The civil effects of marriage, in respect to the persons and property of the contracting parties and their descendants, can only be secured when the marriage is performed in accordance with the prescriptions of the council of Trent. This celebration shall be witnessed by the functionary who may be designated by law for the sole purpose of verifying the entry of the marriage in the civil registry. But in cases of marriage in articulo mortis, when this formality might be difficult of observance, it may be dispensed with and other proof substituted.

It being the business of the contracting parties to secure the intervention of the civil functionary for the registry, the duty of the clergyman is limited to an admonition as to the requirements of the civil law.

ART. 18. In order to give marriages celebrated at whatever period, according to the prescriptions of the Council of Trent, civil effect, suppletory evidence of ecclesiastical origin will be given preference.

ART. 19. Matrimonial causes affecting the married relation, cohabitation, and the validity of espousals pertain exclusively to the ecclesiastical authority, the civil consequences of marriages to the temporal.

ART. 20. The armies of the Republic shall enjoy the indulgence known as castrenses, to be regulated by the Holy Father in a separate act.

ART. 21. Following the divine offices there shall be offered up in all the churches of the Republic the following prayers: Domine salvam fac Rempublicam; Domine salvum fac Præsidem ejus et supremas ejus auctoritates.

ART. 22. The Government of the Republic recognizes in perpetuity as a consolidated debt the value of the redeemed annuities (censos) now in the treasury, and of the estates belonging to the church fraternities, charitable foundations, chapels, establishments for instruction and benevolence erected by the church, which at any time may have been inscribed in the public debt of the nation. This recognized debt is to bear interest without diminution at the annual rate of 4½ per cent, payable every six months.

ART. 23. The income arising from sequestrated benefices and tithings pertaining to charitable institutions, chapels, monasteries, and other separate foundations is recognized and shall be paid to those who have the right to receive them, or to their legal representatives. This payment shall be made without diminution, as is provided for in the last preceding article, to commence with year 1888. In case any such bodies have become extinct, the amounts due them by a previous arrangement with the Government shall be applied to pious and charitable objects, without in any case contravening the intention of the founders.

ART. 24. In view of the present condition of the national treasury of Colombia and the benefit derived by the church from the observance of this convention, the Holy See makes the following relinquishments:

(a) The value of the principal of the sequestered property belonging to the aforesaid extinct convents and religious bodies of both sexes, not included in the foregoing articles, and which has not in any manner been recognized. (b) Whatever is due to such extinct organizations for rents or interest already accrued, or in whatever manner resulting, from said sequestration previous to the 31st of December, 1887.

ART. 25. In consideration of the foregoing favor the Government of Colombia agrees to secure, in perpetuity, an annual net sum, hereby fixed at 100,000 Colombian dollars, to be increased when the said treasury is in a better condition, said payments to be applied to the uses of the dioceses, chapters, seminaries, missions, and such other civilizing works of the church, and in such manner as may be agreed upon between the high contracting parties.

ART. 26. The surviving members of the extinct religious communities shall continue in the enjoyment, for their maintenance and other necessities, of such revenues as may have belonged to them by virtue of previous laws and decrees.

ART. 27. In like manner shall be paid the rents and incomes set aside by anterior laws and decrees for the support of public worship in churches, chapels, and other religious places not included in article 22. If concerning this point there should be doubt or difficulty, the Government shall communicate with competent ecclesiastical authorities, to the end that a good understanding may be arrived at.

ART. 28. The Government shall return to religious bodies such of their sequestrated property as has no distinct destination; but if the owner does not come forward, or if he fills no ecclesiastical office, it may be sold and the proceeds applied to pious and benevolent objects, according to the most pressing needs of each diocese, the proceeding in such cases to be in accord with the ecclesiastical authorities.

ART. 29. The Holy See, in order to secure public tranquillity, declares, for its part, that persons who purchased ecclesiastical property during the past changes in Colombia, or who have redeemed annuities (censos) in the national treasury, according to the provisions of the civil law at the time in force, shall not be disturbed in any manner by the ecclesiastical authorities, a favor extended not only to those who performed the acts, but to those who, in the exercise of whatsoever functions, may have taken part in the same, in such manner that the first purchasers, as well as their legal successors and those who have redeemed annuities (censos), shall enjoy in peace and security such property, its products and emoluments, stipulating, however, that the Republic shall not in future repeat similar acts of seizure.

ART. 30. The Government of the Republic shall arrange with the respective diocesan bishops all that relates to cemeteries, reconciling the exigencies of their civil and sanitary character with the veneration due the sacredness of such places and with ecclesiastical prescriptions. In case of misunderstandings on such subjects they will be arranged between the Holy See and the Government.

ART. 31. Agreements between the Holy See and the Government of Colombia for fostering Catholic missions among the barbarous tribes shall not require the after approval of Congress.

ART. 32. The present convention repeals and renders null and void all laws, orders, and decrees, in whatsoever mode or period they were promulgated, in such parts as may contradict or are inconsistent with this convention, which shall remain the permanent law of the State.

ART. 33. The ratification of this convention shall take place within six months from the date of its signature, or sooner, if possible.

In faith whereof the said plenipotentiaries sign and seal this convention.

Done at Rome the 31st day of December, 1887.

M. CARDINAL RAMPOLLA.
JOAQUIN F. VÉLEZ.

NATIONAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL,
Bogotá, February 24, 1888.

Considering (1) that in the celebration of the foregoing convention the Government has acted within the powers conferred upon it by article 56 of the fundamental law of the Republic;

(2) That by this agreement, which satisfactorily and consistently settles all pending questions between the church and the state in conformity with the new national régime, and at the same time responds to imperious necessity and public well-being, which demanded the definition of the mutual relations between the civil and the ecclesiastical powers; and

(3) That its stipulations conform strictly to the provisions of articles 38, 41, 47, 53, 54, and 55 of the constitution.

It is decreed—

ART. I. That the forgoing convention is hereby approved and incorporated in the present law.

ART. II. The amount to be paid out of the treasury of the Republic to fulfill its obligations thereby created is hereby appropriated, and will be included in the budget of the present fiscal period.

Given at Bogotá this 24th day of February, 1888.

CARLOS CALDERON (R.),
President.
JOSÉ MARIA RUBIO (F.),
Vice-President.
ROBERTO DE NARVAEZ,
MANUEL BRIGARO,
Secretaries.

EXECUTIVE GOVERNMENT,
Bogotá, February 27, 1888.

Let it be published and executed.

RAFAEL NUÑEZ.

[L. S.]

(Countersigned:)

VICENTE RESTREPO,
Minister of Foreign Affairs.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 95.—Translation.—Extract from law 30, of 1888.]

ART. 34. A marriage contracted in conformity with the rights of the Catholic religion annuls ipso jure a purely civil marriage previously entered into with another person.

ART. 35. For purely civil effects the law recognizes the legitimacy of the children conceived previously to the annulment of the civil marriage, in accordance with the provisions of the last preceding article.

ART. 36. The man who, after having contracted a civil marriage, afterwards marries another woman according to the rites of the Catholic Church, is required to provide subsistence to the woman and his children by her until she marries canonically.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, if there is no Senator prepared to proceed with the debate, I should be glad to have a vote upon the bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator yield to me to ask for a change of reference?

Mr. QUAY. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

IMPORTATION OF BREEDING ANIMALS.

Mr. PROCTOR. The bill (S. 7291) regulating the importation of breeding animals was introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. HARRIS] and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I think it should properly go to the Committee on Finance. I ask that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMMONS in the chair). In the absence of objection, the change of reference requested will be made.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, while I have the floor I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that a final vote upon this bill and the amendments now pending or hereafter to be offered shall be taken on Saturday, the 21st day of February, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimons consent that the final vote on this bill and on pending amendments and on amendments then offered may be taken without further debate on Saturday, at 2 o'clock p. m., the 21st day of February.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, as the bill is before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in another form, I feel it to be my duty to object to the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. QUAY. I would be glad if the Senator from Vermont would inform me when the bill is likely to be reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is awaiting, I believe, the motion of one of its members, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

MASONIC MUTUAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

Mr. WELLINGTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the bill (S. 6525) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be laid temporarily aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill he has indicated.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I feel it my duty to object to unanimous consent for the passage of any bill while the statehood bill is before the Senate. I will not object at any time during the morning hour before the statehood bill is taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. QUAY. I trust my friend from Maryland will pardon me for objecting to the bill.

Mr. WELLINGTON. The bill will take only a moment. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is still the morning hour.

Mr. QUAY. I will let this one go.

Mr. WELLINGTON. The Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection and the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 2, line 14, after the word "association," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That upon all policies which shall be issued for a specified amount it shall be required to maintain a reinsurance reserve fund not less than that computed upon the American experience table of mortality at 4 per cent interest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALDEMAR POULSEN.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Patents.

I am directed by the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13307) for the relief of Valdemar Poulsen, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That letters patent of the United States granted to Valdemar Poulsen, No. 661619, dated November 13, 1900, shall not be held invalid by reason of the lapse of more than seven months between the time of filing of his application for a patent in Denmark and the filing of his application for said United States patent; nor shall the lapse of said period of more than seven months debar him from the grant of a patent upon that portion of his invention which was divided out from his original application in this country under the rules of practice then prevailing in the Patent Office, but the patent which may be granted on said divisional application shall expire at the same time with the said letters patent No. 661619.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Patents was to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no person shall be held liable for any infringement of the patents herein referred to which may have occurred prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor, which was submitted by me on yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report on the bill referred to by the Senator from Ohio. This report has been read in full to the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 10th instant approved and signed the act (S. 916) for the relief of Clara H. Fulford.

FRANCIS A. TRADEWELL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16161) granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Tradewell and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TALIAFERRO were appointed.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. The regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania demands the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. KEAN. I understand that the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] desires to proceed now, and I gladly yield to him.

Mr. DEPEW addressed the Senate. After having spoken a little more than two hours,

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from New York permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURTON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I will ask the Senator from New York if he has any objection to my making a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. DEPEW. I have none.

[Mr. DEPEW'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 12, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House bills of the following titles, with amendments of the Senate; which were respectively read, and, on motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, concurred in:

A bill (H. R. 15757) granting a pension to Frances C. Broggan;

A bill (H. R. 6332) granting a pension to Michael Conlon;

A bill (H. R. 14845) granting a pension to Margaret Snyder; and

A bill (H. R. 15400) granting a pension to Enos Turner.

FRANCIS A. TRADEWELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House, with amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 16161) granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Tradewell.

The amendments were read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I move that the House nonconcur with the amendment of the Senate and request a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, Mr. BROMWELL, and Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama as conferees on the part of the House.

PITTSBURG, CARNEGIE AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a privileged bill entitled "A bill (S. 7226) to authorize the Pittsburg, Carnegie and Western Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River."

The bill was read.

Mr. DALZELL. A House bill identical in terms with this Senate bill has been favorably reported and is on the Calendar. I ask that this bill be put on its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMPHIS, HELENA AND LOUISIANA RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a privileged bill entitled "A bill (S. 7159) authorizing the Memphis, Helena and Louisiana Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas."

The bill was read.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, this bill being identical in terms with a House bill now on our Calendar, reported favorably by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I ask that this bill be taken up and passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army. I present this report under the rule, for publication in the RECORD, together with the statement of the House conferees.

The SPEAKER. The report and accompanying statement will be published in the RECORD, under the rule.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommended to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2, page 3 of the bill, after the word "emergency," insert the word "or;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "or" of said amendment insert the word "of;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "and," in the second line of said amendment, insert the following: "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and after the word "brigadier-general," in line 3 of said amendment, insert the following: "and when the next vacancy occurs in the office of brigadier-general of the line, it shall not be filled, and thereafter the number of brigadier-generals of the line, exclusive of the chief of artillery, shall not exceed fourteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
WM. SULZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. M. COCKRELL,
J. V. QUARLES,
J. B. FORAKER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House on the Senate amendments on H. R. 15449, an act to increase the efficiency of the Army, make the following statement:

Amendment No. 1 of the Senate, striking out the exception as to the general officers serving with the line, is agreed to with an amendment. It puts the general officers on the same basis as all the other officers of the general staff, and makes it so that none of them can be redetailed without service with the line except in case of emergency or in time of war.

Amendment No. 2: The conferees agree to the Senate amendment by inserting the word "of" after the word "or;" so that it will read, "or of the Secretary of War under the direction of the President."

Amendment No. 3 makes the Chief of Artillery hereafter a brigadier-general. As agreed to in conference it provides that the number of brigadier-generals of the line do not increase, and reduces the number of brigadier-generals of the line, exclusive of Chief of Artillery, after a vacancy shall occur in the grade of brigadier-general to fourteen.

Amendment No. 4 is that provision of the bill as it passed the Senate embodied in section 6, and provided for the advance grade on retirement of certain officers who served during the civil war. The Senate recedes from its amendment on the ground that a provision is in the Army bill embodying the same principle.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
WM. SULZER,
Conferees on part of the House.

IMPORTATION OF BREEDING ANIMALS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I call up a privileged bill, House bill 16656, regulating the importation of breeding animals.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 473 of the act approved July 24, 1897, entitled "An act to provide revenue for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States" (30 U. S. Stat. L., p. 194), shall be so amended as to read as follows:

"473. Any animal imported specially for breeding purposes shall be admitted free, whether intended to be so used by the importer himself or for sale for such purpose: Provided, That no such animal shall be admitted free unless pure bred of a recognized breed, and duly registered in the books of record established for that breed: And provided further, That certificate of such record and of the pedigree of such animal shall be produced and submitted to the customs officer, duly authenticated by the proper custodian of such book of record, together with the affidavit of the owner, agent, or importer that such animal is the identical animal described in said certificate of record and pedigree: And provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury what are recognized breeds and pure-bred animals under the provisions of this paragraph. The Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe such additional regulations as may be required for the strict enforcement of this provision. Cattle, horses, sheep, or other domestic animals straying across the boundary line into any foreign country, or driven across such boundary line by the owner for temporary pasturage purposes only, together with their offspring, may be brought back to the United States within six months free of duty, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, this bill, I presume, will elicit no debate. The purpose of the bill is to change the existing law in regard to domestic animals imported for breeding purposes. The law as it now stands contains this provision:

Any animal imported specially for breeding purposes shall be admitted free.

The change which the bill proposes to make is by adding the words:

Whether intended to be so used by the importer himself or for sale for such purpose.

The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury both urge the passage of this bill. If it should become a law, it will simply place upon the statute books what, in the understanding of the people, has been the law until a recent decision made by a collector, which was upheld by one of the United States courts. The bill comes here by the unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means. I ask for a vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman to say that the Committee on Ways and Means has reported this bill favorably.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir; it is a unanimous report, as I have already stated.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GROSVENOR, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17202, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs of light-houses: For repairing, protecting, and improving light-houses and buildings; for improvements to grounds connected therewith; for establishing and repairing day marks and pier head and other beacon lights, including purchase of land for same; for illuminating apparatus and machinery to replace that already in use; construction of necessary outbuildings, at a cost not exceeding $200 at any one light station in any fiscal year; and for all other necessary incidental expenses relating to these various objects, including the pay of officers and crews of light-house tenders and of clerks and other employees in the offices of the light-house inspectors and light-house engineers and at light-house depots, $700,000.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I renew the request I made yesterday for unanimous consent to return to line 3 on page 3 of the bill, for the purpose of submitting an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would prefer not to go back until we finish the reading of the bill. At that time I shall not object.

Mr. PEARRE. Then I withdraw my request at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his request and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

International exchanges: For expenses of the system of international exchanges between the United States and foreign countries, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, including salaries or compensation of all necessary employees, and the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, $26,000.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It has been brought to my attention this morning by a gentleman connected with the Smithsonian Institution that in some remarks I made yesterday, criticising a report of the Director because it contained a large number of popular articles which I thought had no relation to the Institution and which the United States ought not to be at the expense of printing and distributing, I did an injustice to the Institution because I stated that those articles were all reprints from popular magazines. That statement was based on testimony before the committee given by a gentleman representing the Institution and was in strict accord with that testimony. I am informed now that the testimony was mistaken. I do not wish to do any injustice, and therefore ask permission to correct what I said by printing in the RECORD a very brief statement of exactly what proportion of those articles are original and what are copied, which was furnished me from the Institution. I ask unanimous consent that that statement may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the statement which he sends to the Clerk's desk. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1903.

Memorandum with regard to the sources of the papers published in the appendix to the Smithsonian report for the past five years.

Year.	Translations.	Transactions of learned societies; scientific journals.	Popular magazines.	Original contributions.
1897	6	20	5	6
1898	17	16	3	0
1899	7	18	4	1
1900	7	15	14	7
1901	5	22	9	15
Total	42	91	35	29

Of the very considerable number of articles from popular magazines in 1900, seven were from notable reviews of the century's science by the highest authorities, which appeared in the New York Sun and the New York Post, respectively, and which in this newspaper form would have been entirely inaccessible after the date of their publication to the ordinary reader, and would not have been preserved in any form to which they could have been referred.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHATTUC having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 7288. An act extending the time for making proof and payment for all lands taken under the desert-land laws by the members of the Colorado Cooperative Colony for a further period of three years;

S. 7201. An act to increase the limit of cost for the public building at Evanston, Wyo.;

S. 7100. An act granting an increase of pension to Maggie V. Holstein; and

S. 3622. An act to provide for the payment to the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvements relinquished to the United States for the use of the Nez Perce Indians.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5678) providing for record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 14164. An act for the relief of Charles W. Carr.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of specimens to supply deficiencies in the collections of the National Museum, $10,000.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, after end of line 20, insert "and for purchase of Herman Stricker's collection of butterflies and moths, together with the apparatus belonging thereto, and his library relating to the same, $25,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I would ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order until I can explain.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; I will reserve it.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment presented in line with and explained by the remarks made by me on the subject yesterday, which are printed in to-day's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is in the line of the recommendations made by the President in his last two messages. The President, and I think many members of the House and Senate, have an entirely different idea of what the National Museum should be from that of some of the members of the House Appropriations Committee, especially if their ideas are voiced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The President's idea is that this Institution should be made worthy of the great nation we are. Take, for examples, the British Museum or the museum of any large country in this world, and we find that large appropriations are made for the support of it and for the making of collections from which scientific knowledge is obtained. The little contributed by this Government during the last twenty years is as a drop in a bucket compared to that contributed by other countries. What are the results obtained from these scientific collections and the work of these institutions? Scientific knowledge has been increased more in the last twenty years than in all the ages which have preceded.

Now, I do not say that the purchase of the collection is a matter of supreme importance, but still I say it is important. I have no interest in the matter and care not one bit whether the House puts this amendment in the bill or not; but I do believe that it is my duty to call the matter to the attention of the House. It has been called to my attention probably because I represent the district within which this collection is now located; my assistance has been constantly asked by men connected with the National Museum. I have received, perhaps, a dozen communications on this subject and I feel that it is my duty to those people as well as to the people whom I represent to bring this matter before this body and ask its careful consideration.

That is all I care to do; but I do say that if we will stop to take into consideration the fact that in this particular department of science if this collection is bought it will make the collection in the hands of the National Government the greatest in this hemisphere, and one of the greatest in the world, that ought to be sufficient in itself to recommend the purchase of the collection at this time. And I further say that in my judgment this collection will be purchased by some institution in, perhaps, the coming year. This man desired that his collection should not be dismembered and scattered around and sold to different people, but that, if possible, it should go to the National Museum. That is one of the reasons why the owners of it now desire this to be presented, so that it could not be said in the future that this matter had not been fairly presented, and that the United States had not had a chance to purchase the collection in accordance with the wishes of the collector, who spent fifty years of his life in getting it together.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the views I expressed yesterday do not accord with those of my friend from Pennsylvania. I remember I mentioned this butterfly collection as one item most open to criticism, as illustrating the extravagance of the House. Now, I am quite in accord with what the gentleman says about the views of the President. I think our National Museum ought to be a great institution. It affords much interest and pleasure to visitors to Washington. I think we ought to have a new fine building for it, but I do not think we ought to buy every perfect collection of bugs or minerals which a scientist looks on as profitable, but which will not interest the great number of people in the United States.

I think the Museum ought to be popular in its character and not scientific, and I do think that $25,000 for a mere collection of butterflies is a preposterous expense. I think the name of the gentleman's constituent, Striker, illustrates very well the nature of this claim. Of course, the gentleman would be glad to strike the Government for his constituents. We undoubtedly, all of us, would be glad to do the same for our constituents, but I do not believe the House should spend $25,000 for this purpose.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I should like to interrogate the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has entirely misunderstood the name. The name is Stricker. Stricker is no nearer to striker than black is to white.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The name is not as pertinent as I thought, then.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. The name of the gentleman who owned this collection was Stricker; he is now dead, and his widow is the present owner. If the gentleman considers her a striker, I can assure him that he is entirely wrong. I also want to say that the gentleman is entirely wrong about another proposition recently advanced in his speech. He says we should keep the Museum as it is to-day and not increase or improve it. Those were the gentleman's words. He said we have a museum now and we have enough things there to amuse the public, and that is about all the good it is, but we should never increase it, we ought not to add to these collections. Such a proposition as that, I think, is ridiculous to any sane man.

If that is to be the policy of this Government you had better sell out your museum, shut it up, and stop contributing money to it each year. We must adopt some policy, either narrow or broad, in a matter of this kind. Where scientific knowledge is to be gained it stands to reason that private parties have not money enough and that educational institutions have not money enough to get all this expensive matter together, and make expensive experiments. It is a function of the Government, recognized by this Government and recognized by every government in the world, and I think if the gentleman who comes from Massachusetts, a State that is supposed to be enlightened and that usually, I think, is enlightened, will just consider this matter, and if he will talk about it with men of science, he will change his views radically. I hope he will do it soon.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order against it?

Mr. CANNON. I reserved the point of order, and I think I ought to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is clearly in violation of paragraph 2 of Rule XXI. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent now to return to line 3, page 3, for the purpose of submitting an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to return to line 3, page 3, for the purpose of submitting an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman on the full committee and on the subcommittee [Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts] is familiar with this matter, and he has to go away after to-day, so I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 3, page 3, after the word "dollars," the following:
"For the erection of an addition to the quarters occupied by the subtreasury at Baltimore, Md., $5,000."

Mr. CANNON. I do not know, coming in that shape, but that it is subject to a point of order. I will say I will reserve it, and listen.

Mr. PEARRE. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is the part of the bill at which it ought to be offered, but as the gentleman reserves the point of order, that matter can be determined later. I trust the point of order will not be pressed if it be well taken.

This is a matter of great importance to the subtreasury at Baltimore city. It has been discovered recently that the quarters of the subtreasury are entirely inadequate, and the attention of Congress has been called to the matter by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shaw, in a communication to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I desire to send to the desk and have read, not only that communication, but one upon the same subject from the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, Hon. James K. Taylor, which appear in the document which I send to the desk now.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 12, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the favorable consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect, of the 10th instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $5,000 to erect an addition to the quarters occupied by the subtreasury at Baltimore, Md., in the space between the present old court-house and the post-office and court-house building, and for changes in connection therewith.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, January 10, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that the quarters occupied by the assistant treasurer of the United States at Baltimore, Md., are overcrowded and are entirely inadequate for the proper transaction of the public business.

While the subtreasury at Baltimore will be transferred to the new custom-house building, it is not probable that the transfer can be made within three or four years, and in the meantime some measure of relief should be afforded the officials in this office, either by renting additional quarters or by erecting a temporary addition to the present quarters, and it is believed that the most economical and the safest plan is to erect, in the space between the present old court-house and the United States post-office and court-house building, a temporary, plain, substantial, brick addition, to connect with the present quarters of the subtreasury, to accommodate the offices of the assistant treasurer and the bookkeepers. In this way the present cash room will be relieved, and the floor area, now occupied by the bookkeepers, will be available for the work of the cash room.

The estimated cost of the addition and necessary changes in connection therewith is $5,000, and as there is no appropriation available for carrying out this work, I respectfully recommend that this matter be brought to the attention of Congress, with the recommendation that an appropriation of $5,000 be made to erect an addition to the quarters occupied by the subtreasury at Baltimore, Md., in the space between the present old court-house and the post-office and court-house building, and for changes in connection with the same.

Respectfully,

J. K. TAYLOR,
Supervising Architect.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. PEARRE. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the communication and recommendation from the Secretary of the Treasury and the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. I also desire to submit and have read a communication from the former subtreasurer.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXHIBIT B.

NOVEMBER 1, 1900.

Hon. LYMAN J. GAGE,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to ask your attention to the necessities of this office in the temporary quarters which have been assigned them in the old United States court-house in this city.

When the representatives of the Supervising Architect's Office first came to examine into the requirements of the various departments, he was advised that these quarters were insufficient in space, deficient in light, and entirely without ventilation. He nevertheless saw fit to recommend them, and preparations are in progress to construct a large vault there for the use of this office from material taken from the vault formerly used in the custom-house.

The floor space appropriated to the cash room is so contracted that the large and important business of the office will have to be transacted under great disadvantage; but there is not enough wall space by some 40 feet to accommodate the large filing and blank cases which are constantly in use. To remedy this, as the best that could be done under the circumstances, I asked for another small room in the building, which, though inconvenient of access, would at least afford shelter for the filing cases and cases of blanks, together with accumulated books, vouchers, etc.

The custodian of the building, who has allotted the space to the different officials of the Government service and who previously assigned to my use the room referred to, is so pressed to accommodate them all that he now informs me he will not be able to let me have it.

I deem it wise, therefore, to advise you thus early that such provision as has been made is entirely inadequate for the needs of this office, and to ask for such action on your part as shall secure for me suitable space for the proper conduct of the business under my charge.

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES M. SLOAN.
Assistant Treasurer United States.

Mr. PEARRE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit two letters from the present subtreasurer of the United States in Baltimore upon the same subject, and ask that they be read at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

Mr. PEARRE. That is all, until these can be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF ASSISTANT TREASURER, SUBTREASURY SERVICE,
Baltimore, Md., January 31, 1903.

Hon. GEORGE A. PEARRE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to inclose House Document No. 272, being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress, transmitting the report of the Supervising Architect as to the investigation of the condition of the quarters of the United States subtreasury at Baltimore. The move to secure more working space for this office is made by the Department, as this document shows, and it is positively necessary for the maintaining of the heretofore high standards of this office as to efficiency. The small force which we have have not adequate room in which to safely and with convenience perform their duties. If the force should be increased, which its pressing needs demand at once, then the inconvenience of our cramped quarters would be proportionately increased.

In 1871 the business of this office amounted, in round numbers, to about thirty millions; in 1901 it amounted to one hundred and twenty millions, and yet the appropriation by Congress for clerical force to handle this business was $140 less than it was in 1871. Men here have no holidays; they haven't time to get sick; when they do break down under the strain those who continue at work have to labor just so much harder. Public business is continually being held back, and sometimes held up, when it should be dispatched, and the financial interests of this city are hampered exceedingly because of our unavoidable condition.

The Treasury Department has induced the Finance Committee of the Senate to add three clerks to the appropriation for the next fiscal year, in order to relieve the situation in part; hence the increased working space (so necessary with our present force) becomes essential when we get the additional clerks.

In the four years which I will administer here I am anxious to keep the standard of excellence as high as, if not higher than, it has ever been during any previous period. I want to be able to so conduct the affairs here that my party, so generous to me, may benefit by the good impression made on the business community by this office during my incumbency. Therefore, with a high sense of my individual responsibilities, and also a burning desire to excel in my administration (more for my party's sake than my own), I appeal to you to exercise your good offices with Appropriations Committee, before which this matter is pending, feeling certain that I shall have your cordial and hearty support. It is the desire of the Department to have this added to the sundry civil bill, and if the delegation will all work together to that end, as I am sure they will, it will undoubtedly be accomplished. Thanking you in advance, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

A. LINCOLN DRYDEN,
Assistant Treasurer, United States.

SUBTREASURY SERVICE, OFFICE OF ASSISTANT TREASURER,
Baltimore, Md., February 3, 1903.

Hon. GEORGE A. PEARRE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLONEL: Your favor of the 3d instant is at hand, and after noting carefully the contents I make haste to reply. Now, I am also sorry that I did not write you sooner about the addition which ought to be made to the Baltimore subtreasury. I really did not desire to trouble you or the other members of the delegation, whose districts do not include any of the city of Baltimore, thinking that perhaps the city members of the delegation might be able to take care of the matter alone, as the situation affects city interests to the greatest extent. I thank you very much for the kindly interest that you manifest by so promptly giving me the present status of our case and the facts on which the Appropriation Committee seem to base their opposition. I am indeed sorry that the distinguished member of the committee from Massachusetts has seen fit to underestimate our serious need for more working space in this office, and that he has so quickly jumped at the conclusion that we can go along all right until this office shall be transferred to new quarters in the new custom-house building in course of construction.

I am amazed by the time stated by Mr. GILLETT in which, as you quote in your letter, he expects the custom-house to be completed, namely, two years; and hence our new quarters will be ready, according to him, in that space of time. By referring to House Document 272 (copy of which I send (Exhibit A) you with this letter), in the letter of the Supervising Architect transmitted to Congress by the Secretary on January 13, 1903, you will find that officer calling attention to the "entirely inadequate quarters" now occupied by the subtreasury at Baltimore, and also that the Supervising Architect states therein that the new custom-house building will not be ready for occupancy "within three or four years," and I may add that information comes to me from knowing ones here that the said building will not be ready to throw open for public business for five or six years.

Mr. GILLETT, whom you quote, seems to agree with the Supervising Architect as to the needs of this office, for on the morning when he made his hurried call here he stated that we needed both additional space and force; but as to the time in which we shall be able to leave these inconvenient and, I may say, dangerous quarters and remove to the commodious one to be provided in the new building the estimate of the distinguished member of the committee, who walked into our office for a few minutes, differs materially from that of the Supervising Architect, who has made through his special representative a thorough and exact examination of our working space. The fact of the business is, those who know most about this matter predicted when this office was removed from the old custom-house to this building all the unsatisfactory things which we are now experiencing. My predecessor, ex-Assistant Treasurer Sloan, advised by the cashier, Mr. L. H. Nice (who has been with the office since its establishment in 1870), not only disagreed with the custodian of the old custom-house as well as the custodian of this building, but feeling the responsibilities of his position and knowing the requirements of this service, and well aware of the limited working space, filed his protest with the Secretary of the Treasury before the removal of the vaults was made. I beg to inclose copy of the letter of my predecessor to the Secretary. (Exhibit B.)

All that was feared by my predecessor before coming to these quarters has come to pass. This subtreasury has been in its present location since February, 1900, and the inadequate space, deficient light, and the lack of good ventilation are very apparent; and the latter certainly seems to have affected the health of every man in the office. To be called upon, as the force in this office is daily and has been for two or three years, to work over hours, sometimes into the night, to finish the business of this office accepted during the day, even if we were in comfortable quarters, with sufficient air and light, would be to require of faithful, expert men what is not, in my judgment, and never was, intended by a great and rich Government. But to require these extra duties and extra hours in quarters such as we endure here is to force involuntary service from those who may not be able, in their smothered indignation because of environments, to resign their positions.

I have taken the oath and am bonded to administer this office, and I am endeavoring to discharge the duties that devolve upon me, but I am frank to say that I have never been, in all my short experience, in such an embarrassing position, where I am compelled to place upon the altar of sacrifice the health and happiness of faithful and loyal officials to meet the demands of the public business, which is always seriously retarded.

The suggestion of the chairman of the Appropriation Committee that the office of the assistant treasurer be surrendered for the general work of the officials here and that the assistant treasurer take an office in another portion of the building or in a room outside of this building is entirely impracticable. In the first place, I am informed to-day by the custodian of the building that there is no other room available for this service. In the second place, if the assistant treasurer takes a room outside this building it would require an additional messenger's service and would break up that close contact with business of the subtreasury, which would be the height of unwisdom, according to all those who understand the subject.

I am sorry to have troubled you with this long communication, but you requested me to give you my views of the matter in the new light shed upon it by the chairman of the Appropriation Committee and Mr. GILLETT. It may not seem quite the proper thing for me to exhibit such persistence in further urging these necessities, but I would not be faithful to the high trust reposed in me, nor true to the great business interests that demand promptness and efficiency from this office, nor considerate of the efficient force under my charge here, did I not (although with little hope now of being heard) lift my voice for better conditions and to try to secure such relief as any intelligent investigation and examination would suggest and assure. I am anxious only to have present those necessary conditions which will make possible the efficient dispatch of all business presented to us for acceptance and thereby impress the community, who will be well served.

I am deeply anxious to be spared from the undesirable and unfortunate position which I will certainly be obliged to assume unless Congress comes to our relief, where the subtreasury will refuse to receive from the banks of Baltimore more than can be handled within the hours and in the manner now prescribed by the Department.

Feeling sure of your cordial cooperation in the endeavor to remedy our unpleasant situation, and knowing that whatever steps it may be wise to take you will take, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

A. LINCOLN DRYDEN,
Assistant Treasurer United States.

Mr. PEARRE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can add anything to that which has been so well said by the public officials of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and the two subtreasurers of Baltimore, the former and the present. It is very evident—and I believe my brother will admit—that more room is required there, and that they must have it. The only question as existing between the gentleman and myself on this point is whether or not they will be able to get into the new custom-house building in Baltimore within a couple of years, or four or five years. I appeal to the experience of the House and of every man to justify the statement that in the construction of large buildings the estimates of the architect and the contractors themselves are almost always faulty, and that being the case, that the time for the completion of this building will be very much greater than anticipated. Therefore I respectfully submit that this appropriation, which is a small one, should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on the point of order, or make the point?

Mr. CANNON. I think it is subject to a point of order. I have heard the letters read, and with all due respect to the valuable officer who displays great ability in writing an urgent letter in regard to that matter, it is subject to the point of order. I have already made similar ones and expect to have to make many similar ones before I get through with the bill. I will have to insist on the point of order.

Mr. PEARRE. I would suggest that the point of order is not well taken. Upon what ground is the point of order made? This is a public work already being in progress, and it is for the continuance of the work in that place.

Mr. CANNON. This is the fact about it: There is already a custom-house being constructed, which will be completed in three or four years—a great building. This is an old building, which is occupied temporarily. This is for an addition to that building. If you can build one at $5,000, you can build one at $5,000,000. I think it comes within the rule.

Mr. PEARRE. That is what you did at the Military Academy and what you did at the Naval Academy.

Mr. CANNON. No; I did not.

Mr. PEARRE. That was what was done.

Mr. CANNON. That is where there was a legislative provision.

Mr. PEARRE. I am so in the habit of attributing things to the gentleman that I perhaps ought not to have attributed that to him.

Mr. CANNON. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, at end of line 15, insert:

"For the purpose of making an investigation of the streams flowing from the Big Horn Mountains in northern Wyoming, with a view of determining the best location in the said region for the establishment of a fish hatchery, $1,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order. There are several very beautiful mountain streams flowing from the Big Horn Mountains in Wyoming. There are several places suitable for the erection of fish hatcheries there. We have no fish hatchery in Wyoming, and we have more streams suitable for trout and other game fish than any of the States of the Northwest. We simply ask that an investigation be made of certain streams with a view of determining whether it is advisable to appropriate for and establish a fish hatchery in that region. Should the report indicate that there is not a suitable location, or that there is no necessity for the erection of such a hatchery in that vicinity, none would be erected. If the report is favorable, on the other hand, the erection of a fish hatchery would depend upon the future action of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I think if it was a separate legislative proposition my desire to yield to the judgment of the gentleman from Wyoming is such that I suspect I should vote for the proposition; but it is clearly not in order on a general appropriation bill, and I shall have to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LACEY). The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous objects, Treasury Department.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT, LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

For the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, installation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles, animals, and materials belonging to or used by the agricultural colleges and experiment stations, hereinafter referred to, as the Government board created by act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, as amended by act of June 28, 1902, may decide to exhibit as a part of the Government exhibit to show the progress of education and experimentation in agriculture, in mechanic arts, and animal husbandry at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, to be held under authority of said act, of the colleges of agriculture and mechanic arts and agricultural experiment stations receiving the benefits of the acts of Congress of July 2, 1862, March 2, 1887, and August 30, 1890, $100,000, to be immediately available; which sum shall be expended for that purpose only, and for the authority of said Government board: Provided, That the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Company, at it its own cost and expense, shall furnish to said Government board adequate and suitable space in an appropriate building or buildings for the installation of said exhibit and its exhibition during the continuance of said exposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this matter has been carefully considered by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment that the gentleman's committee passed and sent to our committee?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What is the amount carried?

Mr. TAWNEY. One hundred thousand dollars. It proposes an appropriation of $100,000 to defray the expenses of an exhibit by the agricultural colleges to be made in connection with the Government exhibit, including the work these colleges are doing in the matter of animal husbandry, and it will be made under the direction and control of the Government board appointed under authority of the act of March 3, 1901. The Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions has considered the matter carefully, after hearing representatives of the Agricultural Department and others interested, and the committee authorized me, as its chairman, to report the same to the Committee on Appropriations, and I now offer it with the approval of that committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am a member of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, of which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is chairman. I desire to say, representing the minority of that committee, that I was present at the hearing, and we found that it is necessary in order to provide for the exhibition of the progress of the agricultural colleges at this exposition, and of the work that has been done in those colleges, to provide the means for that purpose. The $800,000 that has been provided for the Government exhibit has been so apportioned out that this particular exhibit could not be shown unless this additional appropriation which is contained in the amendment should be made. For myself I am in favor of it, and think the appropriation ought to be made now. I make this statement that the gentlemen on this side may understand that the matter has been thoroughly investigated by the committee, and that there is no reason why the amendment should not be adopted.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to follow the amendment just adopted.

Insert at end of line 2, page 62:

"DISTRICT OF ALASKA EXHIBIT.

"To enable the inhabitants of the district of Alaska to provide and maintain an appropriate and creditable exhibit of the products and resources of that district at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in the city of St. Louis, Mo., in 1904, and to erect and maintain on the site of said exposition a suitable building to be used for the purpose of exhibiting the products and resources of said district, the sum of $50,000, to be subject to the order of the Secretary of the Interior, who is hereby authorized to expend the same in such manner as in his judgment will best promote the objects for which said sum is appropriated, in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by him."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, this appropriation contemplates merely the erection of a building for the Alaskan exhibit and the maintenance of the exhibit while at the St. Louis Fair. The people of Alaska propose themselves to bear the expense of collecting the exhibit and transporting the same to St. Louis and the return of the same. This appropriation is recommended, too, by the Secretary of the Interior, and has also been considered by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, which committee has instructed me to present the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. This proposed appropriation is for $12,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; fifty thousand for the building and the care of the exhibit. The people of Alaska themselves are to pay all the expenses incident to the collection and transportation of the exhibit.

Mr. CANNON. This, then, is for the building only?

Mr. TAWNEY. For the building and for the care of the exhibit.

Mr. CANNON. Who pays the balance of the expense?

Mr. TAWNEY. The people of Alaska. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which I will not stop to read, in which he states that it is the purpose of the people of Alaska to defray the expense of collecting and transporting the exhibit, and that all that is asked of Congress is an appropriation for the erection of a building in which to house and care for the exhibit while it is in St. Louis. The great expense of this exhibit will be in its collection, and this work the people of Alaska propose to do without Government aid.

I will say further that the reason Alaska is obliged to come to Congress for the purpose of securing an appropriation of this kind is that, as we all know, they have no legislative body, no Territorial government, and can not themselves make any public appropriation. Since the acquisition of Alaska that Territory has paid into the Treasury of the United States more than $9,000,000.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman might go farther and say that the money raised by the people of Alaska goes into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have just stated that the revenue derived by the General Government from Alaska aggregates something over $9,000,000. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word. I suppose this amendment will be adopted. I am not inclined to vote against it. Sometimes I have seen good cases spoiled in court by being sustained by insufficient argument. I do not say that this is that particular case. I do not, however, put my support of this proposition upon the ground that the money collected in Alaska goes into the Treasury. The amendment is not defensible at all from that standpoint.

Nine million dollars, my friend says, is the amount which Alaska has paid into the Treasury of the United States. Now, Alaska was acquired, I believe, in the late sixties.

Mr. DALZELL. Eighteen hundred and sixty-seven.

Mr. CANNON. I am glad that it was acquired; I feel kindly toward that Territory and its people. I am glad of all that has been accomplished there, and hope much more will be accomplished. No government except such as we have had up there could have been, for the time being, possible. Nobody has stopped to ask how much has been expended by the Government while the nine millions have been coming in; and I do not care very much as to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. The average has been about $150,000 a year.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, much more than that.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is my information from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Much more than that. There are lots of things that are not counted. Why, sir, this bill makes an appropriation, for instance, for extending the light-house service, carrying, I believe, $200,000 or $300,000; such appropriations have been carried for several years, and they ought to be carried. Then, considerable revenue has been gotten from the seal business; but where we have gotten a cent, it has cost us a dollar. However, I am not objecting. I am willing that this exhibit be made, but I do not put it on the ground of the Alaskan revenues going into the Treasury.

Now, touching this exposition, I guess it is to be a great exposition. I hope so. It has $5,000,000 to start on. With the amendments that are to be adopted here there will be another million, making six million. Then, when we run through the account for rent and other expenses, it is reasonable to assume that such expenses will not fall short of another million dollars. And we can stand it. "In for a penny, in for a pound." I do not want to scold about this matter. But I hope that this is the last exposition for half a century to be held at the expense, in whole or in part, of the public Treasury.

The gentlemen of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions have investigated this subject and moved this amendment. They had jurisdiction, and I accept their investigation and recommendation as proper so far as I am concerned. The sundry civil bill, which must pass, is, as we know, a carry-all; and it will doubtless carry this when it passes.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman from Illinois kindly tell us what Alaska has cost us, exclusive of the purchase money?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I could not do that without going into very great detail. I should have to take into consideration the Revenue-Cutter Service, the Marine-Hospital Service, the Army, and the Navy, and kindred services, and the diplomacy of the country, the settlement of international questions, the determination as to whether there was a closed sea up there inside of that wonderful body of islands. First and last, I do not know what that Territory has cost. I think it is amply worth all it has cost.

Mr. TAWNEY. Could the gentleman state how much the citizens of the United States have gotten out of Alaska as a result of our purchase and the opportunity thereby afforded them?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, not much, up to this point. Individuals, in my judgment——

Mr. TAWNEY. I am talking about individuals.

Mr. CANNON. The individual citizen, in my judgment, has paid out possibly as much money—I would guess it in that way—in the aggregate as those who have saved something. Still that is always the case in a new country. In time I think it will grow to be valuable, and it ought to be treated well.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, just one word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois. The appropriation is not asked upon the ground of revenue paid into the Treasury of the United States from the Territory of Alaska. There is no question but that this Territory has proved a valuable acquisition to the territory of the United States. Nor can it be denied that the resources and products of that Territory are little known to the people of the United States or to the people of the world. I do not believe that there is a State or Territory capable of making a more creditable, more attractive, or a more interesting exhibit than the Territory of Alaska. That is one ground upon which the appropriation is asked. It is also asked on the further ground that at this exposition all the States and Territories will be represented by very large exhibits, and the people of the district of Alaska have no means of appropriating money or obtaining any official recognition at this great exposition except through Congress. If they had they would do as Arizona has done, as New Mexico and Oklahoma have done—make their own appropriation from their own treasury for their exhibit. Having no means of obtaining authority for the exhibit or the appropriation, they naturally come to Congress, which has exclusive jurisdiction. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have one more amendment, which I offer to follow the amendment just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDIAN TERRITORY EXHIBIT.

To enable the inhabitants of the Indian Territory to provide and maintain an appropriate and creditable exhibit of the products and resources of that Territory at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in the city of St. Louis, Mo., in 1904, and to erect and maintain on the site of said exposition a suitable building to be used in exhibiting the products and resources of said Territory, the sum of $25,000, provided that the inhabitants of said Territory shall contribute and pay into the Treasury of the United States a like sum for that purpose; the whole, to wit, $50,000, to be subject to the order of the Secretary of the Interior, who is hereby authorized to expend the same in such manner as in his judgment will best promote the object for which the same is made available under this act, and in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed by him: Provided, That if the inhabitants of said Territory fail to so contribute and pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $25,000 on or before the 1st day of June, 1903, the sum hereby appropriated shall be turned back into the Treasury of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if there is any request made for this appropriation by the people of the Indian Territory.

Mr. TAWNEY. The people of the Indian Territory have requested this appropriation. The Secretary of the Interior has recommended it, and the people are so anxious to make an exhibit that they agree to pay into the Treasury of the United States, $25,000, an amount equal to the amount appropriated by this amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who have agreed to that?

Mr. TAWNEY. The people of the Indian Territory.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; but what particular society or corporation or meeting?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know what particular person or society. I am advised by the Secretary of the Interior that responsible parties have made this offer. In the event that this amount is not paid into the Treasury by the 1st of June next, then this appropriation of $25,000 will lapse and they get nothing at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard just a moment. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. TAWNEY. And I would say further that the same reason for the people of the Indian Territory coming to Congress and asking this appropriation exists in this case as in the case of Alaska.

Mr. SHATTUC rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHATTUC. How about an appropriation for Guam? [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. None has been requested. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, if he desires to ask a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am through asking questions.

Mr. Chairman, the people of the Indian Territory, the gentleman from Minnesota says, are on all fours as to conditions and surroundings with Alaska. I take it that that is what he means.

Mr. TAWNEY. With respect to legislation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; and we have been robbing them of their right to be represented here, to have a representative in this House, ever since we have had hold of them, all of which I protested against, and do now. They ought to have somebody here to be able to answer these questions that have been asked. We do know of conditions in the Indian Territory, because near us, but practically little of Alaska, and presume on her condition and legislate accordingly. Now, the gentleman says his resolution provides that if we appropriate this the "people" of the Indian Territory are to appropriate something.

In other words, we are trading with "we the people of the Indian Territory," an unorganized country, with no power to act save by petition, and that these people have not done in this matter. There is no society or organization, I take it, from what the gentleman says, that has requested this. There is no jury, there is no court. The governor, if they have one, has not asked for it; the preachers have not asked for it; the Indians have not asked for it; those who ask for statehood have not asked for it. Yet, Mr. Chairman, we are going along here, just throwing away the people's money like so much rotten corn—a large sum for Alaska; $3,000,000 to go to the Philippine Islands to "build railroads and government wagon roads" that we do not build for ourselves in our own country. And now we are going to throw a lot of "chicken feed" out into the Indian Territory and say to them, "If you will give something back to the United States you may have this." "You," an unorganized people. It looks to me as if we were going wild over this matter of throwing away the people's money, scattering it around as though sand from the sea, instead of taking this hard-earned money, gathered from the backs of the people of our country, if we take it at all, and making a substantial, lasting, useful improvement instead of expending it for a "show"—a fleeting joy, soon seen, then gone forever. I have objected to such appropriations, and do now; and I opposed the Alaska item.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 55, noes 4.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting Treasury notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other securities of the United States and of foreign governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign governments, and other felonies committed against the laws of the United States relating to the pay and bounty laws, including $2,000 to make the necessary investigation of claims for reimbursement of expenses incident to the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners under section 4718 of the Revised Statutes, and for no other purpose whatever, $125,000: Provided, That no part of this amount be used in defraying the expenses of any person subpœnaed by the United States courts to attend any trial before a United States court or preliminary examination before any United States commissioner, which expenses shall be paid from the appropriation for "Fees of witnesses, United States courts:" Provided further, That the investigation of claims for the reimbursement of expenses of the last sickness and burial of deceased pensioners shall be at the instance and under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and no part of any accrued pension shall hereafter be used to reimburse any State, county, or municipal corporation for expenses incurred by such State, county, or municipal corporation under State law for expenses of the last sickness or burial of a deceased pensioner.

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the proviso at the bottom of page 68, in the twenty-fifth line, is not new law?

Mr. CANNON. No; that is in the current law.

Mr. MADDOX. No change in that?

Mr. CANNON. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaskan seal fisheries: For salaries and traveling expenses of agents at seal fisheries in Alaska, as follows: For one agent, $3,650; one assistant agent, $2,920; two assistant agents, at $2,190 each; necessary traveling expenses of agents actually incurred in going to and returning from Alaska, not to exceed $500 each per annum; in all, $12,950.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois who are these agents and for whom do they work? It says "traveling expenses of agents at seal fisheries in Alaska."

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that the agents are provided for by law, officers of the United States, paid by the United States; but he asks me a very hard question when he asks for whom they are working. In theory they are working for the United States, and I must presume that they are so doing, for the best interests of the United States. There have been intimations from time to time that possibly they were working for the interests of the contractors.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I knew that if there was anyone this side of Alaska who knew whom these gentlemen were working for it was the distinguished gentleman from Illinois. The bill does not state, and I do not think the report states, and I wanted to find out whether they were working for the Government as officials or whether they were working for some private firm.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not know. I never was in Alaska. I do not know who the agents are. Presumably they are performing their duties.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell me what they do?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, they go up there on the Pribilof Islands where the seals come in at a certain season of the year, following their instincts, roaming around for pleasure and the perpetuation of the species, and so on, and when they come in there the people who have the contract are there for the purpose of killing certain designated seals. I think the killing applies to the males. This animal is polygamous in his habits. You can kill off a certain quantity of males of certain ages without endangering the perpetuity of the species. The skins are valuable, as we all know, and these agents are there, and their duty is to see that no seals are killed except those that may be killed under the contract.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, if that is true, it would seem that the agents are working for the Government to protect the seals.

Mr. CANNON. Presumably; it is their duty to work for the Government.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The contention has been made that the parties engaged in protecting the salmon fisheries have been so inadequately supplied with funds that they have been compelled to enjoy the hospitality of those engaged in the business, and thus have not been able to point out the violations of the law, because it is a difficult thing for one enjoying the hospitalities of another to call attention to any infraction of the law on the part of his host. Now, I want to ask the gentleman if the committee has investigated the propriety of furnishing additional funds for those men, so that they could travel independently and look after the protection of the fisheries in Alaska?

Mr. CANNON. They do not have to accept hospitalities. I do not know whether they do or not, but there is no necessity for their doing so. I will state that, with a few natives, and no great number of white people, and the fact that a few people are living in comparative solitude, with the absence of a population to make civilization, the absence of criticism, no eye to watch in this great space except the eye of the Almighty, I should think very likely that a man if he was at all inclined to lapse from vigilance might conclude up there, in the regions of ice, snow, and storm, that the Almighty was watching the warmer places on earth, and that they might be remiss. A man of high integrity would perform his duty. Whether all the officials have performed their duties under these conditions I do not know. There is no necessity or any propriety in any official of the Government accepting the hospitalities of anybody. The appropriations are sufficient.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in connection with what has just been said, I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and in his presence to the members of the committee and to the country what is known by many and should be known by all, and that is, that if the gentleman from Illinois had not objected last session to my bill "to encourage salmon culture in Alaska and for the protection of persons engaged in the production thereof," it would be unnecessary for him at this time to appropriate this money, because the people in Alaska engaged in this industry would have attended to the matter themselves. If that bill introduced by me had become a law, this money would have been saved this year and all the years to come. It is quite a large sum, and it will grow larger each year. My bill is intended to stop this drain on the Treasury.

Now, sir, let me read this bill, so that we will know exactly what it does.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person or persons who heretofore or hereafter may establish and maintain a hatchery for the artificial production of salmon in the district of Alaska shall be entitled to the exclusive right of all fish that such hatchery may produce in excess of the normal product of such stream for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of the stream upon which such hatchery may be located.

SEC. 2. That when the average normal product of any stream on which a hatchery may be maintained shall have been taken within 1 mile of the mouth of said stream in any one year by any party or parties, then the remaining fish produced by said hatchery shall be the property of the owner or owners of said hatchery for a distance of 1 mile in all directions in tide water from the mouth of said hatchery stream, and for a further distance of 4 miles in all directions in tide water it shall be unlawful for any party or parties to take fish of the kind propagated by the hatchery for whose protection this law is enacted.

SEC. 3. That in case other streams producing salmon of the same kind as those produced by the hatchery so protected shall intervene within a distance of 5 miles, then the normal product of such intervening stream shall be included in and added to the normal product of such hatchery stream subject to the same conditions as are provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That the provisions and immunities of this act shall apply to barren streams and lakes that shall have been stocked with fish from artificial hatcheries.

SEC. 5. That in case two or more persons shall maintain hatcheries on the same stream, or stock barren lakes or streams, such persons shall be entitled to their proportionate number of adult fish so produced, and each party shall file a sworn statement of his or their output of young fry with the nearest United States commissioner each year.

SEC. 6. That native Indians may at all times take sufficient fish for food or for drying for winter use as food for themselves or families, and fishing with the rod shall be open and free for all persons.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to grant leases in accordance with the foregoing sections of this act, for a period not to exceed twenty years from the time the product of their hatcheries shall return, to all persons producing satisfactory proof of having maintained hatcheries on any of the streams of Alaska not producing, in a normal state, more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated by said hatchery; such lease subject to renewal at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That before any such lease shall be granted the party or parties making application therefor shall accompany such application with proof sufficient to establish the normal product of such stream; and no person shall be entitled to more than one hatchery lease or the privilege of stocking more than three barren lakes or streams and being protected in the product thereof. Corporations owning and operating canneries shall be entitled to one hatchery franchise for each cannery so operated, and no more. All hatcheries that may have been started and maintained on streams producing more than 10,000 salmon of the kind propagated prior to the passage of this act shall be entitled to all immunities of hatcheries established on streams producing not more than 10,000, as provided in this section.

SEC. 8. That all rights and privileges granted by this bill are subject to the supervision and regulation and repeal by Congress.

This bill was introduced by me January 23, 1902, and unanimously reported by the committee on May 16, 1902. It would have passed this House long ago if it were not for the opposition of my friend from Illinois. I can not account for his antagonism to this bill. It is a worthy bill. The people in Alaska want it, and there is no good reason why it should not pass.

The purpose of the bill is to maintain and increase the normal product of salmon in Alaska. The destruction of the salmon fishery on the Atlantic coast demonstrates beyond any question that some steps are necessary to be taken to protect and preserve this great and valuable source of food supply on the Pacific coast, or it will ultimately meet the same fate.

The provisions of the bill will give the necessary protection and encouragement to private citizens to invest their capital and labor in the work of propagating young salmon, which are absolutely needed to replenish and increase the natural supply, which is now being steadily exhausted, and which unless some such action is taken by the Government will be finally exterminated. This law will not only keep up the present supply, but will enormously increase the normal supply.

The proposed law simply gives to parties a legal right to property they create from the wastes of nature at their own cost and without taking anything of value from the public domain. If they produce ten where nature produced but one, they surely should have the right to the increase. They also enrich the waters outside the protected zone by thousands of fish that will be public property.

No title in fee simple is asked, merely a lease that need not be renewed unless its continuation should seem just and proper.

The bill also provides that these leases shall be subject to repeal by Congress at any time, in case the public interests may demand.

No person or corporation will have a monopoly of any stream. All have equal rights, as provided in section 5. And no individual can have more than one franchise, or corporation more than one for each cannery actually operated. The rights of Indians are more than protected, as they have free access for food purposes to the artificial product, and in common with others to the normal product. Fishing with hook and line is free to all.

Limiting hatchery franchises to small producing streams will prevent clashing of interests, as streams producing 10,000 or less of the valuable redfish are considered of small value and are seldom fished by more than one party, while the large producers, running as high as 2,500,000, are fished by several persons and corporations. Those who have already maintained hatcheries on streams producing large numbers should be protected, in all fairness.

There are thousands of streams and lakes that are barren because of falls near tide water which no fish can pass on the upward passage. By stocking these streams with young fry, you reclaim a desert; yet this can be accomplished, and the commercial results of which would be enormous; to accomplish this, however, entails a considerable expense.

No policy will advance the settlement of Alaska more or as much as that provided for in this bill. Every industrious fisherman can, and many will, embark in salmon culture, and in connection with his hatchery will develop what there may be of agricultural resources that will never be utilized except in connection with some auxiliary industry. Nearly all the lands suitable for agricultural purposes are situated at the mouths of streams.

The 1 mile reserved to the propagator in many cases would not be sufficient protection, but a further reserve of 4 miles, as set forth in section 2 of the bill, from which all parties are excluded from taking fish of the kind propagated, will leave those which might be in transit free to pass on to their native streams unhindered, and if they are the product of the protected hatcheries they will go there also unhindered.

Fishing for all kinds of salmon, of a different species from those propagated, as well as other species of fish, is free and open to all.

Col. H. M. Kutchin, special agent of the Treasury Department for the Alaska salmon fisheries, says regarding this measure:

The bill is fair and equitable. I think that any man who is disposed to put in his time and money and effort, as Mr. Callbreath and others have, should be protected, and I think this bill does it fairly and well, and that it does not encroach upon the rights of anybody. It does not give anybody the exclusive rights of streams. There will probably be contentions, where there are two men on a stream, as to how many fish each produced and how many of the returning fish are his, but that can not be cared for in this particular bill. I think it is a good bill. So far as the preservation of fisheries is concerned, I think there should be a vital revision of law. There should probably be limitations as to the duration of the fishing seasons and the size of the pack.

Commander J. F. Moser, United States Navy, commanding United States Fish Commission steamer Albatross, examining into the fisheries of the Pacific coast, says in his report for 1900 to the Treasury Department, page 227:

Mr. Callbreath is positive that his fish will return, but he now believes the time has not yet arrived for the first output to mature. It is earnestly hoped he may realize all he anticipates, for the zeal and enthusiasm which he displays should meet with ample reward. In the meantime he is carrying on a very interesting experiment. If his fish return he will have demonstrated that salmon do return to the parent stream, he will have thrown much light on the age of fish, and he will have proved that a stream running a few fish can be made to yield abnormally. If this is demonstrated a law should be passed permitting the leasing of small streams for hatchery purposes and recognizing ownership in fish thus hatched. This would mean a great deal to southeastern Alaska, as it would draw settlers who could make a very good living by operating a hatchery and cultivating the little patches of land that are favorably located.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is opposed to this bill, and unless he withdraws his opposition it can not pass by unanimous consent, and I am afraid it will not be reached on the Calendar in its regular order ere this Congress adjourns. The gentleman prides himself on being the watchdog of the Treasury. He is a poor watchdog, however. He is at times shortsighted. Sometimes he is penny wise and pound foolish, and that is this case. If my bill were a law these annual appropriations would cease and much money would be saved. His opposition to this meritorious bill can only be explained on the theory that he is either misinformed or needs to be informed, and I hope the information I shall give him to-day will be sufficient to convince him of his error, so that he will withdraw his opposition.

The gentleman I know is very wise, but I doubt if he knows it all. I have heard him several times on this floor talking about Alaska; that is, telling us what he knew, or rather, I should say, what he did not know about Alaska. It is all very amusing to hear him talk about Alaska. He knows so much about it—about the place that he has never seen or even read much about. In other words, when he demonstrates his remarkable lack of information in regard to that vast domain it is to laugh. He has never been there; he knows little about Alaska, and yet, week in and week out, whenever there is a bill before this House for the Alaskans—a bill that the people of that Territory want, a bill that should pass and become a law—the genial gentleman from Illinois rises up, in his peculiar way, with a know-it-all smile on his sunshiny face, and in a voice that is childlike and bland tells us all he does not know about Alaska. As a piece of farce comedy it is good acting, but it is not statesmanship and it is cruel and unjust to the good people of Alaska.

If the gentleman would only visit Alaska, if he would go there for a while and see what there is up there, if he would only acquaint himself with the people who live there and find out for himself their wants, I am satisfied he would not be heard in the next Congress objecting to necessary legislation that the people of Alaska demand and ought to have. Alaska is an anomaly in our sisterhood of States and Territories. She is neither a State nor a Territory. She is neither flesh, fowl, nor good red herring. Alaska to-day has no government. She has, I regret to say, absolutely no voice in her own affairs. The taxes that she pays and the money that she raises, all, every dollar, goes into the Federal Treasury. The people of Alaska want to govern themselves. They want home rule—Territorial government—and they should have it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that the gentleman from Illinois does not understand this question, and he never will understand it unless he will take a day off and study. The salmon business is one of the great industries of Alaska. Southeastern Alaska furnishes nine-tenths of all the canned salmon in the world, and the total product from Alaska this year of canned salmon will amount to over $9,000,000; and yet the gentleman a little while ago did not want to give the people of Alaska a mere pittance of money to properly exhibit the products and resources of Alaska at the Louisiana Exposition to be held in St. Louis in 1904.

This bill I introduced, as I have previously stated, is for the protection of the salmon of Alaska and to prevent their extermination. It is well known by those who have studied this matter that unless there is some legislation to artificially propagate the salmon it is only a question of time when the salmon in Alaska will become extinct. Those who do this at their own expense should be protected.

The salmon industry is one of the great industries in Alaska. A great many canneries have been established there, are being established there, and will continue to be established. At the present time millions of dollars are invested. The product of these canneries is one of the most valuable products of the district and one of the great products of this country. It foots up every year into millions and millions of dollars. Besides the monetary question involved in this matter as an industry of the United States, the great point that I wish to make is this: I am in favor of protecting the fish and game of America, and I have always, since I have been a legislator, in my State and here in Washington, done all that I could to accomplish that purpose. It is a sad commentary on our civilization that by reason of our lack of judgment and foresight we have allowed the most valuable fish of the Atlantic to be exterminated, and we have allowed the larger wild animals of our country to become practically extinct.

Mr. Chairman, just a few words more. This bill is not in the interest of the canneries, although in my judgment it would help and not hurt the canneries. I am informed that they have no objection to it. After careful study, it is my opinion that if this bill should become a law it will do more to perpetuate and increase the salmon than anything else that we can do at this time. I say further, this bill gives no exclusive rights, no monopoly to anyone. It is a fair, just, and conservative bill, and ought to pass. If any member can suggest amendments that will improve it in any way I shall be glad to accept them. Another thing, this bill provides that nothing contained in it shall in any way prevent line or fly fishing by tourists, sportsmen, or persons who go to Alaska, or anyone in Alaska. It also provides that the Indians, or natives of Alaska, can catch the salmon for food, or for drying for winter use as food for themselves and their families. Hence, taking it all in all, I believe this bill is a very fair and a very just bill in the interest of one of our great industries, which, if not protected by a law similar to this bill, will ere long be destroyed, the greatest fish in the world exterminated, and one of the great staple diets of civilization eliminated.

That, sir, is all I care to say at this time in relation to this matter; but in order to prove to the gentleman from Illinois that the people of Alaska want this bill to pass and become a law, I wish to read as a part of my remarks some editorials in favor of the bill, taken from newspapers published in Alaska, together with some petitions, resolutions, and letters from citizens in Alaska, and all to the same effect.

The grand jury at Juneau, Alaska, on December 20, 1902, reported as follows:

GRAND JURY REPORT.

Hon. MELVILLE C. BROWN,
Judge of the United States District Court,
Division No. 1, District of Alaska:

May it please your honor:

We, the members of the grand jury, duly empaneled and sworn for the December term of the United States district court in and for the district of Alaska, division No. 1, begun and held at Juneau, December 1, 1902, having concluded all our labors, beg leave to submit the following report, and respectfully ask to be discharged from further attendance upon the court:

We have been in session nineteen days, during which time we have found true bills against 54 persons, and not true bills against 6 persons. The grand jury has earnestly endeavored to carry out the instructions of the court. We have investigated public gambling and other offenses within the jurisdiction of the court. This report will also touch upon some matters that have come to the notice of the grand jury which need reform, but which would not be covered by an indictment.

* * * * * * *

Believing the salmon fisheries of Alaska to be foremost among her great natural resources, we recommend that bill H. R. 9976, introduced by Mr. SULZER January 23, 1902, entitled "A bill to encourage salmon culture in Alaska, and for the protection of persons engaged in the production thereof," be enacted into a law at the present session of Congress; also that bill H. R. 14464, to amend the law relating to the salmon fisheries of Alaska, introduced by Mr. LACEY May 15, 1902, be enacted into a law at the present session of Congress; both of which bills, if enacted into law, will greatly assist in restoring the depleted streams and assuring a continuation of the full normal product of those streams not already depleted.

The grand jury wishes to thank the United States district attorney and his assistants and the United States marshal and his deputies for the aid they have rendered us during our investigation.

Unanimously adopted by the grand jury in session this 19th day of December, 1902.

J. T. MARTIN, Foreman.

Attest:
W. R. BENTLEY, Secretary.

I will now read the following letter from Governor John G. Brady:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
DISTRICT OF ALASKA, OFFICE OF THE EXECUTIVE,
Sitka, Alaska, December 9, 1902.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Capt. John C. Calbreath, of Fort Wrangell, Alaska, has brought to my attention a bill (H. R. 9976, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session) to encourage salmon culture in Alaska, the same having been introduced by you.

The question of salmon culture has had attention in my annual reports since I have been governor, and I have advocated the multiplication of hatcheries, for the reason that we should be careful to put more salmon life into the streams than we take out of them, if we do not wish these streams to become depleted.

My own notion has been all along that the United States Government should assume complete control of the hatcheries and the streams and be responsible for all of the salmon culture, and tax the canneries for this business in proportion to the pack of each plant. In fact, to call to Washington Capt. Jefferson F. Moser, who no doubt is the best posted man on the salmon industry of Alaska, and let him suggest the details of the law which should be passed and then put him at the head of a commission to come here with his inspectors and enforce it. Of course, they should be supplied with all the conveniences for this purpose.

The market value of the pack for this year will no doubt exceed the purchase price of the Territory.

A question of such financial interest to this district and to the country at large should have the solicitous attention of Congress.

If nothing of this kind is to be undertaken, then the least that could be asked of Congress is that such enterprises as Mr. Calbreath has undertaken and fostered for so many years should have the protection of law.

I think the bill which you have introduced is eminently fair, and it is undoubtedly so to the natives, who are now complaining bitterly in places against the present methods of the cannery men.

I hope that the committees of both Houses who have the matter in hand will listen attentively to Mr. Calbreath and pass this measure, which will do him and others who undertake like enterprises substantial justice.

Respectfully, yours,

JOHN G. BRADY, Governor of Alaska.

[From Evening Journal, December 11, 1902.]

The Hon. H. M. Kutchin, agent of the Treasury Department in charge of the Alaska salmon inspection, estimates that the output of the Alaska canneries for 1902 will be 2,470,000 cases, or about 400,000 in excess of 1901. This, he estimates, represents about 37,000,000 salmon caught in Alaskan waters this year. Mr. Kutchin says there were nine more canneries operated this year than last.

[The Douglas Island News, December 31, 1902.]

We were shown to-day a copy of the Sulzer bill, introduced last winter, to "encourage salmon culture in Alaska, and for the protection of persons engaged in the production thereof," and can say without hesitation that it meets our approval. The bill carefully guards against a monopoly of its immunities by the great corporations and will do more toward keeping up and increasing the supply of this great industry than any measure yet brought to our notice. The bill should be enacted into a law at this present session of Congress.

[Alaska Sentinel, Thursday, January 8, 1903.]

We have before us a copy of the Sulzer bill, introduced last winter to encourage salmon propagation in Alaska, and heartily indorse the measure, as do all others whom we have heard discuss the subject. If there is any virtue in artificial propagation, this seems a very inexpensive way, so far as the Government is concerned, without encroaching upon the rights of anyone. It will make 100 blades of grass grow where but 1 grew before, and, as regards the barren lakes and streams, where absolutely none grew before, and that, too, without costing the Government $1 or an acre of land, or granting any exclusive privileges to individuals or corporations except that which they create from nature's wastes. It will be carrying out the old Mosaic law that "He who buildeth a house shall dwell therein; and he who planteth a vineyard shall gather the fruit thereof." The Sentinel is pleased to know that so meritorious a measure as this originated in the brain of a Wrangell man (Capt. J. C. Callbreath). And we may add further that a man of his knowledge of the fishing industry is needed at the head of Alaska's fishing interests.

[Daily Alaska Dispatch, December 17, 1902.]

RECOMMEND THAT PIONEER HATCHERY RECEIVE JUSTICE—CHAMBER OF COMMERCE HONORED BY ADDRESS FROM PIONEER SALMON HATCHERY PROMOTER OF ALASKA.

The Chamber of Commerce at last evening's meeting indorsed the bill introduced by Congressman SULZER to encourage and protect private hatcheries in Alaska. The meeting was addressed by Mr. John Calbreath, the pioneer hatchery man, who related many interesting incidents regarding the salmon and its habits. Mr. Calbreath started his hatchery nearly eleven years ago. Season after season he has hatched his fry, carefully nursed the young fish for two seasons, and sent them to sea, promised by nature that at some future year they would return to reward the hand that raised them.

The age of the salmon is to Mr. Calbreath unknown, but years of patient toil has allowed him to freely estimate, and there will be keen disappointment if the first return is not realized next year. There is more than gold for this old gentleman in the solution of the question. It is the solution of a problem that injures no man, and will make the name of Calbreath famous wherever fish is known as food. This gray-haired old man will have solved the problem of making the ocean the growing ground for billions of salmon, and the Alaska creeks their kindergartens until they are strong enough to battle with their salt-water enemies.

A petition will be circulated this week for signers recommending the passage of the bill. If you believe in honesty being rewarded and recognition of a life's toil, sign.

Mr. Chairman, I will now read a letter from United States District Judge Brown, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
FIRST DIVISION, DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
Juneau, December 26, 1902.

DEAR SIR: I have examined H. R. 9976, respecting the culture of salmon in Alaska. The bill seems to have been carefully and thoughtfully prepared with the view of encouraging the salmon industry in this district. While it is possible perhaps that corporations and combinations may take improper advantage of its terms, still the objects and purposes of the bill are clearly in the right direction. Indeed, the power of monopolies to injure the salmon industry generally or to monopolize the business under the bill seems to be fairly well guarded against by its terms.

This bill is in general favor among the people of Alaska, and, I have no doubt, will work great good. Should it later appear that corporations and combinations are formed whereby a monopoly of the salmon business should be effected, this can be easily remedied by future legislation.

My belief is that the bill should pass in its present form without delay, possible danger of monopoly under its terms being met by legislation when such dangers actually arise.

Very respectfully,

M. C. BROWN, Judge.

And in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I read the following petitions and resolutions:

WRANGELL, ALASKA, January 2, 1903.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned citizens of the town of Wrangell, district of Alaska, having in view the preservation of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, would most respectfully pray your honorable body that the House bill No. 9976, introduced by Mr. SULZER January 23, 1902, and referred to the Committee on Territories, which committee unanimously reported the bill with an amendment, on May 16, 1902, with the recommendation that it do pass, be enacted into a law at the present session of Congress. Your petitioners believe that the above-named bill, if enacted into a law, will go far toward preserving the valuable salmon industry of Alaska from extinction, without any cost to the Government or infringement on private rights, or the possible creation of monopolies, and at the same time protect private parties in the fruits of their enterprise.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this chamber that H. R. bill No. 9976, introduced by Hon. Mr. SULZER January 23, 1902, a copy of which was published in the Alaska Sentinel on January 8, 1903, be enacted into a law at the present session of Congress, to the end that our valuable salmon fisheries be preserved and increased, which we feel assured will result from a general system of private hatcheries located on the small producing streams. We can discover no possibility of a monopoly growing out of the provisions of the bill, as no individual or cannery can possess more than one hatchery franchise and no lease can control the exclusive right to a stream. And it is the further sense of this chamber that the Government should erect and maintain hatcheries on the large streams that may be suitable for extensive plants.

J. E. WORDEN, Secretary,
Chamber of Commerce, Wrangel, Alaska.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United State of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned citizens of the town of Sitka, district of Alaska, having in view the preservation of the salmon fisheries of Alaska, would most respectfully pray your honorable body that the House bill No. 9976, introduced by Mr. SULZER January 23, 1902, and referred to the Committee on Territories, which committee unanimously reported the bill with an amendment on May 16, 1902, with the recommendation that it do pass, be enacted into a law at the present session of Congress. Your petitioners believe that the above-named bill, if enacted into a law, will go far toward preserving the valuable salmon industry of Alaska from extinction, without any cost to the Government or infringement on private rights or the possible creation of monopolies, and at the same time protect private parties in the fruits of their enterprise.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a few letters and some data on this subject.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, all of us are not so fortunate as the eminent gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LACEY). Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to object?

Mr. CANNON. No; I am opposing his amendment [laughter], which I believe is to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] to print certain letters and data as part of his remarks is granted.

Mr. CANNON. All of us, I will say again, are not so fortunate as the gentleman from New York. Our eyesight is not so long. Sorry for it. Perhaps we might blame it on God; but if we did it would not avail anything.

For his long eyesight, his long make-up every way, physically and mentally, he is not entitled to any credit. The Lord picked him out from the beginning, before anything was, and decreed that in the year of our Lord 1903 there should be such a member in the House of Representatives. [Laughter.] Well, God did a good job. [Laughter.] We are glad of it; but the gentleman does not want to flap his wings and crow, because he was not consulted about it. [Laughter.] Because some of us were not so very fortunate we are not to blame. I have sometimes thought, when the gentleman was discoursing about Alaska, about other places, about the world, that if he could only abide with the Alaskans that it would be better than the gospel. By his example and precept how he could build that civilization up. But the Alaskans can not have him; we need him here. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has read a lecture to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I do not presume to rise here to defend him, as he is abundantly able to take care of himself. But there were other members of the House who had something to do with the defeat of the bill, the defeat of which seems constantly to annoy and to rankle in the bosom of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]. It was a bill having the title and denominated by him as a bill "for the protection of the salmon in Alaska," but a bill which some other members of the House, after carefully considering the same, and after investigation of the subject, and with some knowledge of the facts, thought a very thinly veiled attempt at placing the salmon fishery in Alaska in the hands of a few great corporations and making it, to the crack of doom, a great monopoly.

Of course, we differ in our views of these matters. The gentleman from New York says he considered the bill an exceedingly wise one and that he believed that it would encourage the propagation of salmon in Alaska; but inasmuch as it gave by its terms and by implication a few corporations the practical control of the salmon fishery of Alaska for all time to come, there were some of us who did not agree with the view of the gentleman from New York in regard to that matter. He does not seem to have been satisfied with the defeat of the measure, as on various occasions he has referred to it in the House since that time. The bill, in my opinion, was about as iniquitous and about as objectionable as any bill that has been presented to this Congress, and I am thankful that I had some small part in defeating it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, of course I am always interested, as a matter of education, to observe the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] endeavor—mark, I say endeavor—to follow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Laughter.] They are so alike, or perhaps I had better say so unlike. The apparent difference, the great difference, between the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Illinois, however, is that the gentleman from Illinois generally knows what he is talking about and the reason why he is talking, while the gentleman from Wyoming never knows what he is talking about or the reason why he is talking. [Laughter.]

As a matter of fact, I will inform the gentleman from Wyoming that the bill was not defeated and never has been defeated in this House. If I thought the gentleman from Wyoming could defeat the bill I think I would want it defeated. The record will show that the bill is on the Calendar, and I hope it will be reached before Congress adjourns. I am satisfied that if it is reached ere we adjourn it will be passed and passed by an overwhelming majority, notwithstanding the unintelligible opposition of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and his very weak protégé, the gentleman from Wyoming. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman from Wyoming intimates, if I catch his meaning, that the bill would create a salmon trust, and that is the reason he is against it. A salmon trust, indeed! Why, sir, everybody here knows, who knows the gentleman at all, that if the bill created a salmon trust, or if it were favored by the Alaska canning trust, he would not be against it, but on the contrary would heartily be for it. [Laughter.] This bill is an antitrust bill. It creates no monopoly. It simply carries out a precept from that great authority to which the gentleman from Illinois adverted a little while ago, when he referred to the Bible.

I shall refer to that good Book, too—the Book of Books—and say that the laborer is worthy of his hire. If a man makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before, he is a philosopher. This bill provides that where one salmon grows now by nature, man by labor will make ten salmon grow—by building a hatchery and cultivating them; and in after years, when they come back to the place of their birth, after being out in the ocean for seven, or eight, or nine years, he shall have the right to catch a part of what he created, and be protected in that right.

That is about all the bill does. It is a good bill and should become a law. If it does, the people of Alaska, as the data I put in the RECORD show, will practically propagate and preserve the salmon for all time to come; and if something to accomplish this is not done, and quickly done, it is only a question of a few years when the salmon of Alaska will be exterminated, an industry which furnishes to the world nine-tenths of all the salmon consumed to-day destroyed, a staple article of diet eliminated, and thousands and thousands of American workmen thrown out of employment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some data belonging to this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, or Chinese plague, or black death, to use the unexpended balance of the sums appropriated and reappropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved June 28, 1902, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in aid of State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same; and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Insert, after line 6, page 73, the following:

"That the sum of $50,875.53 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of reimbursing the State of Texas the money paid out by it in the adjustment of claims relating to the transfer of Greer County from the State of Texas to the United States, as shown by Senate Document No. 571, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, and also by the letter of the Secretary of the Interior accompanying said Senate document, said sum to be in full payment of all claims connected with said transaction."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against this provision.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman kindly withhold the point of order until I can explain the proposition?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in 1901 Congress passed an act providing that the Secretary of the Interior should adjust the accounts between the United States and the State of Texas relative to the transfer of Greer County to the United States. That county became an organized county of the State of Texas in 1886, and it remained such until 1896. A controversy arose between the United States and the State of Texas as to whether the county belonged to Oklahoma or the State of Texas, and the matter was referred to the Supreme Court of the United States, which court held that the territory belonged to the United States.

In 1901 the bill to which I have referred was passed by Congress and became a law. It provided that the Secretary of the Interior should investigate and balance the accounts between the State of Texas and the United States, and report the same to Congress. That report has been made and it is the Senate document referred to in the amendment just read. It shows that more than $50,000 has been spent by the State of Texas for public school purposes and for the court expenses of the county, and it further shows that the State suffered also a loss of more than $20,000 by reason of the fact that 17,000 acres of land which had been transferred to Greer County by the State of Texas for school purposes were lost to the State by the decision of the Supreme Court transferring the county to Oklahoma. It has also lost the schoolhouses, school furniture, and public buildings in that county which had been erected by the State. It is necessary now that we have the appropriation asked for by this amendment to refund this money to the State of Texas.

A bill covering this matter was introduced by me in June last and referred to the Committee on Claims, but has not been reported. I see no other method of presenting the matter to the House than by an amendment to this bill, and I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not press his point of order, because this claim is just and should be paid.

Personally I have this also to state: In the district I represent there are numerous school-teachers interested in this claim. Every year, on the 1st of September, contracts are made in Texas with teachers for the purpose of carrying on the schools for the ensuing year.

During the year 1896, when this transfer was made from the State of Texas to Oklahoma, many school-teachers were carrying out their contracts with the State of Texas. After the decision of the court, which was adverse, as I have said, to the State, the State refused to pay these teachers, and they have been out of the use of their money from that time to the present, about six or seven years. It is only just and right that these teachers should receive their money, either from the State of Texas or the United States. But they do not expect our State to pay them for teaching after the Supreme Court had decided that the county belonged to the United States and not to the State of Texas.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the gentleman from Texas carefully. I am not familiar with the matter to which he refers, and can not say whether the amount of taxes that had been collected by the State of Texas have been accounted for, etc.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that that has been done, and reported by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CANNON. Judging from the statement of the gentleman, I should say off-hand that his amendment has merit. But, after all, it is a matter that rests within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Claims. I am compelled, acting for the committee on such a bill as this, to make points of order on many meritorious matters, because they do not belong on this general bill. If this were not done, bills of this kind would soon swell to such an amount that they would carry everything.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think "we should be just before we are generous?" We are very generous to ourselves in providing for our use as Congressmen an office building, etc., in improving the Capitol building, and all that. Why, then, should we not adopt my amendment and pay these school-teachers, who have performed this labor and who have been out of their money for several years?

Mr. CANNON. After all, the gentleman's observation is plausible, but plausible only. All along I have had to make points of order upon different matters, many of which were eminently just, merely because we are compelled to preserve the real character and function of these bills; and the rules contemplate that we should do so. The gentleman understands, I presume, that such is the duty of the committee to the bill and to the House. Certainly my objection is not made with any personal reference to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I appreciate the statement of the chairman of the committee and I know that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I had hoped that he would not urge it against so meritorious a claim as I know this one to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide flags for the east and west fronts of the center of the Capitol, to be hoisted daily under the direction of the Capitol police board, $100, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in pursuance of the notice I gave in the general debate, I offer the following amendment, which I will ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 73, after line 22, insert:

"To acquire a site for, and toward the construction of, a fireproof building for committee rooms, folding room and other offices for the House of Representatives, and for necessary office rooms for members thereof, to be erected on one of the squares bounded by B street south, C street south, First street east, and First west, as the commission hereinafter provided shall determine, $750,000; and said building shall be constructed substantially according to the plans prepared under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous, and at a cost, exclusive of site, not to exceed $3,100,000, for any part or all of which sum contracts are authorized to be entered into. Said construction and letting of contracts, including the employment of all necessary skilled and other services, shall be under the control of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the direction and supervision of a commission, which is hereby created, to be composed of three members-elect to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the Fifty-seventh Congress. Vacancies occurring, by resignation or otherwise, in the membership of said commission, shall be filled by succeeding Speakers of the House.

"The commission herein authorized shall, within thirty days after their appointment, determine which of the squares above described shall be acquired and used for a site for the building herein provided for, and shall notify the Secretary of the Interior in writing of their determination, whereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall, within thirty days after the receipt of such notice, proceed in the manner prescribed for providing a site for an addition to the Government Printing Office in so much of the act approved July 1, 1898, as is set forth on pages 648 and 649 of volume 30 of the Statutes at Large, to acquire the square so determined upon; and for the purposes of such acquisition the Secretary of the Interior shall have and exercise all the powers conferred upon the Public Printer in said act."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. CANNON. I confess that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 73, after line 22, insert:

"Toward the extension and completion of the Capitol building, in accordance with the original plans therefor by the late Thomas U. Walter, with such modifications of the interior as may be found necessary or advantageous, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $500,000; and the said construction shall be made under the direction of a commission composed of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three members elect to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress; and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the direction and supervision of said commission, is authorized to make contracts for said construction after proper advertisements and the reception of bids within a total sum not exceeding $2,500,000, including the sum herein appropriated, and said Superintendent, subject to the direction and approval of said commission, shall employ such professional and personal services in connection with said work as may be necessary. Any vacancy occurring by resignation or otherwise in the membership of the commission hereby created shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said commission."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that amendment as I did against the other.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as to that amendment I do not confess that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas on his point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The point I raise is that it is new legislation. It has not been provided for in any other act of Congress, and the fact that it is brought here at this time shows that it is new legislation—asking that this extension of the Capitol building be made. It is certainly new legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there is a Capitol building and the original plan for the Capitol building was made by Mr. Walter a half century ago. The same are in existence. From time to time we have appropriated for its completion, even during my service. I am inclined to think that it is not subject to the point of order. It is a continuation of work in progress, I think, in the language of the rules. I think this is such work. It is true that it provides some machinery. It says under whose supervision it shall be done.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will not insist that there is a Capitol building in process of construction now?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; that is what I do insist.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. At the present time?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and there has been for fifty years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Under existing law?

Mr. CANNON. As a fact.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But as a legal question, as a matter of law?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that the Capitol never has been completed. The designs were made under the law and from time to time work has been done upon it which looks toward completion. Now, it does provide some machinery there, which I am inclined to believe is a mere incident by way of limitation of expenditure of money. It seems to me that is the only question. I want to state, however, that if the Chair has any doubt about it I am quite willing that it should be ruled out of order. I am aware that these rules should be strictly construed and any member can invoke them. My best opinion, however, is that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. I wanted to inquire if the proposition pending has been considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I understand that we have such a committee.

Mr. CANNON. I am not aware of its ever having been so considered.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not know that that committee had capitulated.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds never did consider anything touching the Capitol. All appropriations for progress of work upon it have not been under the jurisdiction of that committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that when we spend such a vast sum of money the matter should be investigated by some committee of this House and reported in the regular way, instead of being attached to an appropriation bill, when there can be no consideration given to it?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that it is a matter that has been elaborately considered for two sessions of Congress by the Committee on Appropriations, and a report made by direction of Congress by the Superintendent of the Capitol. That report is upon our desks and is very exhaustive. It is indeed rare that any question involving an expenditure has received the exhaustive investigation that this proposition has received.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was it investigated by the same authority that investigated the different attachments made to the White House?

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think we wasted a great deal of money there unnecessarily?

Mr. CANNON. Well, if that were true, it could not be pleaded in set-off.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It might be a warning, however.

Mr. CANNON. I am inclined to think, if you will except the office building, all the improvements of the White House have been apt. I do not mean in all their details. Nothing that is human is perfect. We will never have perfection anywhere until the millennium comes.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand the gentleman to maintain that the Committee on Appropriations have jurisdiction of this subject?

Mr. CANNON. Absolutely. It was referred to us by the action of the House, and here is the report.

Mr. LOUD. I speak of the jurisdiction of the committee under the rule.

Mr. CANNON. This is a work in progress, and the whole subject-matter has been referred to the committee by the action of the House.

Mr. LITTLE. By the action of the House?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman yield to me one moment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Because the decision of this question may be of considerable importance in the future.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. LOUD. Has the gentleman so carefully examined the law now upon the statute books providing for the construction of the Capitol that he is absolutely satisfied that the law now in existence would warrant further extension of this building?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman that the construction of this Capitol stands almost by itself, as to these two wings. There never was a separate legislative act standing by itself that provided for it.

Mr. LOUD. Then, of course, an extension would not be in accordance with law.

Mr. CANNON. It commenced in 1850 by an appropriation upon the diplomatic appropriation bill, with authority to make plans, followed by appropriation after appropriation substantially the same, making progress, and under the authority given and the appropriation of money plans were made for the extension of the Capitol, embracing the western extension where the old library used to be, this where we are now, and the Senate extension. The plans gave an extension on the east similar to the western extension. That was never completed. The Dome has been completed; and, as proof of it, there the Dome stands, 9 or 10 feet over the wall. In addition to that, the plans are in existence. Now, if it is in order under the rule at all, it is in order because it is a work entered upon and not finished.

Mr. LOUD. Well——

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman recollects the exception as to public works in progress?

Mr. LOUD. The danger I want to call the attention of the gentleman to is as to public buildings. Somebody might contend that they are not completed, and in any appropriation bill you might carry a further appropriation of a very large amount of money. And I can not refrain from suggesting that the determination of this point of order shall go over until the bill is completed. It is a question of great importance to the House.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to the gentleman that in all public buildings, as a rule, there is a limit fixed.

Mr. LOUD. But there never was a limit named for this in the statute.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. In all public buildings, as a rule, there is a limit fixed, and whenever you exceed that limit you stop, because there is positive law. Here it is an appropriation in which there never was any limit, and a public work upon which there has been no limitation placed.

Mr. LOUD. Hence each appropriation is an act by itself.

Mr. CANNON. No, for the completion of a public work already in progress. Now, in my judgment this is not subject to the point of order, but I am entirely careless, so far as I am concerned, whether the point is sustained or whether it is not sustained.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am informed that Mr. Cox, a very celebrated parliamentarian, on the question of the building of a new building at West Point held that the amendment was in order.

Mr. CANNON. I think such a ruling was made; but I do not care to resort to that ruling. Many rulings have been made crisscross. I put this upon the ground that, I say, in my judgment, it is not subject to the point of order; that it is a public work in progress, the cost of which was never limited as to expenditure, and has been entirely made under a law which has never been complied with, and the building never completed. Now, that is my best opinion about it. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. LOUD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the determination of this point of order may go over until the bill is completed.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to do that.

Mr. LOUD. I do not care for it myself, but in the future it may come to trouble you. For myself I shall not be in the next House.

Mr. CANNON. I want to dispose of these two matters before we go much further, one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Section 2 of Rule XXI provides:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] proposes to appropriate a certain sum for the completion of the Capitol building in accordance with the original plans and specifications and in accordance with existing law. That the construction of the building is incomplete is conceded, but the work necessary to its completion has been interrupted for a series of years. This interruption or delay, in the opinion of the Chair, does not operate so as to take this proposed amendment out of the operation of the exception to the general rule just read, which is "unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress." If the work incident to the completion of the building was now in progress no one would claim that this amendment would not come within the exception just mentioned.

On February 19, 1885, the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, considering the naval appropriation bill. A paragraph "For the completion of the New York, $400,000," had been reached when Mr. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, made a point of order against it. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. Olin Wellborn, of Texas] ruled:

Now, the Chair must believe that the construction of this ship is a public work. The Chair also believes that it is in progress. The mere fact that this vessel, begun in 1865, is confessedly still incomplete, the Chair thinks, so far as this rule is concerned, does not show that that work is not now in progress. The fact that the actual construction is temporarily interrupted for want of appropriation or some other reason does not interfere with the idea that the work is in progress. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

In the opinion of the Chair, therefore, the amendment is not obnoxious to paragraph 2 of Rule XXI upon the ground that the appropriation is not in continuation of such public works as are already in progress.

But the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas goes further. It is claimed that the amendment is not in order because it involves new legislation or would be legislating upon an appropriation bill. It provides that the completion of the Capitol building as originally proposed shall be "under the direction of a commission composed of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three members-elect of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress, and the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds," and authorizes this commission to enter into contracts for the said construction "after proper advertisement," and also authorizes said commission to employ such professional and personal services in connection with said work as may be necessary, and then specifies how vacancies upon said commission hereafter occurring are to be filled.

This, in the opinion of the Chair, is legislation inhibited by the last paragraph of the clause of Rule XXI which the Chair has just read.

This question, almost identical in form, was decided on February 28, 1898, by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SERENO E. PAYNE, and for the information of the committee I will read from paragraph 513, Parliamentary Practice of the House of Representatives of the United States, page 289:

Provided also for the appointment of a commissioner-general and other officials, with specified duties and salaries; authorized certain heads of departments to prepare exhibits under certain conditions and regulations, etc.

Mr. Levin I. Handy, of Delaware, made the point of order that this was legislation on an appropriation bill.

After debate, during which the act of 1897, in which the invitation of the French Government was accepted and a special commissioner was authorized to make report on the subject, was referred to as authority for the provisions of the section, the chairman ruled:

"The Chair thinks the act of 1897 is sufficient foundation for an appropriation, but not for legislation. The Chair is unable to see wherein it authorizes the office of commissioner-general or assistant commissioner from the reading of the law by the gentleman from Illinois. The rule in regard to the continuation of public works simply authorizes an appropriation in the continuance of public works and not the appointment of officers. * * * The rule would simply authorize an appropriation, but would not authorize legislation upon the subject in a general appropriation bill. There are in this paragraph several clauses which are distinctly new legislation, and if in a paragraph any clause or provision is out of order the point of order against the whole paragraph must be sustained. Of course, after the paragraph had gone out, it would be in order to offer any provision relating to the same subject which might be in order; but when the point is raised against the whole paragraph, and the paragraph contains a clause obnoxious to the rule, the whole paragraph must go out," etc.

The facts in the case just read being almost identical with the facts in the case now before it, the Chair is clearly of opinion, after a careful reading of the proposed amendment, that it proposes new legislation in connection with the proposed appropriation, which is not permissible under the rule, and that, therefore, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. LACEY having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committeee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17202, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 442, have had the same under consideration and report it herewith with the recommendation that it be agreed to.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order to consider, as an amendment to the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses, a provision for the acquisition of a site and toward the construction of a fireproof building for committee rooms, folding room, and other offices for the House of Representatives, and for the necessary office rooms for members thereof, to be used in the discharge of their official duties.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 140, noes 7.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nine gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number—the yeas and nays are refused; the ayes have it, and the resolution is agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD and others. Too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is too late in making that point.

EXTENSION OF CAPITOL BUILDING.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House No. 443, have had the same under consideration and report it herewith with the recommendation that it be agreed to.

Resolved, That it shall be in order to consider as an amendment to the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses a proposition to provide for the extension and completion of the Capitol building.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I presume there will be no desire for debate on this motion. I therefore ask for a vote.

The question was considered; and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Insert on page 73, at end of line 22:

"To acquire a site for and toward the construction of a fireproof building for committee rooms, folding room, and other offices for the House of Representatives, and for necessary office rooms for members thereof, to be erected on one of the squares bounded by B street south, C street south, First street east, and First street west, as the commission hereinafter provided shall determine, $750,000; and said building shall be constructed substantially according to the plans prepared under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, with such modifications as may be found necessary or advantageous, and at a cost, exclusive of site, not to exceed $3,100,000, for any part or all of which sum contracts are authorized to be entered into. Said construction and letting of contracts, including the employment of all necessary skilled and other services, shall be under the control of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, subject to the direction and supervision of a commission, which is hereby created, to be composed of three members-elect to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress to be appointed by the Speaker of the Fifty-seventh Congress. Vacancies occurring, by resignation or otherwise, in the membership of said commission shall be filled by succeeding Speakers of the House.

"The commission herein authorized shall, within thirty days after their appointment, determine which of the squares above described shall be acquired and used for a site for the building herein provided for, and shall notify the Secretary of the Interior in writing of their determination, whereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall, within thirty days after the receipt of such notice, proceed in the manner prescribed for providing a site for an addition to the Government Printing Office in so much of the act approved July 1, 1898, as is set forth on pages 648 and 649 of volume 30 of the Statutes at Large, to acquire the square so determined upon; and for the purposes of such acquisition the Secretary of the Interior shall have and exercise all the powers conferred upon the Public Printer in said act.

"The appropriations herein and hereafter made for said site and building shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEPHENS of Texas) there were 115 ayes and 6 noes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question of ordering tellers was taken.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). Only three gentlemen rising, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the extension and completion of the Capitol building in accordance with the original plans therefor by the late Thomas U. Walter, with such modifications of the interior as may be found necessary or advantageous, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $500,000; and the said construction shall be made under the direction of a commission, composed of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members-elect to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-seventh Congress; and the superintendent of the Capitol building and grounds, under the direction and supervision of said commission, is authorized to make contracts for said construction after proper advertisements and the reception of bids, within a total sum not exceeding $2,500,000, including the sum herein appropriated, and said superintendent, subject to the direction and approval of said commission, shall employ such professional and personal services in connection with said work as may be necessary. Any vacancy occurring by resignation or otherwise in the membership of the commission hereby created shall be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House, according as the vacancy occurs in the Senate or House representation on said commission.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Capitol: For work at Capitol, and for general and special repairs thereof, including wages of mechanics and laborers, and not exceeding $50 for the purchase of technical and necessary books, $362,950, to be immediately available.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 16 and 17, on page 73, strike out "three hundred and sixty-two" and insert "two hundred and eighty-eight."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

For surveys and resurveys of public lands, $325,000, at rates not exceeding $9 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $7 for township, and $5 for section lines: Provided, That in expending this appropriation preference shall be given, first, in favor of surveying townships occupied, in whole or in part, by actual settlers and of lands granted to the States by the act approved February 22, 1889, and the acts approved July 3 and July 10, 1890, and, second, to surveying under such other acts as provide for land grants to the several States, except railroad land grants and such indemnity lands as the several States may be entitled to in lieu of lands granted them for educational and other purposes which may have been sold or included in some reservation or otherwise disposed of, and other surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of reservations, except forest reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $13 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $11 for township, and $7 for section lines, and in cases of exceptional difficulties in the surveys, where the work can not be contracted for at these rates, compensation for surveys and resurveys may be allowed by the said Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, at rates not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $15 for township, and $12 for section lines: Provided further, That in the States of California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, Wyoming, the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico, and the district of Alaska, there may be allowed, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth, rates not exceeding $25 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $23 for township, and $20 for section lines, the provisions of section 2411, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing allowance for surveys in California and Oregon are hereby extended to all of the above-named States and Territories and district.

And of the sum hereby appropriated there may be expended such an amount as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may deem necessary for examination of public surveys in the several surveying districts, by such competent surveyors as the Secretary of the Interior may select, or by such competent surveyors as he may authorize the surveyor-general to select, at such compensation not exceeding $6 per day, and such per diem allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3, while engaged in field examinations, as he may prescribe, said per diem allowance to be also made to such clerks who are competent surveyors who may be detailed to make field examinations, in order to test the accuracy of the work in the field, and to prevent payment for fraudulent and imperfect surveys returned by deputy surveyors, and for examinations of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, and inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, and for making by such competent surveyors fragmentary surveys and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. I offer the amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "reservations," in line 3, on page 79, strike out the words "except forest reservations, and lands within boundaries of forest reservations."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the object of my amendment, in connection with another which I shall offer later, is to make it clear that all surveys of lands within forest reserves shall be made under the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. In my opinion this return to former practice will be in the interest of the public service. For a great many years—from the foundation of the Government—the General Land Office has had to do with the survey of the public lands. The Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the law, is the custodian of all public-land survey records and all the plats of survey. I believe such work should continue under the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that all public-land surveys should be carried out under his supervision. I believe that the work will certainly be as well done as elsewhere, and, in my opinion, we shall have greater uniformity. There will be less difficulty in obtaining surveys of lands within forest reserves if these surveys are executed through the same channel and by the same means through and by which other public-land surveys are had.

Forest reservations are made from time to time, taking in large areas of public land, partly surveyed and partly unsurveyed. Wherever it shall be determined that land surveys should be extended over the lands within forest reservations, the same officers, the same force, the same means should be employed to survey these lands that are employed in the survey of lands without the boundaries of forest reservations.

I have had some personal experience with regard to these matters. I have had a considerable amount of difficulty, as have other members from the West, in getting necessary surveys within forest reservations for the purpose of determining the location of the homes of settlers. There has been some question as to just what bureau should undertake these surveys. In order that there may be no question, all public-land surveys should be executed by the same authority and through the same channel. Public surveys are well executed under the direction of the General Land Office, and lands within forest reservations that may require survey should be no exception to the general rule of survey by the General Land Office.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, as I understand, proposes to make this appropriation available for surveys of public lands in the forest reservations by striking out the exception.

Mr. MONDELL. It makes the appropriation available within the reservations as well as without.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, there is no appropriation whatever for the surveys of the public lands in the forest reservations.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; I want the facts.

Mr. MONDELL. Later in the bill there is an appropriation of $130,000 for the survey of lands within forest reservations, under the direction of the Geological Survey. It will be found on page 85, in the second paragraph, and the Commissioner of the Land Office also has authority to make such surveys. I think such authority should rest only with the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but that in practice, as I understand, is only used in surveying boundaries.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I will say to the gentleman if that is the practice, and I do not know absolutely that it is not, that may account for the fact that I and other members representing Western communities have found it practically impossible to get any surveys of lands within forest reservations, even in those cases where settlers lived upon the land prior to their being included in the forest reservations, and who are anxious to have their lands surveyed in order that they may make proof upon them and obtain a title.

Mr. CANNON. I think the policy has been, so far as the appropriation is concerned, not to appropriate anything for surveys in forest reservations, because they are not subject to homestead, and ought not to be, I submit, and therefore why survey them?

Mr. MONDELL. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I can not quite agree with the gentleman from Illinois on that proposition, because the language of the paragraph on page 85 clearly gives the Geological Survey authority to make surveys of lands within forest reservations—that is, of lands included in forest reserves. It does not, as a matter of fact, specifically provide for the survey of the boundaries of forest reserves. It was evidently intended largely for this very purpose, and I wish to explain again, if I have not made myself clear, this condition of affairs, that in practically every forest reserve which has been established, some territory is included occupied at the time the reserve is set up by settlers who settled in advance of the public survey. They are entitled to have their land surveyed.

I have personally made a number of requests quite recently, and within the last year and a half, for surveys of this character, with regard to the propriety of which there can be no question, both from the standpoint of the interests of the Government and of the interests of the settlers; because it is to the interest of the Government that it shall be determined promptly who, if any, of the settlers on a reserve are as a matter of fact bona fide settlers and who are trespassers, and it is to the interest of the settler in those cases that he shall be able to make final entry on his land and obtain title. Perhaps I am intrenching on the gentleman's time?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; the gentleman has practical knowledge which I have not. I want to get at the facts, and I am listening to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. My contention is that these surveys can be economically and more uniformly carried on and extended if they are all confined to one office in the Interior Department. I have no criticism to make of the surveys which the Geological Survey has executed under this provision, or of any of their work. They are doing a great work, but their work is generally along other lines. It is along the line of scientific and practical investigation—topographic, geologic, and hydrographic surveys—and it is not along the line of the ordinary public-land survey. The public-land office issues the manual under which the public-land surveys must be executed, whether they be executed by officers under the direction of the Geological Survey or executed by direction of the General Land Office.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] misconstrue the lines that he seeks to strike out? The bill provides as follows:

And other surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of reservations, except forest reservations and lands within boundaries of forest reservations.

In other words, the other surveys shall be limited to agricultural lands and the boundaries of reservations, except forest reservations, which would be permitted, but this would permit surveys inside. In other words, the exception, instead of excluding the survey from the reservation, excludes forest reservations from the limitation just about provided for.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman from Iowa is right.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not so understand it. Later I propose to offer an amendment increasing the item for surveys under the Commissioner of the General Land Office and clearly limiting land surveys to that office. Now, if this language is perfectly clear, and I think there is some doubt on that score, why, of course, I do not want to strike it out, but I do not wish to have language in the bill which prevents surveys in forest reserves by the General Land Office.

Mr. LACEY. The suggestion was as to whether this exception must not be left in in order to accomplish the purpose the gentleman had in view.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me that possibly that is so, but I want to ask the gentleman this question. He and I will both agree that in the absence of settlers prior to the creation of forest reservations there is no necessity for a survey. Now, if there is a settler here and there under the law, is there not such a thing as a deposit survey?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the deposit-survey system would scarcely apply in these cases. I think it is not generally practicable to carry out these surveys under the deposit system. The deposit system I think is a rather questionable one anyway in some regards, but I want to say that some surveys have been executed both by the Geological Survey and by the General Land Office.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman apprehend that there is any danger, if there is no limitation, of the General Land Office or the Geological Survey surveying these lands except merely to ascertain the location of settlers?

Mr. MONDELL. No; but I will say to the gentleman that that sort of survey is required to a greater or less extent every year as further forest reservations are established and as demands increase from settlers in reserves established some time ago.

Mr. CANNON. I will make this proposition to the gentleman. The gentleman lives in that part of the country and knows about these matters, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], chairman of the Public Lands Committee, is quite an expert. What does the gentleman say to passing this provision with leave to turn back?

Mr. MONDELL. That would be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, the subject under discussion is a very important one, and one of which I have some practical knowledge. To illustrate, the Black Hills Forest Reservation is about 1,000,000 acres. It is true, as the gentleman from Illinois says, that settlement is not allowed on forest reservations, but this applies only, of course, after the public proclamation making the reservation, and it is uniform in the establishment of these reservations to provide that settlers already upon the reservation may be permitted to complete their entries and obtain their titles. Now, on the particular reservation to which I refer, which is perhaps one of the most populous reservations in the country, there are some 400 settlers who were there before the reservation. A part of this land is already subdivided by local surveys. Now, for some two years an effort has been made to subdivide the remaining townships into sections, in order that these settlers might have an opportunity to enter their lands.

I am entirely in sympathy with the object the gentleman from Wyoming desires to accomplish, and think all the public lands should be surveyed as early and speedily as practicable. I think they ought all to be subdivided, as well the mineral as the agricultural lands, and facilitate the giving of title to them; but I think the gentleman from Wyoming is laboring under a misapprehension as to the effect of the amendment he offered. The provision which he moves to strike out by his amendment, as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], follows the clause "other surveys shall be confined to lands adapted to agriculture and lines of reservations," and reads "except forest reservations, and lands within the boundaries of forest reservations."

The bill as reported by the committee would permit the Commissioner of the General Land Office to survey these various forest reservations into the usual subdivisions without regard to whether the lands are agricultural in character or not. If we strike out that provision, I think we defeat the purpose the gentleman from Wyoming is seeking to accomplish. I think, therefore, the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the matter should be passed with leave to return to it if it be found necessary, would be the better course to take.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming withdraw his amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that the matter be passed for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that this part of the bill may be passed for the present without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 78, in lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "three hundred and twenty-five thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four hundred and fifty thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. CANNON. Just one word.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say a few words about the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I wish the gentleman would explain his views about it. Would the gentleman come down about the center, so that we can hear him?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think probably there will be no trouble about hearing.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to make provision for a larger amount that can be available for surveys in Alaska. The practice of the Department about this money appropriated for surveys, and it is a necessary practice, is to apportion the amount of money appropriated by the bill to the different public-land States for surveys. The demand for surveys is very great throughout the Western country, and for the apportionment of this money I believe the amount heretofore and regularly appropriated by the bill is $325,000. The Department makes an apportionment to each State, large or small. Last year the amount apportioned to the different States was, to Alaska $5,000, to Arizona $12,000, to California $13,000, to Colorado $6,000, Idaho $32,000, and so on among the different States, and the largest apportionment to any one State was Montana, $42,000. Now, if the amount appropriated is continued at $325,000, we have no reason to expect that there will be any larger sum appropriated for Alaska than last year, to wit, $5,000. In fact, the States having unsurveyed lands would object to any larger apportionment to Alaska than this.

Immigration to the Western country and settlement there make the demand for these surveys very great, so that the apportionment already made to the States is none too large. Consequently, if the amount of the appropriation is not increased, we can not ask that any greater sum than $5,000 be allowed for surveys in Alaska. Now, the condition of things up there is such that there is no encouragement for settlement or the taking up of lands in that Territory without surveys. We have the public-land laws extended to Alaska, we have the coal laws extended there, the homestead laws, and all the different public-land laws that are applicable to that Territory, and yet they amount to nothing because of the lack of surveys. The Commissioner of the Land Office, in his report, makes this statement with reference to Alaska:

The district of Alaska has been under control of Congress for thirty-four years. Extensive explorations have been made, vast sources of wealth developed, numerous permanent settlements made, embracing gold mines, fisheries, farms, lumber works, coal mines, schools, and mission stations, yet not a line of rectangular or systematic Government survey has yet been established.

We have extended by public statute the public surveys of the United States, and yet there has not been a single line of survey made under those laws, according to the Commissioner of the Land Office. That particular duty which the General Government owes to its frontiers is greatly in arrears. A large appropriation is past due and should be provided at the earliest practicable date.

Now, the Secretary of the Interior, in his estimate to Congress, sent in an estimate of $325,000 for general surveys. He made no increased estimate for this year, but in a letter sent to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, under date of February 4, 1903, he sends in a further estimate and recommends that the amount to be provided for general surveys be increased to $400,000 for the purpose of making a provision of $75,000 for extending these surveys to Alaska, and this is what he says in this letter:

For the fiscal years ending June 30, 1901, 1902, and 1903, the sum of $5,000 was apportioned to Alaska from the general appropriation for each of said years.

So it appears from his report that during the last three years the amount of $5,000 is all that has been apportioned to Alaska. It appears that in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior this is all he can apportion to Alaska with justice to other sections of the country, unless there is an increase made in the amount of the appropriation.

Under the apportionment of $5,000 for the year 1901 a contract was let by the surveyor-general for nearly the full amount ($4,950) of the apportionment. This contract was dated June 21, 1901, and action thereon was not taken until after the close of the fiscal year; hence said contract was necessarily charged to the fiscal year 1902 (having been approved during said year), and the apportionment for 1901 lapsed accordingly, not being available for contracting after the close of the year for which the appropriation was made.

No contracts have as yet been received from the surveyor-general under the apportionment of $5,000 made to Alaska for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

It appears from the record that the deputy surveyor to whom said contract chargeable to the appropriation for the fiscal year 1902 was let made no returns of survey thereunder, and the contract has been canceled.

The time of Mr. JONES of Washington having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. CANNON, it was extended five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks that by simply increasing the aggregate amount it would accomplish the purpose as long as the limitations as to so much per mile remain in the law; whether any of this money could be expended in Alaska unless you also make a further amendment authorizing a larger expenditure on account of the increased cost of making surveys in that distant region.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think so, and I have an amendment covering that.

Mr. LACEY. You will remember that one of the surveys that was provided for failed, because when the surveyor went to carry out his contract he found that the carrying of the stakes to the scene of the survey cost more, in the wages of the packers, than the entire amount of his contract, and he had to abandon it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is true.

Mr. LACEY. So that there should be an increase in the limit of price in Alaska.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have an amendment suggested by the department covering that.

Mr. MONDELL. Was not that increased cost due to the fact that a particular sort of stake, an iron stake, was required?

Mr. LACEY. Regardless of that, surveying is very expensive there.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are other things that enter into it, which I expect to explain on the other amendment.

I am of the opinion that a liberal appropriation should be made for surveys in Alaska, in order that the standard, township, and subdivisional surveys may be extended in different localities, so as to embrace lands desired to be entered under the homestead law, as authorized by the act of May 14, 1898, (30 Stat. L., 409), and to enable the survey of mission and other reservations.

He also recommends that the additional sum of $50,000 be appropriated for the purpose of surveying missions and school sites and matters of that kind taken up under existing law. All that this amendment contemplates, and all that we ask for, is that we should secure an additional amount of $75,000 for all these various purposes, and these estimates that the Secretary makes in his letter are estimates which cover all the various objects. As a matter of fact, the requirement of the service there for missions alone is estimated by the Commissioner of the Land Office as amounting to $50,000.

Now, then, it is said—I have heard it said on this floor—that there is no place in the United States, no place in the country, where a man can get a larger homestead than he can in Alaska at the present time. The idea seems to be that a man can go there and locate upon land, take just as much as he can inclose, because there is no other settler there, nobody to take it away from him. But the man who takes up land there under that condition of affairs does it just as he does in this country. He must notify the Secretary, and he must maintain his possession upon that land. If he leaves the land for any length of time he is liable to find some one in possession of his improvements and in possession of his land when he comes back. All the reports tend to show that considerable territory in Alaska is capable of very considerable agricultural development; that there can be a steady stream of immigration encouraged to go to that country.

It is not contemplated that we should survey all the country, but there certainly should be some of it surveyed. None has been surveyed as yet, and it seems to me that we are very conservative in asking the simple sum of $75,000 to make surveys in parts of the country where agriculture can be developed, where mining can be developed, so that the people who invest their money and their time and their means in taking up coal mines can have some assurance that they can get a title.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Washington be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to call the attention of the members of this House to the difficulties even of securing surveys in this country. I received a letter the other day from a constituent of mine where the survey has been pending for fourteen years in the State of Washington. I have received many letters referring to different surveys where they have been pending in this country for five, seven, ten, twelve, and even fifteen years. What is the difficulty? The difficulty is that even when the appropriation that is provided in this bill is apportioned almost entirely to this country it is not a sufficient amount to carry on and complete in a reasonable time the surveys required even for this country, so that we may expect far greater difficulties in Alaska. We may expect far greater time required in Alaska for completing these surveys. We find that the expense is far greater, and as I said a moment ago, an amendment will be offered increasing the limit of cost for surveys in Alaska. This is absolutely necessary, and the question is simply presented to this committee whether or not you will say by your actions here that the public-land laws of this country have been and shall continue to be extended to Alaska, but we will not provide any means or any way by which they are made effective.

I believe it is the desire of this committee, I believe it is the desire of the chairman of this committee, to bring about means by which the people who may go to Alaska and into that country may secure title to their lands, and the only way that they can be secured is by providing the means whereby the surveys can be made. I trust the chairman of this committee will allow this amendment to be agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think, possibly, that the increase of $75,000 of this appropriation means more of an increase to the balance of the country than it does to Alaska. I have no objection if the balance of the country needs it, nor have I any objection to the money being devoted to the surveys in Alaska if that is needed. Yet, if I understand aright, there never has been a township surveyed in Alaska. Money has been apportioned, but the season is so short and the price for surveying so low that as a result not a single line has been run. Am I correct?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. There is no desire, I am quite sure, on the part of the House to in any way hamper this Territory of ours. Three or four years ago we created some land offices up there and appointed some registers and receivers. They got up there in the fullness of time and have got away. Some are on the Yukon and have not got back yet. I think it took the combined efforts of the Committees on Appropriations and Public Lands to get rid of the personnel of these land offices, and there is possibly a little old iron safe up there now with a lot of blank books; there was never any money or papers put in the safe and the books never had a scratch in them. I recollect a year or two ago that we were absolutely called upon, in justice and equity, to take from the Treasury money to pay the salaries of these land officers because they did not know for the best part of a year that they had been turned out of office.

Mr. LACEY. They said they did not know; but anyhow that was the condition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There was no business for the land offices, because nobody could take up land for the very reason I have mentioned.

Mr. CANNON. There was nobody to take up the land, on the one hand——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. And they did not want them, on the other. It was a little bit, I think, like the stream out in Kansas, where a man who had bought a mill said on examination that there was no dam on the mill site and no mill by a dam site. Is that right? [Laughter.]

Mr. CUSHMAN. That is correct.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In the southwest corner of New Mexico there is a considerable amount of unsurveyed public land now in demand for actual settlement; besides, there is a mining district in there, and it is impossible for the miners to properly locate their mines without these surveys, so that the lack of surveys is keeping back the development and settlement of that portion of the Territory. It seems to me the proper policy is by promptly surveying all our public lands, to throw them open at the earliest possible moment for settlement.

Mr. CANNON. Well, "all" is a good deal. I think that as fast as our public lands are really needed for settlement they ought to be surveyed.

Now, there has been much exploration in Alaska. Why, sir, we have now, and have had for years, three or four parties up there spying out the land, making surveys, topographical, geological, etc.

Now, I do not suppose that much of this $75,000 will be spent in Alaska. Whatever is necessary to be spent in ascertaining the lines and surveying the land ought to be granted, and the surveys ought to be made. But care ought to be taken that we do not found an industry in Alaska—the surveying industry. I do not know that there is much danger of that; but the suggestion is worth something, because we did found a land-office industry up there.

I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. LACEY] whether, in his opinion, this amount of $75,000 ought to be appropriated, and also whether, in his opinion, it is practicable to change the law on this subject; because the money might just as well not be appropriated unless we go ahead and change the law so as to safely expend it.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the Committees on the Public Lands in both the Senate and the House have been wrestling with this question as to surveys in Alaska, and have agreed to a proposition in general terms, not yet fully laid before both Houses, although it has passed the Senate and has come over to the House to-day, providing for special surveys, not the ordinary surveys, but special surveys, covering the localities in which homesteads may be located. And really the money should be expended in such localities, rather than in general surveys. Ultimately some amendment ought to be put upon this bill so that this appropriation, of whatever amount it may be, shall be available for carrying out this new plan of survey when it shall be authorized by law, as no doubt it will be, because such seemed to be the mind of this House when we had the matter before it the other day.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says, I understand, that the act he speaks of has not yet passed. It has gone to conference, I believe.

Mr. LACEY. The intention was to have it go to conference, probably to-day or to-morrow. This matter as to the use of this money ought to contemplate to some extent surveys of that character, because they will be the most necessary.

In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I will say further that there ought to be a larger appropriation. If it is not needed it will not be used. This will not be like the case of the land offices in Alaska, which had to be occupied by officials, and the expense incurred, although there was no business for them to do. The Department will only make surveys which may seem necessary.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask an extension of time for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Would not the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] think it wise that this appropriation be made as it is and that then, when the House and Senate shall legislate, apt provision be included increasing the price for surveys and special surveys, and let such legislation cover the necessary appropriation?

Mr. LACEY. I think that the $400,000 asked for by the Department is not excessive, to begin with. As to the disposition of that part to be expended in Alaska, there ought, in my judgment, to be additional legislation, because if there should not be, I do not believe much use will be made of any allotment to be set apart to that district. I think that is about the situation.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman, then, is of opinion that this amendment ought to be adopted, and that otherwise there should be no change in the law?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. When the other bill comes in, the gentleman can make, possibly in conference between himself and the Senate conferees, an arrangement that will cover this modified form of survey which we are trying to arrange for the district of Alaska.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That only covers homesteads.

Mr. LACEY. It will cover also the coal lands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is, if we get such a law; but we may not.

Mr. LACEY. Well, if not, the surveys will not be needed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is no provision for a survey of these missions, which is urged here very strongly by the Commissioner of the Land Office, who sets out the necessity for the measure very forcibly, in addition to this other sum of $50,000. But if the gentleman thinks that can be covered in conference——

Mr. LACEY. I think the additional amount ought to be granted; but I have no idea that it will do any good after it is granted, unless there be some additional legislation, so as to enable the Land Department to use it. Contracts can not be made at the prices fixed by existing law. It takes a good deal of money to hire anything done in Alaska.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I make this suggestion: Let the bill stand as it is, and when the legislation which has been spoken of has been perfected we can make an appropriation in the deficiency bill of $75,000, or more if necessary, to carry out that legislation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We need it without that legislation.

Mr. LACEY. This amendment is prepared by the Land Office.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That will perfect the legislation you refer to, and then the appropriation can come in the deficiency bill instead of this.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not think that would cover it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why would it not?

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me that this legislation should be considered entirely independent of the legislation which has been referred to by the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands. This amount of money is needed for the ordinary and usual extension of the public-lands survey.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Do I understand that you want $75,000 additional after you make the other arrangement?

Mr. MONDELL. The legislation in question is simply legislation which will allow and authorize and empower settlers upon public lands, agricultural in character, to make surveys or have surveys made at their own expense, as we now provide in the case of mineral lands. The necessity for that legislation will remain in a lessened degree, it is true, after this appropriation is made, but the necessity will surely remain when you think of the enormous extent of that great Territory and recall that the appropriation of $75,000 can provide but for the survey of a few tracts here and there.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But I understand this to be the truth——

Mr. MONDELL. So that that legislation, in my opinion, does not conflict with this in any way, it does not relate to it in any way, and should not be considered in connection with this legislation. This is for the general extension of the survey. The other is a provision which gives the settler on agricultural lands in Alaska the poor privilege of paying for his own survey.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. The gentleman from Washington has asked for $75,000 additional for a specific purpose.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And the contention is, can you use that without further legislation? No; you can not.

Mr. MONDELL. Personally I am of the opinion that you can make use of it without a line of legislation; that the highest rates allowed in the bill for general surveys of Alaska will pay for the surveys there, if the Department does not insist, as I understand the Department did insist, in former survey contracts, upon certain unusual provisions with regard to the marking of the survey; but if it be thought that the maximum rate for surveys is not great enough it is easy enough to increase the maximum rate by one, two, three, or five dollars a mile, as may be deemed best. That is a very simple matter, but in my opinion the maximum rate is high enough now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That could not apply here in the ordinary surveys inside the States. It must apply to Alaska. Therefore it is dependent on this legislation spoken of as coming in the future.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not seem to me that it is related to it or dependent on it, because that legislation does not have anything to do with public-land surveys, but gives an entryman in Alaska opportunity to pay for his own survey and have his survey accepted in case he is not willing to wait until the public-land surveys are extended. It does not relate to the public-land surveys.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, we have reported upon this bill every dollar that was estimated for by the Secretary of the Interior—$325,000. That is for surveys throughout the whole country. Now they come and move that amendment for $75,000 on account of Alaska. Hence I say that I do not want to oppose the appropriation. I would oppose any change of the law in respect to the rate here, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] says if you do not change the law you need not appropriate the money. Now, if the gentleman from Iowa feels sure enough that he is going to change the law—that we can get at it—why, perhaps we would as well let the appropriation go and the amendment be adopted.

Mr. LACEY. I would state unless it can be successfully used it will simply be covered back. There was an appropriation also to Alaska last year, and it was not used because under the limit they could not use it.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to my friend to withdraw his amendment and change it so that it will read for Alaska.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That will do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What is the suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. Change it so as to provide that $75,000 of it be used in Alaska.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have an amendment covering that point.

Mr. CANNON. Let the gentleman's amendment be adopted. Perhaps that is the safer way.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Very well; let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, on page 80, amend by inserting after the words "United States," in line 24, the following:

"And provided further, That $75,000 of said sum, or so much thereof as the demand for surveys may warrant, be applied to the survey of public lands, mission, and other reservations in Alaska, such amount to continue available for contracting until the entire sum shall have been contracted."

Mr. CANNON. I must make the point of order against that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Against the latter part?

Mr. CANNON. Well, it makes an indefinite appropriation and a continuing appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to explain why I put the last provision in there. I am not so particular about that myself, but it is suggested by the Secretary of the Interior in his report; and on account of the distance to Alaska, and by reason of the fact that mail communication is the only means of communication that the Department has, that we have no telegraph or telephone lines or anything of that sort, he said we ought to provide that this amount shall be available until the contracts have been made; because a contract may be advertised for, bids may be received, they may be forwarded here to the Land Office at Washington, which takes two or three months, and by the time the Department here gets around to let the contract the year expires and the appropriation then is not available, and that is the reason he suggests this provision, that the amount shall continue available until contracted for. Now, I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that if a report comes in showing that the whole amount of this money has not been contracted for, then the appropriation in the subsequent bill need not be so large. I can really see no objection to it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Under the amendment as you have drawn it, if none of this amount could be used in Alaska it could all be used in other sections of the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is true.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Confine it to Alaska. Do not make it a continuing appropriation, and perhaps then there would be no objection to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. You suggest confining it to Alaska?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Yes. If it is not used, there will be another Congress next winter, and you can get another appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my colleague that on second thought I am afraid to go to segregating. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] may want to segregate for New Mexico. Other gentlemen may want to segregate and divide up this amount, whereas it has always been left heretofore to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was going to suggest that of course the Secretary of the Interior can apportion the $75,000 to Alaska, and I think that is all right.

Mr. CANNON. I think we had not better enter upon the practice of segregating.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to suggest to my colleague, the chairman of the committee, that you will be compelled to segregate in this instance, because the rate paid for surveying must be different.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, we are not going to change the rate.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If you are going to have any work done in Alaska that will have to be done.

Mr. CANNON. That depends on legislation yet to come.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that at these missions and other places they can utilize the appropriation under the present limit.

Mr. CANNON. I would oppose any change as to rate.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the gentleman insists on his point of order, the other thing amounts to nothing, because the Secretary of the Interior can apportion the money to Alaska anyway.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The present rate will be sufficient to do the work in New Mexico, because that is very near home, and the work is very necessary to the development of that country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I withdraw the amendment. I think it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington withdraws the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79 amend by striking out, in line 19, the words "and the district of Alaska," and by inserting after the word "lines," in line 25, "and in the district of Alaska there may be allowed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for surveys and resurveys rates not exceeding $18 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $14 for township, and $10 for section lines; and for the survey and resurvey of lands heavily timbered, mountainous, or covered with dense undergrowth there may be allowed by the said Commissioner rates not exceeding $35 per linear mile for standard and meander lines, $33 for township, and $30 for section lines."

Mr. CANNON. I must make the point of order on that. It is legislation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the gentleman will reserve it——

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I will. I do it not in a spirit of unfriendliness to the service at all, but I think the Committee on the Public Lands ought to exercise the jurisdiction and fix the limit.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment is undoubtedly subject to the point of order, but I desire to call the attention of the members of the committee to the reasons submitted by the surveyor-general of Alaska, as to the necessity for an increased allowance for surveys in that Territory.

He says:

First. This Territory is remote from a base of supplies, and the cost of provisions is therefore considerably higher, even on the seacoast, than in the other surveying districts.

Second. As most of the lands to be surveyed are more or less remote from the coast, and as there have been no roads opened up in this country, all supplies for parties operating in the field will have to be transported to them by means of pack animals or by men employed for that purpose, and in either case the cost will be very heavy.

Third. The cost of labor is much higher than in the other surveying districts. The mining companies and other enterprises pay good wages to their employees, and laborers will not engage for this line of work for a less wage than can be obtained in other lines of service; and the expense of transporting assistants from Seattle or other points remote from the district would be so heavy as not to relieve the situation to any considerable extent.

Fourth. The climate of the coast region of this district is an obstacle to progress in making surveys in those localities. The humidity along the coast of Alaska is excessive. Cloudiness is the rule and not the exception during the greater portion of the summer months. There are many consecutive days when it is impossible to make either the solar or stellar observations required by the Manual of Surveying Instructions. This is a serious hindrance and is taken into account by surveyors when considering proposals to execute surveys where these conditions prevail.

Another detriment to obtaining bids at present rates is the shortness of the season in which surveying can be done. This is especially true of the interior regions. The summers in those localities are short and warm, pushing vegetation to maturity rapidly; but it soon passes away and is succeeded by very cold weather, during which it is impracticable to prosecute work in the field, and therefore in contracts of any considerable magnitude it would require two seasons to fulfill them, which would add heavily to the expense.

Furthermore, it is the purpose of this office to prohibit the use of wooden posts or other perishable material for marking the corners of surveys, and in some instances, because of inability to procure stones of the required size, it may be necessary to use iron pipes, which would add somewhat to the cost.

Experience has also shown the futility of endeavoring to obtain execution of surveys in Alaska by experienced deputies for the prices now allowed by law. In the spring of 1901 invitations for proposals to make a survey of base and meridian lines in the Copper River country were advertised and also mailed to quite a number of deputies in Alaska, but all except two declined to make a bid, assigning as reasons in most cases that the rates were too low and the risks too great. The two who submitted bids were, comparatively speaking, unacquainted with the difficulties likely to be encountered in carrying out the contract; and it may not be amiss to say that the one to whom the contract was awarded has not attempted to perform the work he contracted to do and manifests but little disposition to do so.

Taking all of the foregoing facts into consideration, I am constrained to believe it will cost at least 100 per cent more to execute a surveying contract in Alaska than in the other surveying districts, and I therefore respectfully recommend that rates for making public land surveys in Alaska be increased 100 per cent at least, or what I deem would be more advantageous to the Government, make provision for executing them at a per diem rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to return to the amendment offered by me a few moments ago, to line 3 on page 79, and to withdraw the amendment then offered, and offer in lieu thereof the following amendment:

After the word "except," in line 3, page 79, insert the words "in the case of."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered a moment ago by the gentleman from Wyoming was withdrawn at that time. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79, line 3, after the word "except," insert the words "in the case of."

Mr. MONDELL. It has been suggested, Mr. Chairman, that the language which my amendment would have stricken out does provide for surveys within forest reservations. If that be true, I wish to make that language clearer, and I think the amendment now offered will have that effect.

Mr. CANNON. What does the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands say about it?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, the amount of surveys inside of these forest reservations will necessarily be small. A very large portion of the land held by private owners inside of the reservations has already been exchanged for land outside, and that land of course would not need to be surveyed. On the other hand, there are many homesteaders who have located on lands within the reservations prior to the setting apart of the reserves and have made farms there, and are entitled to have their boundaries established as they propose to remain within the reservation.

Their entry was legal; they do not wish to exchange their lands, and they have a right to remain. While they have the right to exchange, it is not compulsory on them, and there ought to be no objection to making these surveys of these comparatively few tracts. In many localities there is a very great deal of private land that is within these reservations. For instance, the town of Deadwood, I am told, is within a forest reservation, and many locations that have not been surveyed, and where these surveys are necessary, the limitation ought not to be there, because it is easy enough for the Department to prevent a misapplication of any of this money and to limit the surveys, so far as may be necessary.

Mr. MONDELL. The purpose of the language now offered is simply to make the intent of the bill, as interpreted by the gentleman from Iowa, clear. That is, that the Land Office shall have authority to survey lands within forest reservations.

Mr. LACEY. There will be a comparatively small amount, I think, that will have to be surveyed.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman approve the provision?

Mr. MONDELL. I am giving no new authority but that which they now have, and I want to make the language clear.

Mr. LACEY. I think such surveys ought to be permitted, not ordered by law.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not changing any provision of the law.

Mr. CANNON. Vote!

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend—I do not know just what the lines are—the sum now carried by the bill for public land surveys. I wish to increase the amount appropriated for surveys from $400,000 to $530,000.

Mr. CANNON. It has already been increased from $325,000 to $400,000.

Mr. MONDELL. My amendment is to increase it by $130,000 additional. The amendment as already adopted increases the amount to $400,000. I move to amend by striking out $400,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $530,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already agreed to that portion of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. We have passed it, and it has already been amended.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand we have passed the paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to cut the gentleman off from an opportunity to take the sense of the committee. I do not believe in his amendment. I am willing by unanimous consent, so far as I am concerned, that he may be allowed to offer his amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not wish to ask unanimous consent. I could not have offered this amendment until this time, because we have just closed the reading of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 78 strike out "four hundred" and insert "five hundred and thirty;" so that it will read "$530,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will not take up the time of the committee to any considerable length in the discussion of my amendment. I simply say that if the amendment is adopted I will move at the proper time to strike out the second paragraph on page 85, which makes an appropriation of $130,000 for survey by the Geological Survey of lands within forest reservations. As I understand, the amendment just adopted makes it clear that the General Land Office can carry on necessary surveys within the forest reservations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that both the Geological Survey and the General Land Office should be conducting these surveys. The surveys are necessary, clearly. There is no controversy upon that point. The General Land Office, as I said a moment ago, has charge of all land surveys of the Government, is the custodian of the maps and plats, and makes the maps of the Government land. They have the machinery to carry on this work. They issue the manual under which these surveys must be executed, and, in my opinion, these surveys can be more economically, more uniformly, and more properly executed if executed by one bureau of the Interior Department than if executed by two.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I hope the gentleman's motion will not prevail. We already have increased this appropriation from $325,000 to $400,000. The full estimate has been given, and then they come in with $75,000 more, and we give that. Now, the gentleman says that he will, on page 85, if this amendment of his is adopted, move to strike out the following words: "For continuation of the survey of the public lands that have been or may hereafter be designated as forest reserves, $130,000, to be immediately available." Now, I would have to antagonize that motion when he gets to it, because, whatever the language may be here, the Geological Survey, as I am informed, only surveys boundaries.

Mr. MONDELL. That is not altogether true, for they have surveyed considerable areas within the boundaries of forest reserves.

Mr. CANNON. I am quite willing when we get over here to make that available for boundaries only, but I do not think there is any necessity for further increasing this amount for the public survey. I think the Committee of the Whole has dealt quite liberally with that appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation of $31,500 for the resurvey and reestablishment of the boundary line between the State of Colorado and the Territories of New Mexico and Oklahoma, contained in the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for prior years, and for other purposes, is hereby continued and made available until June 30, 1904.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 82, at the end of line 4, insert:

"Survey of the boundary line between Idaho and Montana—

"For the ascertainment, survey, marking, and permanent establishment of that portion of the boundary line between the States of Idaho and Montana from the intersection of the thirty-fourth meridian of west longitude from Washington with the Continental Divide; thence northwestwardly following said Continental Divide and the crest of the Bitter Root range of mountains to the intersection with the thirty-ninth meridian of west longitude from Washington, an estimated distance of 450 miles, including the expense of an examination of the survey in the field, the rate of compensation per mile to the surveyor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to include the cost of the preparation of the plats and field notes of the survey in triplicate, $50,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, on the 17th of January the Secretary of the Treasury transmitted an estimate covering this item. I do not understand that the Committee on Appropriations have any special objection to the item, but the question was as to the urgency of the survey at this time. I have talked with those having knowledge of the condition as regards the public-land surveys, and I learn that there are a number of public-land surveys now under contract which can not be closed or completed until this, the last State boundary line in the Union to be run, shall have been established. There have been a number of surveys made in the past of public lands the completion of which was rendered impossible by the fact that the surveyors ran to a point, as near as they could tell, where they were approaching the State boundary and were compelled to discontinue the work because of the fact that the boundary had never been established.

People from Montana have informed me recently that, owing to discovery of mineral in the Mullen and Burke end of the Coeur d'Alene mining region, mines have been located along the summit of the range, about the point where it is understood the State line will finally be traced; and there is difficulty in establishing the exact location of mining claims, owing to the fact that the State boundary has never been established.

The newly elected member of the House from Montana, Mr. Dixon, who has personal knowledge of the situation, told me recently that there was a necessity for the survey, an immediate necessity, and he earnestly urged that the work be undertaken. I think that, in view of the necessity as regards the location of mining claims, the fact that the Government surveys are being extended toward this boundary in both directions, and that this is the only State boundary not marked and established, the survey should be completed at an early date.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is the second or third time that this estimate has come to Congress for an appropriation to survey this boundary line. It was not reported favorably last year or, as I recollect, the year before last. It has to be surveyed some time. We left it out again without any particular investigation, supposing that settlement had not gone far enough in that section of the country to require that expenditure. Since then I have talked with gentlemen and a number of others who seemed to think that it is important that the survey should be made, and reenforcing the somewhat urgent recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior for the past two years.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For gauging the streams and determining the water supply of the United States, and for the investigation of underground currents and artesian wells, and the preparation of reports upon the best methods of utilizing the water resources, $100,000.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out the word "one" and inserting the word "two," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $200,000.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriation made for this purpose by existing law, as I understand, is $200,000. That sum has been none too large, as I learn from gentlemen who have studied the question and who are interested in this very important subject. The value of these measurements and researches is very great, so that, instead of decreasing the appropriation for this purpose in the present bill, it seems to me it would have been better to increase it. But I have contented myself with moving to restore the amount appropriated by current law, and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that, considering the importance of the subject and the value to the public, in all portions of the country, of the service thus provided for, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the history of this appropriation is that at the last session the estimate was for $100,000. The Committee on Appropriations recommended the appropriation of the full amount of the estimate. On the floor of the House (the Senate afterwards concurring) the amount was increased to $200,000; and this year the estimate comes to us for $200,000. Your committee thought it would take the temper of the House at this time on the question whether we would not go back and give for this purpose all that was asked a year ago. But when I see my distinguished friend from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], who, I think, believes in this appropriation, and when I see the brethren all around me, a dozen of them, seeking recognition to offer an amendment of this kind—because many of them have told me that some gentleman has sent them this amendment—and judging from the number of letters that I have from various geologists scattered all through the country, and from distinguished citizens, not geologists, in my own State, and considering how important water is, especially in the valley of the Mississippi and its tributaries, and the Middle West, where half the year we have water sufficient for the geese, who multiply by the thousand [laughter], I suspect upon the whole that if I shall sit down and quit talking, after having made this strenuous opposition to this increase, it is very likely that many gentlemen will vote for the amendment and that it may be adopted. So far as I am concerned, having thus protested, and believing that $100,000 is quite enough, yet recognizing what seems to me to be the temper of the Committee of the Whole as manifested, I am ready for a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. ADAMSON was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for the United States Geological Survey, $1,026,570.

Mr. CANNON. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "million," in line 9, page 85, the words "one hundred and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior may authorize such expenditure as may be necessary, not exceeding $1,500, for rent of office accommodations in the city of Washington for the reclamation service, established by act approved June 17, 1902, entitled "An act appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States and Territories to the construction of irrigation works for the reclamation of arid lands."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee why the language adopted in this paragraph is used. I understand that the Geological Survey has to do with a large variety of public work—investigations under the Government. It has a building here for the purpose of carrying on the work of its various divisions and bureaus, and it rents some offices outside; and this rent account and the account for books and other publications, carried in the next paragraph, are ordinarily charged against the general appropriation. I do not quite understand why the room that may be required by any additional work laid upon the Geological Survey by reason of the passage of what is known as the irrigation act should lead to the singling out or separation in the appropriation bill of the expenses directly or indirectly traceable to that act.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I suggest to the gentleman that the original act said "and other expenses." Under the original act all these expenses are chargeable to that fund.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not so understand. Does the gentleman understand that this sum is chargeable to the irrigation fund under the language of the act?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the point of order being sustained and the whole paragraph going out. I am not hungering and thirsting to make this provision; but when I explain to the gentleman the necessity for putting it in, I think he will admit it at once.

Mr. MONDELL. I rose for the purpose of obtaining light.

Mr. CANNON. Twenty years ago it was found on investigation that from contingent funds and general appropriations the departments in Washington were in the habit of renting buildings according to their own sweet will, and sometimes that will was evidenced by somebody who wanted more room although he was already lost in space.

So let us enact legislation that no building should be rented in Washington unless expressly provided for by law and appropriation made therefor. Now, the irrigation act, with the enactment of which the gentleman had so much to do, set aside the proceeds of certain lands for reclamation of arid lands, and it provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall proceed to perform, survey, and so on. The expenses of irrigation and the utilization of that fund are payable from those proceeds, and as I understand it—the gentleman knows more about it than I do, however—the Secretary of the Interior in the exercise of his power put the expenditure, in part or altogether, of this fund under the Geological Bureau—entirely, my friend says. Now, in performing this work it is alleged that it is necessary to have an office in Washington, with some employees, and because of the provision of law that you can not rent offices in Washington unless expressly authorized they could not have that office here at all. If it were not for that law which we passed twenty years ago, we could have gone on and rented this building and paid for it from this fund.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to ask the gentleman if this provision for further office room could not have been made without any reference to the irrigation act.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it could be paid from the general moneys in the Treasury, but the law does not contemplate that. The reclamation law contemplates that the expenses of administering that law shall be paid from the fund set aside for that purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. It does not seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is anything in the irrigation law that justifies this sort of expenditure. This is clearly to my mind new legislation, and I question whether it is wise legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not think so at all, but if the gentleman insists that it be new legislation, I have no objection to the point of order being sustained and having the paragraph go out. Then it leaves these surveys without offices in the District, and they would go on and administer it as best they could.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, if my colleague, the chairman of the committee, will permit, if they should go further, and rent offices without authority under the law, instead of paying $1,500 they might be paying $5,000 out of that fund. There are two things accomplished by this clause. First, that under the law they may have the right to rent.

Mr. MONDELL. Under what law?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Under the old law that they can not rent without express authority from Congress. This gives them authority and, in the second place, it limits them to $1,500; whereas, if you strike out that section and they should go on and rent without authority, which they might do, they might take $5,000 from that fund instead of $1,500.

Mr. MONDELL. My objection to this provision is simply this, that we have a law under which we are moving forward—not very rapidly, having not as yet entered upon any construction, but I believe carefully, wisely, and judiciously—toward the construction of some irrigation works. Now, those of us who are most directly interested in those irrigation works are anxious that the appropriation or the fund raised under the irrigation law shall not be frittered away paying expenses here in Washington, clerk hire, rent of buildings, books, etc. The amount available is not large when you take into consideration the importance of the project, and we are rather averse to having it reduced by expenditures of this character. We have very large river and harbor appropriations every year, and I will ask the gentleman, for information, if, should the Treasury Department desire additional rooms on account of river and harbor work, would you charge up the rent of those rooms to projects for river and harbor improvement, for instance?

Mr. CANNON. Well, if my friend asks me, I will say that the two cases are not similar. A law passed devoting the proceeds of the sale of certain lands to the reclamation of arid lands.

Before that those moneys went into the Treasury. The law provided for the reclamation of those lands and provided that it should be done under the Secretary of the Interior. Now that is a separate fund. There is no separate fund set aside for the improvement of rivers and harbors. Now, then, this expenditure, to utilize this money, is just as legitimate and necessary that you should make the surveys and should get ready with plans, as it is that you should have a spade to throw up the dirt to construct the dam, and I suspect, it being placed by the Secretary of the Interior under this bureau, that it is really necessary to have an office in the city of Washington. If my friend thinks not, I am perfectly willing that it should go out.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say I think there is probably no question as to the necessity for those accommodations.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will my friend permit me to refer him to the original act approved June 17, 1902? After reciting the expenditure of money it goes on and provides for the payment of all other expenditures provided for in this act, whatever the expenditures may be.

Mr. MONDELL. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is no such expenditure as this provided for in the act.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Whatever may occur in the future, whatever expenses may come.

Mr. MONDELL. I had a little something to do with drawing the section that provides for expenditures under the irrigation act; and, if I recollect, we were particularly careful not to authorize this class of expenditures.

Mr. PAYNE. My friend does not mean to say that, does he?

Mr. MONDELL. I have said it.

Mr. PAYNE. The House were assured last June that this irrigation business would not cost anything; that it would be self-supporting, because every dollar of the expenditure was to come from the sale of the arid lands. I think my friend is mistaken in his recollection that this act was drawn with any reference to charging part of the expense of this irrigation upon the public Treasury otherwise than from the result of the sale of the lands.

Mr. MONDELL. I think none of the advocates of that measure ever suggested that office expenditures in Washington should be loaded upon the fund. We did say that as far as the examinations in the field were concerned, and labor in connection with construction, it should be borne by the fund. But we did have it in mind that there might be some expenditures of this character which we would not care to have the fund burdened with. That is why I object to this provision. But I am warned by gentlemen who are better versed in these matters than I that if I insist upon my point of order and the Chair shall sustain it, and I believe he would, then we are liable to find ourselves without accommodations for those engaged in the work of reclamation; that the reclamation force is liable to be set adrift like an orphan on the street, without a home or shelter for their heads.

In other words, this item simply holds us up, and while it is, in my opinion, clearly subject to a point of order, we shall have to accept it or else run the risk of having the work hampered or suspended, but I give notice that I shall oppose all extensions of expenditures of this kind chargeable to the irrigation fund.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I am anxious to have the work go on, and it is threatened that the work will not go on if I insist on my point of order, I withdraw the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous objects, Department of the Interior.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Commissioner of Railroads: For Commissioner, $4,500; 1 clerk, $1,000; 1 assistant messenger, $720; in all, $6,220: Provided, That the office of Commissioner of Railroads is hereby continued until the 30th day of June, 1904, when the same shall terminate and the duties of the Commissioner shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Interior, together with the records and files of the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear the gentleman explain that amendment, and tell us what it means.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the office of Railroad Commissioner was terminated by an act of Congress passed a year ago. It was thought that during that time for which it was continued the business of the office could be completed. I understand that is not the case, and that it will take another year to conclude the business of the office in order that it may be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior in a proper manner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Crater Lake National Park: For protection and improvement of the Crater Lake National Park, and repairing and extension of roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, as it is about time for the committee to rise, and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CUSHMAN] desires to offer an amendment, after which I will move that the committee rise, I ask unanimous consent that we move forward in the bill temporarily to line 9, page 87, to enable the gentleman to offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to move forward to page 87, line 9, in order that the gentleman from Washington may offer an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 87, at the end of line 9, after the words "two thousand dollars," insert the following as a new section:

"Mount Rainier National Park: For the management, protection, and improvement of Mount Rainier National Park, construction of roads, bridges, fences, and trails therein, and the improvement of existing roads, $21,000, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the surveys for roads and the work of construction thereof shall be performed under the supervision of an engineer officer of the Army, to be detailed for that purpose on the request of the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. CANNON. I want to offer a substitute for that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 115, after line 22, insert:

"Mount Rainier National Park: To enable the Secretary of War to cause a survey to be made of the most practicable route for a wagon road into said park and toward the construction of said road after the survey herein provided for shall have been made, $10,000."

Mr. CANNON. I hope that the substitute will be accepted.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I accept the substitute.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman accepts the substitute. I am ready for a vote.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yellowstone National Park: For the administration and protection of the Yellowstone National Park, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $5,000.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "five thousand" in line 15, page 86, after the word "Interior," and insert "seven thousand five hundred;" so as to read $7,500.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, the object is keep for the buffalos or something of that kind?

Mr. LACEY. The increase of the amount, Mr. Chairman, is rendered necessary by the fact that in the last session of Congress an arrangement was made to try to restore the buffalo herd in the Yellowstone Park. Three bulls were got from the Goodnight herd and from other different herds, so as to secure new blood, and 18 cows from the Flathead agency herd. The herd that is in the park now are all pure blood and in very fine condition, with every prospect of being successfully maintained, and in order to be sure that the herd will be properly cared for this small additional appropriation of $2,500, making $7,500, was thought necessary by the Department and by Major Pitcher, the superintendent of the park. They asked for more.

The Secretary of the Interior asked for $30,000. The amount has been cut down to $5,000; but, from the best information I have been able to get, $2,500 will be sufficient to cover this exigency. There are about 23 wild buffaloes that are now in the park somewhere. They are very wild. They go to the tops of the mountains and keep out of range, and the attempt will be made to gather them in with the other herd, which is really domestic.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, just to see if we can not agree about it.

Mr. LACEY. I thought that we had agreed about it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I want to suggest that my friend modify his amendment, and after the word "Interior" insert the following language: "including $2,500 for maintenance of buffaloes;" and strike out "five thousand" and insert the words "seven thousand five hundred." In other words, I want to be dead sure that it goes to my friend's friend, the buffalo.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I want to interrogate the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. Well, I have no fear that the amount will go there. The amendment suggested is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman modifies his amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Some forage will probably be needed for a time, until the animals get used to their new surroundings and to tide them over severe snowstorms. There should be a sufficient sum to insure giving this little herd a fair chance, and I believe that in a few years a fine buffalo herd will be one of the most engaging features of the park.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On February 10, 1903:

H. R. 15747. An act directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by George A. Bartlett, disbursing clerk, in favor of Fannie T. Sayles, executrix, and others.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Interior" insert "including $2,500 for maintenance of buffaloes, $7,500."

Mr. LACEY. It includes fencing, care for them, and hay.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I do not think the gentleman understood my interrogation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. LACEY having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17202, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HERMANN GAUSS.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I have a report from the Committee on Accounts which I am instructed to present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 416.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment to Hermann Gauss of the sum of $500 for extra expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as assistant clerk of said committee by detail.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that is extra pay?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, yes. It has been done right along.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I know it has been done right along, but we passed a law here some time back that this extra pay for services had to stop. I will say to the gentleman that it will take 180 votes to pass it this evening.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I withdraw the resolution.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1903.

Prayer by Rev. F. J. PRETTYMAN, of the city of Washington.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BEVERIDGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved.

VETO MESSAGE—KATIE A. NOLAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads:

To the Senate:

I return herewith Senate bill No. 4308, entitled "An act for the relief of Katie A. Nolan."

Executive approval of this bill is withheld for the reason that it appears to be a duplication of legislation. The deficiency act of July 1, 1902, contained the following provision:

"To enable the Postmaster-General to pay Katie A. Nolan balance of salary due her as stamp clerk in the post-office at San Antonio, Tex., from July 1, 1889, to July 1, 1893, $800."

Under this provision of said act Katie A. Nolan, the beneficiary named in this bill, was paid $800 by the postmaster at San Antonio, Tex., by direction of the Postmaster-General, as shown by the records of the Post-Office Department.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 11, 1903.

SLOOP SALLY MARIAH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel sloop Sally Mariah, John Sells, master; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7185) to authorize the board of commissioners for the Connecticut bridge and highway district to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River at Hartford, in the State of Connecticut.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16656) regulating the importation of breeding animals; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15429) to increase the efficiency of the Army.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McCOMAS. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield for just a moment to me.

Mr. CULLOM. I withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. McCOMAS. I had given notice that on to-day I would move to take up the bill (H. R. 3076) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or any Territory or the District of Columbia, thereby securing better products, and for other purposes. It is useless to antagonize the motion of the Senator from Illinois under the circumstances, and I give notice that at the earliest opportunity I shall renew that motion.

Mr. QUAY. In view of what has been stated by the Senator from Maryland, I desire simply to repeat the notice which I gave the other day, that I shall be compelled, when the Senator from Maryland makes a motion to proceed to the consideration of the eight-hour bill, to antagonize it with the statehood bill, unless the Senator from Maryland and those obstructionists with whom he is acting will agree to fix a day for voting on the statehood bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 13, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

The injunction of secrecy was removed from the proceedings of the Senate in connection with the consideration and ratification of a convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed on January 24, 1903, providing for the settlement of questions between the two countries with respect to the boundary line between the Territory of Alaska and the British possessions in North America.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we hallow Thy name and would glorify Thee in our lives. We thank Thee for Thy care over us as a nation and for the manifold blessings Thou hast bestowed upon us, especially in the great men "who have breathed their spirits into the institutions of our country; who have stamped their characters on the pillars of their age; who have poured their heart's blood into the channels of the public prosperity." We are forcibly reminded to-day of our beloved Lincoln, and we thank Thee for his intellectual powers, his warm, tender, loving heart, and that strong, rugged character which kept him amid the storms and conflicts of life to right, truth, and justice, "with malice toward none and charity for all." Help us to copy his virtues, that we may leave our tasks well done. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE CONNECTICUT RIVER AT HARTFORD, CONN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 7185) to authorize the board of commissioners for the Connecticut bridge highway district to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River at Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, which was privileged.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, is this the House bill that has been read?

The SPEAKER. It is the Senate bill that has been read.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I move the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move that the similar House bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the similar House bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 15449, an act to increase the efficiency of the Army, and I ask that the statement only be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa calls up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15449) and asks that the statement only be read and that the reading of the report be omitted. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House on the Senate amendments on H. R. 15449, an act to increase the efficiency of the Army, make the following statement:

Amendment No. 1 of the Senate, striking out the exception as to the general officers serving with the line, is agreed to with an amendment. It puts the general officers on the same basis as all the other officers of the general staff, and makes it so that none of them can be redetailed without service with the line except in case of emergency or in time of war.

Amendment No. 2: The conferees agree to the Senate amendment by inserting the word "of" after the word "or," so that it will read, "or of the Secretary of War under the direction of the President."

Amendment No. 3 makes the Chief of Artillery hereafter a brigadier-general. As agreed to in conference, it provides that the number of brigadier-generals of the line do not increase, and reduces the number of brigadier-generals of the line, exclusive of Chief of Artillery, after a vacancy shall occur in the grade of brigadier-general, to fourteen.

Amendment No. 4 is that provision of the bill as it passed the Senate embodied in section 6, and provided for the advance grade on retirement of certain officers who served during the civil war. The Senate recedes from its amendment on the ground that a provision is in the Army bill embodying the same principle.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
WM. SULZER,
Conferees on part of the House.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 4.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2, page 3 of the bill, after the word "emergency," insert the word "or;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "or" of said amendment insert the word "of;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "and," in the second line of said amendment, insert the following: "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," and after the word "brigadier-general," in line 3 of said amendment, insert the following: "and when the next vacancy occurs in the office of brigadier-general of the line, it shall not be filled, and thereafter the number of brigadier-generals of the line, exclusive of the Chief of Artillery, shall not exceed fourteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL,
RICHARD WAYNE PARKER,
WM. SULZER,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. M. COCKRELL,
J. V. QUARLES,
J. B. FORAKER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Am I correct in understanding that the retirement feature, which was discussed so freely in the House, has been stricken out of the staff bill and is continued in the Army appropriation bill?

Mr. HULL. The Army appropriation bill has not yet been considered in conference, and no agreement come to on it. This is the only bill that we have had before us in conference so far, and in this bill as to the proposed retirement with advanced grade the Senate receded, so that it is entirely out of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is the staff bill as it passed the House, substantially, the only difference being the promotion of the Chief of Artillery——

Mr. HULL. There are three amendments we agree to, two with amendments and one without amendment. The first amendment struck out the provision which allowed the general officers to serve without being sent back to the line for two years. The Senate cut that out and we agreed to it. It puts the general officers on the same basis with all the other officers of the general staff, and makes it so that none of them can be redetailed without service with the line except in the case of an emergency.

The next amendment was recommended by the Secretary of War in regard to the jurisdiction of the chief of staff by inserting the word "of" in the Senate amendment after the word "or," so that it will read "or of the Secretary of War under the direction of the President." The third amendment refers to the Artillery Corps and when the bill shall take effect.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HERMANN GAUSS.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. By direction of the Committee on Accounts I present the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 416.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment to Herman Gauss of the sum of $500 for extra and expert services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions as assistant clerk of said committee by detail.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard in opposition to this resolution.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to have a few minutes to be heard on this report.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MADDOX. Twenty minutes.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Can not the gentleman get along with ten minutes?

Mr. MADDOX. I could get along without saying anything, but I would like to have twenty minutes.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I should be glad to yield to the gentleman ten minutes, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman himself has an hour, and I think I ought to have some time; I have something of interest to say upon this subject.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Personally, I should be glad to grant the time to the gentleman, but I am obliged to go away very soon, and I would be glad to have it as short a time as the gentleman can get along with.

Mr. MADDOX. Twenty minutes will not be much longer. I want to call the attention of the House to the acts of Congress.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. All right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH] yields twenty minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, the resolution now before the House provides for the payment of $500 extra to a clerk in the Invalid Pensions Committee. Who this clerk is I do not know. He may deserve this amount for all I know. But the fact to which I want to call the attention of the House, especially of those members who were here a year ago, is that at that time there was developed here a state of facts which, if not a scandal, was certainly no credit to the House of Representatives—a state of facts growing out of this very practice of allowing extra pay for services in this House. Gentlemen who were members at the time to which I refer will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. This man is not on the pay roll of the House——

Mr. MADDOX. I understand that.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. And the law to which the gentleman refers does not apply to this gentleman. He is detailed by the Commissioner of Pensions to sit in the Committee on Invalid Pensions to protect as well the Government as to make fair report of the condition of special pension bills.

Mr. MADDOX. If he is sent here to take care of the interest of the Government, I should say that he is a mighty poor expert, judging from some of the pension cases which we have to consider here.

Now, let me ask a few questions. In the first place, what does this man receive from the Pension Office? What is his salary?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I am not certain as to that. I will ask the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], the chairman of the committee, to answer that question. I think he is familiar with the facts.

Mr. SULLOWAY. His salary, as I understand, is $1,200; I do not know with certainty, but I presume that such is the case.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman "presumes" that such is his salary.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. He is a regular examiner, and the gentleman tells me that the regular pay——

Mr. MADDOX. How long has he been serving here as an expert in your committee?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Personally, I know that since I have been here—in the Fifty-sixth Congress and in this Congress—he has been on duty, and I believe for some years previous.

Mr. MADDOX. Does he do any work at all in the Pension Office?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I understand that he does while Congress is not in session. By act of Congress he is detailed here during the sessions of Congress to look after special pension bills.

Mr. MADDOX. What I want to get at is this: What does he do during the vacation of Congress?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Well, when not employed here——

Mr. MADDOX. Is it not the fact——

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. When not employed in looking after his duties here he performs the duties of an examiner in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. MADDOX. Is it not a fact that since he has been appointed here under an act of Congress he has not served a day in the Pension Office?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. That is not the fact. And I want to say further to the gentleman that this clerk has been allowed one or two stenographers to assist him, and he has worked day and night during the Fifty-sixth and the Fifty-seventh Congresses—even on the Sabbath day, right along—to keep up with the work. There is not a more faithful officer in the United States than Mr. Gauss; and the same may be said of Mr. Porter, who occupies a similar position in connection with the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not know this gentleman, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. It is evident the gentleman from Georgia does not know what this clerk does, nor does he know the man; if he did, he would not make any objection to this resolution.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, listen to me a moment and answer this question: How many clerks have you in that Pension Committee?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I am not informed as to that. The gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY] can answer.

Mr. SULLOWAY. We have one clerk and an assistant, where there used to be five.

Mr. MADDOX. How about the two stenographers who have been waiting on this gentleman? Who pays them?

Mr. SULLOWAY. There is only one stenographer proper. The clerk and assistant clerk are both typewriters.

Mr. MADDOX. And they are waiting on——

Mr. SULLOWAY. The gentleman will pardon me a moment further. Mr. Gauss has been detailed from the Pension Bureau. He is on the pay roll at the Bureau as an examiner. His business here is, when papers come up, to go through them and analyze them. In one instance there was evidence to the extent of more than a million words. If the gentleman from Georgia had undertaken to examine those papers, I think he would have needed four weeks to go through them and satisfy himself. Now, this gentleman, by means of his knowledge acquired at the Bureau—his experience—goes through and analyzes such papers, and in a comparatively brief time he is able to make report upon them. During this Congress he has made 1,650 reports.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not want to have any more of my time consumed. I have now from the gentleman all the information I want. As I started out in my remarks to say, I do not know this gentleman; I do not know what duties he performs. I made that statement to begin with, but I do state that out of this very business grew a scandal, and we had to stop in the midst of the consideration of an appropriation bill in this House to appoint a committee of investigation, the chairman of which was the present Secretary of the Navy, and that committee was appointed to investigate just such things as we are now embarked upon in giving an extra allowance or extra pay to this man.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MADDOX. No; I do not want the gentleman to take up my time.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Just one question.

Mr. MADDOX. I will yield for that. I will ask the gentleman if he is on the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes; and I report this by authority of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MADDOX. Then I have something for the gentleman to which I particularly wish to call the attention of the House. Go ahead and I will answer the question.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. The committee to which the gentleman refers, upon which Mr. Moody served, was in reference to a bill concerning the employees of the House, was it not?

Mr. MADDOX. I so understand.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. This man is not an employee of the House.

Mr. MADDOX. I understand where the gentleman can not be considered on the roll of the House, but at the same time this man was in that same batch, I guess.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. No; not at all.

Mr. MADDOX. At the same time of the extra payment.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. He is not an employee of the House.

Mr. MADDOX. He is an employee of the House by detail now. There is no question about that, according to the gentleman's own statement; by enactment of the House he is an employee. The proposition that we laid down then and the one that this House decided upon was that we would fix the salaries of these men and they would receive no more extra pay. No man can deny that, and we laid down certain rules which I wish to have read, and I do not want to take up further time, except I want this House to hear those rules as they are read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines further to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I send these rules to the desk and I want the Clerk to read them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman sends to the desk a document which the Clerk will read in the time of the gentleman.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, these are the rules laid down by the House of Representatives controlling the employees of this House, and I ask the members of this House to listen to them and see what is required of the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter employees of the House of Representatives under the Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster shall only be assigned to and engaged upon the duties of the positions to which they are appointed and for which compensation is provided, except that in cases of emergency or congestion of public business incident to the close of a session of Congress or other like cause an employee or employees may be assigned or required to aid in the discharge of the duties of any other employee or employees, and in the discretion of the Doorkeeper not more than one folder may, if necessary, be assigned to do clerical work under the direction of the foreman of the folding room, but all assignments made hereunder shall be without additional compensation and shall not constitute the basis of a claim therefor.

It shall not be lawful to appoint or employ in any position under the House of Representatives more than one person at any one time, or to require or permit any such person to divide with another any portion of his salary or compensation while so employed.

It shall not be lawful to require or permit any person in the employ of the House of Representatives to sublet to another the discharge of any portion of the duties of the position to which he is appointed.

No person shall be appointed or employed as a page in the service of the House of Representatives who is under 12 years or more than 18 years of age; but this provision shall not apply to chief pages, riding pages, and telephone pages.

The Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, and Postmaster shall make certificate each month to their respective pay rolls, stating whether the persons named in such pay rolls and employed in their respective departments have been actually present at their respective places of duty and have actually performed the services for which compensation is provided in said pay rolls, and in each case where a person carried on such pay roll has been absent and has not performed the services in whole or in part for which payment is proposed, the reason for such absence and for such nonperformance of services shall be stated.

The violation of any of the foregoing provisions of law shall, upon ascertainment thereof, be deemed to be cause for removal from office.

It shall be the duty of the Committee on Accounts of the House of Representatives from time to time to inquire into the enforcement or violation of any of the foregoing provisions of law; and for this purpose they are hereby authorized to send for persons and papers, and to administer oaths; and they shall report to the House at least once every session their compliance with the duty herein imposed.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the House that I have not volunteered to regulate the affairs of this House so far as these employees are concerned, but that investigating committee of which I spoke did not die with the last Congress; that is, the Fifty-sixth Congress. There was another one appointed, of which I am a member, and I feel that the duty devolves upon me to call the attention of this House to this question of extra pay for extra services. Gentlemen will see by what has been read—the law which was passed by this Congress—that it requires the Doorkeeper, the Sergeant-at-Arms—in fact, all of these departments—to make a report monthly when they make out their pay rolls; and it is the duty of the Committee on Accounts to see that these men make out these pay rolls and that these rules are complied with.

Now, the question is, Has the Committee on Accounts required all these reports to be made? So far as this single individual is concerned, whose case we are considering to-day, I do not know whether he deserves the extra pay or not. The question is whether he comes within the purview of the law, simply being detailed from the Pension Office to this House. That is a question I think the Representatives should decide for themselves. But this is the time when this question of extra pay begins. This is the time when these scandals begin to germinate, and I deem it my duty as a member of that committee to put the House on notice with respect to these extra payments which we may look for in the future. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I am in thorough accord with what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] has said as a general rule, but from personal observation I know that this particular individual earns very much more than it is proposed to give him here. Rules or no rules, I think that this particular clerk should have that amount which is asked for in this resolution. I believe that everybody who has been to that office will say that he is the most faithful and hardworked employee about this Capitol.

Mr. BENTON. Does the gentleman refer to Mr. Gauss?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes. I say that he is always faithful, courteous, and ready to do his duty, and to my certain knowledge he earns every dollar here proposed to be paid him.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I wish to say that while I am in entire sympathy with the rule which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] had read, and am in thorough accord with his position in reference to extravagance in public expenditures, I am satisfied the gentleman for whom this extra pay is asked does not come within this rule. As I understand it, he is detailed from the Pension Bureau. Of course he gets his salary there, but I am satisfied that his labors with the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and I have had some occasion to know something about them, are much greater than they would be at the Pension Bureau—that he very often devotes twice as much time to work on that committee during the twenty-four hours as he would be required to serve at his desk in the Pension Bureau. I am quite confident that that statement is correct.

Not only that, but his efficiency and thorough knowledge enable him to be of great service to the members of that committee. I do not suppose there is a member on that committee, though many of them have served for years, but who would admit at once that this gentleman has a much more thorough knowledge of the questions that arise there than any member of the committee, and that knowledge enables him to give information to the House touching pension bills which otherwise it would not be likely to secure. I should like very much to see him receive reasonable pay for his extra work. I do not know what that would be, but I think he is entitled to reasonable compensation for such extra service in addition to that which he receives as a clerk of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROMWELL].

Mr. BROMWELL. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER], I feel that I ought to say something to the House upon this proposition, because a similar resolution, I am informed, will be reported for the clerk detailed to assist the Pension Committee. I have been a member of that committee for eight years, and therefore think I am qualified to speak as to the services rendered by the clerk detailed from the Pension Bureau to assist it. He is something more than a mere clerk. He is something more than a mere writer of reports and an indexer of claims. He comes to that committee with a special knowledge of all the legislation upon the subject of pensions from the beginning of the Government.

This knowledge is required, for our committee handles not only the civil war pension cases, but all the pension cases of all the other wars—the Indian wars, the Mexican war, and the Spanish war, and the war of 1812. This clerk is to the Committee on Pensions what the expert parliamentary clerk is to the Speaker of this House. He is ready at all times to furnish information, accurate and correct, for the use of that committee in regard to existing laws. Not only that, but he takes every case that comes before that committee, every bill that is sent to that committee. It is indexed by him, and is briefed from all the papers on file, and a statement of the case in detail is rendered to the subcommitteeman who has charge of that particular claim.

In addition to that, when the bill has been passed upon in the committee and has been ordered to be reported, this detailed clerk prepares the report which is submitted to the House, subject, of course, to the approval of the subcommitteeman having the bill in charge. It has frequently happened within my knowledge that in order to get these reports prepared and upon the Calendar in time for action by this House this clerk has to work many hours beyond the time usually allotted to clerical work.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. MADDOX. It was stated on the floor by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that this gentleman whose case is now before the House asking for $500 additional only drew $1,200. I have just sent out and asked him, and he says his salary is $2,000 a year.

Mr. BROMWELL. Well, I made no statement as to the salary.

Mr. MADDOX. I was just taking the time of the gentleman to make that statement. His salary is $2,000 a year.

Mr. BROMWELL. If a mistake has been made, it is proper to correct it. But whether it is $1,200 a year or $2,000 a year, I want to say to this House that this gentleman is entitled to extra compensation. As soon as the House adjourns on the 4th of March he will report back to the Pension Bureau, and there he will earn his salary, whether it is $1,200 or $2,000, until the next session of Congress. When that session opens, he will return here for the long session.

Now, this matter of extra compensation is not a new one. It has gone on for twelve or fourteen years, and this House has allowed this extra compensation in recognition of services that these two expert clerks have rendered. They are not involved in any of the scandal that has aroused the House, because they are not on the pay roll of the House. They are upon the pay roll of the Pension Bureau, and their salaries are paid out of the allowance made that Bureau, and neither one of these cases can come within the rule which the gentleman from Georgia has had read. That applies only to the officers of the House borne on the roll of the House. I state from my personal knowledge of the expert clerk of the Pensions Committee during the last eight years that this additional $500 is but a small compensation for his services.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the law read at the request of the gentleman from Georgia does not apply to these cases. You take Mr. Gauss, who serves as a clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and it must be evident to all that that man has to work almost night and day during a session of Congress to prepare these reports. He is a man of extraordinary ability, one who is worth probably from $3,000 to $4,000 a year, and he is detailed from the Pension Office to do this particular work. Now, it would be a great hardship for a man who works in the Pension Office from 9 until 4 to be detailed and work here almost continuously. The same is true of Mr. Porter, the clerk of the Committee on Pensions. These men must be men of extraordinary ability. They must understand their business. They are of great benefit to the members of these two committees, and for one I think these extra allowances ought to be made, and I hope the House will allow them.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. You reported this provision which has been just read in respect to the payment of extra allowances to the employees around the House. Do you consider that these men come under that provision?

Mr. HEMENWAY. They do not, in my judgment.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER], and then I will ask for a vote.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, in that one minute I simply desire to say, with all due respect, that I am constrained to differ with my good friend from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], whom I generally follow in these matters. In this case I think he is wrong. In my opinion, Mr. Gauss is one of the most efficient, one of the most industrious, and one of the hardest worked men in this House. His services are indispensable. If any employee is fairly and justly entitled to extra compensation for untiring additional work, it is he. The work he does is simply invaluable. He has reported over 1,650 bills and written the reports on them during this session of the House. We all know the time it takes to do that. His services to the members and the committee are continuous and indefatigable. He works for us night and day during the time Congress is in session, and he does it cheerfully, conscientiously, and always good naturedly. I say that the work Mr. Gauss does entitles him to additional compensation, that the amount asked for is reasonable, and I hope the House will give it. I shall vote for the resolution with much pleasure, because it is just and fair and proper, and a slight recognition of our appreciation of the great and magnificent work he has done.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

D. S. PORTER.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have another, concerning Mr. Porter, from the Committee on Pensions, precisely like the one just passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman also calls up another privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 417.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations is authorized to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment to D. S. Porter of the sum of $500 for extra and expert services to the Committee on Pensions as assistant clerk of said committee by detail.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I yield to a question to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia first addressed the Chair.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDOX. I want about three minutes.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And then you will answer my question?

Mr. MADDOX. I wanted to say to the gentlemen that while differing with me they did not, it seems to me, know what they were differing about. Now, another thing that is singular that has grown out of this debate is that these gentlemen do not know the value of this man's services. They said that they understood his salary was $1,200.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MADDOX. I sent out and inquired of him myself.

Mr. BROMWELL. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MADDOX. I have only three minutes.

Mr. BROMWELL. There was no statement made as to the salary of Mr. Porter at all.

Mr. MADDOX. I am not talking about him.

Mr. BROMWELL. You are talking about this other case. Mr. Porter gets $2,000 as an expert clerk.

Mr. MADDOX. I was talking about the clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It was said that he only got $1,200 a year; and the idea is that this man is not upon the pay roll of the House, that he deserves this pay, and he is entitled to it. Of course gentlemen voted for it on the idea that he was drawing $1,200 a year, and the $500 would make his salary up to $1,700 a year instead of $2,500. That shows that you do not know anything about it. You do not know what you are talking about. Now, here is a man, and the statement is made to the House that he is drawing $1,200 a year in the Department; and when we examine into it it is found that he is getting $2,000 in the Pension Department—and you are making it $2,500, and the House was agreeing to it, thinking it was making it $1,700. That is the status of affairs, exactly. If he is entitled to $2,500, I am in favor of giving it to him straight—straight; and we ought not to have these extra payments and extra allowances. We ought to make it permanent law. If this gentleman is to be hired and it is believed that he is entitled to $2,500, if you gentlemen say you are in favor of it. I will vote for it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I understand it has been the custom for twenty years to give these two clerks extra pay.

Mr. MADDOX. Then I say that makes it all the more necessary that we should give it to them by a permanent law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I agree to that.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word in reply to what the gentleman from Georgia has said.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. If the gentleman will just wait a moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I simply wanted to say that the objection to the suggestion by the gentleman from Georgia is this. That the services may not be the same at each session of Congress, and they might grow much less. You can not tell. Another thing you may not always have as efficient an expert as you have now. I can testify as to the efficiency of each of these gentlemen; they are most excellent men for this work.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. That is the very argument, Mr. Speaker, I was about to make in reply to the gentleman from Georgia. It is not a question of what the salaries of these men are while they are at work in the Bureau of Pensions. It is when the expert is detailed to do certain work here. The evidence before the Committee on Accounts showed the nature of that work, which is important to the committee for the protection of the Government, and he furnishes very valuable assistance to the members of Congress and assistance to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. After the Committee on Accounts had heard that proof it was not a question of whether he should receive extra pay, but what would be a fair compensation for the extraordinary services rendered in this House. In the Pension Bureau he works certain limited hours, and that is the end of it; but in the Committee on Invalid Pensions he works sufficient time to do what is necessary to do, and the committee are in favor of this resolution, and so reported it. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This gentleman, as I understand it, is regularly employed in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When he was employed, did he not, under the law, have this very work in view?

Mr. BROMWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. He has a salary in the Bureau of Pensions, and by act of Congress he is detailed to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He took the office with the salary that he had when he assumed the duties, and when he assumed the duties he had this work in view under the law. He assumed the office knowing that this work was to be done, and now after he does it he comes and asks extra pay.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Oh, nothing of the kind; he is doing nothing in the Pension Office now. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions asked to have him detailed here under an act of Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was his duty in anticipation when he assumed the office.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was considered, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CUSHMAN, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. DEEMER, for the remainder of the week, on account of illness.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 17202, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sequoia National Park: For the protection and improvement of the Sequoia National Park and the construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and extension of roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 25, page 86, after the word "dollars," the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Crater Lake National Park: For protection and improvement of the Crater Lake National Park, and repairing and extension of roads, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $2,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee some questions. On yesterday afternoon an amendment was adopted, in the nature of a substitute, for the amendment offered by my colleague in reference to the Rainier National Park, authorizing the Secretary of War to survey a road into that park, and appropriated $10,000 for that purpose and for the purpose of constructing the road. Now, that was adopted late in the afternoon, just before the adjournment, and we did not have a chance to consider the effect of it. That does not make any appropriation for the park itself. The park is entirely and exclusively under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. The law reads in this way:

That said public park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be to make and publish, as soon as practicable, such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary or proper for the care and management of the same.

The law requires him to look after the management of the park and after trespassers, and no appropriation is made covering a matter of that sort. The Secretary of the Interior sent a recommendation for an estimate to the committee and asked for $3,000 for that purpose, and I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, to what he says in his report. He says:

No regulations for the government of the park "for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonders within said park, and their retention in their natural condition," as required by the regulations, have been promulgated by the Department, as no appropriation has been made by Congress for the management of the reservation, and no superintendent could therefore be appointed to enforce such regulations. * * *

Considerable interest having been manifested by the public in this park during the year, and a privilege for the transportation of tourists over the roads therein having been granted, it became necessary, in the interest of the Government, to have a representative of the Department therein. Accordingly, the forest superintendent for the State of Washington was placed in charge thereof temporarily. This assignment, however, can not be continued for any length of time without serious interference with the proper performance of the duties of this officer in the enforcement of the regulations of the forestry service in the State. Proper steps have been taken looking to the early survey and marking of the park boundaries. I have, therefore, submitted to Congress, through the proper channels, an estimate of an appropriation of $3,000 for the management, protection, and the construction of necessary roads and trails in the Mount Rainier National Park during the ensuing fiscal year. It is earnestly recommended that favorable action be had thereon.

I wish to state that this forest superintendent has under his charge more than 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 acres of forest land in the State of Washington. As the Secretary of the Interior says, it is practically impossible for him to give any attention to this park. His principal office is at Tacoma, a great many miles away; and he has to look after three or four different reservations in the State. I submit that the purpose of the law can not be carried out without some provision being made under which the Secretary of the Interior may select a superintendent, such as is provided for the park in the preceding paragraph. I ask the gentleman whether he can not consent to an amendment providing that the Secretary may take charge, as contemplated by the law, of this reservation. The substitute authorizes the Secretary of War to make a survey and construct a road to the park, but, as I said, it makes no provision for the care of the park itself.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is well enough for us to conclude the reading of the bill without acting on this question; and in the meantime the gentleman can examine the subject, and I can also give it a little additional examination. It seems to me that if this park of which the gentleman speaks is to be improved we had better commence right. Our experience in the Yellowstone Park—and perhaps in other parks, but especially in the Yellowstone—has been with a dual jurisdiction under the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, which was not satisfactory. I do not mean to criticise the Interior Department; but Congress many years ago practically put the improvement and control of that park under the War Department. There is now in the Yellowstone Park a troop of cavalry; and from these, under proper discipline and control, better results can be obtained than by employing civilians under the Interior Department. In times of peace a troop of cavalry assigned for duty in Mount Rainier Park will not weaken the Army; and with the Engineer Corps to do the surveying and the construction of the roads, we shall, upon the whole, get better results.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to say one word further, if I may be indulged.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent, the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CANNON. I think we had better look over this matter; and as we have already passed the paragraph, we can return to it later as well as now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to ask one question. What is the distance from the place where this road starts to the park?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The road contemplated by the Department will be about 24 miles long, through a forest reservation. The national park is surrounded entirely by a forest reservation.

Mr. STEELE. What is meant by making a survey for this road; to see whether they can get to the park by the contemplated road?

Mr. JONES of Washington. They want to determine the best line on which the road can be constructed—to lay it out.

Mr. STEELE. Do they suppose that it will take $10,000 to find which is the best route to the park?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; the substitute provides for the survey, and after that has been made the balance of the appropriation will be used in the construction of the road.

Mr. STEELE. That is what I wanted to ascertain.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general repairs and improvements, $25,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23 insert: "For the following, under Government Hospital for the Insane, to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion and after due investigation, to install an electrical fire-alarm apparatus in the buildings at the Government Hospital for the Insane, or in such parts thereof as in his judgment may be required for the protection of the lives of the inmates of the institution from fire, and for the greater security of the buildings from destruction or damage by fire, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BARNEY. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting after the word "install," in line 21, page 89, the words "or place."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Watervliet Arsenal, Watervliet, N. Y.: For introducing steam heat in barracks and hospital building, $5,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting after line 18, page 92, the words: "San Antonio Arsenal: New storehouse of enlarged capacity, $76,556."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in drafting this amendment I have taken exactly the language submitted by the Chief of Ordnance with the approval of the Secretary of War. In support of this amendment I wish to read from the Book of Estimates the following quotation from the report of the Chief of Ordnance:

This building is very much needed for the safe storage of rifles, carbines, revolvers, and the equipment of the infantry, cavalry, and artillery soldier, together with the horse equipments for cavalry needed by troops serving in that region, and also for issues to the militia supplied from that point, as well as for the reserve supply of war material required to meet emergencies that might arise. In addition to the above, the building will provide space, not now available, but much needed, for storage of miscellaneous supplies required for issue to the adjacent fortifications of the Gulf coast.

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

That is signed by William Crozier, Chief of Ordnance. Now, Mr. Chairman, the buildings at the arsenal at Fort Sam Houston, in the Department of Texas, are old and obsolete, tumbled down, and greatly in need of being repaired radically or replaced by new buildings. I myself had the honor of urging upon the Chief of Ordnance, General Crozier, that he go and personally see to the necessities of this arsenal. He made that personal inspection only a week or two before this Congress met, and this recommendation is based upon his own investigation.

That arsenal is not merely situated at the headquarters of the Department of Texas, but is in such reasonable proximity to the seacoast that it will serve as a distributing center to the seacoast protection fortifications; also for serving the various posts—and there are several of them—on the Mexican border. Previous reports of the Chiefs of Ordnance say that nowhere within the territory of the United States has any arsenal ever been found which is so well adapted to the preservation of most of the horse equipments and paraphernalia used in the Army, both in the cavalry and artillery. The necessity for it is manifest. It is urged by these gentlemen who have charge of equipping and providing our Army for the occasions of active campaigning, is strongly recommended by the Chief of Ordnance, has the approval of the Secretary of War, and I sincerely hope that the distinguished gentleman who presides over this committee will permit the items to go unchallenged.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I crave the attention of the committee while I submit a few facts about arsenals and about Army posts, barracks and quarters, etc. To start with, our project of seacoast defenses makes it necessary that in addition to the expenditure already swelling up to a hundred millions we appropriate from twenty-five to fifty millions more before it is complete, for guns and their emplacement. We have at each place to furnish barracks and quarters, officers' quarters, drill grounds, and a complete Army post to house the artillery forces that equip the guns, in order that, in the fullness of time, if we ever get into war, we will be enabled to use them in the public defense. It is impossible to tell how much is to be expended of this new expenditure for Army posts.

I guess I am within the limit when I say, first and last, thirty millions, making up between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000 for seacoast defenses. They begin away up in the State of Washington at the entrance to Puget Sound, on the Columbia River, go on down to San Francisco, San Diego, then around to the Gulf coast, Galveston, New Orleans, soon to be followed by perhaps one or two other places on the Texas coast where harbors are being made, then on to Florida, South Carolina, Georgia, North Carolina, Norfolk, Baltimore, Washington, the Delaware, Philadelphia, and so on up the line to the coast of Maine—necessary expenditures for the public defense, needed, or believed to be needed now. Throughout the interior of the country, as emigration went westward and you had troubles with the Indians, Army posts upon the frontier were established.

Now, the Indian question is about settled, so far as war is concerned, and it is the hardest matter imaginable to get away from an Army post; it is like an office, almost impossible to discontinue when once made and it is almost impossible to get away from an Army post when it is once established or an arsenal when it is once established. Public service would be subserved if of the Army posts in the interior we could get away from two-thirds of them. We would do a great work, but of course ours is a representative government, and when one of us gets an arsenal or gets an Army post, the people like to have it kept and we imagine the necessity for it. Now, come to the question of arsenals. The whole thing has been revolutionized by difference in modes of warfare and the growth of the country, and the most of the arsenals now existing for which appropriations are submitted, and which the general appropriation covers as far as repairs are concerned, are worse than useless to the public service. Now, let me tell you what arsenals are required, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I think I can get through in five minutes. The Government is engaged in equipping the cavalry. This work is done at two arsenals. One is the Benicia Arsenal, on the Pacific coast, the only arsenal, I believe, on that coast. Some of this work is done there. That is 3,000 miles away from the Atlantic coast, and it has seemed to your committee that it is proper that the Benicia Arsenal on the Pacific coast is justifiable, but not more than that.

Now, at Rock Island there is a great arsenal that has cost $12,000,000. I wish we had the money to-day, and with the changed condition of the public defense we could construct for $6,000,000 much more and much better that is desirable than was constructed for the whole expenditure of $12,000,000. But it is an island up there in the Mississippi, with this great plant, and used for two purposes—for equipment for artillery, saddles, harness for artillery, and so on. It would be quite sufficient without Benicia; but Benicia is on the Pacific coast, and some of that work is done there. Also at Rock Island there is a small-arms factory, which has just been equipped at great expense. Now, there is another small-arms factory at the great arsenal at Springfield, Mass. That is fully equipped. I wish that we were rid of Springfield or rid of Rock Island. If so, I would not vote to found another one. But we have them both fully equipped. In addition to that we have great quantities of people who make small arms, fully equipped, who could produce them for the Government in time of stress. But in time of stress even these two arsenals are quite sufficient to meet the public demands.

Then we have the arsenal at Watervliet. That is a gun factory, where they do assembling and work upon the high-power guns. Then you have here a gun factory at the navy-yard. The forgings and so on are done by private parties, mostly at Bethlehem. That factory is very well equipped with a great plant, and we get our forgings for less money than we could make them.

Then there is the Frankford Arsenal, over here at Philadelphia, thoroughly equipped for small ammunition. They put up the small ammunition there.

Now, I undertake to say, after full investigation, that these are all the arsenals that the public service needs.

There are a great many arsenals that in the development of the country it was supposed we needed. There is one at Indianapolis. And speaking respectfully of the Indiana delegation, I have had quite a hard time, or the Committee on Appropriations has had, and perhaps the Committee on Military Affairs has had as well in former years, to keep from making large expenditures at Indianapolis. The Government had no need for it. There was a valuable plat of ground right there in the city, as the city had grown out, and finally Congress waked up and the Indiana delegation then saw the propriety of those grounds being disposed of, and a disposition of them was authorized. I can not recollect all these arsenals. There is one at Schuylkill, Pa. There is no use on earth for it. It ought to be disposed of. There is one at Columbia, Tenn. There is no use for it on earth. There is one at Pittsburg, Pa. There is no manner of use for it. It is an expense to the Government.

Mr. DALZELL. It has been abandoned as an arsenal.

Mr. CANNON. Well, my friend says it has been abandoned as an arsenal. Certainly; but still there is the cost of maintenance. At Augusta, Ga., there is another in the same list. There is one in New Jersey; one at St. Louis, Mo.; one at San Antonio, Tex.; one at Kennebec, Me. I suppose there are as many more, if I could refresh my recollection. Now, what is this proposition? With a great expenditure being made for high-power guns and for a post for the seacoast defenses for that splendid city of Galveston, that has been destroyed by the sea, and yet which is to be a great city, from its location, and this expenditure is required. Now, here is the charming city of San Antonio, inland, and here comes my friend. I am not quarreling with him. If we could swap places and he could be from Illinois and in charge of this bill, and I could be from Texas, I apprehend that I should be arising in my place and offering this amendment of $70,000 to build a storehouse.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman will permit me, I know he would, because then he would be advised of the necessity. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; I understand. But what is the necessity of a storehouse for an arsenal at San Antonio any more than at Pittsburg, or any more than at those other points? If it were utilized for manufacturing, it would have to be very differently equipped, if utilized by land and by sea. With our 200,000 miles of railway, it is indicated that we should have a few plants as perfect as possible, and then in a short time the supplies can be distributed. Now, I submit to my friend that, as I believe from investigation, this appropriation ought not to be made. My friend says, "Ah, but we got an estimate." Why, yes; there is no trouble about an estimate. How do they arise? Why, the man who is in charge of a post or in charge of an arsenal; that is his specialty. He lives there, and he meets the good friends, and properly so. They think something else ought to be done; and we all magnify our present surroundings.

He starts an estimate, and it comes up to the commander and it is blessed, and it comes up to the Quartermaster-General and to the Chief of Ordnance and it is blessed again, and pro forma blessed by the Secretary of War, and then the law requires the Secretary of the Treasury to send it up in the shape of an estimate. I will tell you about estimates. I have had some experience; not as much, I apprehend, as many gentlemen who are listening to me. Somebody said once, some years ago, he would make a wager that he could get a petition to hang the governor or lieutenant-governor—I think General Palmer was governor at that time, and afterwards Senator—and the wager was taken. He drew up his petition, signed it himself, and every member and senator, and that is 203, signed it, and he won his wager.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Are you certain they did not read it?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I do not think General Palmer needed hanging, and still, whether he did or not, he was entitled to trial. [Laughter.] So it runs, a lively Representative or Senator, that is lively and persists and pushes, to get rid of him they give an estimate, and throw the responsibility upon Congress. That is an easy way of getting rid of a persistent, pestiferous Representative.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. A moment more. I submit that we ought not to spend this $70,000 for this storehouse and make further improvements at that or any of these arsenals other than the ones I have mentioned. I would be glad to know, without having conversed with the gentleman about it, what the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who has had much more Army experience than I have, and he knows about the public service—I would be glad to ask him his views about it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, if I were not conscious of the fact that the merit of this proposition would win it, if I could command the same attention which is always granted the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, so that my cause might be properly put before the House, I should throw up the sponge now, because I admit that I am decidedly outclassed in the debate. But, sir, I want the House to understand, as the gentleman himself has admitted, that it is stamped with the approval of the military officers, who have technical knowledge of the situation. The Chief of Ordnance himself personally investigated it, and after personal investigation he recommends that this item be kept in. The gentleman addresses his argument to certain types of arsenals, certain manufacturing arsenals, and stated that we had no need of others, perhaps, than those at Rock Island, Benicia, and at Springfield. I think I quote him correctly in that. The plant at San Antonio is not intended to serve any such purpose as those arsenals. But there is a great military division of this Government known as the Department of Texas. Its headquarters are at the city of San Antonio, and in the arsenal at that place there are stored the necessities for the equipment of the Army.

Mr. Chairman, if we were to always have peace there would be no need for an arsenal nor would there be need for an Army; but it behooves us in time of peace to prepare for emergencies that may come. Now, the city of San Antonio happens to be the headquarters of the Department of Texas and its large field of military operation. This arsenal is located more than 1,200 miles from Rock Island, more than forty-eight hours away by express trains, and three to four weeks by ordinary freight carriage. It is necessary that the equipment of arms and leather goods and supplies of that sort should be kept in the arsenal to be distributed here and there in Texas and on the Gulf coast. It is merely intended to maintain a great storage arsenal there. San Antonio is about 150 miles from the frontier of Mexico and about 150 miles from the Gulf of Mexico. It is quite certain, sir, at least to my mind it seems clear, that if we are to have any military disturbances in the near future they will be to the south of us.

The importance of that country diplomatically and commercially is going to increase very greatly. We are going to expend a large sum of money in the construction of a canal connecting the Pacific and the Atlantic oceans. The dangers of proximity are not to be overlooked. Increasing social, business, and political intercourse with the people of the Central and South American countries makes it necessary for us to maintain a means of quick military equipment in the South. The Southwest has no other arsenal than this. It is almost as near to San Diego and the Pacific coast as Rock Island is to the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that gentlemen who have technical knowledge and who have personally investigated, who have no interest in the matter but the promotion of the interests of the Government and the maintenance of the efficiency of the Army, are better entitled to have their opinions respected by this House than even the eminent gentleman from Illinois, however great may be his abilities, when he has no personal knowledge of it. I would be very glad if, after this Congress adjourns, he would take time to visit the State of Texas and acquaint himself with the dimensions of that great State and, by personal investigation, with the military necessities which he talks about so positively upon the most casual investigation. I hope, Mr. Chairman, and I believe that if the House will consider this amendment carefully and fairly it will go into the bill.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal knowledge as to this particular appropriation, but I do want to very cordially indorse what the gentleman from Illinois has said as to the multiplication of arsenals over the country. I should imagine from the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] that this appropriation is more for a storehouse than for an arsenal. I understood the gentleman to say that it is a great place to keep supplies and equipments of cavalry.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. With the permission of the gentleman, I want to state that in the amendment I have offered it says storehouse. There has been one there for more than fifty years. As a military strategic point of importance San Antonio is noted in the history of our country. It was a place of importance in the Mexican war, and also when it was proposed to interfere with Maximilian in Mexico, when another army was rendezvoused there and an arsenal established, and it is not proposed to do anything new.

Mr. HULL. I understand that. The amount that is necessary, it seems to me, can be assigned out of the appropriation for barracks and quarters for the different posts.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to the gentleman that there is an arsenal there established by law, and that this is a part of it and has no proper connection with the appropriations for posts and barracks.

Mr. HULL. I am of the opinion that in the military bill and in the bill now under consideration there are appropriations for barracks and quarters and that these bills make larger appropriation for that purpose than any Congress for the last twenty years. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if that is not true.

Mr. CANNON. That is true.

Mr. HULL. If that is so and this is simply a storehouse, it seems to me the gentleman from Texas, or any gentlemen representing arsenals that are not real arsenals, but only part of a post, if it is necessary for these different posts to have storehouses, can get an assignment out of those appropriations. In other words, we appropriate the money in gross in the appropriation bill. In the Army appropriation bill we give $4,750,000, and in this bill an aggregate of nearly $2,000,000 to barracks and quarters.

Mr. CANNON. Twelve hundred thousand in the special appropriation and a special provision of about a million more.

Mr. HULL. The total appropriation is so large that it does seem to me that if the Department recognizes the necessity at any post for a good storehouse, they can assign the money and have plenty to carry on the Government business without crippling any of these interests. I am not going to express an opinion as to whether this storehouse is needed or not. Upon that point I yield to the superior wisdom of the gentleman from Texas, but it seems to me that if it is needed, that the large appropriations carried in the two bills, the sundry civil and the military bills, there ought to be no trouble in securing that amount of money.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows that that is an arsenal established by law, and that this item, being specific and necessarily for the arsenal and not for a post, is bound to come in under a specific appropriation.

Mr. HULL. I do not understand that there is any manufacturing there. My understanding is that it is not so much an arsenal as it is a storehouse—a storehouse to keep supplies and equipment for the Department of Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And ordnance stores.

Mr. HULL. Yes; I suppose you might call saddles ordnance stores, and at the same time they have storehouses at every post where they keep saddles. I can see no reason why every department—the Department of Texas, the Department of the Lakes, and the Department of Missouri, and all these places—can not have the storehouse on the same line for the use of the department; and it seems to me, if this is necessary, that ample power is given to the Secretary of War in the allotment of these funds to provide exactly for what the gentleman from Texas desires.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The ally of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, insists on confusing posts with arsenals. All that I have to say about that is that the item was recommended by the Chief of Ordnance, and it can not come from the appropriation for posts and barracks. It is necessary for an arsenal that has been established for sixty years, and I hope the House will give me the item.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SLAYDEN) there were—ayes 44, noes 48.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not question the Chairman's knowledge of figures, but this vote is so close I shall have to demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 66, noes 71.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment which I desire to offer—to insert on page 92, after the pending paragraph, the following:

San Antonio Arsenal, new boundary fence, $10,500.

All I have to say in support of this amendment is that it has been recommended by the Chief of Ordnance, after personal investigation upon the ground.

Mr. CANNON. And all I have to say is that if it is necessary to make any repairs there the general appropriation for such purposes is available.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. SLAYDEN was rejected.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I desire to offer one more amendment:

Amend by inserting on page 92, after the pending paragraph, these words: "San Antonio Arsenal: New storehouse for lumber and unserviceable ordnance stores, $8,000."

In connection with this item, Mr. Chairman, I should be glad if members of the House would read the language of the Chief of Ordnance in making the estimate and recommending this appropriation. Those stores are now protected by a temporary shed, made by taking the old roof from an abandoned building and setting it upon some posts, temporarily placed, for protecting the property of the Government Certainly the generous chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will admit the necessity of an item like this.

Mr. CANNON. If this work be necessary, the general appropriation will be available. As to the stores that have been abandoned, it seems to me the quickest and best proceeding is to destroy them and get rid of them. They will never be of any use to the service. What is the use of expending money in taking care of them?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Possessing a certain value, they have to be taken care of until they can be disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. I think the general appropriation is available for this purpose, if such an expenditure be justifiable. But I am against the amendment, because I do not think we ought to spend any more money on these things which ought to be abandoned.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. SLAYDEN was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Executive Mansion: For care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, $60,000, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. CANNON] why the appropriation embraced in this item is so much in excess, as I am informed and believe it is, of what has been appropriated for this purpose heretofore. My information is that the amount last year was $25,000; now the proposed expenditure is $110,000. Why should there be such a difference between the expenses last year and the expenses for the incoming year?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation for the current year is $25,000, with a very considerable deficiency appropriation to follow, the exact amount I do not recollect. The committee looked into this matter very carefully. As the gentleman is aware, there have been during the present year very large improvements made to the Executive Mansion. In addition to that, a building has been constructed under the authority of Congress for executive offices. Now, for the enlargement of the Executive Mansion and for the support of the building, and for the officering of the new offices, there is required an additional expenditure.

These estimates were made very thoroughly and very closely by the present superintendent of public buildings and grounds, Colonel Bingham, who, after full investigation, has recommended as necessary the sum embraced in this item.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman kindly inform me what this expense is supposed to cover?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, it covers fuel; it covers light; it covers necessary people to care for the buildings; it covers the necessary increase of employees. As the gentleman is aware, the Executive Mansion, as well as the new office building, is, like department buildings, officered and cared for at the expense of the General Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we all know, of course, that as we expand and enlarge as a Republic expenses increase. I have sought to get from our encyclopedia of information, the gentleman from Illinois, some information as to what this appropriation covers; what does it pay for? What items? We are asked very often what this item covers; in other words, whether the President pays any part of the expenses pertaining to the White House. I have before me an official letter received a few moments ago from Colonel Bingham, transmitted by him to the Secretary of War, and through the Secretary of the Treasury sent to the committee, in which I find this language:

The last appropriation for making repairs and furnishing the Executive Mansion was $25,000. It has since been necessary to ask for $10,000 in addition thereto for the current year on the general deficiency bill, which makes a total of $35,000; and changes may have yet to be made in tank and filter.

Now, then, it goes on a little further, but I have not time to read it all. I continue:

More help will be needed in the laundry, owing to the large family which occupies the White House and the large amount of entertaining done by the President, which increases the use of table linen, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I read further, Mr. Chairman:

7. As the conservatory of the old house has been abolished a considerable amount of expense for labor and hauling is necessary to decorate the house, which now has to be done from the propagating gardens, a mile away.

The former estimate for labor and incidentals connected with the winter entertainments at the White House must have a considerable increase, because the President is doing a large amount of entertaining. Also owing to the abolition of the conservatories and greenhouses, flowers have, from time to time, to be purchased for the winter entertainments beyond what can now be furnished by the propagating gardens.

On page 2 they are shown to amount to $110,264—an "increased estimate." Mr. Secretary Root says as follows:

Improvement and care of grounds	$9,400
Repairs, fuel, etc., Executive Mansion	80,000
Lighting, etc., Executive Mansion	20,864
Total	110,264

Enlarging the White House, as I have already stated, of course necessarily increased expense follows, but I can not get myself up to that pitch of generosity with public funds to feel that we are justified in expending $110,000 in this way as against $25,000 last year.

I can not agree to appropriate public funds to that amount to provide for the contingency referred to by General Bingham when he says that the President is doing a large amount of entertaining, and hence this money is needed. If this has been the case heretofore, then I want what I say to apply all along down the line, clear down to Andrew Jackson, if you please. I say that this Government ought not to be called upon to take the tax money of this country and pay for this continuous, endless chain of entertainments.

I have been informed that General Bingham is no longer to enjoy the high distinction of being a charming adjunct to the White House entertainments. He is a gentleman so far as I know, a man of integrity I presume. Why he leaves the White House I do not know. I am dealing with his words.

Mr. Chairman, with the gilt-edge record for reform and retrenchment of the distinguished son of Illinois [Mr. CANNON] it does look to me as if we ought to distinguish ourselves in seeing that there is retrenchment along these lines. We have already expended $600,000 in changing the old White House into the new White House, and I for one wish that it had not been done. I loved the old place. I wanted it kept in statu quo. I wanted it made an office for the President and, if need be, go out on some splendid hillside and build a President's mansion.

I opposed the proposition to expend $600,000 in that way, and with anguish, with absolute pain, I regret that we have a tunnel on one side of the White House and a coal house on the other, also some other affair that I think detracts from the beauty of the old White House, a spot which is sacred to every true American, a spot of sunshine which I would have ever linger unfaded. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is so easy to criticise and find fault. It is so remarkably easy to get up and occupy five or ten minutes and then run the time up longer in criticism of something. The last Congress authorized this expenditure at the Executive Mansion. It seemed to me it was wise then and it seems to me now that it was wise. It may be that the eminent architect who planned it and under whose direction it was executed made mistakes. Architects are prone to make mistakes, and after all you can not do any great public work without some mistakes. I have no great pride myself in most of them, and I have sometimes thought that I would gladly contribute to help raise a million dollars to assassinate large portions of them. [Laughter.]

I am not here to defend them, but I am glad that the White House was overhauled. I am not so very glad that that office building was erected. We were entitled to a better building for the money, but I think there was too much architect, so far as that building is concerned. Now, the President of the United States is elected sometimes by one party and sometimes by the other. Most of the times he has been elected the Republicans have elected him, and when the Republicans have not elected him, in the last analysis the Democrats have been sorry that they did not, in the end. [Laughter.] Let that be as it may, he is our President, and after all the entertainments at the White House are our entertainments.

Eighty millions of people, the richest nation on earth, growing, waxing great and strong from every standpoint. And if you will consider the fact that our expenditures mount up to nearly $700,000,000 a year, and if you will take this bagatelle for the expenditure at the White House, for all the people, our White House, our entertainments, I think my friend when he gets down upon the hustings in the Nashville district will not find many admiring constituents who will agree with him in his criticisms of that expenditure. If I had to follow him I would say, however, that through all the Presidential terms there have been more or less men in the House or the Senate of a criticising mind.

I was walking with an eminent citizen one day, a Representative of the State of Tennessee then in Congress, who told me that he was here during Jackson's Administration. As we walked along to the rear of the White House, south of the White House, that passageway then being open, he said: "Stop a minute, Mr. CANNON. Do you notice any peculiarity in this landscape here?" "Why," said I, "it is very beautiful. It is covered with green turf, splendid to the eye. I am glad it was made that way. Why do you ask it?" Said he, "It was made that way in Jackson's time and under Jackson's direction." "Well," I said to him, "Old Hickory did a pretty good job." "Yes," he said, "but do you know that all through a Presidential campaign the shape of this landscape here was a matter of attack in the opposition papers all over the country, and they said that the President had caused that landscape to be made there in similitude to the form of his mistress." "Why," said I, "you surprise me and astound me." "Oh, well, it only shows," he said, "how some of the American people at times and under certain conditions run amuck." I just wanted to call the attention of my criticising friend to the fact that he did not invent this line of criticism.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend yield for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did your friend who was walking down Pennsylvania avenue with you inform you that during any term of Andrew Jackson the expenses of the White House increased from $25,000 in one year to $110,000 the next year?

Mr. CANNON. Nay, nay; he did not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I come from his district——

Mr. CANNON. And I will inform the gentleman that during Jackson's Administration there were less than 15,000,000 people in the United States. It was before the day of railroads. Now there are almost 80,000,000 of us, and I will inform him that we pay for pensions alone to the defenders of the Republic almost five times as much as the total expenditures under Jackson's Administration.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The time of Mr. CANNON having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I will take just enough time to answer my friend's question.

Mr. VANDIVER. Referring to the office building connected with the White House, will the gentleman inform us how much it has cost?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know precisely what it has cost. I believe $60,000 was appropriated. How much of it was expended I do not know.

Mr. VANDIVER. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to it at all. I think, in fact, it ought to have been built, and a much better one built.

Mr. CANNON. So do I.

Mr. VANDIVER. But just in that connection, having taken a brief survey of it, I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois for which purpose he thinks it is best suited—a Presidential executive office or a carriage barn or a chicken coop?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will refer the gentleman to the architect who, I understand, planned it. I believe his name is McKim.

I think he is one of the three created by the Senate to get up this parking plan, you know, generally. I do not care about defending that thing. It can not be defended.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no desire to criticise the increased expenditures for entertainment or for living at the White House; but although it may seem indelicate to criticise the President or to insinuate that the king—or the President—can do wrong in this country, it does seem appropriate to call attention in a very emphatic manner to what has occurred in the alleged improvements on the White House grounds. In the last session of Congress some $600,000 were set aside to improve the White House and to erect an office building. I have yet to find a single member of this House who can justify the expenditure of $65,000 for the erection and furnishing of what is called the "Executive office" on the White House grounds.

Some $475,445 have been expended in remodeling and improving the Executive Mansion. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to a dispatch contained in the New York papers to-day, and which merits some attention from this House. In connection with the removal of Colonel Bingham as superintendent of public buildings and grounds in this District the New York papers of to-day charge that one of the reasons assigned for his removal or transfer is the fact that he is holding up certain vouchers because the work has been done in an improper manner.

If that be true, it is something, it seems to me, that the gentleman and his committee should take notice of. I would put the newspaper dispatch in the RECORD were it not for the fact that it also refers to certain matters that it does not seem appropriate to bring in here. The White House in its present shape disappoints men who have been longest in this city. In round numbers it has cost $600,000 to remodel the White House and to put up the office building, and the reason for the disappointment, in my opinion, comes from the manner in which this improvement was authorized. I have always been strongly opposed to giving any executive officer, no matter how exalted the position he holds, the right to expend, without limitation or without restraint of any kind, the public moneys of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The White House improvements and the Executive building is an emphatic argument in favor of discontinuing that method of legislation.

The item now before the committee is for something more than "care" of the White House. The language of the provision is:

For care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, $60,000, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine.

I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill how much repair, how much refurnishing, is to be done in the coming fiscal year at the White House after $600,000 has been expended putting it into shape? If this money is to be used merely for the care of the White House, it should be so stated; and at the risk of giving offense even to the President, or to some of his friends, I will state that in my opinion it is not proper to give him authority to expend as he may please any part of this money for the refurnishing or repair of this building. I see in the New York papers——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RYAN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that the time of his colleague may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The New York papers state to-day that one of the reasons for the removal of Colonel Bingham is the fact that he is—I will read just this portion of the article—the other part refers to matters which in my opinion ought not to be brought into this debate:

The reason of Colonel Bingham's fall from grace has been his persistent opposition to the plans and methods of reconstructing the White House. At present certain vouchers are held up because the superintendent of public buildings and grounds is not satisfied with the character of the work and demands that certain defects be remedied. This has irritated the Secretary of War, who recommended the architects, and Colonel Bingham's friends have known that in consequence he would soon be assigned to active duty.

While I can not pride myself upon the fact that I am included in the circle known as Colonel Bingham's friends, a statement like that in the public press, affecting the improvements made at the White House under the personal supervision of the President of the United States, should not be permitted to go unchallenged in this House.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him? Will he be fair enough to state that it is at his own request that this officer has has been transferred and with no ill feeling whatever?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know that public officials are often inclined to make that statement whenever their superiors are under suspicion of coercing them. In fact, it is well understood that gentlemen under such circumstances are expected to do it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Especially Army officers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What could an Army officer of the United States who has incurred the displeasure of his superior officers do but to accept the inevitable and go wherever it is suggested he go? He knows his limitations. He is in the service of the United States, and we know from experience that a man can not afford to antagonize those who are in power and in control.

Mr. BROMWELL. If the gentleman will permit me, I suppose he is aware that the engineer officers of the United States Army have only limited tours of duty in particular locations, at the end of which they are changed to other locations, and that in the course of transferring officers it has come to Colonel Bingham's time to be sent to another location.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The circumstances surrounding this transfer are the most emphatic answer that can be made to the suggestion of the gentleman. Here is this charge, which reflects, in my humble judgment, upon the President of the United States. I am not in a position to speak for the President or for the Administration. There may not be anything in this charge, but such a charge ought not to remain uncontradicted. Such charges can be prevented by removing the cause of them, and that is to take from the President the discretion of expending this money as he pleases. I would be sorry to confess that it was the taste of the President of the United States that was responsible for the present monstrosity on the White House grounds. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the item under consideration raises a question of importance. The amount involved is not large, and even were it very much larger, if necessary to the comfort or to the convenience of the President it would be ungrudgingly expended. The taxpayers of this country are disposed to provide for their public servants emolument sufficient to guarantee to them a generous living, and something more, and respectable surroundings at this capital. Unquestionably the people take pleasure in lavishly maintaining their Chief Executive in that exalted social station which becomes the Chief Magistracy of this great Republic. But, Mr. Chairman, the tendency to vulgar display in society, found everywhere, is rampant in this capital, and official circles are not exempt from it. This tendency needs no help at our hands, and in so far as we recognize anything that promotes it we propagate an unmixed evil.

The attempt to imitate and follow the fashions of the courts of Europe in official circles here has grown, and grown, and grown, until we hear it urged that in order to insure the maintenance of the pace set by it in official circles public servants must be prepared to spend enormous sums in entertaining. We are told that this or that public official can not live on the salary he is now receiving, although that salary is far greater than it was during the civil-war period, when living was far more expensive than now. I am of the opinion that some of our officials are underpaid, but I am not prepared to sanction salaries based upon the exactions of a social life reflecting the luster and ambitions of the suddenly rich or the prodigally extravagant people who have little on hand except what we call "social functions."

Social life at the capital fifty years ago and until recently offered to the world an example of refinement and culture of which no American was ashamed, and I do not think that the numerous frills and follies that have been added have improved matters. I am not favorably impressed with the all-pervading odor of flunkyism which now goes current as the only patent of gentility. [Applause.]

It is true that many things heretofore unknown are now deemed essential to comfort. There has been a great improvement in the standard of living and in the facilities for the ornamentation of our homes. The effects are seen everywhere, and they are something to be thankful for. The people are in the enjoyment of these blessings, and they are entirely willing to provide them for their servants.

They know that the members of the Congress can not get on as well with the salary they now receive as those who went before them could on a smaller salary. But the fact that the standard of living has changed does not justify the expenditure of forty or fifty thousand dollars of public money annually in empty display in the President's household or anywhere else.

At the President's receptions, up to forty years ago, the doors of the White House were thrown open to everybody in sight. In whatever apparel they happened to wear, rich and poor alike were admitted. This method was necessarily abandoned. The increased population of the great capital was a sufficient reason for its abandonment. Now it is impossible to accommodate the great number the President would desire to invite to his household. I do not believe that prodigal expenditures and lavish display at White House functions are in good taste. I do not believe the small number of people who attend them are impressed by it. They go there to honor the Chief Magistrate.

When our constituents visit us here, or when citizens of a State having a Cabinet officer or justice of the Supreme Bench accept an invitation to his house, they go and probably pay tribute to his honorable station with no thought or admiration of the flunkyism which has crept into the social life of the capital. [Applause.]

It is not palatable to the average American citizen to be told that in Washington the exactions of society become such that no man can accept high office unless he can live at a pace set by those who have money to burn. I do not believe that official salaries or allowances or the methods of living and entertaining in official circles should be based on this scale of living. Public officials of high and low degree should simplify social customs at the national capital instead of demanding an increase in salaries. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired

Mr. CANNON. Just a word, Mr. Chairman, and then I shall ask to continue the reading of the bill.

Answering the gentleman from New York, the engineer officer now superintendent of public buildings and grounds was detailed under the Administration of President McKinley. He has occupied his present position over six years. His predecessor was another member of the Engineer Corps, General Wilson. He was there four years. Colonel Bingham, I think—indeed, I feel quite sure—has been there longer on detail than any engineer officer who ever held this place. He says that he goes away at his own request. The gentleman from New York, to make his intimation good, insists that he lies. Well, the gentleman and Colonel Bingham will have to settle it.

Now, as to holding up vouchers. The expenditures for changes and improvements at the White House were made under the general direction of the President. He had the power to have the expenditures made and the accounts kept by the superintendent of public buildings and grounds or any other living person. He chose the superintendent of public buildings and grounds; he kept the accounts. I happen to know from conversations with the superintendent of public buildings and grounds that the President was very glad indeed to have him perform this duty, and that the superintendent of public buildings and grounds was pleased to perform it. So that "mare's nest" disappears.

Whether the contractor has complied with his contract or not I do not know. If he has not, he will not be paid; if he has, he ought to have his money.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman say whether, as a matter of fact, there is a conflict of opinion between Colonel Bingham and the Secretary of War as to the propriety of approving certain vouchers?

Mr. CANNON. In my judgment, no. The Secretary of War has nothing to do with their approval.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the Secretary of War has sought to have something to do with their approval and has been irritated because he has not been able to have something to do with their approval, that would lend some color to the language of the gentleman from New York, would it not?

Mr. CANNON. So far as I know or believe, the conflict exists in the gentleman's imagination or the imagination of somebody else. In a short session of Congress, to cut the whole matter short, I have enough to do to attend to the public business and matters that come before us regularly rather than spend my time in chasing down the suppositions of some beloved friend and brother who sends a dispatch that fills so much space in an honored newspaper. They have got to make the newspapers every day. I am not abusing them.

Now, one word as to the idea of my good friend——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois has stated that I have "intimated" that Colonel Bingham "lied." I hope he will withdraw that statement.

Mr. CANNON. I just wanted to say what the fact was—that to make his position good he must insist that Colonel Bingham had not been candid when he stated the reason why he was transferred. I will put it that way; that is more diplomatic. [Laughter.]

Now, I want to say just one word more, because I want to finish this bill to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is no question before the committee. This discussion is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. I thought there was an amendment pending.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield to me. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Heaven forfend! [Laughter.] Now, the gentleman from Tennessee objects to the language, "sixty thousand dollars, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine." But, after all, the language ought to be in that form. If it were provided that the contract should be given to the lowest bidder, it might happen that somebody that ought not to be admitted to the White House at all might come there in the guise of making repairs—somebody who might have evil designs. Therefore, for the expenditure of appropriations of this kind, looking to the comfort of the Chief Magistrate and for the benefit of all the people, language of this kind has always been adopted in all Administrations, and for a cause.

Now, to my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] I want to say only a word. I do not think he and I can prevent people from entertaining at their own expense as they choose. The entertainments at the White House at the expense of the Government I do not think are subject to criticism. Some years ago a friend of mine from Chicago introduced to me an Englishman—a man of the middle class, a merchant—who called on me and presented the letter of introduction. It was during a short session of Congress. He said to me, "I have only one desire to gratify before I go away. I would like to see the President of this great Republic, if it is possible for me to do so. I can not stay here longer than ten days." "Well," said I, "is that all you want?" "Yes," said he, "I would go right away, well satisfied, if I could just be presented to the President." I said that I was in quite a hurry that morning. He came to my hotel. I sent for my daughter, who was there, and I said, after introducing the gentleman, "Helen, I must go to the Capitol. Will you be kind enough to accompany this gentleman to the White House and introduce him to the President?" She said, "Certainly, I will, papa," and that introduction was over in fifteen minutes! [Laughter.] He was a citizen of Great Britain, who had never had the pleasure of being introduced to the sovereign of his own country, but that is the way we do things in this country. [Applause.] And, gentlemen, we need not call on our imagination in respect to this matter. There is not a constituent of any man in the hearing of my voice who can not go to his Representative and be presented to the Chief Executive of the greatest, most powerful, freest, best Government on earth. I do not think we are in great danger of putting on frills; we are getting along first rate. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 96, line 4, strike out the word "sixty" and insert the word "forty-six."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire the indulgence of the committee to state the facts upon which I base this amendment. Here is a letter of General Bingham, contained in a report of Mr. Root. I read a part of it a few moments ago. Here is what he says:

The following is a rough estimate of the expenses above referred to, and is below, rather than above, the actual needs:

1 assistant electrician, at $60 per month	$720
1 plumber, at $1,000 per year	1,000
1 head fireman, at $65 per month	780
2 assistant firemen, at $55 per month each	1,320
2 extra house servants (laborers), at $50 each per month	1,200
2 extra laborers in laundry, at $25 per month each	600
Hauling and handling flowers and plants	2,000
For extra labor, hauling, sundries of all kinds, for the large functions in winter and for increased entertainments in the White House throughout the year	5,000
For purchase of extra flowers beyond what can be supplied by the gardens	1,500
Total	14,120

General Bingham further says: "The above amounts to about $15,000, which, added to the $35,000 found necessary during the past year, makes a total of $50,000, and the appropriation should be $60,000, to cover all contingency," that unused being covered back into the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is needless for me to say that this report does not in effect arraign the management of the White House with a long line of extravagance. It does say that the President is doing a large amount of entertaining, that we have destroyed the flower house adjoining the White House, where we used to go and listen to the dulcet strains of far-off music, looking at the unplucked buds! [Laughter.]

Flowers must now be hauled a mile from the propagating garden, and others bought out in the city, when entertainments are given. Some of the work done—the improvements, so called—is bungling and painfully unattractive, very costly, and reflects credit on no one. After the President's office—this new little headquarters—had been about finished on the west, and the tunnel on the east side was about complete, some one came along and said, "Where is your coal house?" The reply was, "I forgot that;" and then the coal house was put between the White House and this new office of the President.

So the coal house is now between the White House and where the President has his office. Just think of such an architect as that! I can go down into my district and pick up some carpenter down there, whether he votes the Republican or the Democratic ticket, and particularly if he votes the Democratic ticket, who can plan and erect a better addition to the White House than this and at less cost, I dare say.

Now, I subtract the $14,120 from the $60,000 and offer my amendment accordingly. The President's salary has been increased to $50,000 since the days of President Grant, whose predecessors were paid $25,000 annually—Lincoln, Jackson, and all. Yet here, on the anniversary of the birthday of Lincoln, we are asked to countenance this extravagance. I have never heard that Lincoln was ever accused of extravagance. The architect wrought cruel changes that now force General Bingham to ask for extra appropriations to cover, a most notable change being the substitution of a coal cellar for the beautiful and useful conservatory. These extras are asked for "because the President is doing a large amount of entertaining," says General Bingham. This is one of the causes.

Mr. Chairman, with the greatest respect to the distinguished occupant of the White House, I say that we ought at least to go back and conduct the White House along the frugal lines upon which the lamented McKinley, if you please, conducted it when he was President and Mr. Roosevelt was Vice-President, when Cleveland was there, and their long line of predecessors.

Where is this going to stop, this coming in here and calling upon the people of the country to pay their tax money in extra amounts, for what? For having things that are extravagant, things that are unnecessary, things unheard of for more than a century of this glorious Republic. Shall we sit here with such a document as this General Bingham's letter before us (which, by the way, I did not see until a few moments ago, when I sent to the document room and got it), and agree to any such extravagance as this? I for one can not possibly agree to this bold-faced expenditure for an extravagance, practically denominated as such, certainly proved to be such, by General Bingham.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word. This estimate of $60,000 is the amount that was made and regularly transmitted. We sent for the gentleman and examined him. This examination is here. That is the amount that is required, and that is all the answer I desire to make to the argument of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the distinguished chairman of the committee, in commenting upon the question whether improvements to the White House should be let out by contract or otherwise, referred to the fact that possibly if it was let out by contract dangerous characters might be admitted into the White House in the vicinity of the President. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks anything could be more dangerous from the standpoint of a designing anarchist who is seeking an opportunity to take the life of the President than to put him down there in that little underground affair, which reminds one of a Western dugout—almost a chicken coop—called the Executive offices, just south of the Cabinet room, where the President himself sits, exposed by open windows? It would not take an expert anarchist very long to shoot the President through one of those windows.

Mr. Chairman, we spent much time last winter in passing a law to protect the President from the assaults of anarchists, and we now have built a place in which to put him that invites their attention. I say it is most remarkable, when we are trying to protect the President, that we should place him in so exposed a position and give those seeking his life so good an opportunity to get in their work. Now, does the gentleman think a contractor could be more dangerous to the life of the President than forcing him to stay all the time where he does when attending to the business of the country?

Mr. CANNON. This appropriation has always run this way for a wise reason. I have stated one of the reasons. I do not care to multiply words, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the gentleman know what percentage the architect got on these improvements?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not know. I have no knowledge. I think 5 per cent is the usual amount.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I understood it was 10 per cent. The gentleman has no definite information.

Mr. CANNON. I have no knowledge about it, and, great heavens, I have no patience with the architect!

I ask for a vote.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in order that everyone who desires may know exactly what I have been quoting from here, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report containing the letter of General Bingham.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the report from which he read a moment ago. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

[House Doc. No. 321, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.]

BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS IN AND AROUND WASHINGTON, D. C.

Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting revised estimates of appropriation for buildings and grounds in and around Washington. January 26, 1903.—Referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 24, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of a communication from the Secretary of War of the 23d instant, submitting revised estimates of appropriations under "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington in charge of the Chief of Engineers," aggregating $110,264, in lieu of estimates for like objects on pages 254 and 255 of the Book of Estimates for 1904, aggregating $59,764.

Respectfully,

L. M. SHAW,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 23, 1903.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for transmission to Congress, increased estimates of appropriations pertaining to buildings and grounds in and around Washington in charge of the Chief of Engineers, to replace like estimates submitted in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, as follows:

Improvement and care of public grounds	$9,400
Repairs, fuel, etc., Executive Mansion	80,000
Lighting, etc., Executive Mansion, etc	20,864
Total	110,264

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

OFFICE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS,
Washington, January 21, 1903.

GENERAL: 1. At the request of Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, made this day, I have the honor to forward herewith certain increased estimates pertaining to the White House and the grounds of same for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, to take the place of corresponding estimates submitted with annual report dated July 19, 1902, with the following remarks explanatory of the necessity for the increased estimates. Mr. Cannon has signified a desire that these revised estimates be sent at once through the regular channels, so that they may reach him not later than Thursday, January 22, 1903.

2. As a preliminary, it is proper to call attention to the fact that the annual report of this office (including estimates for the second following fiscal year) is required to be submitted not later than July 20. The estimates so submitted are not considered by Congress until about six months later (and generally more); and in six months circumstances change very materially, making it absolutely necessary in this case for the public service to ask for the increased estimates herewith submitted for the White House.

3. In June last, at the close of the last session of Congress, provision was made for the expenditure of large sums of money for remodeling the White House and for building a new building for the offices of the President. Within three weeks of that time estimates were submitted by this office for the ensuing year.

It was impossible at that time to do more than to submit the usual estimates, based on the experience of past years. Now, seven months later, circumstances have changed very materially. The White House has been changed so materially that an entirely new estimate is needed, with no past experience as a guide, and with the separate building for the offices of the President to be also provided for.

4. The recent changes of the White House have resulted in a building far more expensive to keep up than formerly. The architects have not yet fully completed their work, and it will certainly be the end of February before all workmen are completely out of the house. It will be impossible to give accurate estimates of the cost of running the new house until the workmen are out of the way and a whole year elapsed thereafter, because it takes a whole year for the house to be put through its various uses.

5. The last appropriation for "Care, repair, and refurnishing of the Executive Mansion" was $25,000. It has since been found necessary to ask for $10,000 in addition thereto for the current year on the general deficiency bill, which makes a total of $35,000, and changes may yet have to be made in the tank and filter.

The character of the new fittings and furnishings of the White House is such that repairs and replacing of ordinary wear and tear, of accidents, will be much more expensive than before. For instance, it will be much more expensive to replace the specially designed silver door knobs and escutcheons, the various glass knobs, the silver and gilt hinges, curtain fixtures, window fixtures, etc.

6. The hard-wood floors and tiling all over the house will require much extra labor to keep in order.

The plumbing system, which is much more extensive than before, will require the entire services of a plumber, who must also look after the new office building, which contains much plumbing.

The electrician who has charge of the electric machinery, motors, pumps, fans, and over 2,200 incandescent lights, all the bell and telephone wiring, etc., must have an assistant because he has also to care for the new office building.

During a part of the year there must be three men—one on duty all of the time to look after the fires, as the heating is more intricate than before, involving one boiler for hot water and another for steam, and various other fires in the office building, in the laundry, etc.

More help will be needed in the laundry, owing to the large family which occupies the White House and the large amount of entertaining done by the President, which increases the use of table linen, etc.

7. As the conservatory of the old house has been abolished, a considerable amount of expense for labor and hauling is necessary to decorate the house, which now has to be done from the propagating gardens, a mile away.

The former estimate for labor and incidentals connected with the winter entertainments at the White House must have a considerable increase, because the President is doing a large amount of entertaining. Also owing to the abolition of the conservatories and greenhouses, flowers have, from time to time, to be purchased for the winter entertainments beyond what can now be furnished by the propagating gardens.

8. The following is a rough estimate of the expenses above referred to, and is below rather than above the actual needs:

1 assistant electrician, at $60 per month	$720
1 plumber, at $1,000 per year	1,000
1 head fireman, at $65 per month	780
2 assistant firemen, at $55 per month each	1,320
2 extra house servants (laborers), at $50 each per month	1,200
2 extra laborers in laundry, at $25 per month each	600
Hauling and handling flowers and plants	2,000
For extra labor, hauling, sundries of all kinds, for the large functions in winter and for increased entertainments in the White House throughout the year	5,000
For purchase of extra flowers beyond what can be supplied by the gardens	1,500
Total	14,120

9. It is impossible to make this estimate complete, but, as will be seen, the above amounts to about $15,000, which, added to the $35,000 found necessary during the past year, makes a total of $50,000, and the appropriation should be $60,000 to cover all contingencies. It is of course understood that any amounts not found necessary are returned to the Treasury.

10. Under the heading "Maintenance of White House grounds within the iron fence," the former appropriation was $1,000. This was at a time when the services of the entire force of gardeners and laborers used in the White House conservatories were available. As the conservatories have been abolished and the force above referred to is no longer available for this use, it is necessary to increase this estimate to $4,000.

11. Under the heading "Lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds:"

(a) The number of lights in the house has been increased two and a half times, now numbering over 2,200.

(b) The new electric motor takes two and a half times the current formerly used, and there is an electric dish warmer in the pantry, which consumes considerable current.

(c) Under the new plumbing system it is necessary to run an electric pump almost all day.

(d) In addition to all the above, which is in the White House itself, there is the lighting of the new Executive office building, of which I have not now the exact figures, but which very materially increases the amount of current used.

The former appropriation for this purpose was $12,500, instead of which $20,000 will now be required.

12. The item for fuel, which has heretofore been $3,000, will now require $8,000, because of the increased number of fires and the increased quantity of fuel required to heat the new Executive office, which is a separate building.

13. Out of the material of the former conservatories, which were torn down, I have constructed at the propagating gardens as much greenhouse as was possible. These houses are not yet completed, and it will take a year before the plants in them can be overhauled and reorganized and made available for use at the Executive Mansion.

Hence the item for "Repairs to conservatory and greenhouses" is still necessary, and the sum asked for, namely, $3,000, will be sufficient, except that it is necessary to insert the word "reerection," so that this amount will be available for the utilization of the material brought away from the now destroyed conservatories.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THEO. A. BINGHAM,
Colonel, United States Army, Major, Corps of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. G. L. GILLESPIE,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C.

NOTE.—The necessity for the increase in certain of the foregoing items over those for the present year, and for the change in the wording of certain items, is explained in the accompanying letter, dated January 21, 1903, of Col. Theo. A. Bingham, U. S. Army, in charge of Public Buildings and Grounds.—(G. L. Gillespie, Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.)

OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, U. S. ARMY,
January 22, 1903.

Respectfully submitted to the Secretary of War.

G. L. GILLESPIE,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

Improving Mouth of Columbia River, Oregon and Washington: For continuing improvement in accordance with the approved or modified project, as authorized, $1,000,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 13, page 108, after the word "dollars," the following:

"To continue the work of repairing and renewing the revetments on the Kansas bank of the Missouri River, in Elwood and Belmont bends, near the city of St. Joseph, Mo., the sum of $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall be compelled to make the point of order on that. The conclusive reason against it is that in this bill there is no jurisdiction over that subject. There is another reason, that this is not authorized by law.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors will insist upon his point of order. I do not believe the amendment is subject to a point of order, because it is for the continuation of a public work, and no one knows better than the gentleman from Ohio that work has been done on the Missouri River at this very point. He knows, no doubt, as does the Chair, that it has been frequently held that where work has been suspended for a short time an amendment to resume the work was not subject to a point of order.

Each year since 1884 work has been done on the Missouri River at the point covered by this amendment. In the last appropriation bill $175,000 was appropriated to continue improvements on the Missouri River from Sioux City, Iowa, to the mouth of the river. It will be admitted by the gentleman that even as late as December last work was done on the Missouri River at this very point. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling made during the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1261). It was held that the repair of a bridge built at Government expense is the continuation of a public work.

In the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, it was held that the completion of a naval vessel, although the work has been long interrupted, is the continuation of a public work. (See RECORD, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, pp. 1913, 1914.) That being true, surely this point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas inform the Chair as to whether there was any limit of cost fixed when the work was originally authorized?

Mr. CURTIS. None whatever. I will state further, and I hope it will be considered by the committee when the vote is taken on this amendment, that the Missouri River Commission recommend in their report that the work at this point be continued. They say:

These revetments have received a large amount of repair work and renewals, and at the present time stand in need of a considerable amount of repair.

If this river should cut through at this point, it would be attended with disastrous results to the interests of St. Joe and have a far-reaching and detrimental effect on navigation. If the work is not continued at this point, there is great danger of the river breaking through the revetments and doing great damage to property and detrimental to navigation.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I was temporarily out of the House and did not hear this amendment. Is this an amendment offered to the bill for the purpose of improving some part of the Missouri River?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir. Will the Clerk report the amendment again?

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CURTIS. It is to continue the work of repairing the revetments of the Missouri River in Ellwood and Belmont bends of the Missouri River, near the city of St. Joe.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does not the gentleman think it is a pretty dangerous practice to say that we should have no appropriation for that river, and then that we should give appropriations to certain favored spots and leave the balance of the river to suffer?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think this is a favored spot; if it was, the gentleman from Ohio would not have made the point of order against the amendment. I want to say, further, I do not believe in the practice of opposing amendments of this kind. Amendments which provide for the protection of property and assist navigation should be agreed to.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The point I make is, why select out certain favored spots for certain favored people and neglect the balance of the 2,000 miles of the river? I think that is not consistent.

Mr. CURTIS. I was not one of the favored. In fact, there are no favored people.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It should be brought here with the balance of the river. A few people selected may get favors, and there ought not to be such a preference.

Mr. CURTIS. I would suggest that the gentleman prepare and offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Kansas if this work is under contract?

Mr. CURTIS. No, sir. It was until last year in charge of the Missouri River Commission. This Commission was abolished in the last river and harbor bill. Now the work is under the charge of the War Department. There is a commissioner, Mr. Chittenden, located, I believe, at Sioux City, Iowa, who has charge of the work on the Missouri River from Sioux City, Iowa, to the mouth.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. From Sioux City to the mouth?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. REEVES. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. REEVES. Is there any existing project now under contract that you now seek to have the amendent offered for——

Mr. CURTIS. There was $175,000 appropriated to continue the improvements on the Missouri River between Sioux City and its mouth, and work was done at the point covered by this amendment as late as December, 1902.

Mr. REEVES. The gentleman did not permit metoconclude my question. But I want to suggest to the gentleman, since he has answered me, that there is no project that this amendment would be applicable to, and where there is no project upon which the appropriation has been made the point of order must necessarily be good.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, a question of such importance is involved here that unless the mind of the Chair is made up I should like to be heard briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BURTON. The appropriations in this sundry civil bill are made in pursuance of authorizations contained in preceding river and harbor bills. The very phraseology here at the beginning makes this clear:

Toward the construction of works on harbors and rivers, under contract and otherwise, and within the limits authorized by law, namely.

Then it goes on: For works authorized by the river and harbor act of 1896; then by the river and harbor act of 1899; then by the river and harbor act of 1902. The phraseology of these authorizations is practically the same in all. I will read one in our last bill:

Improving harbor at Gloucester, Mass.: For continuing improvement, $75,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary in accordance with the approved project, to be paid for as the appropriations may from to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $227,083.

The $75,000 is an appropriation; the $227,083 is an authorization. Every one of the items in this bill is one for which an authorization was made and a limit fixed in some previous river and harbor bill. This is by no means a new question. In the Congress which was in session on the 5th of May, 1900, an amendment was proposed as to this river by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD]. The amendment was in these words:

Insert the following:

"Improving the Missouri River at Jefferson, Mo., continuing improvement, $50,000; at Overton, Mo., continuing improvement, $50,000."

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. CANNON] raised the point of order that on the sundry civil bill such an amendment could not be placed, and that point of order was sustained. The limit of this character of appropriation was also very clearly stated so far back as the Fifty-second Congress. It appears in the RECORD for the second session, page 1065.

This was a case where the point of order was raised to all of the class of appropriations contained in this bill. It was claimed that no river and harbor appropriation should go on the sundry civil bill, but the Chair ruled that if the provision authorized a specific amount previously authorized in a river and harbor bill, you could put it on the sundry civil bill.

The Chair would say if the Appropriations Committee should bring in a bill having an item or paragraph declaring in the usual language of the river and harbor bills that so much money should be appropriated for improving a river or harbor, without a law previously made authorizing and requiring the appropriation, the Committee on Appropriations would not have jurisdiction to bring in such a measure. In other words, it would not have jurisdiction unless the appropriation of money for that river or that harbor had been previously authorized by law and required to be met as an obligation of the Government.

Now, not only is this the case, but this amendment is contrary to the law. We had some discussion about the Missouri River when the last river and harbor bill was passed. We abolished the Missouri River commission. Instead of making appropriations for specific points on the river the bill contained a provision for appropriating $175,000 in one sum with this direction. I will read the provision, or so much of it as is necessary.

Improving the Missouri River from Sioux City, Iowa, to the mouth of the river, continuing improvement, $175,000. Said sum to be expended in such manner and in such localities as the Secretary of War may direct.

Then it goes on to speak of the different localities at which surveys are to be made. Under this provision the Secretary of War can appropriate any part, even all of it, for this locality if it is worthy, but the law was changed and the change provided a very different method. First, there was the abolition of the commission and, second, the abandonment of specific appropriation for this place or any other place. I can hardly exaggerate the injustice that would be done by enacting this provision. It is in the same class with thirty or forty which have been brought to the attention of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, all of which we have felt compelled to reject at this session, because we could not bring in one and do justice without bringing in thirty or forty others. So this is not in accordance with good policy and is clearly contrary to the provisions in the law.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to call the attention of the Chairman to the wording of the item of this bill on page 107:

For continuing improvement for the mouth of the Mississippi River to St. Paul, Minn., $400,000.

The item in the last bill read as follows:

For improving the Missouri River from Sioux City, Iowa, to the mouth of the river, continuing improvement.

Now, the gentleman forgets to call attention of the Chair to the fact that in this very item the Secretary of War is required to cause examinations to be had at St. Joe with a view to ascertain what improvements, if any, are necessary for navigation. This would indicate that appropriations of this very kind would be asked for.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman does not want the House to misunderstand him. There is a radical difference between his amendment and this appropriation of $400,000, to which he refers; that is one-third of $1,200,000 authorized in the preceding bill.

Mr. CURTIS. But it does not say so.

Mr. BURTON. It is not necessary to say so. It is expected the House can look back at the preceding bill.

Mr. CURTIS. The House may look back to the preceding bills for each session since 1884 and will find that appropriations have been made in almost this same language, except providing for a commission, to make improvements on the Missouri River from Sioux City to its mouth.

Mr. BURTON. I think the gentleman entirely misunderstands the law in regard to this matter. The appropriation of which he speaks was one in which $400,000 cash was appropriated; and there was an authorization of $1,200,000 besides the $400,000. This $400,000 is in pursuance of that authorization. Your appropriation of $175,000 is final; it is appropriated in cash; it is not coupled with any authorization.

Mr. CURTIS. If that argument is sound, then every time we make an appropriation that appropriation is final. The gentleman from Ohio knows that it has been repeatedly held by the Chair that if an item is contained in an appropriation bill from session to session and then is left out by the committee, an amendment to restore the item is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BURTON. That may be; but still it should be reported in a proper manner.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter of so much importance that if the Chair is not ready to rule, I should like to be heard in favor of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Upon the facts conceded in the discussion on this point of order it is clear to the Chair that if the item proposed in this amendment had been originally included in the pending appropriation bill as it came from the Committee on Appropriations it would not have been in order, on the ground that the Committee on Appropriations under the rules of the House has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of this amendment. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; to which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 6525. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 12098. An act to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska;" and

H. R. 13307. An act for the relief of Valdemar Poulsen.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 14764. An act to establish United States courts at Wilkesboro, N. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 16161) granting an increase of pension to Francis A. Tradewell, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. PRITCHARD, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as the conferrees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the House to the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 65.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized to insert, in line 12 of the third paragraph of section 6, after the word "Interstate," the word "Commerce."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Philippine Islands: For the relief of the distress in the Philippine Islands, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Philippine government in such proportions as they deem wise, in the direct purchase and distribution or sale of farm implements, farm animals, supplies, and necessaries of life, and through the employment of labor in the construction of government wagon roads, railroads, and other public works, to be immediately available, $3,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LOUD. I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. JONES of Kentucky. I wish to make a point of order against this section.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall insist upon the point of order, but I made it, or, rather, reserved it, in order that we might hear some explanation of this matter.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think that the paragraph is subject to a point of order. Of course we can not proceed to perfect the paragraph by amendment or to discuss its merits while the point of order is pending.

Mr. LOUD. I desired to reserve the point of order so that the gentleman might have an opportunity to explain the paragraph. Of course he will not assume for a moment that the paragraph is not subject to a point of order. I do not think he can contest that question.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I certainly shall not contest it unless the point of order is made.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I ask whether the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD] has made a point of order against this item?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I think he now withdraws the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Well, I renew the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia on the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The point is this: That there is no law authorizing this expenditure. This is new legislation, pure and simple—absolutely so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I suppose that before the point of order is decided we might agree upon a reasonable time for discussion of the item, with opportunity to amend it. If there be opportunity for discussion and amendment, no one, I think, is disposed to insist on the point of order. All that is desired is reasonable time for discussion and amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I have an amendment which I propose to submit, and I have no objection to a reasonable time for discussion.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. What would the gentleman regard as "reasonable time?"

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I suggest that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois be read for information, pending the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 111, line 24, strike out "railroads," and on page 112, in line 2, insert, after the word "dollars," the words:

"And the governor of the Philippines shall submit to the Secretary of War a statement of all expenditures hereunder."

Mr. CANNON. That is the amendment I propose to offer. If any gentleman wishes to insist on the point of order, and if the amendment is subject to the point of order, that will dispose of the question. If, however, the point of order be withdrawn, I shall be quite willing for any reasonable discussion upon the proposition. I apprehend that we need have no difficulty in agreeing about that.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have an amendment which I propose to offer and which is almost identical in language with that of the gentleman just read. I will read what I propose to offer, so that the gentleman may see what the difference is.

I propose that on page 111, line 24, the word "railroads," and on page 112, line 1, the words "and other public works" be stricken out, and propose further to add the following language to the section instead of that offered by the gentleman from Illinois:

And provided, That said Philippine Government through the governor of the Philippines shall submit annually to Congress, and oftener if so required by the President of the United States, an itemized statement or report showing in detail the manner in which the expenditures herein contemplated have been made.

That covers exactly the provision of the gentleman from Illinois, but it is somewhat fuller, and I think we ought to have a detailed report.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to a complete report of the expenditure of this money.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Then I will say frankly to the gentleman that I propose another amendment, inasmuch as it is not proposed now by the committee that the Government shall enter upon the building of railroads, that this appropriation should be reduced from three millions to one million, or at least a million and a half.

Mr. CANNON. Well, of course it would be subject to all amendments which are germane, but my friend will see at once that if the point of order is well taken, that disposes of the whole question. Now, if the gentleman does not desire to press his point of order, I am quite ready to negotiate with him as to any reasonable discussion, and of course the section will be subject to all amendments which are germane.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Would not the gentleman be willing also to negotiate as to the amendment he is going to propose, the amendment which is in line with the amendment that I propose to offer?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, any amendments that are germane could be offered. I have no pride in mine.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Let the gentleman reserve his point of order.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. That is not the question. The question is whether or not we might not agree on this amendment. Does not the gentleman think that the amount ought to be reduced?

Mr. CANNON. No, I do not, from the best information that we can get. I do not know that the whole amount will be expended, but I suspect that it would be. I think it ought not to be reduced, considering the condition of the Philippines. As to the matter of accounting and striking out the word "railroads," I do not know that it is anticipated to build any railroads. Possibly there may be something in and about the Army posts or elsewhere. I have no objection to striking it out, but I think the wagon roads and other public improvements ought to remain, because I believe it is desirable from every standpoint that the people who are to receive this relief should invariably earn it where it is possible. That was the course followed in Porto Rico.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I would say to the gentleman frankly that I myself would not insist upon this point of order provided the gentleman is willing to strike out the words "and other public works."

Mr. CANNON. I think those words ought to stay there. There may be harbor improvements—anything, I would say to my friend, which would tend toward public improvement where the recipient of this charity would earn it rather than receive it for nothing is desirable. It is much better for the recipient and it is better for the government of the Philippines.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understand that, but my idea is that the government of the Philippines should furnish that money. This is a purely charitable appropriation, absolutely so.

Mr. CANNON. Considering the situation and under all the conditions and revenues of the Philippines, they are not prepared to relieve themselves.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman how much time he would be willing to allow for the discussion.

Mr. CANNON. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Gentlemen on our side think there ought at least to be an hour and a half set aside for the discussion of this item.

Mr. CANNON. That would be three-quarters of an hour to a side.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing to agree to that.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman, then, that I will not insist on the point of order. Of course I can not speak for all gentlemen on our side, for I have not conferred with them.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman then withdraws his point of order, and I will offer the amendment and that will take it beyond the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. With the understanding that the gentleman will ask that an hour and a half be allowed for discussion.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; one-half hour on this side and one-half on the gentleman's side. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that an hour and a half be set aside for debate on this proposition, one-half thereof to be under the control, I will say, of myself, and one-half under the control of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that an hour and a half be set aside for general debate on the pending proposition, one-half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Virginia.

During the submission of the foregoing request by the Chairman the following occurred:

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Will that take it beyond the point of order, a reserved point of order?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Oh, yes.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Then I will raise the point of order.

Mr. ROBB. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. But, Mr. Chairman, I raised the point of order on this matter in time, before the Chairman put the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Well; I said it loud enough.

The CHAIRMAN. Before submitting the request of the gentleman from Illinois, when the gentleman from Virginia withdrew his point of order——

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. And I raised the point of order in time, immediately after the gentleman withdrew it. I submit I have some rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to make any point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. The Chair can give me those rights now, whether he understood it or not. The Chair is here to rule according to the parliamentary procedure of this body, and when I make this point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will take his seat until the Chair makes his statement. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to ask the gentleman from Illinois if that would cut off the right to reserve the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I can not understand the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. And thereupon the gentleman from Illinois answered that it would, and nothing more was said. The Chair submitted to the committee the request of the gentleman from Illinois, and there was no objection, and it was so ordered; and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania raised the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. That is an exact statement of the facts.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I have no doubt that the Chair did not hear the point of order that I raised, but nevertheless my statement is entitled to verity when it is not denied by anybody here, whether the Chair heard it or not, that I raised the point of order in time, and I am certainly not contending for any more than the rights which every member has on this floor, to have accorded to him what the rules give him. When I make that statement I certainly should not be cut off in this manner.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I heard the gentleman. He did not persist. The Chair, I apprehend, did not hear him and the action was had. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the order may be vacated, so that the gentleman, if he desires to make the point of order on this provision, shall have the opportunity to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the order just made be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order, and I would say that I know so little about the reasons which have actuated this committee to put this matter into this bill that I ask that this debate proceed under a reserved point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I will not consent to that.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I think I am entitled to know why this is put in here. If it is right I want to agree to it.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. BROMWELL. If it is not right, then vote it down.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I lose my right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has every right, if he can get a majority of the committee with him, to exclude this, to amend it, to reject it, or do anything else; but I am not going on here for an hour and a half discussing the merits of this proposition, and then have the gentleman make his point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has already proposed an amendment to his own bill. There is no testimony in the hearings here that I have been able to find after diligent search for a couple of days.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is not in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We would like to know some reason for it.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I should like to interrogate the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. I desire to say that if the gentleman will change his amendment so as to strike out after the words "necessities of life," I do not think this will be so objectionable; but there are, I believe, two honest and cogent reasons why that should not be put in this appropriation bill.

Mr. STEELE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman may be right about that. If so, the House would vote with him. I do not think he is right.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the committee knows that the House does not vote right according to my views of right, but according to his views of right.

Mr. CANNON. After all, the committee is bigger than both of us.

Mr. GREEN of Pennsylvania. But I do not claim to have the same power over the committee as the gentleman from Illinois. I think that should be added to the gentleman's amendment. Otherwise, I shall insist on my point of order.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can exercise his rights. I will not quarrel with him about it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I now ask, in fairness to the gentleman from Virginia, if he still desires general debate——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Of course we still desire it.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that there may be an hour and a half of general debate, to be divided equally, the gentleman from Virginia to control one-half and myself one-half.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that some of my friends who are on the Insular Committee are urging me to ask that the gentleman make it two hours.

Mr. CANNON. I would rather not. We will have the five-minute discussion after that.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will not insist. I would be glad if the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. I hope to finish the bill to-night. I am going to ask the committee to sit until we finish it. It will be 5 o'clock at the end of the hour and a half.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that one and a half hours be devoted to debate on this paragraph, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES]. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I reserve the right to object. I want a little consultation over the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. CANNON. Then I ask for the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 24, page 111, strike out the word "railroads;" and, on page 112, in line 2, after the word "dollars," insert:

"And the governor of the Philippines shall submit to the Secretary of War a statement of all expenditures hereunder."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to one fact?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. This amendment directs that this money shall be expended under the direction of the Philippine governor.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The Secretary of War is not mentioned anywhere in this at all. Now, I fail to see how the Secretary of War can make a report unless the Philippine government renders an account of its expenditures under this appropriation.

Mr. CANNON. Then I ask for the reading of the text as it would be if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the text as it will be if the amendment is adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24 of page 111 strike out "railroads;" and on page 112, in line 2, after the word "dollars," insert "and the governor of the Philippines shall submit to the Secretary of War a statement of all expenditures hereunder;" so as to read:

"And necessaries of life, and through the employment in the construction of Government wagon roads and other public works, to be immediately available, $3,000,000, and the governor of the Philippines shall submit to the Secretary of War a statement of all expenditures hereunder."

Mr. CANNON. Now, I think that meets my friend's criticism. I want to call the attention of the committee very briefly to what has moved the Committee on Appropriations, I believe almost unanimously, I think perhaps quite so, to report this appropriation. Governor Taft makes a report as to the condition of the Philippines which is abstracted in substance—and I have read both—in a communication from the Secretary of War, and I will ask the Clerk to read, commencing with the word "President," on page 11, and ending at page 12.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, January 6, 1903.

The PRESIDENT:

I have the honor to transmit herewith the third annual report of the Philippine Commission, covering the year ending October 1, 1902. This report is in compliance with the third paragraph of the instructions to the Philippine Commission, dated April 7, 1900, and with section 86 of the act entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902.

Accompanying the report, and transmitted with it, are the acts of the Philippine Commission, from and including act No. 425, enacted July 2, 1902, to and including act No. 493, enacted October 27, 1902.

Section 86 of the act of Congress above cited requires that these laws shall be reported to Congress. All of the laws enacted by the Commission prior to that act have already been reported to Congress.

I beg to ask special consideration of the recommendations of the Commission, all of which have my hearty approval.

It seems to me that the conditions resulting from the destruction by rinderpest of 90 per cent of the carabaos, the draft animals of the islands, and the consequent failure of the rice crop, followed by an epidemic of cholera, are so serious and distressing as to call for action by Congress beyond that for which the Commission specifically ask.

The removal under the laws of Congress of export duties on goods shipped from the Philippines to the United States has materially reduced the revenues of the island, while the duties collected in the United States upon importations from the Philippines, which under the same laws were to be turned over to the Philippine treasury, and were expected to make good the deficit, have amounted to practically nothing. At the same time the decline in the price of silver, the evils of a fluctuating currency, and the impoverishment of the people, have reduced the government revenues when they are most needed for relief of the people.

I think the occasion for relief in the Philippines is now greater than it was in Cuba when Congress appropriated $3,000,000 for the payment of the Cuban soldiers out of the Treasury of the United States, or than it was in Porto Rico when hundreds of thousands of dollars were contributed by the people of the United States, and more than a million of dollars paid out of the National Treasury for the relief of the sufferers from the hurricane of August, 1899.

An appropriation of not less than $3,000,000 for the relief of the distress in the Philippine Islands from the causes which I have mentioned would be in harmony with the course pursued by Congress toward the people of the other Spanish islands and practical evidence of the sincere interest that the people of the United States take in the welfare of the Philippine people and of the kindly and generous treatment which they are to receive. Previous experience indicates that such an appropriation could be made the most useful by giving the Philippine government discretion to apply it, in such proportions as they deem wise, in the direct purchase and distribution or sale of supplies, or through the employment of labor in the construction of Government wagon roads, railroads, or other public works.

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I yet?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will ask unanimous consent for five minutes more. I think I can say all I want to in that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. This recommendation tells the story. It is an abstract of a report made by Governor Taft. Gentlemen understand about the currency trouble that they have had in the Philippines. They understand, further, that they have had almost a continuous state of war and brigandage for a number of years. It also appears from this report that the rinderpest had attacked the cattle or carabaos, the draft animals used in the Philippines, being the only draft animals they have, and that 90 per cent of them have been destroyed.

It appears, further, that they have had an epidemic of cholera throughout the archipelago, and that in round numbers 100,000 lives have been lost from this epidemic. From the Philippine revenues rice in limited quantity, large quantities, has been purchased and distributed to those who were suffering. As the time approaches to make the new crop they are without draft animals, they have largely advanced in price, and have to be brought from other countries, and there is a condition of suffering there that justifies the appropriation of this $3,000,000. That is all I want to say about that.

I want to say further that the Secretary of War recommends that, considering the experience we had in Cuba and Porto Rico, as follows:

Previous experience indicates that such an appropriation could be made most useful by giving the Philippine government direction to apply it in such proportion as they deem wise in the construction of railroads, the distribution or sale of supplies, or through the employment of labor in the construction of government wagon roads, railroads, or other public works.

There was over a million dollars expended from the Treasury for the relief of the hurricane sufferers in Porto Rico, a large part of which was expended in the employment of the people relieved.

It seemed to your committee that that was a good way to make the expenditure. Wherever you are compelled to give something for nothing it is apt to have a pauperizing effect, and if these people who are seeking this relief are able to work and willing to work, it is a correct way to spend the money and save the self-respect of those who are able to work to care for those who are unable to work, and also furnishes draft animals and supplies for those who are starving in some instances and can not make their crops without this advance.

We appropriated $3,000,000 for Cuba at one time under conditions not so serious as these that now exist in the Philippines. We have expended over a million dollars for the hurricane sufferers in Porto Rico. Now, that is all the story and covers the ground so far as your committee had the facts in their possession.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose there is a member in this House who desires to oppose an appropriation of whatever amount that is absolutely necessary to relieve the distress in the Philippine Islands. But I am afraid that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who is usually extremely cautious in his protection of the National Treasury, has permitted himself to be a little overreached in this case by parties who are interested in this appropriation. The very fact that this provision was first incorporated in the language we find here, including the construction of railroads, is proof that this appropriation was not originally intended for the sole purpose of relieving the distress in the Philippines.

I have no doubt but that they have distress there, and very great distress, but I have some impression—I do not know whether I got it at the hearings before the Committee on Insular Affairs or not—that there was a desire some time ago on the part of the Philippine government that the United States Government should advance a few millions to the islands as a loan to be used in developing the islands, and thereby giving employment to the people; and I would be glad to know from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether when this proposition was first advanced it was not intended to make it merely a loan to the government of the Philippine Islands for the purpose of advancing public work and the development of these islands.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman want an answer now?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I would be glad if the gentleman would answer it now.

Mr. CANNON. So far as I have any knowledge of it, I answer no. I have read the abstract that covers the report of Governor Taft. The committee at one time discussed whether they would make it reimbursable, but we thought not, as we did not do it in Porto Rico and Cuba. We thought that in the condition of the public revenues of the Philippine Islands we had better devote it to the end in view.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If it is to be used for a similar purpose to that appropriated for Porto Rico, there can be no objection, but if there is such great necessity for the appropriation of such a large sum as $3,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to be sent to the Philippine Islands to be used in the construction of public highways and other public works, which, as a matter of course, will greatly advance the interests there of certain American corporations and speculators with large holdings in the islands, I say if there is such great necessity for it to relieve the people there from immediate distress, why is it that the Commissioners of the Philippine government have made no request for such an appropriation? If they have, I have not been able to find it in their report.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the further fact that ought to be remembered in this connection. If this is for the immediate relief of the distressed, brought about in part, as they claim, from cholera in the Philippine Islands, and which was going on at the time that the report of the Philippine Commission was made, which dates back to last October, if there was so great a necessity for the appropriation to relieve the people as there was in the case of Porto Rico, why is it that this appropriation has not been made before now? Why is it that they have allowed nearly three months to expire since Congress convened without urging an appropriation, which they now claim is to relieve the people from a condition of great distress which existed as far back as October?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I shall consume all that time. I was saying that if there is such a great necessity for this appropriation to relieve the suffering in the islands, and this report, which only comes up to the 1st day of last October and submitted and, I believe, published in November, why is it that we have had no communication from the Commissioners since that time showing the conditions in the islands and the necessity for this appropriation now? They make no such request. It is the request of the Secretary of War, and I am free to say that I do not know whether it comes from the fact that there is great distress in the islands, or whether it comes from other certain influences at work in the Philippine Islands which would be glad to see $3,000,000 donated by the Government for building public works and public improvements in the islands. If it is going to the immediate relief of the suffering, I say why have not the Commissioners themselves made some request? Why have the authorities asking for this appropriation made no effort to secure any evidence as to the condition of these people since last October? If it required $3,000,000 then, perhaps it will require $6,000,000 now, or perhaps much less. I say that the circumstances surrounding this request are at least suspicious in some respects.

Now, it was first intended—and I am glad that my colleague has proposed his amendment, for I think it does away with a good deal of the objection to this provision—but it was originally intended that this money should be used not only to construct public highways, but to build railroads; and, strange as it may seem, there was no provision put in here authorizing them to buy the material with which to construct such railroads, unless it comes under the language "supplies," and it would hardly be embraced there, for that speaks of the necessities of the people—farming implements, etc. I suppose it was at first the intention simply to get these roads ready for the tracks—the railroad iron—and then turn them over to some corporation to build. I can hardly understand what was intended by the provision as it first stood, but it shows that there is something more they are after here than the immediate relief of the people.

If we are not to build railroads out of this appropriation of $3,000,000—having stricken out the provision for railroads, the provision requiring their construction—it necessarily follows that we may strike out a large amount of the appropriation itself.

But so far as this appropriation may go to the immediate relief of those people, I have no objection to it. I think we are under a greater moral obligation to relieve those people in their distress than we were to relieve the people of Porto Rico; for in Porto Rico the distress was due to natural causes—to cyclones, to the storms of nature—while in the Philippine Islands much of the distress is due to the storms of American greed and American destruction that have swept all over that country. We have destroyed their houses; we have destroyed their beasts of burden; we have destroyed their property; we have destroyed their opportunity of earning a livelihood in the islands; and I feel that we are under a great moral obligation to appropriate whatever amount is necessary for their immediate relief.

But is it going to be any great relief to simply appropriate money to be expended in the construction of such public works over there as parties interested would themselves construct without this appropriation? I say, let us limit this expenditure to those things which are actually necessary—to the purchase of necessary food and clothing for the relief of the suffering, and even go further, and purchase necessary farming implements and farming animals, in order that the people may be able to plant and cultivate their crops. But I can not think that even the amount of $3,000,000 should be appropriated for that purpose. At least, there is no evidence of that fact, and it is not asked for by the Commission.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat, that if there were such great necessity for this appropriation there ought to have been a better showing before the Committee on Appropriations in favor of the item now under consideration. What have you in support of the proposition? You have nothing upon which to base this appropriation except the bare communication of the Secretary of War, stating that we ought to make an appropriation of $3,000,000, and claiming that it is in accordance with the appropriation made to Porto Rico and to Cuba. And yet he says that in this case it should be left to the unlimited discretion of the Philippine Commission to expend these $3,000,000 in the construction of public highways, railroads, and other public works, without making any report of their action either to the President, the Secretary of War, or Congress. We knew what the money appropriated for Porto Rico was to be used for, and in this case we do not. I repeat. there is no request anywhere from the Commissioners of the Philippine government for this appropriation. The scheme originated with the Secretary of War or the influences which prompted him.

I have no doubt that this donation will be hailed with great joy by every corporation in the islands; but I say that as we are appropriating the money of our own people, as this money is to be taken from their taxes and sent to the Philippine Islands, we are justified in appropriating only so much as may be necessary for relieving the immediate distress of the people, and only for the purpose of such relief—supplying them with those things which are absolutely necessary to enable them to go on and sustain themselves. To give them work for a few months at small wages, will leave them, perhaps, in the same condition when the work is completed.

While I do not at this time desire to offer an amendment, I shall wait until the item is further discussed; and unless we get more and better evidence of the necessity of appropriating $3,000,000 for the people of the Philippine Islands, and more assurance that when appropriated the money will be expended, not merely to further the interests of certain American corporations and American syndicates in those islands, but for the immediate benefit and relief of the natives from the distressing conditions which we ourselves in a large part are responsible for—until better evidence than we now have is at hand on that subject, I shall vote to reduce the appropriation, though I shall stand ready at any time to help increase it when necessary for relieving those in destitution.

One word more. The sad picture drawn by the President and the Secretary of War in their communication to Congress, in which they make an appeal for this appropriation, is in very strong contrast with that beautiful picture that has been so frequently drawn by the President of the United States upon the stump in his glittering descriptions of the wonderful prosperity and comfort and happiness which the American sword has carried everywhere among the people of the Philippine Islands. [Loud applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, the speech of my friend from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] is in some measure a criticism of the Committee on Appropriations. When this question first came before the committee I stated in reply to a question by the chairman that I was opposed to the whole miserable business connected with the Philippines. And I was and I am; but there is no use of discussing politics in this connection. We are facing a situation. After I gave the matter some thought, this was the conclusion at which I arrived: Those people are not responsible for the conditions that surround them. We are responsible to them for conditions. The report of the Philippine Commission indicates that the beasts of burden in the island of Luzon, the carabaos, in large numbers have died; that farming, rice raising, is at a standstill.

The people need more of these animals, and they will have to be brought from the neighboring islands, and the prices have quadrupled. In a large number of places the seed rice will have to be brought to the island of Luzon; and while our information was not full, I finally assented to this appropriation because I thought it was in the interests of humanity, that these people ought to be fed and clad, and that seed ought to be brought to them from the neighboring islands; that the homes ought to be restocked with this beast of burden that they use. I confess that this is a slipshod appropriation; that we had very little testimony—in fact, none except the report of the Commission—and I thought all this appropriation ought to be used for the purposes I have indicated.

It was at my own request that the chairman of the committee has offered this amendment, so that the parties who distribute this money shall make a report to some American authority indicating what they have done with it. I had no idea that it was the intention of the Commission to build railroads with this money when their report was made. My idea was, and is now, that it ought to be for the use alone of the people who are destitute—to help feed and clothe them until they can get on their feet. I think the amendment of the chairman of our committee pretty effectually covers it, and for the reasons I have indicated alone I have agreed to this appropriation. I do not say this in the spirit of apology, but in the spirit of explanation, and to my side of the House.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I would like to amend his amendment by striking out, on page 112, line 1, the words "and other public works;" and on page 112, line 1, by striking out the word "three" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one and a half."

The Clerk reported the amendment as follows:

Page 112, strike out the words "and other public works," line 1; and in the same line strike out the word "three" and insert the words "one and a half;" so as to read "one and a half million dollars."

Mr. CANNON. That is offered as an amendment to the amendment I offer.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I do not question for a moment the statement made here, that there is widespread distress and destitution in the Philippine Islands. I do not, however, believe that all of this destitution and distress is due to the fact that 90 per cent of the work animals in the Philippines have been destroyed by the rinderpest. But, Mr. Chairman, admitting for the sake of argument that such is the case, I think that if the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee is adopted, it ought to be after it has been amended as suggested by me.

The amendment of the chairman of the committee simply strikes out the word "railroads" and leaves in the paragraph as originally drawn the words "and other public works," so that if the word "railroads" only should be stricken out, the paragraph would read "in the construction of Government wagon roads and other public works."

Now, I believe that the Philippine government would have, or at least that it would exercise, if it desired to do so, the right to build railroads under that language. I believe that the language employed here could be made to bear that construction, and that the striking out of the word "railroads" does not materially affect the paragraph as it now stands. But, Mr. Chairman, if it be true, as I suppose will be contended, that the Philippine Commission would not have the right to construct railroads if that word is stricken out, then surely it is not necessary that the appropriation should be $3,000,000. If the railroads are not really to be built, then there is no reason for the expenditure of such a sum of money as $3,000,000.

I believe that if this appropriation is made the larger part of the money will not be expended in direct disbursements to the people for their needs. I apprehend that it would be expended for "other public works." If that be so, surely, Mr. Chairman, there ought to be a provision in this bill requiring the Philippine government to refund that money to the United States. It ought to be in the form of a loan and not in the form of a gift. If it is to be used to enable the people of the Philippines to construct public works, they should be required to return it.

We have been told over and over again, Mr. Chairman, within the past four years that these islands were immensely rich. We have been told that their resources were almost inexhaustible. We have been told that instead of being a charge upon the people of the United States they would be a source of wealth and great profit to them. I can understand how some visitation of providence may temporarily have deprived them of the ability to earn their bread; but if it is true that the islands are as rich as we have been told that they are, then surely there is no reason why we should give them money to be expended in permanent public works and not for the purpose of relieving their immediate necessities.

Certainly, if they are as rich in resources as we are told they are, so much of the money appropriated as is to be used for public works, and not dispensed as a charity to destitute individuals, should be returned to the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. I hope that will be given.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if this money is not to be expended in permanent improvements, if it is not to be expended for railroads, then there is no necessity for so large an amount as $3,000,000. If $3,000,000, in other words, is sufficient to relieve the immediate necessities of the people, and also to enable the commissioners to build railroads and other public works, then if we eliminate from the uses that it is to be applied to, the railroad building, the amount of the appropriation should be correspondingly reduced.

Therefore I hope that the gentleman from Illinois, if he earnestly desires that this money shall not be expended in the construction of railroads, will adopt the first suggestion which I have made, and that is to strike out the words "and other public works," because unless that is done under that language the Philippine Commission can build railroads if they so desire. So that if it really be the purpose of the gentleman to prevent the Philippine Commission from building railroads he should not object to the employment of such words as will make plain and clear his intention. I submit, therefore, that unless the words "and other public works" are stricken out the amendment of the gentleman should provide that any part of this appropriation expended in any way other than for the purpose of relieving the destitution of the people should be returned to the United States Government.

So far as it may be necessary to expend this money in relieving the immediate and pressing necessities of the people of that island, I am willing that they shall have it as a matter of pure charity, and that they shall not be required to return it. But if it is to be expended, or part of it, in public improvements, then I submit that the Philippine government ought to make it good to the United States. If no part of it is to be expended in building railroads and in making public improvements, then, Mr. Chairman, I submit that a million and a half dollars will be amply sufficient to relieve the distress of which we are told.

But I rather imagine that is contemplated, indeed, that it is really the purpose of the gentleman that a large part of the $3,000,000 shall be expended in public works, such as harbor improvements, and that that is why he will not consent to accept my amendment. I understand, of course, that such expenditures would give employment to labor; but the government would be the gainer thereby and to that extent should reimburse the United States. The inauguration of the policy of donating money to the Philippine government for public works, is an admission on the part of those who inaugurate it that the treasury of that government will never be in a condition to return the money to the people of the United States.

And if it will never be in that condition, why, I ask any rational man, should we longer hold the islands? If there is never to be any prospect that they can, out of their own revenues, provide for the public improvements and public works that are necessary to their welfare, the sooner we give them their independence the better it will be for us. If their revenues are never to be sufficient for that purpose, and the United States Government is to be eternally called upon to furnish the money to construct public buildings, dig out harbors, and perchance, build railroads, the sooner we part company with them the better. It is bad enough that we must buy the indigent inhabitants work animals, when the rinderpest kills such as they may have; bad enough to have to provide them with the necessaries of life. That, however, I am willing to do under existing circumstances. I am not willing to vote money to be expended in public works.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana rose.

Mr. CANNON. How much time does the gentleman from Indiana want?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois did not ask for general debate, I should like to have about fifteen minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Let us compromise on ten, and I will take five, and then I will ask for a vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understood that the gentleman from Illinois was to ask unanimous consent for general debate.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I did; but objection was made.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CANNON. Now I will ask unanimous consent to close the debate upon this paragraph and all amendments in fifteen minutes—ten minutes to the gentleman and five minutes to myself.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to close debate on the paragraph and pending amendments in fifteen minutes, ten minutes to be given to the gentleman from Indiana and five minutes to himself.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I object, Mr. Chairman, until——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be closed in fifteen minutes on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will not the gentleman make that longer than that, so that we can have consideration of this amendment? I do not think that there is any factional opposition to it.

Mr. CANNON. I will make it twenty minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is not as much time as you proposed in the beginning.

Mr. CANNON. But my friend must understand there was objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I did not think the objection would interfere with your liberality.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I desire to amend that and make it thirty minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] moves as an amendment that the time be thirty minutes.

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend that by making it five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I think twenty minutes will be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be in the third degree, which is not in order.

Mr. STEELE. Then I wish the amendment to be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman had better accept thirty minutes, and it will save the time of having a vote by tellers.

Mr. STEELE. Well, we do not want to save time.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I ask unanimous consent to close all debate in thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to close debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto in thirty minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will that leave open an opportunity, or have I now the right to move to strike out all after the words "construction of wagon roads, etc.?" I do not hear the words of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], but I understand they both allow this money to be expended in public improvements simply to give employment to these people and not because needed; hence I object to both.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But if the request is granted, amendments may be offered after the thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. They can be offered at the end of the thirty minutes, but can not be debated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They can be offered at the end of thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. But not debated.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me suggest that the time be equally divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, we approach the subject of this legislation impressed with its importance and with a desire, conservatively, to do all that need be done for the relief of a distressing situation.

The results of insular government is seen in this proposition to vote $3,000,000 from the United States Treasury for the relief of the people in the Philippine Islands.

I regret the necessity that, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, justifies his recommendation to Congress to vote this amount. It is unfortunate for the nation and for all our people.

Could not this result of our government in the Tropics have been foreseen? True, but can the end be foretold?

This is a distress measure, but with the ever-recurring causes for additional appropriations they may be ever present with us.

True we appropriated for reindeers in Alaska, for calamity and flood sufferers, and such like, but the sums were moderate in comparison and the occasions were such as are not likely to occur again. But here we have the seeds of a policy as to insular possessions which, if persevered in, will cast in the shadows our Indian policy from the first years of our government till now, and about which so much criticism has been heard.

These conditions are upon us. The story of ruin and want are vividly told by the Philippine Commission and the Secretary of War. Can we resist this appeal for aid when we are measurably responsible for it and have been led into a condition that invites it? There are various schools of thought, it seems, when it comes to the causes for industrial stagnation in the Philippines.

Many gentlemen state, and the chairman of the Insular Committee [Mr. COOPER] within a few weeks stated on this floor, that great industrial distress has come to the Philippines because of the failure of Congress to give the islands a stable currency. It is difficult, of course, for us to determine with nicety, so far away, how much distress is attributable to money disorders and how much comes from disease and death to man and to animal life. This difficulty only accentuates our misfortunes.

Is this $3,000,000 an opening wedge, a forerunner of appropriations for like purposes in years to come? In a proper construction of the McEnery resolution, which passed the Senate in 1899 as an interpretation of the Spanish treaty by which we acquired the Philippines, can be found a solution of the difficulties that now are brought so clearly to our attention. I send it to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That by the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain it is not intended to incorporate the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands into citizenship of the United States, nor is it intended to permanently annex said islands as an integral part of the territory of the United States; but it is the intention of the United States to establish on said islands a government suitable to the wants and conditions of the inhabitants of said islands to prepare them for local self-government, and in due time to make such disposition of said islands as will best promote the interests of the citizens of the United States and the inhabitants of said islands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I presume that I am recognized for ten minutes. I would like to ask the gentleman if time will be yielded to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]?

Mr. CANNON. I will ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended so that he may have ten minutes altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana may be extended by five minutes, so that he may have ten minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I only ask that because my colleague on the Insular Committee [Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois] desires to have five minutes, and I do not want to occupy more than ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. That will be five minutes for the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. All right.

Mr. Chairman, this lamentable condition prevails in the Philippine Islands, and we must do something. To make a loan would set a dangerous precedent, and all of our Territories would come and ask for money, and we would be the bankers of our Territories and colonial possessions.

I am inclined to think, if facts of fabulous wealth are as they have been stated, that it would be better to loan than to give, even in their distress. For years we were told that the Philippine land was rich, and that the richness of field and mine afforded a great field for American industry. Now, here they come to us as supplicants for three millions of money to relieve them from a distress that the richness of that country and wealth of its inhabitants can not relieve.

The Philippine Commissioners report that leprosy abounds; that 30,000 lepers are in the islands and 100 cases in Manila alone. Will we not be asked to appropriate for them? Cholera in the Philippine Islands with a record from March 23, 1902, to November 1, of that year, of 107,250 cases and 69,983 deaths, being a mortality rate of 65.25 per cent; and Governor Taft's last report predicts 100,000 deaths from cholera alone. Bubonic plague in the Philippine Islands with a death rate of 199 in 1900 and 432 in 1901 in Manila alone.

Will we in the future be asked to appropriate for these? The report says that "smallpox existed in the islands from time immemorial, and was one of the most prominent causes of death among the Filipinos at the date of the American invasion."

Hog and chicken cholera, the report says, existed contemporaneously with the rinderpest. This is the result and misfortune that is upon us—islands where man and beast are afflicted with all the diseases that flesh is heir to. I hold in my hand an article from the North American Review of recent date, by Brewster Cameron, delegate to Washington from the allied chambers of commerce of the Philippine Islands, and will give some excerpts:

To promote the permanent welfare of the Philippines it is necessary, first, that we should have an absolutely stable currency.

* * * * * * *

A stable currency is the only relief from this deplorable condition of affairs, which is being misconstrued by the natives as a conspiracy to increase the cost of the necessaries of life to the poor.

* * * * * * *

Every consideration of trade and commerce, political expediency, and national honor demands that Congress should give a stable currency to the Philippines, * * * such a stable currency as has given a stupendous impetus to every business interest in the United States.

This writer and representative, throughout a long article, sets forth the cause of distress, but carefully avoids giving his sanction to any money system except in his language "such a stable currency as has given a stupendous impetus to every business interest in the United States," which implies American money.

This "accredited representative" covers another subject of vital concern to us in this legislation.

He says:

A Filipino business house in the city of Manila owns several plantations. On one of these plantations they have for years employed 30,000 Filipino laborers. They had 12,000 carabaos, of which all but 50 were swept away within the past year.

And further—

Prior to the passage of the Philippine act the owners of this plantation could have mortgaged it (75,000 acres) to a corporation for the money required to restock it with carabaos, but as the Philippine act limits the holdings of any corporation to 2,500 acres it is now impossible for the owners to do so. * * *

Under the most favorable circumstances, with laws encouraging to agriculture, it will require approximately five years fully to revive the agricultural industry. Under the present law, which has paralyzed every agricultural interest in the islands, the development of the Philippines will be indefinitely delayed.

* * * * * * *

The present law, as stated above, limits the ownership of land by corporations to 2,500 acres. It is known to everyone who has made even a superficial study of the business that a 2,500-acre plantation will not furnish enough cane to operate economically a modern sugar-milling plant. Under the operations of this unfortunate law, men who are rich in lands, but without money, have been unable to get corporate interests to equip their plantations with modern sugar plants.

* * * * * * *

It is a misfortune not only to the Filipino people, but to the people of the United States, that any law should indefinitely delay the agricultural and industrial development of the Philippines; and corporations have become such an essential element in conducting large business affairs in modern times that it is impossible to secure the necessary amount of capital to develop the islands except through corporations.

This new light gives a limitation on corporation expansion as a fruitful cause of present distress. How, by an appropriation of $3,000,000 without carefully guarding its expenditure, do you prevent it from going to the corporations? From this view point they are the life in the islands. You will not find any agricultural industries in the Philippine Islands save the kind that we have in the Hawaiian Islands—great landed estates. The burden of their complaint to-day is that a large measure of distress comes because land holdings are limited to 2,500 acres, whereas they want from ten to twenty and a hundred thousand acres. How will you prevent these sums appropriated from going to the great corporations, which in a business way seem to control, unless you guard this appropriation as the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] designs to guard it?

Mr. Chairman, whether this distress comes from the failure to give them a stable currency, or whether it comes from diseases in the island, or is the result of war, or from all these conditions, it is conceded that we must do something. Guard this appropriation against the unworthy and make it what the Government wants it to be—a distress measure. So far should we go and no further. Our people are unfortunate enough in being compelled by the colonial policy of the Government to grant this aid, without adding the loss that would come from diverting it into channels that it is not intended to go.

Mr. Chairman, I had the Clerk read the Senate resolution to show how clear our way is outlined and how easy our course would have been if we had paralleled in the Philippines our course in Cuba.

We gave to Cuba her liberty and gave her a God speed on her way as a Republic. Cuba does not come in distress or as a mendicant asking for alms. The only aid she asks is that which will be of equal benefit to us.

Our action toward Cuba may be followed with profit and advantage in the Philippine Islands. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, whether we made a good bargain or a bad bargain in negotiating for the Philippine Archipelago cuts no figure in this discussion. The proposition to vote $3,000,000 to the people of the Philippine Archipelago is one simply for the relief of a condition of destitution that is the result of a succession of misfortunes for which this Government is no more responsible than it was for the hurricane in Porto Rico, or for the condition of destitution that existed in the island of Cuba, or for the plagues of Egypt in the days of Pharaoh.

When we first obtained control of the Philippine Archipelago there was a condition of insurrection, of practical anarchy. The administration of this Government in the Philippines is an open book, and it is a matter of recent history. But by a succession of misfortunes, particularly the rinderpest, whereby practically all of the beasts of burden in the Philippine Islands were destroyed, and a condition of poverty and destitution exists, such as appeals to the sense of magnanimity and charity of every citizen of this country. There is no need of undertaking to disguise the legislation under consideration or of attempting to construe it into a loan or a business proposition; it is a proposition to relieve destitution, pure and simple, a charitable act. I have listened to the criticisms made by various speakers on the measure, and I think none of them possess a particle of merit.

The amount of the appropriation was fixed upon, as I understand, after a careful examination and thorough consideration of the situation by the Committee on Appropriations. That committee advised itself by the best means obtainable and concluded that $3,000,000 ought to be appropriated to relieve the present exigency.

The provision contained in the bill, that the money may be used for the direct relief of the people in the way of purchasing supplies or, in the discretion of the Philippine Commission, in employing labor for the construction of public works, is a wise provision. The apprehension of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] that the term "public works" would be so construed as to embrace "railroads" is utterly without foundation.

The construction of railroads in our politics, in our civilization, is not by any manner of means regarded as the execution of a public work. But the term "railroads" will be stricken from the provision; and if the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia should prevail, it would prevent the Philippine government from using any part of this money in the construction of schoolhouses, of public buildings, or in the improvement of rivers and harbors, or for the securing of many other conveniences for the benefit of the people of those islands that might be obtained and at the same time afford relief to the destitute.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If the provision had remained as originally drawn, and the Philippine government had constructed railroads out of this appropriation, would not those railroads have been public works under the Philippine government?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In my judgment, if the provision had remained as it was originally drawn it would not have conferred upon the Philippine government authority to construct railroads as public enterprises. I do not believe that under existing law the government of the Philippine Islands has any such power. I do not believe that Congress has conferred upon that government the power to build, own, and operate railroads, and if it had not done so, then, with the provision as it originally stood, there would be no authority on the part of the Philippine government to use any of the money to be appropriated in the construction of railroads.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. It is true, is it not, that the Secretary of War recommended that money should be used in that way?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know; I am not familiar with the recommendations——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The chairman of the committee read a statement from the report, to that effect—that the Secretary of War had so recommended.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not familiar with the recommendations of the Secretary of War.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. That statement was read here.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This provision does not confer upon the insular government authority to do anything which it would not otherwise have authority, except to disburse the relief fund.

I am discussing now simply the question of the power of the insular government to build, own, and operate railroads without express authority from Congress to do so; and I take the position that the government there has no such power, and that this bill confers no such power.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. If this bill declared that the government there could, in its discretion, use this money in the construction of railroads, would not such a provision confer the power?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think not; not in view of the manner the provision was written in the bill.

I believe it would be a grave mistake to reduce this appropriation a single dollar; and I believe it would be a more serious mistake to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and deny to the insular government the right to use this fund in the employment of idle laborers upon necessary public works—enterprises which would go to the benefit of all the people of those islands. Such an amendment as the gentleman proposes would practically convert the provision into a charitable fund to be doled out by some public benefactor without regard to the real welfare of the people.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Would not the gentleman be in favor of requiring that in the case of each expenditure there should be given the name of the person receiving the money and the purpose to which it was applied?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know that I would go into such details as that. That is an aspect of the proposition that I have not considered. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] requires the governor of the archipelago to submit to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditures, and that is a sufficient protection to the people both of this country and the Philippines.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desire to use any of his time now?

Mr. CANNON. I should like to close the debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. How much time does the gentleman expect to occupy?

Mr. CANNON. About ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If the gentleman wishes to yield time to anyone else, I shall be glad to have him do so now.

Mr. CANNON. I want to close the debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Does the gentleman desire to use all of his time in closing?

Mr. CANNON. I hardly think I shall; but I may do so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] to strike out the language "and other public works." While that language may not be so construed as to include railroads, yet it might be.

There is no question that a great deal of this money would be used in the construction of public works in cities and towns—in building street railways, electric-light plants, and various improvements of that kind, which would necessarily enhance greatly the value of property in such city or town and its vicinity; and if this appropriation be made in the terms contained in the bill it is easy to imagine the great scramble that there would be among those who have large interests in those cities and the surrounding country to have this money, or a part of it, expended so as to advance their interests; and in that way much, if not most, of the money would probably be used where the most of the Americans reside—where the most of American capital is invested—while, on the other hand, if we strike out the words "other public works" a large portion of this appropriation would be distributed along the public highways and among the agricultural classes, who stand in greater need of it. For this reason I think the language should be stricken out.

Now, while I have great faith in this Commission, yet when I see in their recommendation to Congress that they desire that a single corporation or a single individual in the Philippine Islands shall be allowed to own 25,000 acres of land I can not agree that all their sympathy is with the common people who are now suffering such distress in that country. This appropriation, I want to say, if made for public works, will be a very sad commentary indeed upon the flattering promises and statements made by a great many distinguished gentlemen in this country as to the wonderful resources, valuable lands, fine timbers, and precious metals of those islands.

If they are all that those who favored their annexation have claimed for them, if they are so inviting to American capital and American investments, why is it necessary to appropriate out of the money raised by taxes from the people of our own country millions of dollars in order to carry on public works which the capital there in the islands ought to conduct? I say, Mr. Chairman, as I said in the beginning, that the word "public works" ought to be stricken out. This appropriation ought to be reduced and limited to such expenditures as are necessary for those who are in distress in the islands, in need of the necessaries of life, that more of these animals which they use in planting and cultivating their crops may be purchased, and more of such things as are required by the natives.

I was desirous to see the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations consent that this appropriation should be reduced. Since a part of the objects for which it was to be expended is to be stricken out, it seems to me it necessarily follows that it might be reduced, and knowing, as I do, that the chairman of the committee is acting in the best of good faith in this matter and would not want to appropriate a single dollar for the purpose of aiding any private enterprise, but solely for the benefit of those who are in actual distress, I still hope that he will consent to a reduction of the amount of this appropriation, and if it becomes necessary hereafter to appropriate further from the Treasury of the United States to relieve the inhabitants of those islands from the great distress which we, in years gone by, have spent millions and hundreds of millions in bringing upon them, I for one stand ready at any time to appropriate for such a righteous purpose. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a few words in closing this debate, and then I will ask for a vote. What is this proposition? It is for the relief of distress in the Philippine Islands. How is it to be expended? Under the direction and discretion of the Philippine government, Governor Taft, Commissioner Wright, and the other Commissioners, in such proportions as they deem wise, in the purchase and distribution of farm implements, animals, supplies, necessaries of life. What else? And through the employment of labor in the construction of government wagon roads or other public works. There is the whole story. But gentlemen flap their wings and say, "We told you that these people would cost something, and you said it was a rich land, so you have got now to relieve distress." I call the attention of my honorable colleague to the fact that in my State and in his, in the district which he represents, in the presence of great floods, his constituents and my fellow-citizens have been relieved.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes; but they were furnished the necessaries of life.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, and at the expense of the public Treasury—without work, and it was well done. It would have been better done if they had been given work, because there would have been no element of pauperization in it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I would ask my colleague one other question. The bill as amended will provide that this money, a part of it, may be expended in employing them on public works.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Where is the material to come from with which to construct these public works unless out of this appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. Spades and earth and harbors and roads and anything else that will coax the people to work for that which they receive, and thereby, that far, preserve their manhood. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am not afraid to trust Governor Taft, and I call the attention of other friends whose districts are along the Ohio River, in States upon both banks, along the Mississippi, and away up in the Red River district of the North, to the fact that relief has been given there, and yet this is a God-favored land. I call attention further to the fact that in the early settlements of this continent, in the days of the colonies, there was year after year of starvation with our ancestors. Yet it was a great land.

Now, what is the fact in respect to the Philippine Islands? Ninety per cent of the animals that are used for farming over there are dead. What else? They have had cholera. A hundred thousand of those 10,000,000 people are dead from that epidemic in the last ten months. What else? They have had almost four years of war and brigandage, and now at last have order and a degree of civil and military government under the Army and under the Taft Commission. I will not stop here to bring up what has happened in other days. I will not stop here to say what has been said on this floor in former Congresses in the House and in the Senate. I will not stop to charge that such criticism as came from that side and the similar side in the Senate, perchance, continued the war and helped to bring about a part of this condition. That is not necessary. That is past, and although your political handbooks teemed with cries of imperialism there was not one of you who was brave enough, when you met your patriotic citizens in the last campaign, to act up to that handbook and your criticisms in the House and in the Senate during the last session of Congress—not one. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Yes, willing to do it; think maybe it had better be cut down to a million and a half; but so afraid that the words "public works" might enable Taft, while he was keeping them from becoming paupers and preserving their manhood, to do some work that might be to the benefit of some rich man or some corporation. you would rather nothing should be done. My heavens! I would rather they would carry bricks a hundred feet and carry them back again, if they are able, and render some equivalent if they are able to do it, than to have it for nothing. And gentlemen are afraid of railroads. I struck out railroads, because I knew that to some of my friends railroads were like water to a mad dog.

I do not think you can build any railroads with this appropriation. I think the gentleman from Indiana is right upon that proposition. However, I would be glad if by a liberal grant of land—and nearly all the lands in the Philippine Islands are public lands—and by all proper encouragement, private capital could be invested and a railroad could split open every island of the archipelago. Then civilization would go on at a greatly accelerated pace. I am not afraid of the development of the country or the construction of railroads, but we can take care of that. First, the Commission reports this condition and the recommendation comes. I have a letter in addition to that from Governor Taft, written within the last two months, showing that the condition is quite up to the report and probably worse. I have not had it read. The report is sufficient. Other gentlemen have received letters to the same effect. I ask this side of the House and that side of the House to stop haggling and criticising and splitting hairs, and I ask them to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, and adopt the amendment I had the honor to offer, striking out the railroads and providing for a report to the Secretary of War. Let us move on, then, with the consideration of the bill. I am ready for a vote. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman's interpretation of the distress existing over there. Here is one case to which I call his attention:

A Filipino business house in the city of Manila owns several plantations. On one of these plantations they have for years employed 30,000 Philippine laborers. They had about 12,000 carabaos, of which all but 50 were swept away within the past year.

Would these people obtain part of this appropriation?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether they would or not, but they would or would not in the sound judgment of Governor Taft and the Commission, either by gift or sale. We made it broad enough and gave them plenary discretion in the premises. I do not know about the case to which the gentleman refers. If it was apt to give it to them and it would relieve more distress that way than any other, or to sell to them, I have no doubt that Governor Taft and the Commission would properly perform their duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that debate on the paragraph is now closed.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to say just a few words.

Mr. CANNON. I hope consent will be granted. The gentleman is a member of the subcommittee that prepared this bill.

Mr. McRAE. A couple of minutes will do me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment to reduce this appropriation will not be adopted. It ought to be voted down. The limitations proposed by the chairman of the committee are entirely proper, and with those limitations I hope that this side of the House will be satisfied and will support this appropriation. I regret that we have to do it, as all of us must regret it, but this is a distress call for relief. The only medium through which we could get information—the Commission and the Secretary of War—have emphasized the necessity for this relief, and we can not afford, in the face of such distress like this, I say to my friends on this side, to refuse our support, and I hope that both sides of this House will give the relief asked for by those who are in a position to know what is needed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. As the gentleman is on the committee, I should like to ask him this question: Has any request ever come from the Commissioners of the Philippine Islands for this appropriation?

Mr. McRAE. I understand it has, and that emphatically.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I have not been able to find it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

The question being taken, on a division demanded by Mr. JONES of Virginia, there were—ayes 21, noes 56.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

On February 11, 1903:

H. J. Res. 184. Joint resolution requesting State authorities to cooperate with Census Office in securing a uniform system of birth and death registration; and

H. R. 14899. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate The National Florence Crittenton Mission."

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the establishment in the vicinity of Manilla, P. I., of a military post, including the construction of barracks, quarters for officers, hospital, storehouses, and other buildings, as well as water supply, lighting, sewerage, and drainage necessary for the accommodation of a garrison of two full regiments of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and two batteries of artillery, to be immediately available, $1,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph. My point of order is that there is no existing law authorizing this expenditure. I do not know of any act of Congress which provides for the establishment of a military post in the Philippine Islands. My recollection of the matter is that there was in some appropriation bill an item of this sort, appropriating $500,000 for a military post in the Philippines, but that it went out on a point of order, and that the gentleman from Illinois then offered an amendment of an entirely different character, not an amendment providing for the establishment of a military post. Unless there is some subsequent act of Congress which the gentleman can cite me to, I think that this point is well taken.

Mr. CANNON. I read as follows:

For the establishment in the vicinity of Manila, Philippine Islands, of a military post, including construction of barracks, quarters for officers, hospital, storehouses, and other buildings, as well as water supply, lighting, sewerage, and drainage, necessary for the accommodation of a garrison of two full regiments of infantry, two squadrons of cavalry, and two batteries of artillery, to be available until expended, $500,000.

Expressly established. The appropriation not limited, and it is a continuation.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Am I to understand that the item passed the House in the form of the amendment introduced and that it was changed in the Senate?

Mr. CANNON. I do not recollect about that. It is the law.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The gentleman knows very well, and I know he does not want to be disingenuous about this. I think the gentleman does remember distinctly that the $500,000 reported by his committee went out on a point of order, and that he introduced it as an amendment in another form and that he afterwards criticised the Democrats for not wanting to vote, as he alleged, to provide for the comfort of our soldiers in the Philippines. The gentleman can not have forgotten this.

Mr. CANNON. I recollect that was on a bill pending in the House. I thought that they ought to be criticised; and when they bared their skin, to be switched a little, I did switch them twice to the best of my ability; but this is like I have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the paragraph is in order, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the President, December 2, 1902, said to Congress:

No policy ever entered into by the American people has vindicated itself in more signal manner than the policy of holding the Philippines.

We have just passed a provision appropriating three millions to remove distress of the people in the Philippine Islands. We are now appropriating $1,000,000 to build a military post. Four million at a clip—because "holding the Philippines." As to what else this bill carries, or will carry before we get through with it, I do not know. It is hard to tell.

This reminds me of a conversation, almost a prophecy, that I had with the governor of Ceylon, Mr. Ridgeway, the well-known and able governor of the Crown colony of Ceylon, said to be one of the best-regulated colonies that England has. I wrote it out a few minutes after it occurred.

I shall read my notes:

On August 23, 1901, I called on the governor of Ceylon, Mr. Ridgeway. He said: "I see your Congressional party is going to the Philippines to investigate conditions there." "Yes," I replied; "not as a committee, but as individual members of Congress."

The governor then said:

"What," asked he, "are you going to do with them—give them autonomy, home rule, or hold them as, what we call, a crown colony? I do not see what you want with them; they will be a great nuisance to you, an everlasting and unprofitable expense, and force you to police and protect it with a large army and navy at an enormous expense of money, life, and tropical disease, and your people will soon get tired of all that.

"Then, your Constitution is in direct conflict with colonialism, your form of government is opposed to colonies, and your people will never mix with them. Instead of being a source of strength to you, it really weakens your Government; this spreading out of your territory in this way lessens your strength in war, and lays you open to wars and all sorts of complications you would otherwise avoid.

"Why, if any war against the United States arose with, say, England or any strong country on this part of the globe, these islands would be first attacked; we would just go right over and take them. These islands are incapable of self-defense. You must defend them all the time, and as they are so far away from the base of supplies they amount to a weakness to your country, a constant menace and nuisance.

"You are not, as England is, cramped for room for your people; you have lots."

Now, I have a similar statement, Mr. Chairman, from a distinguished English military officer—a colonel.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Is he reading from Genesis or Revelations or Job?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I observe it is a revelation to the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.] Nothing unusual, either.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not criticising this million-dollar item. It is a necessity. It is understood they need this. Our boys are there rotting, and our people must go there because we are "holding the Philippines," and we are now paying for the "holding."

Now, here is this governor of Ceylon, whose prophecy is almost literally fulfilled, although it has been to a tenfold greater ratio than he portrayed it.

It is a prophecy which I had made in protesting against our colonialism—"holding the Philppine Islands." Read Governor Taft's letter, read Secretary Root's report, and then read Governor Ridgeway's words, and see how they tally.

Now, this measure is giving the government over there the power to build "government roads," a thing that the gentleman has not favored so far for our own people; but is giving them the opportunity there of building government roads. For what? To put the people to work.

Now, I have here an official document from Governor Taft, part of the last war report, showing that there was built 32 miles of road, such as the Benguet road, and that it cost $116,000 of United States money to do so. They made a "wagon way," the report says, and worked six months. It cost them that amount of money to build 32 miles of wagon road which is nothing more than a mere pathway; and this was one road only. That is the way they build roads in the Philippine Islands—to put the people to work.

Now, we ought to give them a homestead and we ought to open up the 70,000,000 acres that the Government has of public lands in the Philippine Islands. Let us give them that mule—and I believe we have all heard about that mule—and really give them a mule, and really give them a farm and tools and seed, food and raiment, really give them something to do and put them at it. Do not adopt our unfortunate Indian policy. The church, the United States, and a few rich men in the Philippine Islands own the land. The masses have no land. Give it to them and at once. They are an agricultural people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have got to build a big navy there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CANNON. I object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment. The present naval bill carries, I am told, $30,000,000 increase, caused by "holding to the Philippine Islands"—going to the other side of the world.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17202, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

AMENDING SECTION 3394, REVISED STATUTES, RELATING TO TOBACCO.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted a privileged report on House bill 16457, to amend section 3394 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to tobacco; which was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, as gentlemen are well aware, to-morrow is set aside for business on the Private Calendar under the rule. I am informed that it is desired by members on both sides to go on with the business that has been under consideration to-day, the sundry civil bill, and I ask unanimous consent that Saturday be substituted for to-morrow for business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks that Saturday be substituted for to-morrow for business on the Private Calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a concurrent resolution of the Senate; which the Clerk read, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 65.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized to insert in line 12 of the third paragraph of section 6, after the word "interstate," the word "commerce."

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

VALDEMAR POULSEN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13307) for the relief of Valdemar Poulsen with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SULZER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EXTENDING HOMESTEAD LAWS IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska," with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senate be nonconcurred in, and that the House ask for a conference.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to insist on a point of order, although I think the bill is subject to a point of order.

Mr. LACEY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LOUD. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to let the bill go over. It is a very long amendment, affecting some of our people, and I ask that it be allowed to go over.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will go over.

Mr. LACEY. And retaining its place upon the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. It will retain its place upon the Speaker's table.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 6961) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE WITH FOREIGN NATIONS AND AMONG THE STATES.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the report on the bill S. 7053, the so-called Elkins bill, has been filed, and I desire in behalf of the minority to submit the minority views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to do that, and it will go on the same Calendar with the majority report.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 16534. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Durham;

H. R. 7110. An act granting an increase of pension to Aurelia M. Powers;

H. R. 10678. An act for the relief of the Florida Brewing Company;

H. R. 16731. An act permitting the town of Montrose, Colo., to enter 160 acres of land for reservoir and water purposes;

H. R. 3504. An act granting an increase of pension to Grace A. Negley;

H. R. 15757. An act granting a pension to Frances C. Broggan; and

H. R. 14164. An act for the relief of Charles W. Carr.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 7185. An act to authorize the board of commissioners for the Connecticut bridge and highway district to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River at Hartford, in the State of Connecticut;

S. 7159. An act authorizing the Memphis, Helena and Louisiana Railway Company to construct and maintain a bridge across St. Francis River, in the State of Arkansas;

S. 5678. An act providing for the record of deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; and

S. 7223. An act to authorize the Pittsburg, Carnegie and Western Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. HENRY of Texas, Mr. WOOTEN was given five days longer than the five days heretofore fixed for printing remarks on the trust bill, he being unavoidably absent.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. GIBSON was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John H. Roberts, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw all papers from the House Committee on Invalid Pensions connected with the bill S. 5931, the bill having passed the Senate and not having been adversely reported upon in the House.

And then (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes), on motion of Mr. PAYNE the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the sloop Sally Mariah, John Sells, master, against The United States; to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of John H. Vaught, administrator of estate of John Sullivan, against The United States; to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1903.

General WILLIAM BOOTH, of the Salvation Army, offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, maker, sustainer, and governor of all things, we, Thy servants, the work of Thy hands, come into Thy presence this morning to supplicate Thy blessing upon ourselves, upon those dependent upon us, and the world round about us.

We acknowledge before Thee our obligations for all the good things that we enjoy. Thy goodness and Thy mercy have followed each one of us all the days of our lives, and are flowing around us at the present moment. Thou hast not only made us, but fed us and clothed us and housed us and befriended us and provided ways and means by which, though we may have fallen from Thy sight and given ourselves up to the doing of things that have brought down upon ourselves the exposure to Thy just displeasure, yet Thou hast made a wonderful way and a wonderful contrivance by which we can be regulated, can be saved, and can be rescued from the circumstances in which we find ourselves. Thou hast made salvation and happiness, goodness and truth and love possible to us here and possible to us in the world to come.

We thank Thee, we adore Thee, we worship Thee. We not only acknowledge our obligation, but we desire to make some suitable response to it. In what we feel in our innermost hearts, in what we think about these matters, no response can be accepted by Thee but what is to be satisfactory to our own conscience and our own judgment here and hereafter by the rendering of ourselves up as willing sacrifices and the carrying out of Thy wishes and the doing of Thy blessed will.

We thank Thee that Thou hast made it possible for each one of us, when we pray as individuals, to feel the light and truth and power of Thy holy Spirit, and that through the sacrifices of our Lord we may not only see what we ought to do, but be directed through it not only to begin but to finish, that we may have satisfaction in the last moments of earth and not be discouraged.

And now, Lord, we pray for this great nation, for this great heart of hearts of this mighty country—the very center of its activities; the place where it exercises its power and its strength. We pray for Thy blessings on this great nation. We thank Thee for all Thy goodness to it, and we pray that Thy blessing may be continued to it, and that through Thy loving-kindness it may be not only great and capable of promoting the highest possible degree of happiness and well-being of its own people, but that it may by Thy great grace be made a great power in the world, and make a glorious stand for righteousness and truth and peace and happiness among the nations.

To this end we pray for Thy servant who at the present time is placed at its head; for him and for his family and for all associated with him; that he may have wisdom and benevolence and courage to enable him to discharge the great and solemn duties that have devolved upon him.

We pray Thy blessing for the men who sit in this and the adjacent Chamber, that the men here will reason, that the men here will think, that the men here will plan, that the men here will seek only compliance in those measures and opinions which are wisest and best. Oh, may they seek Thy wisdom, and may they rely on Thy great arm, and may the results of their deliberations end in the direction of Thy glory and the good of mankind. Remember the peoples that are more or less influenced by them, and while they are considering matters that are for the welfare of this great people, may they not only consider those who are so circumstanced and environed as to be able to secure those conditions of life that are essential to health and morality and religion, but may they remember those who have perhaps, properly speaking, no representative to voice their sorrows and their toils and their cares. Remember, in Thy infinite mercy, these poor and lost members of the community, and may Thy blessing be upon us all.

May we do our work, may we do it well, may we do it with satisfaction to our own consciences and satisfaction to our laws, so that when we meet again we shall meet in the center of the government of the universe before the great throne, and we may have the satisfaction of hearing Thee say to us individually and to those we love, our families, wives, and children, "Well done, good and faithful servants, enter thou into the joy of Thy Lord." For Jesus Christ's sake, our Saviour, who saves us now and all the time, and evermore. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection. It is approved.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I ask that the prayer which was delivered in this Chamber this morning may be included in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be done.

WASHINGTON, ALEXANDRIA AND MOUNT VERNON RAILWAY.

Mr. PETTUS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6380) to amend an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain,' approved July 8, 1898," etc., and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11879) to correct the military record of Michael Mullet, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4198) for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11696) to quitclaim all interest of the United States of America in and to lot 4, square 1113, in the city of Washington, D. C., to William H. Dix, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TURNER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13386) granting a pension to Wallace Ziegler, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 10th instant, proposing to appropriate $16,933.33 to be paid to Henry V. Lester, administrator of Thomas Barr, deceased, surviving partner of the firm of Stewart & Barr, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, submitted a favorable report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4726) to regulate the practice of veterinary medicine in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 20th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the reconstruction and completion of the old Providence Hospital building, etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed: which was agreed to.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3026) granting a pension to Martha J. Bishop; and

A bill (H. R. 8812) granting an increase of pension to Henry Staff.

Mr. DEBOE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14398) granting an increase of pension to David M. Shopstaugh, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R.12602) granting an increase of pension to Amanda Burke, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DUBOIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4402) for the relief of the Omaha National Bank, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7361) for the relief of C. W. Colehour, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $70,000 for the construction of a sailing vessel with auxiliary steam power for the use of the Revenue-Cutter Service, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

SADIE THOME.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6931) for the relief of Sadie Thome, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The preamble recites that S. W. Thome, late consul of the United States at Asuncion, Paraguay, South America, lost his life at his post of duty on the 19th day of March, 1897.

The bill proposes to pay to Sadie Thome, the widow of S. W. Thome, $1,500, being the amount of salary for one year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MILITARY OCCUPATION OF PANAMA AND COLON, ETC.

Mr. HALE. I report back from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, at follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to send to the Senate copies of all reports and of all correspondence in the Navy Department with naval or other officers of the United States on duty in the bays of Panama and Colon since April, 1902, which relate to the military occupation of said bays and the regions between them, and the cities of Colon and Panama, by the forces of the United States; or that relate to the operation of military or police forces of Colombia or of any insurgents that were in arms against the Government of Colombia in that region of country since April, 1902; or that relate to any measures of any officers of the United States to bring about the pacification of that region or any intervention by such officers to that end; or that relate to the terms and conditions of the surrender of insurgent forces in that quarter to the forces or authorities of the Republic of Colombia.

The amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, in line 1, to strike out the words "Secretary of the Navy is directed to" and insert "President is requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to."

Mr. MORGAN. Under the pressure for the consideration of the Panama Canal treaty, and with my hopelessness of getting the information in any other way, I consent to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FAIRBANKS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 7331) granting a pension to Malinda Householder (with the accompanying papers);

Palmer & Co., for losses and damages incurred in the construction of the engines, boilers, etc., of the cruiser Maine, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriatin bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7142) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the superintendent of the fish station at Northville, Mich., from $1,500 to $2,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relating to the rate of postage on periodical publications entered to the second class of mail matter when deposited for local delivery by letter carriers, intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KITTREDGE submitted an amendment directing the payment to the Sioux Indians residing at Flandreau, in the State of South Dakota, the share of said Indians in the principal permanent fund appropriated and placed to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 to begin the construction of a new building for the United States National Museum, in the District of Columbia, and limiting the total cost of such building to $3,500,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $90,000 for the construction of a suitable light vessel to replace the Five Fathom Bank light-vessel off Delaware Bay, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7142) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to an increase in the number of pharmacists in the Navy, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to an increase in the number of warrant machinists in the Navy, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 7142) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. WELLINGTON submitted an amendment authorizing the Postmaster-General to put into operation an experimental parcels-post system between Washington and Richmond, or Washington and Philadelphia, or between Washington and all of these cities, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES IN CUBA.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following concurrent resolution; which, with the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 copies of the report of the War Department on the receipts and expenditures in Cuba during its occupation by the United States; 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 750 copies for the use of the Senate, and 250 copies for the use of the War Department.

CUBAN CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 copies of the English translation of the proceedings of the Cuban constitutional convention; 1,700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,200 copies for the use of the Senate, and 100 copies for the use of the War Department.

CIVIL ORDERS IN CUBA.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed in English and Spanish 1,700 copies of the civil orders issued during the occupation of Cuba by the United States; 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, and 200 copies for the use of the War Department.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CUMMINGS.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I wish to announce that to-morrow afternoon, after the other eulogies of deceased members of the other House, I shall offer resolutions in commemoration of the life and character of my late colleague in the House of Representatives, AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

ANHEUSER-BUSCH BREWING ASSOCIATION.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 9063) to refund certain taxes paid by the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, of St. Louis, Mo. It is a mere routine matter. It will lead to no debate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. QUAY. I do not desire to object to the passage of the bill called up by the Senator from Missouri, but I wish merely to say that as soon as it is disposed of I shall move to take up the statehood bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LODGE. I simply should like to ask about how much the bill carries?

Mr. ALDRICH. Nine hundred dollars.

Mr. LODGE. I did not hear it stated in the language of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nine hundred and eighty-six dollars is the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VEST. Nine hundred and eighty-six dollars is the amount. The bill was drawn by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and reported unanimously by the Committee on Finance. It passed the House in the same way, giving this amount, but it was not named in the text of the bill, and the Committee on Finance inserted it.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "amount," to insert "not to exceed in the aggregate $986.32;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to reopen and consider all claims of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association for the refunding of 7½ per cent discount upon the taxes paid upon fermented liquors in storage or in transit June 14, 1898, any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding, and to allow such portion of said claim as shall be shown to him to have been illegally collected in excess of the amount required by law; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such amounts, not to exceed in the aggregate $986.32, as shall be certified by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have been illegally collected from the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association as tax on fermented liquors in storage or in transit June 14, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the statehood bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to allow this bill to be informally laid aside so that I may call up the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate, and all the amendments proposed up to the present time have been agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, at the end of line 8, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the provision in the act of June 30, 1898 (30 Stat., 538), fixing charges for the use of single or grounded wire telephones in the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will briefly state the object of the amendment proposed by him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in 1898 a provision was attached to an appropriation bill fixing certain charges for the use of telephones in the District of Columbia. The Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company took the ground that the charges fixed by Congress were so low as to be confiscatory. The question was appealed to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and it was there held that the contention of the company was well grounded. It was then carried to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia by the dissatisfied citizens, which court decided, as I understand it, I have not looked it up recently, that inasmuch as this company was a foreign corporation and did not hold a charter from the District of Columbia, it practically had not any rights in the District, and that Congress could do with it as it pleased. From that court it was further appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which court remanded the question to the supreme court of the District of Columbia for the ascertainment of certain technical points involved in the controversy. The matter is now before the same court that had jurisdiction of it in the first instance.

A considerable amount of money has been expended by citizens' associations in prosecuting this case before the courts, and those people—and when I say those people, I mean practically all the citizens of the District—have come to the conclusion that it is time to stop litigation. The management of the telephone company has changed. It has gone into new hands. It has gone into the hands of honorable and progressive men, who desire to give this community the best possible service. The rates have been very materially reduced. In 1898 the average rates were $98 and now they are $53.

A hearing was had before a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which is in print, and it was there agreed by the two parties in interest that a recommendation should be made that the provision on the appropriation act of 1898 ought to be repealed.

Mr. President, in this connection I wish to read a single paragraph from a statement made by Mr. A. A. Birney, who was the attorney for the Citizens' Association. With him were associated Mr. Henry F. Woodard and Mr. John J. Hemphill, who concurred in Mr. Birney's statement. Mr. Birney said:

The act of 1898 was never satisfactory to anyone. Its author did not intend that it should become a law in the form in which it was presented by him to the House of Representatives, and it has been always regarded by the association as wholly inadequate to the situation. It does not at all cover the ground, and, if it is to stand, it should be added to by further provisions.

The association also recognizes that since the passage of this act of 1898 local conditions have greatly changed. Improvements in methods have been introduced, and average rates of charges have been lessened. In view of these changes the act of 1898 is yet more unsatisfactory, and in the light of information not accessible in 1898 the justice of the act has become more doubtful. The association also finds that many of its supporters in 1898 are now apparently satisfied with the treatment accorded them by the telephone company, and are unwilling to give further financial or moral support to the continuance of litigation.

The association has never wished to do injustice to this company, and under existing circumstances is willing to withdraw its opposition to the proposed act of repeal and rely upon the sense of justice of Congress to see to it hereafter that a proper inquiry be made into what are fair rates and to compel them.

This statement is signed by Arthur A. Birney, Henry F. Woodard, and John J. Hemphill, attorneys for the association.

In addition to that there were four suburban associations who had joined in this litigation, and all their officers have written letters saying that they are not only willing but desirous that the law shall be repealed.

Now, Mr. President, I am not representing anyone in this matter, but my judgment is very clear that inasmuch as this question has been before the courts for five years and the parties who have been prosecuting it have now come to the conclusion that they will do nothing further about it, it ought not to hang over this corporation any longer.

The telephone company is expending a million of dollars in the city of Washington at the present time. It has taken down, at its own expense, all the poles and wires that were strung through the alleys of this District, that Congress compelled it to place in those alleys, and it is pushing forward with great rapidity the conduit system to all parts of the District. In 1898 the telephone company had 2,500 subscribers, and now it has 9,000 subscribers, and so far as I know there is not a single complaint coming to Congress or being made in the public press that the company is not doing the fair thing by the people of the District of Columbia.

I wish simply to add, Mr. President, that the gentlemen representing this company at the present time have said to me personally that they will welcome an inquiry at the beginning of the next session of Congress into all subjects connected with the management of this corporation if any complaints exist; and I will say in behalf of the Committee on the District of Columbia, for which I speak in this matter, that if there is any complaint whatever at the beginning of the next session of Congress and I am alive I shall myself offer a resolution of inquiry, and have the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on the District of Columbia take up the question and thoroughly investigate it and make a report to Congress recommending legislation, if it be deemed advisable to have legislation.

I trust, Mr. President, I have made the matter clear. I have endeavored to do so in as few words as possible. I will be glad to answer any question that any Senator may feel disposed to propound.

Mr. HOAR. Has the Senator from New Hampshire the opinion of the Supreme Court before him?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire will be kind enough, I will thank him to inform us what harm can come to the telephone company to wait until the next session. The question is now, as I understand it, in litigation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. The act of Congress limiting the prices to be paid for telephones has never gone into effect for the reason that it was contested in the courts, and there has been since then, as I understand it, a consolidation of the rival corporations.

Mr. GALLINGER. No, there was only one corporation, I will say to the Senator, at that time.

Mr. TILLMAN. There was only one?

Mr. GALLINGER. There have never been two telephone corporations in this District since I have been a member of this body.

Mr. TILLMAN. What was that legislation about the laying of conduits which came before us some five or six years ago, when the streets were being dug up by a thousand men and an effort was made to stop the telephone company from digging ditches through the asphalt?

Mr. GALLINGER. That was an electric lighting company, I will say to the Senator, which afterwards merged into the existing electric lighting company, as I prophesied it would be, for a consideration.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have the two mixed. But the point on which I wish to ask the Senator is, what harm would come to the telephone company to leave this matter alone until the next session, when the District Committee or some other committee interested or whose business it will be can take the matter up and investigate it, and if this is an onerous and burdensome provision of the law we can then repeal it, and if it is not we can then let it alone? It seems to me that nothing in the way of damage can come to the telephone company by a continuance of this statute on the books, and we might let the company alone for this session. The matter came up before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee and we did not have time to deal with it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will frankly answer the Senator's question. I will say, in the first place, to the Senator that it was an electric-light company and not a telephone company which dug up the streets upon the pretense that they would give better and cheaper service. Some of us opposed it. I opposed it very strenuously, but we were overruled, and the company in due time sold out to the existing company, and the gentleman who promoted it took a trip to Europe as a consequence, and remained abroad a year or thereabouts. It was a very profitable venture, but, as usual, it sold out to the then existing company.

A few years ago, perhaps two years ago, a telephone company which was in opposition to the existing company, offered to give service at a very low rate. The Committee on the District of Columbia did not look favorably upon their proposition and did not give them charter rights. They went to another city, where they did get recognition, and since then they have gone out of business as usual, finding that they could not possibly carry on business at the rates they offered here.

The Senator's question is a proper question, and I will answer it with great frankness. The burden that is upon this company at the present time is this. The gentlemen who united in prosecuting this suit have been required to pay only the statutory rate, that is, the rate fixed by Congress, and there is a suspense account against them on the books of the company. That, however, is an inconsequential thing. But the Comptroller of the Treasury, a gentleman who has great power—I believe Comptrollers have greater powers than all the rest of the officials of the Government, greater than the legislators, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] very properly suggests—has held this company up and insisted that the Government should pay only the statutory rate. Not only that, but they have required all sorts of things of this company in the matter of putting in switchboards, in the matter of extending their lines to the house of a secretary or possibly a clerk connected with a Government department, and the company has a suspense account against the Government, and rightfully so, too. They have not refused to do the service for the Government; they might have refused to do it, but they have done it, and they have received compensation at a rate which, if it were universal, would bankrupt them in a year. They would like very much to get that burden off their shoulders, and it ought not to lie upon them. If this suit is not to be prosecuted—and everybody has abandoned it and advised that the law should be repealed—this company should have fair treatment and the Government should be required to pay a fair compensation for the service that the company is now rendering satisfactorily to every citizen of the District of Columbia.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the existing legislation is onerous and burdensome it ought to be repealed; but as we have no proof of that, the question which I asked, and which I have not yet been entirely satisfied about, is what harm can come by leaving the statute stand until next winter, when Congress will reconvene and the Committee on the District of Columbia can take the whole thing up and allow a reasonable amount of time for everybody to be heard?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the answer to that is, that the committee have taken it up, have given hearings, and have come to a conclusion, and it would not make any difference to us if the matter should remain before us for five years. The committee have considered it and are fully satisfied that this thing ought to be done.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has the Senator any figures showing how much there is owing to this company by the Government on this suspense account as between the rates paid by individuals and the rates which the Government has enforced from the company?

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire has not, and it would not make any difference to the Senator from New Hampshire whether it was a large or a small amount. If it is a matter of justice, the amount is not of importance.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the amount is not large enough to make it a burden on the company to do without the money, I thought it might be let alone; but, if the Senator and his colleagues on the committee are entirely convinced and satisfied, I do not feel called upon to oppose their position or to take any action. While, of course, the amendment is subject to a point of order, I will not make it.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. I ask the Senator if the law of 1898 be repealed, will there then be any law on the statute book which puts any restraint upon or regulates in any way the charges of the telephone company in this District?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will answer the Senator frankly; no.

Mr. BERRY. There would be none?

Mr. GALLINGER. The matter would be in precisely the same condition as it is now; but inasmuch as there is nobody prosecuting these suits and nobody desires the continuance of the law, no harm can come from its repeal.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me, I remember very distinctly—I do not see the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in his seat, but I think he could verify what I say—when this matter was pending here in 1898 the complaint was universal throughout the District of the overcharges of this company. A provision regulating its charges came from the House of Representatives, as I remember it, probably in the sundry civil appropriation bill, or it may have been in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, but at any rate it was before the Appropriations Committee. There was a contest in the committee regarding it, and there was also a contest on the floor of the Senate. The Senator from Maine led the fight in favor of the passage of the House provision which regulated the telephone charges, and, I repeat, it was shown and was understood that this company was charging much more than it ought to charge for its service—that the charges were unreasonable—and on that showing the amendment was carried on a yea-and-nay vote in the Senate and is now on the statute book.

As I understand, the telephone company went into the courts and have been in the courts from that time to the present, but the question has never been finally settled by the courts as to whether the law was properly passed or whether it was valid. Now, the Senator proposes on this appropriation bill to repeal that law and to put nothing in its place.

If the telephone charges in the light of the present situation are greater than they ought to be, ought not the matter to be thoroughly investigated and a law passed fixing rates beyond which the company should not be permitted to go in making these charges? In other words, if you repeal the existing law, there will be nothing whatever on the statute book to prevent this company going back to the old rates and charging for their services whatever they please.

That is about the situation as I remember it. If I am wrong in my recollection of the facts, the Senator from Maine will correct me.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, in answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], I will say that I am somewhat familiar with the legislation proposed to be repealed. The Senator, as far as he went, has stated the facts, but he did not go far enough to state them all, and I am sure his reason for failing to do so was that he did not know them all.

This question is not a new one, Mr. President. It has been before one Congress after another. This is not the first Congress it has been before, as the acting chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. GALLINGER] will testify.

The effort which was made to involve the telephone company doing business in this District was made by a party of rivals who were here seeking from Congress a charter. Whether they were seeking it in good faith or not it is not for me to say. They might have thought that they wanted to come into competition as a rival telephone company in the District; they might possibly have purposed to use that franchise, if Congress had granted it, simply as a club with which to extort their own terms of compromise from the existing corporation. I may have my opinion, and, if I have, it is not to the credit of that proposed rival company, and that opinion is based upon substantial grounds.

However that may be, Congress had fixed arbitrarily—and I appeal to the acting chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to bear out this statement—Congress had fixed arbitrarily the rates beyond which this company should not go in the conduct of its business in this District. The company did not defy Congress; the company, as might the Senator from Arkansas or any other citizen, simply availed itself of the right which belongs to every citizen in this country, however humble, an appeal to the courts of the country, and asked to have determined whether these arbitrarily fixed rates were not, in practice, confiscation of that company's property. That matter went to the courts, where it still is, and it is likely to stay there time out of mind now, because the only parties who have inaugurated this effort to fix arbitrary rates upon the company doing this business have quit and abandoned the contest and are here to-day asking you to do just what the chairman of the committee proposes to do.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. TILLMAN. I just want to get a little light on that very point.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. TILLMAN. After the enactment of the statute which it is now proposed to repeal, did not the telephone company itself go into court and ask relief?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not state any more plainly than I have already done——

Mr. TILLMAN. Who has abandoned the suits? Was it not the contention of the company that their property would be practically confiscated under the operations of the law?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sorry that I am not a sufficient master of the English language to make myself comprehended by the Senator from South Carolina.

I will state again—and I trust that I will make myself understood by everybody now—that these arbitrary rates were fixed by Congress without investigation, without the consent of the company to be affected, and without any inquiry as to their reasonableness, at the earnest solicitation of the men who were trying to establish a rival corporation. That was what I said.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me a moment——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should like to be permitted to answer one question before another comes.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I always yield with pleasure to the Senator from Georgia, but I do not want to mix two questions up before I dispose of the first question which has been propounded.

Mr. BACON. Very well; I shall not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will yield to the Senator in one moment.

Continuing the statement, for the benefit of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I say that the only parties who ever did move in the direction of the passage of the bill fixing the rates upon this company were the parties who have now abandoned their purpose of getting a charter, and here appear as advocating the repeal of this arbitrary fixed rule.

Now I will yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desired to ask the Senator a question on that particular point. It so happened that I was a member of the District Committee at the time the law referred to was passed, and, as a member of that committee, I was present at a number of hearings—when citizens of the District appeared before the committee, not members of the company to which the Senator alludes, but citizens of Washington in great numbers appeared before the committee—and urged with earnestness that there should be a limitation fixed by law upon the charges made by this company.

If the Senator will pardon me a moment further——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well.

Mr. BACON. I was present on a subcommittee which heard the application of the company which desired to have a charter in this District authorizing them to conduct a telephone business, and if there was ever any application by that company, or proposed company, at the time of the passage of the law in question, asking that there should be a limitation fixed upon the price of telephone service, I have no recollection of it, although, as I have said, I was a member of the subcommittee. But I do recollect with the utmost distinctness that the application was made, and urged most earnestly, by great numbers of citizens of the city of Washington, who had no connection whatever with the proposed new organization. That was the condition of affairs.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yielded to the Senator with the understanding that he wanted to ask me a question. If he has done so, I have not yet heard the question.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the question now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well.

Mr. BACON. Where does the Senator get the information that the act which was passed was instigated, and solely instigated, as stated by the Senator, by those who proposed to go into an organization for the construction of a new telephone system in the District?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am very glad to answer the Senator's question, though I am trespassing upon the rights of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that I got that information by the process of absorption. [Laughter.] There was not a man in this Senate or in this city, except the Senator from Georgia, who at that time did not know that the only people who were moving to fix these arbitrary rates of charges upon the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company were the men who proposed to get an adverse rival charter.

Mr. BACON. The Senator is entirely wrong about that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There was not, so far as I know, a messenger, a doorkeeper, a barber, or a page about either House of Congress who did not know what I have stated to be a fact.

Mr. BACON. Now, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator wants to make a speech, I insist that he do it in his own time and not in mine.

Mr. BACON. I shall not insist.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am willing to yield for a question, but I do not want to have the Senator from Georgia and myself making two speeches at the same time, and running them into one.

Mr. BACON. I shall not ask to be heard now, Mr. President.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well, I thought the Senator was asking to be heard.

Mr. BACON. No; your objection is sufficient.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want to be entirely courteous. I want to yield for questions, but not for argument. I would rather each Senator would make his own argument.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say further that the stockholders—I am not talking now about the proposed incorporators of the new telephone company—but I say that the subscribers to the contemplated stock of the new company are represented here to-day withdrawing all opposition to the proposition of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and favoring the repeal of that law.

I want to say to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that since the time at which that arbitrary fixing of rates was established this company has been reorganized, and certainly once, and I am quite sure more than once, has changed its schedule of charges, and that they are lower, materially lower to-day than they were at the time Congress undertook to fix those rates.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, not only is that the fact, but the quality of the telephone service has been much improved. The system as to which Congress legislated does not now exist.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not here now.

The condition that obtained at the time of the passage of the act fixing the rates is no more the condition which obtains in reference to this telephone company in the District to-day than it is the condition of any telephone company in any country town west of the Rocky Mountains.

I want to say a word in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, who said if we repeal this law we turn this company loose without any restrictions or limitations. If the Senator has a telephone company, as I doubt not he has, in the capital city of his State, I ask him if there is any fixed rate upon that company's business? Is it the rule to fix rates beyond which charges of telegraph and telephone companies in this country shall not go? I apprehend not. The exception to the rule was established by this Congress when it undertook to fix the maximum rates for this company, and fixed them at a figure that the company claims would result in the confiscation of its property; and in proof of its contention and its earnestness and its honesty, it appealed to the open courts of the country to protect it from confiscation.

The question has been asked by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], Why pass this amendment now; why not wait until a new Congress comes in, for another year or another decade? The Senator from New Hampshire has told you of the necessity for immediate action. This Government requires this company to do to-day in this city what no telephone company on earth was ever required to do before—it requires this company to go and establish new lines.

The wires of the company are now underground. At the time of the passage of the law fixing the rates there was not an inch of telephone wire underground in the city of Washington; yet to-day the Government extorts from this company service that no private citizen could get from this or any other telephone company here or anywhere else on earth. It requires them to go and establish new stations, new lines of wire, in order, forsooth, that some clerk in some Department may have a telephone in his private residence, and at such rates as the beneficiary himself sees fit to prescribe. It is not fair dealing; there is nothing honest about it. It is extortion, it is blackmail that the Government is levying upon a helpless company. These are the facts.

I beg pardon of the Senator from New Hampshire for having taken so much of his time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure. I want to answer one question which the Senator propounded a moment ago; perhaps he will ask me another, and I will answer both at the same time.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

Mr. President, I want to say that, so far as I was concerned, and the committee of which I was a member, which reported this House proposition to the Senate, there was no proposed rival company which came before us or made any claim in regard to the matter. The complaint, as stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], as was stated on this floor by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in that debate, and also by a number of other Senators, came from citizens of this District—the persons who were using this telephone service.

Not only that, Mr. President, but those who opposed the passage of the bill at that time admitted again and again that the charges were unreasonably high, and only insisted that the House provision put them so low that it would be impossible for the company to go on with their business and supply the service. It was never insisted for one moment by anyone that these charges were not out of proportion to the service rendered, but it was insisted that the limitation fixed by the House was so low that the company could not continue its business. That was the argument, and, notwithstanding the recollection of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], the complaints came from citizens of this District, from the people who use the service. But the Senator says that there was a rival company, and that every page and every employee about the Capitol knew it. I did not know it. They never appeared before the Committee on Appropriations.

A few words more. The Senator says that the regulation of those rates ought not to be made in this city, as other cities in the country have never done it. In other cities of the country there are rival telephone companies; at least there were in some cities of which I have knowledge. As I understand the Senator from New Hampshire, the District government here declines to permit any other company to compete with the existing one. They will not grant charter privileges or permit any company to come in here and compete. Yet the Senator from Kentucky says that it is blackmail and an outrage to undertake to fix or define charges beyond which this company shall not go.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No; I did not. I made no such statement.

Mr. BERRY. I beg the Senator's pardon if I misunderstood him.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I said the practice now in vogue upon the part of the Government officials, even down to clerks in the departments, demanding of this company to furnish them telephones on separate lines to their residences at such rates as they saw fit to fix was nothing short of robbery and blackmail. That is what I said.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I know nothing about what any clerks or officials of the departments are doing; but I do say that while this company, and it alone, is permitted to do telephone business here without competition, Congress has the right, and ought to exercise that right, to fix a limitation beyond which this company shall not charge for its service. If this law be repealed, the Senator from New Hampshire has admitted there will be no restraint upon the company whatever.

The Senator from Kentucky says that the company has reduced its rates. I do not know how much the rates have been reduced, whether the reduction has been large or small, but I apprehend that the enactment of that law, although the question has been litigated in the courts, has had something to do with the reduction of the rates, if they have been reduced.

But the Senator says that this proposed rival company, whose motives he does not state, but he leaves the inference that they were not of the highest, now come in and with the old company ask that the law fixing rates be repealed. Well, that ought not to affect Congress. If there was such a company, whose purposes were such as the Senator intimated they were, then I do not think their request here ought to influence any Senator upon this floor one way or the other.

I say again, that to attempt in an appropriation bill to repeal this law, as the Senator from New Hampshire proposes to do, and put nothing in its place, leaving no limitation whatever upon the charges that may be made, is legislation that ought not to take place in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will make a very brief and very frank additional statement, and then will, so far as I am concerned, let this matter rest.

I agree with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that Congress has an absolute right to regulate, and, if there is a grievance, it ought to legislate, to define and control the rates of service on the part of the telephone company in the District of Columbia. Not only do I go that far, but I say to the Senator from Arkansas if I am permitted to live another year and am associated with the Committee on the District of Columbia, as I probably shall be, that if there is any complaint in this District concerning the charges of the existing telephone company I will move for an investigation, a thorough investigation, with a view of ascertaining the facts, and, if necessity exists, regulating the charges that this telephone company shall make for their service.

Mr. HEITFELD. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HEITFELD. I ask the Senator would it not be well for us first to investigate before we repeal the law and, if it be found that this law is a burden, then to repeal it?

Mr. GALLINGER. We think we have investigated sufficiently. The committee have been in session. The subcommittee—and I was not a member of it—was composed of the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], a very careful and very conscientious man; the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], and one other Senator whose name I do not recall. They came to a unanimous conclusion that this thing ought to be done. They submitted it to the committee this morning, and the committee indorsed its findings.

Mr. President, it is a matter of gratification to me to say that before this repeal was asked by those representing the telephone company at the present time a very high officer in that company, almost a year ago, said to me that they would welcome an investigation by Congress, but they wanted it to be a thorough investigation, not a snap judgment; but they would want their methods of business to be thoroughly inquired into, and I know we shall have no opposition from that source if an inquiry shall be deemed necessary.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]—and I want his attention—I think is chronologically wrong in his statement of the case that when this legislation was put on an appropriation bill, as we propose to put the repeal—and I think the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] will agree that it is quite as proper to do so now as it was then—there was not at that time a contention for a new company. That came afterwards. But the same gentlemen who urged this legislation in 1898 were the attorneys for the new company, and some of them, I understand, stockholders in the new company that they undertook to force in. That is, I think, a correct statement as to that matter.

Mr. President, the gentleman who was at the head of the telephone company in 1898 is not now with them. He died a little time ago, and I am going to say nothing against him, but it is a fact that the telephone company, as it was managed in 1898, was exceedingly offensive to all the citizens of this District. They could not get a civil reply from the officers of the company when they presented their grievances, and there was universal indignation in this District, in which we here shared, and so this legislation was enacted. Senators will recall the fact that Mr. Birney, who represents these gentlemen in conjunction with Mr. Woodard and Mr. Hemphill, said, at the hearing a few days ago, that the act of 1898 was never satisfactory to anyone. He is a leading lawyer, and has been representing these men. The author of the provision in the law did not intend that it should become a law in the form in which it was presented by him to the House of Representatives, and it has always been regarded by the Telephone Subscribers' Association as inadequate.

Mr. President, this company has changed hands; it has gone into the possession of gentlemen, progressive men, men who realize that the only way they can make money is to treat their patrons fairly and generously. They have installed a conduit system, expending a million dollars up to the present time; they have reduced the rates of measured service from 10 cents to 3 or 5 cents; and they have reduced the average rates from $98 to $53. They say to me frankly that they want to reduce them still further, and I have no doubt they mean to do that very thing. They are men who are going to give this community the very best possible service, and after they have done that they say, "if you are not satisfied with our service, then have a committee of investigation raised and let us go into this matter, let us open our books to you, let us present our case to you, and if there is a substantial grievance then legislate against it." I think that is all we ought to ask.

There is a burden placed upon this company at the present time that is not fair, that is oppressive. It is wrong in principle. We ought to remove it from them, and when every person representing every interest, when all the people who found fault in 1898 are here saying, "We agree with you that this law ought to be repealed," I do not think that a Senator ought to insist that the views of the committee, unanimously reached, and the views of citizens, unanimously expressed, ought not to be carried into effect.

Mr. President, I want to be entirely frank; I have no relations with these gentlemen. I never saw the president of the company but once in my life, and that was a few days ago. I am simply making an appeal for what I think is equal and exact justice as between man and man, and I trust that the amendment may go on the bill.

Mr. HEITFELD. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that, although there is a unanimous report here in favor of the amendment, the entire committee is not satisfied with the amendment. As a member of the committee I am opposed to it. I was not present in the committee this morning, and consequently did not register my opposition to it, but the Senator from New Hampshire knows that I am opposed to this amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I would not put the Senator from Idaho in a false position. The Senator was not present at the committee meeting this morning, but the meeting was very full; and I have had reason heretofore to think that the Senator was not fully satisfied with the amendment.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as I stated before, I was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia at the time of the passage of the law in question, and while it came direct from the Committee on Appropriations, it had been considered in the District Committee prior to the time when it was laid before the Appropriations Committee.

I have no special design in now addressing the Senate except most distinctly to take issue with the statement of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that this legislation was at the sole instigation of those who were interested in a proposed rival enterprise. I asked the distinguished Senator where he got that information, and his reply was that he got it by absorption. And relying upon that novel mode of acquiring information, he proceeded in the same connection to say that the information thus secured by him was so definite and so reliable and so undoubtedly true that it was within the knowledge of all the subordinate employees of the Senate, and is to override the definite and positive knowledge, as stated by me to him at the time, that the objectors to the then schedule of rates were not confined to and were not principally prominent among those who proposed to institute or inaugurate a rival enterprise; but that, as a member of the committee and a member of the subcommittee, I stated in my place that the objections came from the citizens at large, who protested against what is now stated by the Senator from New Hampshire himself to have been the extortionate rates then charged by the telephone company.

Mr. President, it is not an easy matter to get legislation of this kind. If I recollect aright, it was not only in the Fifty-fifth Congress, when this law was passed, but in the Fifty-fourth Congress that there were the most earnest representations by the citizens of this city of the unjust charges which were being made by the telephone company, and legislation, the purpose of which was to bring telephone rates down to a proper basis, was then attempted and defeated.

I am not going to detain the Senate, but I want to make a suggestion. I will state further, however, that the Senator from Kentucky is equally wrong in his statement that the law was passed without investigation. It was passed after investigation, not only in one Congress, but in two Congresses, in one of which, if I recollect aright, the Senator from Kentucky was a member of the Senate and in another of which he was not a member.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator let me ask him a question right here?

Mr. BACON. With great pleasure.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell me the telephone rates of what city, either on this or any other continent, they were guided by in fixing the rates stated in the provision which it is now sought to repeal?

Mr. BACON. That was five years ago, and I do not recall, but I do remember most distinctly the fact that there was before the committee a most elaborate presentation of evidence as to rates in other cities. I can not recall the figures.

But I am passing from that, and I am coming to the concession, for the sake of the argument, that the present law is an unjust one in its rates. I do not know whether it is or not, because I do not even remember what the rates are. But if we concede the proposition that the present rates are improper, ought the law to be repealed or ought it be modified? That is the question. If the rates are improper, I grant you there ought to be a concession on the part of the Government and the rates ought to be made proper. But a contention that the rates are improper, that the company is not allowed that which is a proper compensation, does not bring as its consequence a determination on the part of Congress that no rates should be fixed. If they are improper rates, there should be proper rates, and if the present law is an unjust one to the telephone company the remedy is not by repeal of the law, but by an examination to ascertain what is justice and have law express justice and mete it out to these people.

Mr. President, if I remember correctly, this is not a District of Columbia corporation. I think I am accurate in my recollection.

Mr. MALLORY. It is a New York corporation.

Mr. BACON. I am informed by the Senator from Florida that it is a New York corporation. I did not remember. I was under the impression that it was a Maryland corporation. But possibly the Senator from Florida is correct. It matters not.

This is not a District of Columbia corporation, and it has the power to prevent the District of Columbia from chartering a company here. It has—I do not use it in any invidious or offensive sense, but in a practical business sense—and it always will have a monopoly of the telephone business here. I am not prepared to say but that it is better that it should have a monopoly. I do not believe it is practicable to have two telephone companies in successful operation in the same community, covering the same territory, because it is necessary that there should be continuous communication. Accepting that as a fact, not only that it is a monopoly, but that it is a proper monopoly, an unavoidable monopoly, and one we know is going to continue, the question before Congress is, Is it one, that being the case, which should be regulated by law, or is it one which should be turned loose without legal restraint to do as it pleases upon the assurance that it is now doing well?

If it is now doing well, it is very much to its credit, and I am gratified to hear it; I do not know anything about its rates; but that is no reason why, in the face of the known difficulty of instituting and carrying through legislation in a case of this kind, we should repeal a law upon the statute books and say that we will wait and give the company an opportunity to show what they will do, and if they afterwards begin to oppress the people, then we will endeavor to put a checkrein upon them. My idea is that the present law should be allowed to remain until we can so modify it as to remove injustice, and if the statements, as I understand them to be made, are correct that the law is not now being enforced, in the meantime there will be no hardship upon these people.

If it were true that under this law the company were being oppressed, that under this law they were made to render service at a less compensation than they are entitled to, then there would be reason for sudden and prompt action.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator evidently did not understand clearly my statement. My statement was that they are being oppressed so far as the Government is concerned. Let me cite an illustration to the Senator. Suppose we had legislated that street railroad companies should carry passengers at a fare of 2 cents. Suppose the company went into court, and that the litigation lasted five years, and that the Government during that time had held up the companies, insisting that they should carry all Government employees at 2 cents. Would not the Senator concede that the company had had a burden placed upon it from which it ought to be relieved?

Mr. BACON. I would; and I quite agree with the Senator that if the Government is exacting telephone service of this company at improper rates it ought to be changed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BACON. But that is no reason why the law should be absolutely repealed. It is as easy for the Committee on the District of Columbia to come into the Chamber and say what is a correct rate and to have the Government do justice as it is to say "this is at present an incorrect rate, and therefore we will not have any rate at all."

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, he, of course, knows that any attempt to regulate a Comptroller would be pretty nearly a hopeless task.

Mr. BACON. I do not agree with the Senator. If the Committee on the District of Columbia were to come in and say that upon investigation they found the rates to be too low and that the Government is now enjoying the service of the telephone company at a less rate than affords proper compensation, I believe Congress would say, "That being the case, put it at what is right." I do not believe the Government desires to exact from the telephone company service at a less rate than is proper.

Mr. GALLINGER. It may not desire to do it, but it is doing it.

Mr. BACON. Very well; if it is doing it, the Senator from New Hampshire, as head of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I submit to him, has not taken the course which should be taken in this matter. He should come into the Senate——

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BACON. In one moment.

The Committee on the District of Columbia should come into the Senate and point out where the injustice is, and ask that it be corrected. I have had occasion when I was upon the Committee on the District of Columbia to note and to state in this Chamber that in the city of Washington there were intrenched more impregnable monopolies—and this is one of them—than in any other city I know of in the United States. And I did not think it to the credit of the Congress of the United States that that was the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I confess that I doubt very much whether a committee of this Congress could ever determine the exact amount that ought to be paid to any corporation for its service, but the Senator will note the fact that in 1898 there were 2,500 telephones in operation here, and now there are 9,000. The citizens have voluntarily taken 6,500 additional telephones, satisfied with the rates that the company, under its new management, is exacting from them.

Mr. BACON. What guaranty does the Senator have that those rates will be continued?

Mr. GALLINGER. The guaranty the Senator has is the simple guaranty that this company could not afford to do anything different.

Mr. BACON. It afforded to do it before.

Mr. GALLINGER. It afforded to do it before because it had free rein and the question had never been raised. The Senator knows, as a businesss man, that the company could not afford to increase its rates beyond the present point if this law is repealed. There would be a feeling of indignation in this community and in both Houses of Congress which would not be to the advantage of this corporation.

Mr. BACON. The Senator must not assume that I know it. On the contrary, I have the other opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I appeal to the Senator's business judgment; that is all.

Mr. BACON. My business judgment is not that way. It may not be to my credit——

Mr. GALLINGER. I would not question that.

Mr. BACON. But nevertheless it is a fact. I have seen in this community a great exhibition of indignation. I have seen the committee room thronged with citizens of the District, not simply those who desired to be interested in a proposed new enterprise, but thronged with citizens of this District protesting against the rates that were then charged by the telephone company, with the manifestation of the greatest indignation, and not the slightest concession was made in consequence thereof by the telephone company. And no concession was ever made until a law was passed which fixed the rates, which may have been too low, but which still showed the intention of the Government to control in this matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to make an observation?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Those gentlemen who were there—and I remember them very well, because I sat on the committee with the Senator from Georgia, and he was so useful a member that we all regretted that he left the committee——

Mr. BACON. I am very much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were represented by Mr. Birney, Mr. Woodard, and Mr. Hemphill—Mr. Hemphill being an exmember of Congress from the State of South Carolina. They were their attorneys, they were their representatives, and through those same gentlemen they all now say that they are satisfied with the present status and want this law repealed. It seems to me, if the Senator heard me——

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon.

Mr. GALLINGER. I said those gentlemen were represented by Mr. Birney, Mr. Woodard, and Mr. Hemphill.

Mr. BACON. No; my recollection is not in accord with that of the Senator from New Hampshire. I recollect distinctly when those gentlemen were there trying to get a new telephone charter, but the occasion to which I refer was when the citizens were there protesting individually in their own interest and in the interest of their fellow-citizens against what they charged to be extortionate rates and what the Senator himself says to-day were extortionate rates.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is right and he is wrong. These citizens have always been represented by Mr. Birney, Mr. Woodard, and Mr. Hemphill.

Mr. BACON. That may be true.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have been their attorneys.

Mr. BACON. They were not the only parties who appeared there, however.

Mr. GALLINGER. They have been their representatives in all the hearings and in all this litigation. Now they come here through these same gentlemen who then represented them and say, "We want this thing done." That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let me say a word before the Senator from Idaho starts.

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not to be denied, Mr. President, that the gentlemen who appeared here asking for a charter for a rival telephone company to do business in the District of Columbia were not the only people who originally sought to secure a reduction of the rates charged by the existing company. We all know that. There is not a city in the world, I take it, where as a rule people who are paying for a service—whatever service—can not be found ready to ask for a reduction of rates. That is human nature, and it is true the world over. There were a large number of citizens here who were seeking to get a reduction of rates from the telephone company, and honestly seeking it.

But what I said, and say now, is that the only people who brought this trouble upon the company were the people who were seeking a rival charter in order to do one of two things—either to come into competition with this company or else to extort money from the company.

Now we know that the establishment of two telephone companies in one town can not redound to the benefit or to the saving of the people who use the telephone service. Upon the contrary, it simply doubles the cost, because you do not have and can not have and never did and never will have complete communication throughout the city or the circuit if there are two companies doing business there unless you have two telephones in your business house or in your residence.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say only a word upon this question.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia was first called to my attention during the progress of the debate upon the District bill. My judgment at the moment was that it ought not to be projected upon an appropriation bill, and I think I so stated to the Senator who is at the head of that committee, for the reason that it was likely to lead to discussion, not only here, but elsewhere. But I was willing that these people should have an opportunity of discussing this question, and the more I have looked into the matter the more I am inclined to the view entertained by the Committee on the District of Columbia as respects the propriety of getting rid of this question at the present time by repeal of existing provision.

I remember very well what occasioned the putting on of the provision which it is now proposed to repeal. There was here—the Senator from Arkansas stated the facts correctly—a feeling of deep disgust with the then existing telephone company. They seemed to pay no regard whatever to the wishes and desires of the people of the District. It was impossible for a person of ordinary means to secure a telephone because of the exorbitant charges. They did not seem to understand, what I believe most of these companies now understand, that by the reduction of rates they enlarge the sphere of usefulness of the telephone and thus increase their own profit.

The provision which it is now proposed to repeal is one that did not originate in the Senate. It originated in the House of Representatives. It came to the Senate five years ago, in 1898, upon an appropriation bill. It came here as the result of a special rule of the House of Representatives, as I remember it, which authorized its Committee on Appropriations to offer it as an amendment on an appropriation bill. Otherwise it would not have been in order.

Now, when it came here on the bill, and the bill itself was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, we undertook to consider the question, then as now having very little time to consider it, and then as now feeling that it was not a proper subject for the consideration of the Appropriations Committee. But we made such investigation as we could concerning it, covering a day or two.

There was a wide difference of opinion in the Committee on Appropriations as to what should be done. I believed then, and so expressed myself, I think, on the floor at the time, that this provision was one which could not be enforced because it was not in sufficient detail to give the telephone company proper play. The committee itself recommended to the Senate, as I remember, that it strike out the provision, but when the matter came into the Senate, as the Senator from Arkansas will remember very well, the committee was overwhelmed by the arguments then made and by the votes of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me just a moment in order that I may add to the statement he has made as to the history of this case?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. It is true, as stated by the Senator, that this provision came from the House and went to the Appropriations Committee, but that would be misleading if the Senator would have us understand that that was the origin of the proposition.

The matter had been agitated in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and also in that Congress, which was the Fifty-fifth, and there had been some most elaborate hearings before the Committee on the District of Columbia. So when it came into the Senate, as the Senator now says, from the Committee on Appropriations, the debate, so far as concerns its volume, was really taken away from the Committee on Appropriations and was indulged in by the Senate at large.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not mean to say that it was a new question when brought here. It was not a new question even to the Committee on Appropriations, because it had been presented the year before, and the Committee on the District of Columbia had been examining into the question for a year or two, as I very well remember. We insisted that it should have a scheme or a plan here for the regulation of the telephones and a list of charges for their use; but that was not done, and we were confronted then with this provision which came from the House.

Mr. President, the provision, which is now a part of the statutes, I think has shown itself to be impracticable in its administration, and therefore it is that I for one am willing to allow it to be repealed, especially in the view of what the Senator from New Hampshire has said, and more than once said, in this debate—that there is no complaint in the District as respects the repeal of this clause. The proposition to repeal it has been known for more than a week, and I have heard no complaint. Especially do I take that position in view of the fact, as the Senator from New Hampshire has stated, that the Committee on the District of Columbia, upon the first complaint, will take up this question and deal with it by and large.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I understood him to say that in operation this provision has been practically a failure, or words to that effect. Did I understand the Senator correctly in that respect?

Mr. ALLISON. Well, I said what I believed, that the provision is not properly applicable to the use of the telephone in this District.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That it is practically inoperative, as I understand?

Mr. ALLISON. That it is practically inoperative, as has been shown from the fact——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That was my impression; but I thought it came from the fact that the telephone company paid no attention whatever to the act of Congress. Is that correct?

Mr. ALLISON. I think very largely so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not understand the necessity of repealing a law when the party whom it is intended to regulate pays no attention to it as the law stands now.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the company went into the courts, just as the Senator from Arkansas would have done if he had been in its place.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They went into the courts. What was the result of going into the courts?

Mr. GALLINGER. They went into the courts to get their rights.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not in my mind all the details of the court proceedings, but the telephone company, as I understand, went into the courts upon the ground that the compensation provided in the statute was wholly inadequate. Testimony was taken upon that question for some months. Finally, it was decided by the judge who heard the case that the compensation was inadequate, and that the court had a right to say whether or not Congress could fix an inadequate compensation for the service.

The case was appealed to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, I think, and the supreme court of the District of Columbia held that the Congress of the United States had a right to fix the compensation for the use of telephones; and whether it was adequate or inadequate was a matter for the judgment of Congress and not for the judgment of the court. Am I right?

Mr. MALLORY. If the Senator will permit me, I will correct him. I have the decision before me.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. The case in the supreme court of the District of Columbia was decided in favor of the company. The court refused a permanent injunction. The case is that of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company v. Manning. The court refused to grant a permanent injunction. The court of appeals of the District of Columbia overruled the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and ordered them to hear the case again.

The case was then taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which overruled the court of appeals and sent it back to the supreme court of the District of Columbia to take further action in the matter looking to an ascertainment, so far as we can gather from the decision, as to whether or not the rates were reasonable.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator from Florida for correcting me. I said the Supreme Court when I meant the court of appeals. The court of appeals reversed the court below.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa one more question in this connection. Will the effect of this repeal be to increase the rates for telephone service in the District?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope not. From what I have been able to hear within a day or two there is a promise in writing—I saw it somewhere—that if the company were rid of the incubus of this law the rates in the District would be still further considerably reduced.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then what is the necessity of repealing the law if the company is going to reduce the rates below those fixed by law?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator must understand that I am not distressed about the repeal of this law.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I want to understand the facts.

Mr. ALLISON. I am only suggesting what I believe, that the law is of no value on the statute books and that its repeal will do no harm, especially as we have the promise, not only of the company to reduce rates, but also the promise of the able Committee on the District of Columbia that they will take up this question and deal with it; and they have a right to deal with it. This company has no charter in the District of Columbia. It has no right here except a right of property which comes with an investment of money. We have absolute control. We can fix rates here as we choose to fix them, save only that they must not be confiscatory in their nature and must be reasonable.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And for that reason I understand the Senator wants to remove all restrictions and allow the company to do what it pleases.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas can gather as he wishes the reasons I am endeavoring to give for my own consent——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to say only——

Mr. ALLISON. For my own consent that this provision may be now repealed in view of the surrounding circumstances; and when the Senator assumes in any way that I am interested in having this repeal made for any special purpose I hope to disabuse him of that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I was against bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate in the form in which it is being brought. The amendment is out of order and this debate is out of order, except by consent; any Senator can stand upon this floor if he chooses and make the point of order against the amendment. But I do not choose to make the point of order, because I believe that these people should have a fair hearing and a fair consideration of this question. While it may inconvenience the telephone company for six or nine months, in view of the vacation of Congress, I do not think it is a very great matter whether we put it on or leave it off of this bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to disclaim any intention to reflect upon the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I am sure the Senator did not intend to do so.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I had no idea of doing anything of that sort. I merely wanted to find out the theory on which this subject was proposed. I think after the Senator gets through with his remarks, as he suggests that the amendment is out of order, I will make that point.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I will say to the Senator in brief that this statute is impracticable of enforcement. It has been said by the company, as has been so well stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, that under the circumstances they are compelled, not by law, but by the fact that the Government asks it of them, to furnish telephone service for which they are not adequately paid, and therefore they want to have the law repealed now, in order to have a just settlement. That is the only reason I can see why it should be done. It will help no user of the telephone to have the law stand until next year.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I think that is exactly true, because I do not think the slightest attention is paid to the law as it now stands.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me one question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Is the reason why they want to have the law repealed because the Government pays now according to the rate fixed in the law of 1898 and they want to get rid of that so as to make the Government pay what other people pay? Is that it?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; I do not understand that to be the case.

Mr. BERRY. Is it not true that the Government does not now pay except according to that law? Is that correct?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know. The Senator from New Hampshire will know.

Mr. BERRY. That is what I understand, and I simply ask for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not made the investigation. I do not know.

Mr. BERRY. As I understood the Senator from New Hampshire, the Government holds the law to be a valid law and pays accordingly, and they furnish the service at that rate to the Government, but to no one else.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not the whole of the case, as I understand it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not the whole of it.

Mr. ALLISON. We have provided that the conduits shall be placed under ground not only as respects the telephones, but as to the electric lighting, etc. They are expending now large sums of money upon underground conduits, and they are being asked to make exceptions of various kinds, which they say they can not do at this rate.

I did not expect when I rose to come into the defense of this question, because I am not familiar with it. I have only gathered enough from this debate, with my confidence in the Committee on the District of Columbia and their judgment, to believe that no harm will come from this repeal. I do not take the pessimistic view my friends from Arkansas take of this subject, but I am willing to consent that this matter shall be discussed and debated, and that the law shall be repealed if on the whole it is thought wise to do so.

I have not made the point of order as I could have done on the amendment for the reason that I thought there were sufficient arguments in favor of dealing with the question in this bill to justify our giving half an hour to it.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I was a member of the subcommittee to which this matter was referred, and which gave a hearing to the citizens of the District of Columbia who were interested in the subject. The facts elicited at that hearing were substantially as follows: That this law was practically a dead letter; that a suit had been instituted soon after the enactment of the law to enforce it, and that it was carried through the different courts in the District of Columbia—the supreme court and court of appeals—to the Supreme Court of the United States, and by that court, after a somewhat lengthy consideration and opinion, it was sent to the supreme court of the District of Columbia for further action, and it will probably be some years yet before the question involved is finally decided.

Appearing before the subcommittee were a number of gentlemen who professed to be, and I believe they were in fact, representatives of the association in the District of Columbia which had assumed the burden of carrying on this legislation. It was that association which was responsible for the long legal fight which had culminated in the case finally being sent back to the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The subcommittee were assured by the attorneys of that association that in their judgment it was best for all concerned that the act should be repealed.

The committee had no further evidence before it than the statement of these gentlemen, who had been for some time interested in seeing the law put into effect, and such facts as it could gather from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case entitled Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company v. Manning, United States Supreme Court Reports, volume 186, page 246.

The act which is sought to be repealed was undoubtedly a very crude piece of legislation. It was in the shape of a proviso, and in the following language:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person or any telephone company doing business in the District of Columbia to charge or receive more than $50 per annum for the use of a telephone on a separate wire; $40 for each telephone, there being not more than two on a wire; $30 for each telephone, there being not more than three on a wire, and $25 for each telephone, there being four or more on the same wire.

That is the sole verbiage of the act, without reference as to the quality of the telephone, as to the costliness of the particular instruments, as to whether there are any improvements from year to year in the system of telephones, or without reference to anything of that kind, but a hard and fast rule laid down that these particular tariff rates should be enforced, and no others.

Mr. President, the committee were also impressed with the fact that while these rates may be just and reasonable they were not fixed by Congress after a careful and considerate estimate of what they should be. The Supreme Court in its decision, in referring to that fact, says:

So, while we may not infer from the mere fact that the committees of investigation never completed their work that Congress acted unadvisedly, yet, as each body authorized a full investigation by a committee, and before a report was received from such committee took the action which it did, it is fairly open for consideration whether the general language found in this proviso is not subject to some limitations or qualifications.

In other words, we have it not on the memory of a Senator or a member of the House of Representatives, but a part of the record of a case in the Supreme Court to the effect that at the time this proviso was passed there was before Congress no report whatever, no information in an official way, as to whether these rates were reasonable or just.

It is now contended by the telephone company that these rates are unreasonable and are, as has been said here, confiscatory. With those facts before the committee, knowing as we do that this telephone company is in the District of Columbia simply on sufferance, that every right and privilege it possesses is subject to the right of repeal by Congress whenever Congress chooses to say so, and we can to-morrow, if we choose, wipe them out of existence in the District of Columbia—knowing those facts and bearing in mind that the only ones who are deeply interested in having the law carried out appeared before us and told us that they thought it was to the best interests of the citizens of this city that the law should be repealed, the subcommittee considered that they were justified in making the recommendation to the full committee which they did. That was the only motive which influenced the members of the subcommittee.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I do not think the fact that the attorneys who were anxious to have this legislation carried into effect have changed their minds and now want the law repealed is in the least conclusive upon us. The honorable gentleman who was on the subcommittee, the Senator from Florida, admits in his argument that that was the controlling consideration in his mind.

I recollect that at the last session of Congress, when there was a bill to reduce the duty on Cuban sugar, the House put an amendment on that bill which made the sugar trust pay a portion of the reduction, or struck off the differential, and the beet-sugar men were the chief advocates of what the House did.

The beet-sugar men insisted that the striking out of existing law of the differential duty on sugar should be a part of the act reducing the duty on Cuban sugar. Now the same beet-sugar men are here saying that the bill ought to be passed without mention of the differential. This proves that some arrangement has been made between the sugar trust and these particular beet-sugar men making the arrangement satisfactory to those gentlemen; but it does not touch the point in controversy at all, and I imagine that it is not satisfactory to the producers of the beet and the consumers of sugar.

So the fact that the men who were anxious for the law are now agreeable to its nonenforcement and its repeal I do not think is conclusive at all; and that seems to be about the best argument for its repeal.

However, I have no particular opinion on this subject. I rose to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question.

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. DUBOIS. I understood the Senator to say that the rates had been something like $90 a year, and that they had been reduced to something like $52 or $53.

Mr. GALLINGER. The average rates?

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes. Now, is there any restriction as to the number of messages which can be sent annually by one who pays this annual rent?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not except those who have the measured service. Those who have the measured service, of course, can send as many messages as they please, and they pay for each message. Those who have a telephone in the house at a stipulated price of course can send just as many messages as they choose.

Mr. DUBOIS. I wished to find out, if I could, if those who pay $53 a year have an unlimited service?

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand it so. I will not say that it is exactly $53 a year, but the average rate has been reduced from $98 to $53, almost one-half, and they have an unlimited service, beyond a question.

Mr. HOAR. When was that done?

Mr. GALLINGER. They have gradually reduced it during the last two years.

Mr. DUBOIS. I had understood that they were restricted to 600 messages a year, or about two messages a day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that there is a $36 rate where the users are restricted, as I remember it, to 600 messages a year, and on additional messages I think they pay from 3 cents to 5 cents. I am not sure as to the amount. It was 10 cents, and it has been reduced to 3 cents or 5 cents.

Mr. DUBOIS. Really the reason why I rose was to find out by a comparison which we can understand, and which can be instituted, the cost of the service in this District and the cost of similar service in other cities.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the very thing I have tried to say will be done at the next session of Congress—if some of us live—if there is a demand for it, and I say to the Senator that I pledge my personal efforts to make it a very thorough inquiry.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should think, under the existing condition, we ought to be furnished with some comparison as to the charges here and in other cities of somewhat similar size.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no doubt, from what knowledge I have of it——

Mr. DUBOIS. I beg pardon. I want to ask further if the people who are restricted to 600 messages a year have to pay anything more—and if so, how much—for messages beyond the number of 600, or 2 a day?

Mr. GALLINGER. The charge is either 3 cents or 5 cents, I am not sure which, for outgoing messages; not for incoming messages, but outgoing messages.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have no disposition to oppose the measure. I would really like to have some information more definite than we have.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like very much, Mr. President, to have the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who was chairman of the subcommittee, make a brief statement concerning this matter; but before doing so, I want simply to call attention to the point which perhaps I did not make sufficiently clear.

There was not only one association in the District of Columbia interested in this question, but some six associations. There were the Business Men's Association of Washington, the Brightwood Avenue Citizens' Association, the Mount Pleasant Citizens' Association, the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association, and the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association. I wish simply to read what Mr. Crounse, who was chairman of the telephone committee of the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association, says in behalf of that association, and I hope it will be listened to:

CITIZENS' NORTHWEST SUBURBAN ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., February 10, 1903.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your inquiry of this morning concerning the telephone service in our section as supplied by your substation recently installed at Somerset Heights, I would say it is entirely satisfactory both as to efficiency and rates charged.

There is perhaps no part of the District of Columbia in which prompt telephone service is so necessary as in the northwestern suburbs, where residents are widely scattered and the public utilities, including transportation and police and fire protection, are less adequate than within the city limits. Since the installation of the substation at Somerset Heights we have been able to connect our houses, at moderate rates, with the fire and police departments and with local and city physicians, as well as with our places of business in town, and thus the chief objections to suburban residence have been removed. We hope that the establishment of this service will do much to develop our section, and I desire to express our appreciation of your cooperation in this direction.

Very truly, yours,
W. L. CROUNSE,
Chairman Telephone Committee
Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association.

That is an association representing a very large class of citizens who were up in arms five years ago, and now they are absolutely satisfied not only with the service but with the rates this corporation is giving them.

Now, Mr. President, I very much desire that the junior Senator from Vermont, who was absent when I took the floor, shall make a statement. Had he been in his seat I would have asked him to make the first statement upon this subject, he having been the chairman of the subcommittee which heard the citizens and those representing the telephone company in a recent hearing. I trust the Senator will make his statement.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, the statement should be very brief.

It appeared from the testimony taken by the subcommittee that at the time of the enactment of the law this litigation was inaugurated and went into the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The decision there was appealed from, and it has gone through each one of the courts until it has reached the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States has sent the case back with instructions to take further evidence. The court there has held substantially, as was stated to the committee, that "there was a superior kind and an inferior kind or class, and in each of these classes there were several subclasses or grades. The law was not clear on the subject, and the trial court had not taken these facts into consideration. It therefore sent the case back for further inquiry as to which of these kinds of equipment Congress intended the rates to apply, and also whether or not the rates fixed were reasonable for the kind of equipment to which it might be found to apply." Now, that sends the case back, so that the petitioners are in substantially the same position they were when the litigation began some time ago.

Under these considerations, and in view of the fact that since that time the telephone company has entirely altered its system of charges and placed it to a very large extent upon the amount of business done from each one of the stations, the petitioners found themselves unable to proceed under the law in a way satisfactory to themselves, and so by conferring with the company they concluded that it would be best to withdraw all the litigation and allow the law to be repealed, with the distinct understanding that if when Congress assembles next winter the relations existing at that time between the telephone company and the citizens of Washington were not entirely satisfactory, the Committee on the District of Columbia would take this matter up in earnest and see that legislation was inaugurated which would fully protect the patrons of the company.

The attorneys for the Telephone Subscribers' Association appeared before us, and with them a large number of their clients, private citizens, proprietors of hotels and other business places, and everybody in the room assented to the proposition which was made both by the attorneys and by the company. In the statement made by the attorneys for the association to the committee they used the following language concerning the law now in force:

The act of 1898 was never satisfactory to anyone. Its author did not intend that it should become a law in the form in which it was presented by him to the House of Representatives, and it has been always regarded by the association as wholly inadequate to the situation. It does not at all cover the ground, and if it is to stand it should be added to by further provisions.

The association also recognizes that since the passage of this act of 1898 local conditions have greatly changed. Improvements in methods have been introduced, and average rates of charges have been lessened.

That presents an entirely new condition at this time, a condition that differs from the one which existed when the law was enacted. They found difficulty in attempting to enforce this new law with the new conditions, and, therefore, they were strongly of the opinion that the law should be repealed and that it should be left to the discretion of the Committee on the District of Columbia whether a new law should be proposed at the next session of Congress. They all expressed themselves satisfied with the administration of the affairs of the company at this time.

Concerning the question of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] as to rates, it did appear that a rate had been fixed for private residences calling for the payment of $36 annually. In that particular case the number of messages sent out was limited to 600 annually, with the privilege of sending more by paying from 3 to 5 cents upon each message. It further appeared that the average rate of charges for telephones has decreased since the act of 1898 from $98 per annum to $56 per annum, and that it is now based upon the equitable system of charging for the 'phone upon the basis of the business done through that particular station.

Mr. HEITFELD. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read the third time?

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment, to come in on page 19, after line 24, which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 24, insert:

For Connecticut avenue extended, grade and macadamize, $10,000.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say that that is a matter which was overlooked by the committee. It has been the custom for some time to do certain work on Connecticut avenue, and we have heretofore appropriated $10,000. The estimate is for $25,000. The matter was entirely overlooked by the committee. I believe the amendment has the approval of the chairman of the committee. I make this statement because it is a little out of order to come in now with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 12th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 661) authorizing the restoration of the name of

Thomas H. Carpenter, late captain, Seventeenth United States Infantry, to the rolls of the Army, and providing that he be placed on the list of retired officers; and

An act (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce and labor;

A bill (H. R. 14764) to establish United States courts at Wilkesboro, N. C.; and

A bill (H. R. 15449) to increase the efficiency of the Army.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State with an accompanying draft of an act making an appropriation to carry out on the part of the United States the provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain, concluded January 24, 1903.

In order that there may be no delay in the appointment and assembling of the tribunal provided for in the convention, I ask for the matter the favorable consideration of the present Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 13, 1903.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. QUAY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DEPEW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President, I rise to ask permission to submit a number of observations bearing upon the future welfare of the Philippine Islands. They are somewhat extensive, and realizing the pressure of important pending legislation at this time, I do not feel justified in asking for the privilege of giving them all orally.

I am advocating, Mr. President, the inauguration of a policy for the protection and development of the interests and industries of the Philippine Islands, more especially those which do not and can not compete with industries of the United States. We are importing annually between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000 of duty-free products which could be supplied by the Philippine and other island possessions, and I contend that it is unfair, unbusinesslike, and unpatriotic to admit, without duty, from other countries, products which could be grown or manufactured in our own possessions.

For many years the customs tariffs of the United States have been so arranged as to afford protection to our home industries, both of the farm and factory, and because of that policy we are the most prosperous nation on the face of the earth. We are now importing coffee, india rubber, hemp, sisal grass, gutta-percha, copra, cacao, dyewoods, and other products of the field and forests, amounting annually to the value of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000, all of which are now on the free list, and in consequence we have little to trade under reciprocal arrangements unless we trade off detrimentally one American industry for another.

Now that we have island possessions capable of producing these $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 of products which come into the United States duty free, there should be an additional incentive for us to change the policy of the past by placing a duty on these articles, thus encouraging their production in our own island possessions. We must give the same measure of protection to the producers and manufacturers of our island possessions as we do to our own people in the United States. As an illustration of what this past policy has cost the American Government I cite the case of Brazil. The principal Brazilian products which come to us are coffee, india rubber, gutta-percha, cacao, etc., all of which come in free of duty. In 1900 we imported $55,204,311 of duty-free Brazilian products, and of this amount $33,905,059 was coffee and $17,876,128 was rubber, these two articles thus constituting nearly $53,000,000 of the $55,000,000 worth of imported nondutiable Brazilian products. The duty on the rubber, which was 50 per cent ad valorem, was taken off in December, 1870; the duty on coffee, which was 5 cents per pound prior to 1870, was then reduced to 3 cents, and was finally abolished in 1872.

Immediately after we took the duty off of coffee Brazil put on an export and other taxes, approximating the duties we had been collecting, consequently our revenue on coffee was transferred from our Treasury to the Brazilian treasury, and our people were not helped one iota.

In 1871 we paid Brazil 9¾ cents per pound for 257,472,708 pounds of coffee, collecting 3 cents per pound duty, thereby turning $7,724,181.24 into our Treasury, making the coffee cost our importers 12¾ cents per pound, duty paid. In 1872 we paid Brazil 15¾ cents; in 1873, 14 9/10 cents; in 1874, 19 cents, and in 1875, 15 7/10 cents per pound, showing that putting coffee upon the free list did not decrease the cost of coffee to the American consumer, but coffee constantly advanced in price.

During our twenty-eight years of free-trade coffee we have lost in revenue on Brazilian coffee alone the enormous sum of $304,869,852.84 and made the Brazilian treasury richer by practically that amount of money. For twenty years prior to free coffee and free rubber the total balance of trade in favor of Brazil was but a fraction over $12,000,000 a year. Since our free coffee and free rubber period began the balance of trade against us has so increased that for the whole period of twenty-eight years it has averaged over $45,000,000 a year. In other words, during the twenty-eight-years' period of free coffee and rubber Brazil has sold us products to the value of $1,611,688,716 and has purchased during the same period only $285,521,500.46 of American products, or less than 18 per cent of our purchases from Brazil, thus creating in twenty-eight years a balance of trade against the United States amounting to the enormous sum of $1,328,167,670.

Had our legislators been wise they would not have listened to the siren song of free trade, which has produced such disastrous results to our commercial relations with Brazil and the loss of hundreds of millions to our Treasury, but we should have placed a high duty on coffee and other products and kept such duties in force except by special arrangements for trade concessions, and that the countries from whom we purchased should not collect an additional export or other tax by which they would absorb such reduction.

Now that we have island possessions that can produce all of this coffee, rubber, cacao, copra, dyewoods, spices, and other tropical products, I am in favor of placing a protective tariff on them against the rest of the world. This proposition will cause opposition by the coffee, rubber, and other trusts who have their money invested in foreign countries. In spite of opposition which might arise we should do that which is best for our own people and the people of the Philippine islands, for they are our own people.

The system of peonage and practical slavery which has existed and now exists in the Philippine Islands, in Cuba, and in other Spanish possessions, is due to the fact that the Spanish Government encouraged the building up of vast sugar and tobacco estates. The continuation of this system should be discouraged, and for this reason I am opposed to the granting to either individuals or corporations any larger tracts of land in the Philippines than we have already provided for.

The cause of the Cuban war and the uprising of the Filipino people against Spain was because of the vast estates upon which people were simply held as peons or slaves, and to grant these franchises of great tracts of land would only perpetuate and increase this system, which is so obnoxious and detrimental to the welfare of the masses of the people.

Both the great tobacco and sugar estates of the Philippines have been so conducted that the great mass of laborers on them never saw any money from one year's end to the other. The pittance which they received for their labor was given in merchandise from the company's stores. In fact, they were always kept in debt and thus held in semislavery.

Last year we passed an act authorizing the Philippine Commission to sell not to exceed 1,024 hectares, equal to about 2,500 acres of land to a single corporation, and that is certainly enough land to be held by one set of individuals.

We limited the amount of land that could be taken up by a single individual to about 40 acres, because the Philippine soil is so much more productive than American soil that the 2,500 acres of Philippine land, which corporations can hold under the present law, is equal in productiveness to 10,000 acres of American soil.

For the specific purposes of doing away with great Philippine estates which have enabled the owners to hold the Filipino people in practical slavery and which caused the uprising in the islands, the last session of Congress authorized the Philippine Commission to issue bonds to the value of several millions of dollars, the proceeds from the sale of which were to be used for the exclusive purpose of purchasing the friar estates and turning them back into the public domain, and I quote that part of the act which refers to it:

"AUTHORITY FOR THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS GOVERNMENT TO PURCHASE LANDS OF RELIGIOUS ORDERS AND OTHERS AND ISSUE BONDS FOR PURCHASE PRICE.

"SEC. 63. That the government of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, subject to the limitations and conditions prescribed in this act, to acquire, receive, hold, maintain, and convey title to real and personal property, and may acquire real estate for public uses by the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

"SEC. 64. That the powers hereinbefore conferred in section 63 may also be exercised in respect of any lands, easements, appurtenances, and hereditaments which, on the 13th of August, 1898, were owned or held by associations, corporations, communities, religious orders, or private individuals, in such large tracts or parcels and in such manner as in the opinion of the Commission injuriously to affect the peace and welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands. And for the purpose of providing funds to acquire the lands mentioned in this section, said government of the Philippine Islands is hereby empowered to incur indebtedness, to borrow money, and to issue and to sell at not less than par value, in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or the equivalent in value in money of said islands, upon such terms and conditions as it may deem best, registered or coupon bonds of said government for such amount as may be necessary, said bonds to be in denominations of $50 or any multiple thereof, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 4½ per cent per annum, payable quarterly, and to be payable at the pleasure of said government after dates named in said bonds not less than five nor more than thirty years from the date of their issue, together with interest thereon in gold coin of the United States of the present standard value or the equivalent in value in money of said islands; and said bonds shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of said government, or any local authority therein, or of the Government of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority in the United States or the Philippine Islands. The money which may be realized or received from the issue and sale of said bonds shall be applied by the government of the Philippine Islands to the acquisition of the property authorized by this section, and to no other purposes.

"SEC. 65. That all lands acquired by virtue of the preceding section shall constitute a part and portion of the public property of the government of the Philippine Islands, and may be held, sold, and conveyed, or leased temporarily for a period not exceeding three years after their acquisition by said government on such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, subject to the limitations and conditions provided for in this Act: Provided, That all deferred payments and the interest thereon shall be payable in the money prescribed for the payment of principal and interest of the bonds authorized to be issued in payment of said lands by the preceding section and said deferred payments shall bear interest at the rate borne by the bonds. All moneys realized or received from sales or other dispositions of said lands or by reason thereof shall constitute a trust fund for the payment of principal and interest of said bonds, and also constitute a standing fund for the payment of said bonds at their maturity. Actual settlers and occupants at the time said lands are acquired by the Government shall have the preference over all others to lease, purchase, or acquire their holdings within such reasonable time as may be determined by said government."

Were we to increase the amount of land which can be held by corporations we would be going back to the very conditions which caused the trouble and to get out of which we authorized the above issue of government bonds.

I do not imagine for one moment that the friars are any worse landlords than are other people under similar conditions. I did not vote for the measure primarily to get rid of the friars, but to get rid of the principle of great landed estates.

Nonresident landlordism nearly wrecked Ireland, Cuba, New Zealand, Queensland, and New South Wales, where the governments have recently condemned and are still condemning large estates and cutting them up and selling them in small parcels.

In the light of this history we can not afford to inaugurate our administration of the affairs of 8,000,000 of people by making them slaves to our great tobacco and sugar and other corporations.

Especially should such a system be condemned in the case of the Philippines, where so many avenues of industry are open wherein the people remain independent, each family tilling its own land and not being subject to the tender mercies of corporations owning and operating vast landed estates.

It is admitted by all who are familiar with the subject that the Filipinos who devote their energies to the culture and gathering of hemp, rubber, gutta-percha, coffee, cacao, copra, and other Philippine specialties earn far more money than do those who are enslaved on the great tobacco and sugar estates, and we should foster and encourage the development of these independent industries, which will also furnish us with those things which we can not produce, rather than to enslave the Filipino people in the production of competitive American products.

In the development of the island by constructing railroads, it will be much wiser for the Filipino government to give a guaranty of a small rate of interest than it will be to grant to corporations or individuals these great tracts of lands.

By encouraging the sugar industry of the Philippines we would commit a triple injustice.

First. To the sugar industry of the United States by increasing competition and arresting the full and early development and the consequent economies in the cost of production, which will only come by development.

Second. By making semislaves of the Filipinos instead of helping to make them a free and independent people.

Third. To those who invest in Philippine sugar plants, which in time must inevitably be swept from the face of the earth by the ever-increasing skill of the American farmer and the American sugar manufacturer of the temperate zone.

Congress in its wisdom at the last session passed a national irrigation act which, unless nullified by other legislation, will solve the sugar question of the United States, by enabling us to produce from our now arid and useless plains the sugar which we now import.

These lands are far removed from the great centers of population, and thus in their development their farmers are restricted to the production of such high-priced commodities as can bear the expense consequent upon long-haul transportation.

Sugar beets are to be their "ready money" crop, because the sugar will stand the necessary heavy freight rates to put it into the great Eastern centers of population.

Another reason why our duty should be to protect the sugar industry of the United States is because upon the lands where we can grow sugar beets and sugar cane, we can not produce hemp, coffee, rubber, and articles of that kind, and these very articles that we can not produce in the United States are the articles which are the most profitable to the producers in the Philippine Islands.

Let us, by protection, encourage the Filipino people to supply us with the $70,000,000 worth of coffee which we annually import, the $27,000,000 worth of rubber and gutta-percha, the $17,000,000 worth of sisal grass, the $6,500,000 worth of cacao, the $3,500,000 worth of cabinet woods, the $2,250,000 worth of copal, the $1,000,000 worth of copra, the $1,000,000 worth of indigo, and the various other tropical products which she can grow and which we import to the combined value of about $200,000,000 a year, and exchange with them our products, dollar for dollar, as nearly as possible, and not continue the unstatesmanlike policy which we are now pursuing with Brazil, viz, buying 82 per cent more than we sell.

If we maintain the open-door policy of the Philippines as to imports and exports, which is demanded by not only Spain but all other nations, we should place an export tariff upon all raw materials, whether exported to the United States or any other country, and all products and manufactured and finished articles to be exported free of duty, except such articles as we produce in the United States, viz, sugar, tobacco, and citrus fruits. The object of this policy is to encourage the manufacture of all raw material, which can be produced in the Philippines which we do not ourselves produce, into the finished article ready for the markets of the world. If we do not adopt such a policy for the Philippines the raw materials will be taken to countries other than the United States, where cheap labor will convert it into the finished article to be sold in competition with such articles manufactured in the Philippines and the United States. For that reason I suggest that we place a heavy export duty upon raw material, so as to collect a revenue and encourage the manufacturing industry in the Philippines by our own people, who are entitled to the same care and protection as are the people of the United States.

But if we do not maintain the open-door policy, then we should collect for revenue an export tax upon all raw materials, and also a specific differential tax upon materials destined for all other countries than the United States, in order to equalize the difference between the cheap labor of those countries and the high-priced labor in the United States.

As an illustration, I will take the two products hemp and copra. Copra is the dried fruit of the cocoanut and is largely exported to Germany and France and the oil extracted and used for various purposes. By placing a heavy export tax upon copra and not upon the oil extracted from copra, refining establishments will be located in the Philippine Islands, and the oil will be exported to the various countries in place of the raw material.

What is true of copra would be of hemp. By placing a heavy export tariff upon raw hemp, and not upon the finished article, manufacturing industries would be established in the Philippine Islands to convert the raw hemp into rope, cordage, and other hemp products. That would give employment to the Filipino people and increase the internal welfare, so that within a few years the same system of taxation can be adopted in the Philippine Islands as we now have in the United States.

It is not for us to waste our time upon the things that have occurred in the Philippines in the past, but we must unite our energies and give our best thoughts for the upbuilding of those people in the future.

I submit the following tables and data, which have been prepared with great care by the expert, Mr. Truman G. Palmer, and which are a digest of the various annual reports of the Philippine commissions, of the hearings before the Senate and House committees, and of other public documents relating to the subject, and ask that the matter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GALLINGER. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request of the Senator from Nebraska is that the tables and other matter which he has prepared may be printed in the RECORD with his remarks.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IN GENERAL.

Considering the future welfare of the Philippine Islands, and of American industries which are engaged in producing commodities common to both countries, American statesmen are charged with a grave responsibility, far-reaching in its effect.

The Philippine Commission, looking to the immediate development and exploitation of those islands, repeatedly appeals to the American Congress for practical free trade in everything the islands can produce, and for permission to sell to great corporations vast tracts of land for the production of competitive crops. These are questions which should be carefully weighed by our legislators.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.

The United States is a great agricultural country, exporting approximately $850,000,000 of agricultural products annually. On the other hand, we yearly import something over $400,000,000 worth of agricultural products.

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING AMERICAN AGRICULTURAL IMPORTS.

Some of these agricultural imports are from the temperate zone, and under the efficient management of our present Secretary of Agriculture we are in a fair way of cutting these imports down to $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 a year, unless the efforts of the Department should be blocked by unwise legislation covering our newly acquired island possessions.

By producing at home all of our tobacco, sugar, and citrus fruits our annual agricultural imports will be reduced by from $80,000,008 to $100,000,000, and this the Secretary of Agriculture expects soon to accomplish.

Of our other agricultural imports, it is possible to produce another $100,000,000 worth in the temperate zone, leaving $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 worth which must ever be procured from tropical countries.

NEW CONDITIONS.

Now that we have acquired tropical possessions, the question for our legislators to decide is whether it be the wise course to stimulate in them the production of those things which we can produce at home, or to encourge them to produce the $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 worth of purely tropical products which we can never hope to produce.

The following table shows in the first column the value of certain tropical products which were brought into the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, none of which can ever be produced in the United States; the second column shows the Philippine exports of like commodities during the same period, while the last column shows the value of Philippine exportations of similar products, taking the largest export year that the writer has any knowledge of:

Some Philippine specialties which can not be grown in the United States.

	United States importations year ending June 30, 1901–2.	Philippine exports year ending June 30, 1902.	Philippine exports.	Year.
Coffee	$70,919,257	$2,879	a$1,953,815	1888
India rubber and gutta-percha	27,094,622	182,312	182,312	1902
Manila hemp	10,355,381	15,841,316	15,841,312	1902
Sisal grass and other fibers	17,018,315	178,120	178,120	1902
Copra and cocoanuts	1,017,326	1,002,245	4,462,920	1888
Copal	2,288,573	73,010	109,936	1901
Other gums	4,537,136	68,792	68,792	1902
Cabinet wood, unmanufactured	3,400,957	72,480	72,480	1902
Shells	563,284	101,444	173,988	1901
Cacao or cocoa	6,642,717	241	2,203	1900
Indigo	1,035,980	8,806	23,317	1900
Total	144,873,556	17,548,447	23,069,195

a 14,056,229 pounds, figured at 13.9 cents per pound, the average United States import price for 1888.

From the above table it will be seen that we imported last year nearly $150,000,000 worth of tropical products, of which the Philippines during the same period exported over $17,000,000 worth, and in their best years have exported over $23,000,000 worth.

The American market for these products, already large and constantly increasing, will ever be open to these Philippine specialties, which are acknowledged to be more profitable to the grower than are the crops which we also produce.

DUTY FREE.

All of the above Philippine products already enter our markets absolutely free of duty, and hence any further general reduction in our tariff on Philippine productions can not affect the expansion of these industries.

OTHER PHILIPPINE SPECIALTIES DUTIABLE.

There are other industries in the Philippines of considerable importance, such as the production of ylang-ylang oil, of which they exported $70,553 worth last year; straw hats, of which they exported $181,162 worth last year, and many others of minor importance, which would be greatly stimulated by giving them free access to our markets, and which would not interfere with any American industry, as we can not produce them.

COMPETITIVE PRODUCTS.

The following table covers the three Philippine products which are also grown in the United States.

By the act of March 8, 1902, we now collect but 75 per cent of the regular tariff rates on these commodities, and the full amount of the revenue so collected is remitted to the Philippine government.

Products common to both countries.

	United States importations, year ending June 30, 1902.	United States production, year ending June 30, 1902.	Philippine exportations.	Year.
Sugar and molasses	$60,109,603.55	a$98,071,120.00	b$18,159,879.00	1893
Tobacco and cigars	18,756,035.56	283,076,546.00	2,452,367.00	1902
Oranges and lemons	4,105,858.36	8,549,863.00	.....	.....
Total	82,971,497.47	389,697,529.00	.....

a 1901–2 crop at 5 cents per pound.

b For the year 1895, 261,519 tons at 0.031 cent per pound, the average price paid in foreign countries; 1901–2 exports were 67,000 tons, valued at $2,770,575.

AMERICAN INVESTMENT IN THE PRODUCTION OF THE ABOVE-NAMED ARTICLES.

In the production of the above-named products the people of the United States, relying upon the good faith of the promises and past policy of Congress to afford ample protection against similar products grown by cheap labor in other portions of the world, have invested their money as follows:

In the cane-sugar industry of Louisiana, Texas, and other Southern States	$100,000,000
In 52 beet-sugar factories, located in eleven States from New York to California	50,000,000
In cane and beet sugar farming implements and machinery (United States Census) on 40,000 farms	33,651,170
In 24,567 cigar and cigarette factories located in 52 States and Territories (United States Census)	67,706,493
In tobacco-farming implements and machinery on 106,272 farms (United States Census)	8,150,980
In 102,814 acres of orange, lemons, and other subtropical fruits (United States Census), mostly in California and Florida, estimated at $750 per acre	77,110,500
Total	336,619,143

The above list does not include the 2,481 plug and chewing tobacco factories located in 35 States, with an invested capital of $124,089,891, as the bulk of these is supposed to be in the tobacco trust, which naturally favors the free admission of its raw material; nor does it include the investment of the American Sugar Refining Company, which would be the greatest beneficiary, and as was shown last year, expended large sums of money in an endeavor to secure the introduction of cheaper raw material with which to operate its refineries.

Neither does it include the investment of several millions of dollars of tobacco growers in special buildings for the caring of that product, no figures on the same being available.

CAUSE FOR APPREHENSION IN THE AMERICAN SUGAR INDUSTRY.

The American sugar cane and sugar beet growers and the American manufacturers of sugar have grave cause for apprehension if the tariff on Philippine sugar is further reduced. In 1901 American farmers raised 1,685,688 tons of beets, for which they received from the sugar manufacturers an average of $4.50 per ton. From these beets the factories extracted an average of 219 pounds of sugar per ton. (See Senate Doc. No. 316, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, p. 36.) In other words, the farmers received $2.05 for each 100 pounds of sugar which the factories extracted from their beets. To this must, of course, be added the expense of putting the beets through the factory, expense of management, insurance, interest, packages, freight, etc., to arrive at the present cost of producing the sugar.

The Government reports, as elsewhere given, show that the largest sugar company in the Philippines estimate the entire cost of production, including interest on the investment, at 62½ cents per 100 pounds, and give the figures to show that the cost of production on the entire 21,999 acres which they had in cane, including interest on the investment, was 95 cents per 100 pounds. Comparing this cost, only possible with cheap labor such as the Philippines enjoy, is what causes apprehension in the American sugar industry.

AMERICAN CIGAR MAKERS' APPREHENSION.

Again it is the cheap labor of the Philippines which causes apprehension among the proprietors and artisans of the 24,000 American cigar manufactories. In Manila there are 31 cigar and cigarette factories, which employ 12,168 people. The average wage rate of all these employees, including superintendents and foremen, is 37½ cents per day. (See part 1, House Doc. No. 315, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session.) The average daily wage of all the employees in the 24,000 American cigar and cigarette factories (U. S. Census) is $1.36⅔ per day, or nearly four times the Philippine wage rate for the same class of labor.

In Manila, owing to cheap labor, a fair cigar is to be had at retail at 1 cent each, and it is a foregone conclusion that a further material lowering of our rates of duty on Philippine cigars would eventually flood this country with them, and thus close up many of our American factories.

APPREHENSION OF AMERICAN CITRUS FRUIT INTERESTS.

In the Philippines orange trees grow wild and fruit abundantly without any cultivation whatever, hundreds of tons being exported to China annually.

In both California and Florida the expense of maintaining an orchard is large. In California the annual expense for labor and water is $40 to $65 per acre.

Cheap labor, free trade, and refrigerator boats from the Philippines would eventually bring serious, if not disastrous, consequences to the American citrus fruit industry.

If the industries above were the most flourishing and profitable industries of the Philippines, our proper course with them and with our home industries might be in doubt. Such, however, is not the case.

PROFITS IN HEMP GATHERING.

American officers and other Americans in the Philippines are a unit in stating that their most profitable crop is hemp, at the gathering of which the natives are able to make from $2 to $5 per day. This statement would seem to be substantiated by the following figures:

Exports of hemp, fiscal year 1902	$15,841,316
Other agricultural exports	4,818,257
Total agricultural exports	20,659,573

COFFEE.

Army officers, and other Americans now in the Philippines, state that the Philippine coffee is equaled only by the finest Mocha. On account of the borer, an insect enemy of horticulture the world over, the Philippine exports of coffee have dwindled from nearly $1,000,000 worth in 1888 to $2,879 worth in 1902. Under the direction of the scientists of our Department of Agriculture, there is no reason why the coffee plantations of the Philippines should not rival those of near-by Java.

RUBBER AND GUTTA-PERCHA.

Forests of india-rubber and gutta-percha trees abound in the islands, the 1902 exportation from the wild trees being valued at nearly $200,000. The method of gathering is brutal, but one-thirty-fifth to one-fortieth of the gum being saved. Planters of rubber trees estimate a profit of $150 to $200 an acre per annum, thus presenting a more inviting field than that which is secured by scores of American companies, which are investing in similar enterprises in Mexico and Central and South America.

COPRA AND COCOANUTS.

In 1888 the islands exported $4,462,920 worth of copra and cocoanuts. They grow wild; planted in orchard form they come into bearing in eight to ten years and yield a crop worth on the average $100 an acre a year for a century, no cultivation whatever being necessary after the groves are planted.

OTHER PHILIPPINE SPECIALTIES.

The gathering of sisal grass, copal, and other gums, indigo, dye woods and cabinet woods, and the planting of cocoa, which grows wild, not to mention minor products, all offer inviting fields to the natives, who are no longer kept in subjugation by Spain.

LABOR INDEPENDENT.

The fact that the Philippine Islands have a population of 8,000,000 people, 5,500,000 of which are civilized Christians, is also worthy of consideration in this connection. To be sure, little effort is necessary to sustain life in a tropical country, but the more generally the people are engaged in industrial pursuits the more contented will they be. This being the case, the question naturally arises as to what condition is best for them. To engage in the production of any of the articles above mentioned, such as coffee, rubber, hemp, sisal grass, cocoanuts, copal, cocoa, etc., does not require the investment of a large amount of capital, and in producing these articles practically every man can be his own master.

Legislation, which will stimulate the Filipino people to engage in the extension of these industries will do more than anything else to make of them a self-respecting, wealthy people, and at the same time afford ample opportunity for the profitable investment of American capital, which, with the consequent skill it will bring, will assist them in their efforts.

LABOR—SERVILE OR SEMISLAVE.

The history of tropical cane-sugar production throughout the world has demonstrated the fact that a tropical sugar estate blasts all other classes of industry located near it. It is also a fact that civilization blasts a tropical cane-sugar estate.

The plea of tropical sugar planters has ever been for vast quantities of cheap labor, and one of the main causes of transferring 67 per cent of the sugar production of the world from the Tropics to the Temperate Zone during the past sixty years has been the abolition of slavery in the Tropics. Were the Philippine Islands to be exploited for the production of sugar, the condition of servility and semislavery, which for many years has existed with the Chinese and Japanese laborers of Hawaii, and with plantation laborers generally on tropical sugar estates, will doubtless be reproduced in the Philippine Islands. From the ratification of our reciprocity treaty with Hawaii in 1876 to the time when those islands came under the American flag, the Hawaiian sugar planters made enormous fortunes, as they could operate with contract cooly labor and sell their product duty free in our protected market. The purported object of the treaty with Hawaii was to "build up happy prosperous homes amongst the natives of those islands," but the boon which we intended for the natives was wholly absorbed by the Hawaiian sugar planters, who introduced semislave conditions.

Notwithstanding the fact that the average production of cane per acre in the Hawaiian Islands is 34 tons as against 11 tons in Louisiana, where 4 of the 11 tons are used for replanting (see 1900 census), and that the average value of the sugar product per acre in Hawaii is $286 as compared with $53 in Louisiana, Hawaii no sooner came under the American flag and our Chinese and contract labor laws than her sugar planters petitioned Congress to allow them to import contract Chinese cooly labor on the ground that the planters were unable to pay a competitive wage rate and make any money.

Take the West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America, British India, Java, the Philippines, Africa, and Hawaii, which produce 95 per cent of the tropical sugar of the world, and in no place except where American influence has been felt do the laborers receive the wage rate of American school children who work during vacation. It is this very civilizing influence of America which has placed the Hawaiian planter where he says he can not produce sugar at a profit unless allowed to import cheap contract Chinese cooly labor.

The question is whether this nation will lend its influence to making a serf of the Filipino laborer for the time being, or will try and make him an independent, self-respecting, landed proprietor for all time.

BEET VERSUS CANE SUGAR.

Never in the history of the world have the Tropics been able to transfer a Temperate Zone industry to their shores. In the fight for supremacy the nervous activity of the Northern laborer and skilled artisan has always come out victorious, and it is not to be believed that the eventual outcome of the battle between the two zones in the matter of sugar production will reverse the rule. Be this as it may, the stimulation of the industry in both countries, each of which has enough well-defined sugar land to supply the world, can not but bring serious consequence to one or the other. Either the cheap labor of the Philippines will ruin the American sugar industry, or the scientific farmers of America will run the Philippine product out of our market. One result or the other is inevitable in due course of time, and this result would cause the loss of millions of dollars, and the consequent business depression.

The most serious immediate loss in the stimulation of Philippine sugar production would arise from the fact that such stimulation would unquestionably result in making capital hesitate to enter the home field of beet-sugar production, and thus delay the time when the economies, which can only come by the enlargement of the industry, will enable the American farmer and manufacturer of sugar to sell to the American people a home-grown product at the lowest world price.

The honorable Secretary of Agriculture does not believe that any country on the face of the globe will be able to eventually produce sugar as cheaply as it will be produced in semi-arid America. The honorable Secretary further believes that when Congress passed the national irrigation bill, Congress assured the final production of all of our sugar within our own borders, even should there be eventual free trade on sugar with every country on the face of the earth.

A century ago Europe started the production of sugar from beets at a cost of $1 per pound. To-day the best factories of Europe are producing it at a cost of 2 cents per pound. Fourteen years ago the United States started the production of beet sugar at a cost of 8 to 12 cents per pound. By 1897 the cost had been reduced to 5 cents per pound, and during the past five years it has been still further reduced to 3 to 4 cents per pound, while the output has increased 600 per cent in five years and 220 during the past year.

The Philippines are about to start in on an era of industrial development, the eventual success or failure of which, as well as the rapid development of our home industries, is in the hands of our American statesmen in Congress.

If stimulated to become the slaves of American investors in Philippine sugar estates, a day of reckoning will surely overtake them.

If stimulated to become independent producers of the $200,000,000 worth of agricultural products which we must ever buy from the tropical countries, their future market, prosperity, and happiness will be assured.

DISTANCE AND FREIGHT RATES, GEOGRAPHICALLY AND COMMERCIALLY.

In considering the commercial advantages and disadvantages of the Philippine Islands, one of the first requisites is to locate the archipelago commercially, as well as geographically.

Geographically these islands are 7,000 miles removed from the United States, and but a short distance from China, Japan, and Australia, to the first named of which they sell the greater portion of many of their products.

Commercially the Philippines, while almost a part of China, are but 15 cents per hundred from San Francisco, and 15 to 37 cents from our Atlantic ports.

It costs 25 cents per 100 pounds to ship sugar from the Missouri River to Chicago, and hence commercially the Philippines are only about half as far from San Francisco as Omaha is from Chicago.

The following freight-rate tables are from the report of Mr. Edward W. Harden, Special Commissioner of the United States to the Philippine Islands, pages 25 and 26:

INCREASING BUSINESS OF THE ISLANDS.

That business in the islands has continued to prosper and develop since American occupation is shown by the following extracts from the reports of the Commission. At the present time, however, owing to the disturbance of monetary conditions, the death of a large portion of the carabaos from rinderpest, and of the horses from surra, there is a temporary depression. The islands have been devastated by the rinderpest before, however, and each time have quickly recovered their normal condition.

[From first Taft report, November 30, 1900, p. 160.]

"The increase in the commerce of the islands since the American occupation, and the consequent increase in the revenues, has been phenomenal. This can not be regarded otherwise than as gratifying evidence of the general confidence which our administration has assured."

[From second Taft report, October 15, 1901, p. 123.]

"These exhibits show that during the period of American occupancy the volume of business has been about four times as great as during normal conditions under Spanish control, notwithstanding the disturbed conditions which have existed during the greater period of American occupancy so far as customs received can show the amount of business transacted, but substantially the same results are also shown by considering the number of vessels cleared and entered, tonnage of vessels, and the value of property imported and exported." * * *

[Page 128.]

"This year has been one of unusual industrial activity, large numbers of industries having been started, and large increases in the amounts of the income tax on salaries, due to the increase of salaries and number of employees, are noted."

[From testimony before Philippine Committee, January to June, 1902, p. 198.]

"Some idea of the enormous business being done here at present can be had from the fact that in the town of Legaspi alone over $1,000,000 change hands every thirty days.

* * * * * * *

"[Governor TAFT.] The business in the Philippines with America has never been better than it is now, and a continuation of the condition which prevailed when duties were collected under the Dingley Act would not have a bad effect upon the business, but if changed would present an opportunity to better the business. Do you see what I mean?"

RECOMMENDATIONS AND VIEW POINTS OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The following are the latest official recommendations of the Philippine Commission, made under date of November 1, 1902, on pages 9 and 10 of its report:

"1. The establishment of a gold standard in these lands upon the plan recommended by the Commission in its report of last year, and of banking corporation empowered to issue circulating bank notes under proper safeguards.

"2. The reduction of at least 75 per cent of the Dingley rates of duties upon goods imported into the United States from the Philippine Islands.

"3. An amendment of the Philippine act so that the limit upon lands which may be sold to or held by individuals or corporations from the public domain shall be increased from 1,024 hectares to 25,000 acres or, in the alternative, so that the government shall be given the power to lease for sixty years upon competitive bidding tracts from the public land aggregating in any individual or corporate lessee not more than 30,000 acres.

"4. That the Philippine act be amended by repealing the limitation which forbids an individual or corporation from holding an interest in more than one mining claim.

"5. That all bonds issued by the insular government under the authority of the Philippine act shall be free from State, county, and municipal taxation in the United States.

"6. That an amendment be made to the Chinese-exclusion act, giving power to the government by law to admit a fixed and limited number of Chinamen into the Philippine Islands, who are certified to be skilled laborers, on the bond of the employer that for every Chinese skilled laborer employed he will employ aFilipino apprentice, and that he will return the Chinese skilled laborer thus introduced within five years after his admission to the country, and that he shall pay a head tax of not exceeding $50 for each Chinaman so admitted, to the insular government, to meet the expenses incident to the enforcement of these restrictions."

In considering these petitions the American people should not be misled by believing that those making the recommendations are occupying the dual position of trying to protect the interests of both the Philippines and the United States.

On the contrary, both Governor Taft and Vice-Governor Wright frankly state that they are working solely for the interests of the Philippines, Governor Taft even refusiug to state that he "would not knowingly advocate any policy that would injure the industries of the United States."

Governor Taft states that they "are asking for as much as they can get, and thus their recommendations should receive the same careful consideration and scrutiny which would be given to requests from an ambassador of a foreign land.

On page 153 of the hearings before the Philippine Committee, Governor Taft said:

"Our recommendations are based upon our views of the needs of the Philippine Islands and the benefit to the trade of those islands. We are asking as much as we can get, because the more we get the better we think it will be for the islands. The effect upon the policy of the United States and particular interests in the United States that will be affected we have very little knowledge of and desire to express no opinion. I hope that explanation——

"Senator PATTERSON. You would not knowingly advocate any policy that would injure the industries of the United States—your own country?

"Governor TAFT. I do not think I would. We do not approach it from the standpoint of those interests, however."

On December 9, 1902, Vice-Governor Luke E. Wright was before the Philippine Committee, and said (p. 3):

"Of course, I do not think it proper for me to go into the question of the soundness of a policy of that sort. That is a matter, of course, for Congress, with which I have nothing to do. I am simply presenting to this committee the situation as it appears to the governor and the Philippine Commission, looking, of course, primarily, at what is best for the Filipino people. That is what you sent us there for—to develop and improve the condition of those people—and we are trying to do it."

On page 23 of the 1901 report of the Philippine Commission, Governor Taft says:

"TARIFF RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

"If Congress will reduce by 50 per cent the United States duties on tobacco, hemp, sugar, and other merchandise coming from these islands it is certain that the trade between them and the United States under the new tariff will increase by leaps and bounds."

On page 166 of the Philippine Committee hearings, Governor Taft says:

"The planters say they will not be much affected by a reduction of 50 per cent; that it will need 75 per cent to aid the sugar interests. Of course, that is to be taken with the same 'grain of salt' that I presume Congress uses in considering the statements of witnesses testifying in behalf of particular interests. I should not say that 50 per cent would not aid them considerably.

"The tobacco interest would doubtless be aided to some extent by a 50 per cent reduction, and naturally more by 75 per cent, but considerations of the character I have referred to are our chief interest. I do not think the amount of sugar raised there now will very materially affect the market here, but that is a question on which we are not experts and I practically know nothing about it."

What will become of the Philippine sugar is demonstrated by the following figures of exports to the United, when it is considered that since these shipments were made we have granted the Philippines a 25 per cent reduction from our tariff rates, these shipments being made when paying the full Dingley tariff:

	Pounds.
1900	311,782
1901	4,747,555
1902	11,521,215

Considering the fact that all revenues collected by the United States Government on the importations of Philippine products are turned back to the Philippine treasury, the following statement of Mr. Buencamino, from page 410 of the hearings before the Insular Committee, gives an insight to the situation:

"Mr. PATTERSON. Do the Filipinos desire free trade with this country?

"Mr. BUENCAMINO. The sugar and tobaceo producers desire free trade.

"Mr. PATTERSON. Does the great mass of the people desire it?

"Mr. BUENCAMINO. No; because the mass of the people has seen that the Government gives the money to the Filipino, and the money is necessary there because there are many ruins to repair."

If, in addition to their own frank admissions, any evidence were needed to show that our Philippine Commissioners are working solely in the interest of those islands, the following paragraph from page 7, of the Commission's last report, November 1, 1902, would supply it:

"We think that a 50 per cent reduction will not give any substantial relief, and that nothing short of 75 per cent will accomplish a useful purpose. It is a mistake to suppose that the severance of these islands from Spain has made no difference in the markets to which their tobacco and sugar growers may look. On the contrary, with the separation from Spain the sugar and tobacco growers have been deprived of markets which were of great assistance to them, and it seems only fair and just that the United States should substitute its own markets for the Spanish markets."

The above misstatement of fact is but an echo of what was heard last year from similar officers in relation to Spain's former West Indian possession and has even less foundation, as is shown by the figures.

It is not for one moment to be supposed that this was a willful misstatement, but that it was a misstatement and is exceedingly misleading is a fact, nevertheless.

From page 1405 of the November, 1902, Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance, Treasury Department, I reproduce the following figures concerning the Spanish imports of sugar from the Philippines and alongside of the Spanish imports give Willett & Gray's figures of the total Philippine exports, the Spanish imports being in metric tons of 2,204.6 pounds, the Philippine exports in long tons (2,240 pounds):

From page 40 of Bulletin No. 14, Trade of the Philippine Islands, by Mr. Frank H. Hitchcock, chief section of foreign markets, Department of Agriculture, it appears that from 1888 to 1892 the Philippines averaged to sell to the Continent of Europe just 1.97 per cent of their sugar exports, and from 1893 to 1897, 1½ per cent.

From this it would appear that we had not robbed the Philippines of any considerable market for their sugar, Governor Taft to the contrary notwithstanding.

In regard to tobacco, from the fact that Spain for many years compelled the Filipinos to raise tobacco and sell it to the Spanish authorities at a price fixed by those authorities, it would not be strange if that market was now closed to the Filipino product.

Such, however, is not the case. In fact, Europe is to-day taking a greater percentage of the total Philippine exports of tobacco than it did under the Spanish régime.

Mr. Hitchcock does not give the figures for Spain alone, but bunches the Continent of Europe. The following Philippine tobacco export figures from 1888 to 1897 are from Mr. Hitchcock's book (p. 41). The figures for 1900 to 1902 are from pages 1364 to 1365 of the June, 1902, Monthly Summary of Commerce of the Philippine Islands, Bureau of Insular Affairs, War Department:

One and one-half per cent loss in the Spanish market for sugar and 7 per cent gain in the European market for tobacco is the sole warrant for the statement published by the Philippine Commission that "with the separation from Spain the sugar and tobacco growers have been deprived of markets which were of great assistance to them, and it seems only fair and just that the United States should substitute its own markets for the Spanish markets."

AREA, OWNERSHIP, AND CHARACTER OF LAND.

"The total amount of land in the Philippine Islands is approximately 29,694,500 hectares, or 73,345,415 acres. Of this amount, it is estimated that about 2,000,000 hectares, or about 4,940,000 acres, are owned by individuals, leaving in public lands 27,694,500 hectares, or 68,405,415 acres. The land has not been surveyed, and these are merely estimates. Of the public lands there are about twice or three times as much forest land as there is waste land. The land is most fertile and for the greater part naturally irrigated. There was a very great demand for this land, but owing to the irregularities, frauds, and delays in the Spanish system the natives generally abandoned efforts to secure a good title and contented themselves with remaining on the land as simple squatters, subject to eviction by the State. In 1894 the minister for the colonies reported to the Queen of Spain that there were about 200,000 squatters on the public lands, but it is thought by employees in the forestry bureau, who have been in a position to know, that there are fully double that number." (Report of Philippine Commission, January 23, 1901, p. 33.)

ARABLE LAND.

In the report of the hearings before the Philippine Committee (pp. 645 and 835) Governor Taft and General Hughes testify that it is safe to say that one-half of the public domain, or about 33,000,000 acres, is susceptible of cultivation and becoming good agricultural land.

On page 712, Governor Taft said:

"We have resources, of course, for a very large population, if we compare it either with Japan or Java. The Philippine Islands are a little less in area than the Japanese Islands, but I think they have very much more arable land—very much more rich soil."

Much of this land is covered by virgin forests of valuable woods, and when cleared becomes the richest kind of agricultural land.

INCREASE IN LAND VALUES.

The following is from pages 674–675 of the record of the hearings before the Senate Philippine Committee:

"Senator CULBERSON. Did you make any inquiry in reference to the relative value of land when you first went there and when you were about to leave?

"General HUGHES. I did, because I made it one of the ways of measuring the opinion of the people themselves as to our progress. That was my object in making the inquiries. I wanted to see whether in the opinion of the owners or of the purchasers we had made any progress as measured by values of real estate.

PERCENTAGE OF INCREASED VALUES.

"Senator CULBERSON. What percentage of increase would you say, generally speaking, there had been?

"General HUGHES. It is perfectly safe, I think, to say it is double throughout the pacified territory."

POLICY OF SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

PLAIN INTENTION TO ENORMOUSLY STIMULATE THE PRODUCTION OF SUGAR.

The land laws of the United States limit the acquirement of public lands to 160 to 320 acres to a single individual. Of the 65,000,000 acres of arable Philippine land, 60,000,000 acres are owned by the Government. The Philippine Commission appealed to Congress for permission to sell great tracts of this land to corporations, and July 1, 1902, an act of Congress was approved whereby the Commission was authorized to sell as high as 2,500 acres to individual corporations, and corporations were restricted to the ownership of that amount, either directly or indirectly.

Even this liberal law does not seem to meet the demands of the sugar estate exploiters, and the Commission now asks that the limit be raised to 20,000 acres, all for the purpose of developing great sugar estates to be owned by nonresidents and operated by cheap servile labor. In the following extract from his testimony before the Insular Committee (1902), page 202, Governor Taft disclaims a desire to build up corporate principalities in the Philippines, but nevertheless asks for permission to follow in the footsteps of Cuba, which is notoriously a country of nonresident principality owners:

WOULD DUPLICATE CUBAN CONDITIONS.

"Then with respect to the selling of large tracts, if the islands are to be developed in the sugar industry, the limitation upon the number of acres that can be sold to any one company ought to be determined with reference to the cost of the plant. I observe that the law limits it to 5,000 acres. I should think that land can be sold at auction with the minimum price, but without bringing about an abuse I think the limit might be raised to the limit of the sugar plantations in Cuba that are profitably worked, for while there is no desire on the part of the Commission to have that kind of exploitation which will lead to the ownership of principalities in the islands by a corporation, the Commission recognizes that the development of the islands, the moral improvement and education of the people, will be greatly aided by the investment of capital there. Now, capital is not philanthropic. It goes where it can make money, and if the limit is fixed so low in the acquisition of land that no capital can be induced to go, why, the power of selling a tract of that size will do no good at all."

WANT 20,000-ACRE SUGAR PLANTATIONS.

[From Governor Taft's testimony before the Insular Committee, p. 274.]

"Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. You think the Commission should have power to lease lands without limit as to quantity, do you; that is, large tracts?

"Governor TAFT. I think I said we ought to have the power to lease large tracts, but I did not mean that to be without limitation.

"Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. If you had such a limitation, what would you suggest?

"Governor TAFT. With reference to the sugar lands, I understand in Cuba there are plantations of 20,000 acres. The limitation inserted in this bill was 5,000 acres. I think that is too small.

"Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. What number would you suggest?

"Governor TAFT. Twenty thousand acres might be a fair limitation; that is, for sugar lands.

"Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. For other lands?

"Governor TAFT. I think 5,000 acres might be a fair limitation for tobacco lands.

"Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Do you think there should be any limitations as to time or that we should leave that to the Commission?

"Governor TAFT. For lease, ninety-nine years."

WOULD GIVE 25,000,000 ACRES TO AMERICAN CORPORATIONS.

[From testimony of Mr. Buencamino before the Insular Committee, p. 443.]

"Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. You are in favor of American corporations holding large tracts of Filipino land?

"Mr. BUENCAMINO. As there are 50,000,000 acres of uncultivated land, 25,000,000 could be given to American corporations in order that capital may come into the country, and the remaining 25,000,000 acres could be reserved for Filipino inhabitants as well as Americans."

RICHER LANDS THAN IN HAWAII OR THE UNITED STATES.

"Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Do you state there are 50,000,000 acres of good agricultural land?

"Mr. BUENCAMINO. Yes, sir; and better lands than those of Honolulu or in the United States."

AGRICULTURAL FRANCHISES FOR SUGAR, RICE, COCOANUTS.

[From testimony before Philippine Committee, p. 173.]

"Senator BURROWS. Aside from railroads, what advantages would franchises be in the development of the islands—I mean, in other lines of industry?

"Governor TAFT. A franchise to an agricultural company—I know of a number—accompanied by the right to purchase something of the public domain, would bring a great deal of capital to the islands, if we can judge from the statements made to us by those who are interested.

"Senator BURROWS. For what purpose?

"Governor TAFT. For the raising of sugar, for the raising of rice, cocoanuts. I do not know that there is any proposition for the raising of hemp. There is for the raising of cotton and for the raising of tobacco."

ALREADY DEMANDING ADMITTANCE OF COOLY LABOR TO CULTIVATE LARGE TRACTS.

[From testimony before Philippine Committee, p. 183.]

"Senator RAWLINS. In connection with your recommendation with respect to granting franchises and parting with lands in large tracts, say of 5,000 acres, which will be put in sugar, say——

"Governor TAFT. To be correct, we have not recommended any particular number of acres. We think there ought to be the right to sell at public auction large quantities of land, and I think the bill fixes the limit at 5,000 acres.

"Senator RAWLINS. That would make the condition similar to what it is in Hawaii, where companies, in order successfully to cultivate the land, would demand labor from China or some other source?

"Governor TAFT. That is quite probable, for they are already demanding it.

"Senator RAWLINS. They are already demanding it and exerting their influence to obtain it, and you know the fear among the people of the United States, especially in the West where the beet-sugar industry is being developed."

LARGE AREA WANTED FOR SUGAR ESTATE.

[From testimony before Philippine Committee, p. 184.]

"Governor TAFT. I am not at all sure that 5,000 acres is large enough. We did not form any definite view. There is a company represented by Mr. King; I think it is of San Francisco—I call it a company; he said he had a number of very wealthy men interested with him—which sent him to Mindanao to look over the field. He went there, and he stated to me that the company which he expected to form intended to establish headquarters at Parangparang, in Mindanao, and to establish direct steam communication between this part of Mindanao and San Francisco, and that in order to carry out the plan they had, it would be necessary that they acquire quite large tracts of land. I do not think he mentioned the amount, but I think he had in his plan somewhere between 5,000 and 10,000 acres.

"Senator ALLISON. Intending to colonize it?

"Governor TAFT. Yes, sir. I think he had done something of that sort in California, he said, and then had sold out his interest, and he intended to establish, I am not sure whether he said sugar refineries there, but at any rate, sugar plantations, and to establish direct communication with the United States. Of course, nothing would develop the islands more than such a plan."

WANT ALL THEY CAN GET.

[From testimony before Philippine Committee, p. 185.]

"Senator RAWLINS. Do you think it proper for us to legislate so as to encourage that kind of industry in the islands, when later, on account of competition with like industries in the United States, we may think it necessary to discourage it and possibly destroy it?

"Governor TAFT. If you ask me as a general question whether it is well to encourage it and then discourage it, I should say no.

"Senator RAWLINS. That is the very question.

"Governor TAFT. Of course these questions are usually settled by compromise, so as to injure home industries as little as possible and encourage new industries as much as possible. I do not profess to state the opinion of the Commission on such a question. We are doing the best we can to develop the islands, and we want to get from Congress and all opposing interests as much as we can."

POLICY IN DISPOSING OF LANDS.

"Senator RAWLINS. I want to go a step further. Do you think it wise, in enacting a law, to dispose of these lands in any way that would lend encouragement to or extend the influence of those who would desire the introduction of Chinese labor to subserve their purposes in the islands?

"Governor TAFT. What we want to do is to develop the islands, and certainly the attraction of capital, by offering what will return a reasonable profit, is our policy, and the sale of lands in tracts sufficiently large to attract capital is an essential part of that plan."

WANT LARGE AREAS FOR SUGAR DEVELOPMENT.

[From testimony before Philippine Committee, p. 252.]

"Senator CULBERSON. I notice that in this paragraph you seem to recommend that the Government shall sell lands in large bodies?

"Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

"Senator CULBERSON. I will ask you if you do not think it would be better, particularly with reference to agricultural land, that it be sold in comparatively small bodies, and to what we in the Southwest call actual settlers, so as to develop the country, and not only sold in small bodies, but sold to individuals rather than to corporations not engaged in agricultural business?

"Governor TAFT. I do not think so. Of course we want a homestead law and a preferential sale to actual settlers, but in order to develop the country in agriculture, to which the country is best adapted, there ought to be large tracts open to purchase, which will attract capital.

"For instance, take the sugar industry. We hope that may be largely developed, but it needs a very heavy investment of capital, and unless it can control large tracts capital will not come in."

DANGER THAT LANDOWNERS WILL ALSO OWN THE PEOPLE.

[From Governor Taft's testimony before Philippine Committee, p. 253.]

"The objection suggested by Senator CULBERSON is of course an objection that is a very serious one, but we want to attract capital. We want to make it profitable for men to go there, so that they shall invest capital and develop the country. On the other hand, we do not want to give to corporations or to any set of men such control over the available land of the islands that they shall own not only the land, but shall own the people on it; and that is the danger in the Philippine Islands.

"The limitation in the bill is 5,000 acres. We express no opinion as to what limitation there ought to be."

CORPORATE HOLDINGS OF 5,000 ACRES TOO RESTRICTED.

[From testimony before Philippine Committee, p. 4.]

"Senator BURROWS. Do you know of any movement to secure large holdings of land in the Philippines, or such holdings as are permitted under existing law, for the purpose of developing the sugar industry?

"General WRIGHT. I do not. The fact is that the limitations you have imposed upon the granting of public lands to individuals or corporations (5,000 acres) will prevent any large sugar industries from being established in the Philippine Islands, in my opinion."

FEAR OF SUDDEN AND EXCESSIVE EXPLOITATION.

[From testimony before the Philippine Committee, p. 268.]

"Senator CARMACK. General MacArthur says:

"'In this connection it may not be improper to state that one of the greatest difficulties attending military efforts to tranquillize the people of the archipelago arises from their dread of sudden and excessive exploitation, which they fear would defraud them of their natural patrimony and at the same time relegate them to a status of social and political inferiority.'

"Again, he says:

"'If a spirit of Philippine speculation should seize the public mind in the United States and be emphasized by means of grants, concessions, and special franchises for the purpose of quick exploitation, the political situation and permanent interests of all concerned might be seriously jeopardized.'

"Governor TAFT. That is the danger of too sudden exploitation."

POPULATION AND CIVILIZATION.

POPULATION.

Governor Taft and others familiar with the subject place the total population of the Philippines at between eight and nine million people, of whom five to six millions are civilized Christians, a million to a million and a half belong to non-Christian or infidel tribes, the balance being Moros or Mohammedans. (See Taft's statement, Senate hearings before Philippine Committee, p. 39.)

Comparison with the density of our own population is the only means by which a comprehensive idea of this condition can be arrived at.

The area of the United States, not including Alaska and Hawaii, is 3,025,600 square miles, inhabited by a population of 76,303,387 people, or 25.6 persons per square mile.

The Philippines cover an area of 114,062 square miles and are populated with 8,500,000 people, or 74.5 to the square mile, or about three times as many people per square mile as we have in the United States.

But ten States in the Union are as densely populated as are the Philippines.

The following list of States, together with the population per square mile, as given by the 1900 census, will afford any American a means of comparing the density of the Philippine population with that of his own State.

Total population of Philippine Islands	8,500,000
Or per square mile	74.5

EXTENT OF CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

From the many conflicting reports which are spread from time to time concerning affairs in the Philippines few people are able to arrive at any definite conclusion as to how far the establishment of civil government has progressed:

When before the House Insular Committee early in 1902, Governor Taft said (pp. 170–174):

"But, as a matter of fact, of the provinces of the Christian Filipinos the proportion of those which are organized civilly to those unorganized is as 31 is to 3 or 4. We have not organized the Moro provinces.

* * * * * * *

"I think it is true now that there are upward of 750—I think it is as high as 800—towns that are organized in those several provinces."

In Governor Taft's last report, made under date of November 1, 1902, and submitted to Congress in January, 1903, he says on page 18:

"Civil government was completely established in the Filipino provinces throughout the archipelago in July of this year, and since that time an American soldier has not been called upon once to discharge his weapon."

EDUCATION.

Concerning the education of these people, Governor Taft stated to the Insular Committee in January, 1902 (see p. 179 of hearings):

"The Filipino people—and now I refer only to the Christian tribes—may be divided roughly into one-tenth who speak Spanish, and therefore may be regarded as intelligent and educated, though of course in that one-tenth there is a very great difference, and into 90 per cent who do not speak Spanish, whose only education, if they have any, is limited to a knowledge of the local dialect or language, and to a knowledge of reading or writing to the extent of being able to sign their names and spell out the catechism."

SALARIES OF NATIVE TEACHERS.

Concerning the salaries paid to native teachers (p. 193, Insular Committee hearings), Governor Taft said:

"The salaries paid them were ridiculously low, as low in many instances as $5 Mexican a month, and hardly ranging above $15 a month, Mexican, and rarely going to $20 Mexican—little more than the salary one pays a cochero."

AMERICAN TEACHERS.

"There are in the islands now, or were when I left (there are more now, and probably will be about a thousand), 835 American teachers. They were distributed among 345 towns in the islands. That represents a little less than half of all the towns in the islands. I believe the towns in the islands number between 900 and 1,000. Those teachers, as reflecting on the question of tranquillity, situated in 445 towns, are in 200 towns which are ungarrisoned and in 245 towns which are garrisoned."

SEVEN HUNDRED PER CENT INCREASE IN SCHOOL ATTENDANCE.

Later on in the same hearing Mr. Buencamino made a statement (p. 386) covering the great increase of school attendance since American occupation. He said:

"We have now 7,500 public schools in the islands, with 1,200 American teachers, the remainder being Filipinos. Two hundred thousand children attend these public schools and 20,000 adults attend the night schools. * * * Under the Spanish Government the number of schools never exceeded 600. There were never over 30,000 children who attended the schools when they did attend. Consequently the condition of public education is a very satisfactory one."

With American teachers scattered about in several hundred ungarrisoned towns, the following statement by Governor Taft is significant (before Insular Committee, January, 1902):

"A crowd of ladrones or insurrectos came down in Tayabas and took away, among other things, an American teacher, but they took him into the mountains and returned him in a hammock the next day uninjured, and that is the only instance of an attack of any sort upon a teacher."

From the above statements it would seem that with the exception of the Moros and wild mountain tribes the people of the Philippines had been pacified and civil government established amongst them.

LABOR IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The question as to labor conditions in the Philippines interests more American people than all other Philippine conditions combined.

There is scarcely a laborer, a skilled artisan, or a farmer in America whose welfare is not liable to be affected adversely by hasty or unwise tariff legislation concerning the products of this island possession.

With 65,000,000 acres of fertile, arable land, 60,000,000 acres of which belong to the Government, it is of interest to the American people to know what that vast area is going to produce, who is going to perform the necessary labor, and at what wage rate.

When through irrigation we open up to civilization our vast stretches of unpopulated Western deserts and make them blossom, we create conditions which invite home seekers from our more densely populated districts of the Eastern States and furnish work at a higher wage rate than that which prevails in the East.

The Philippines present quite the reverse condition, for they are already swarming with people.

Given a vast territory of extremely fertile soil, densely populated, the next question is, Will those people work?

If they will not work, the spectacle of a powerful, supposedly sane nation paying $20,000,000 for even a Garden of Eden, if populated with eight to nine million drones and savages, over whom it assumes the costly privilege of civil government, forms as dark a picture of public policy as was ever painted by the most extreme pessimist.

In the past large numbers of them have worked in the fields on their hands and knees for 8 to 10 cents per day, planting and harvesting crops without the use of an agricultural implement of any kind except a wood-pointed plow, as will be seen from the following, taken from the July (1901) Summary of Commerce of the Philippine Islands, issued by the War Department. The quotation refers to sugar-plantation work.

"The work at the plantations is carried on in very crude fashion. The big water buffalo is employed to haul a wood-pointed plow through the soil, and two or more natives guide the plow, and they make hard work of it. A few American plows for these plantations would be very acceptable. There are no shovels, hoes, picks, or other tools available, and the natives may be seen by the dozen on their hands and knees turning and preparing the soil with their hands or with little bamboo sticks."

As to the compensation received for such back-aching labor, the following from the same authority gives the figures which prevailed prior to American occupation:

"One of the advantages possessed by the Filipino sugar planter is that he can hire help very cheaply. The average farm hand will work for 10 cents per day and board himself. Native boys may be hired still cheaper. The Chinese coolies overrun the farming sections, and they are first-rate laborers, steady and reliable, working for about 8 cents per day."

Alive to his opportunities, the Filipino laborer was quick to demand advances in his wage rate, and he now gets from 20 to 25 cents per day. As a result of this, labor employers of the Philippines are clamoring for the introduction of contract Chinese cooly labor, by the introduction of which they would hope to reinstate the old wage rate of 8 to 10 cents per day.

From the issuance of the first report of the Philippine Commission conflicting statements have been given as to the efficiency of the native laborer; but enough has been said in his favor and enough is known of his past work to convince any fair-minded person that he is now a fairly good laborer, that he is apt and imitative, and that with modern tools in his hands he will be more than dangerous when engaged in producing those things which we produce in the United States with well-paid labor.

Under another heading will be found statements concerning native and Chinese labor, selected from the various Philippine Commission reports from the first or Schurman-Worcester report of January, 1900, to the last Taft report of November, 1902, which was presented to Congress January 7, 1903; also from the hearings before the Philippine and Insular committees of the Senate and House, comprising in all some 17 volumes of over 10,000 pages.

The following figures as to class of population in the Philippines are from House Document No. 171, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.

In 1876 there were but 378 foreigners and 30,797 Chinamen throughout the island; in 1879, 592 foreigners and 39,054 Chinamen.

The following table shows that, notwithstanding the Chinese-exclusion laws, the number of Chinamen in the Philippines is on the increase:

WAGE RATES OF MANILA.

The following tables, showing the wage rates paid in various lines of industry in Manila, are taken from the Bulletin of the Department of Labor for January, 1901. (House Doc. No. 315, part 1, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, pp. 29 to 42.)

Concerning the figures given the Department says:

"In the matter of rates of wages the instructions required, among other things, that the data should be secured directly from the pay rolls or other accounts of the employing establishments; that the occupations should be reported as specifically as possible, with full explanation if the occupation names were new to American usage; that the exact rates paid by the employer and the whole number of persons employed at each of such rates should be given; that where payment was made by the month, week, piece, or otherwise than by the day, the number of working days per month or week, or the average daily earnings at piecework should be given, in order that wages might all be upon a comparable day basis, and that any other explanation should be given which might be necessary to put the data collected upon a basis comparable with data for like occupations in the United States."

The figures given by the Department cover 664 establishments, employing a total of 20,239 people, at an average daily wage rate as follows:

166 whites, at an average daily wage rate of $1.67
15,976 natives, at an average daily wage rate of ..... .40½
4,097 Chinese, at an average daily wage rate of ..... .28 1/10

The Department simply published the first table, arranged according to industries. The tables following are derived from this main table.

As will be seen, the average daily wage rate of all the employees, white, native, and Chinese, is a fraction under 40 cents per day.

The cost of living is higher in Manila than in any other portion of the archipelago, and its wage rate is naturally the highest which prevails in any city in the islands.

Agricultural labor is always cheaper than the labor in cities, where it costs more to live. In July, 1901, the War Department published the statement that native agricultural laborers were to be had in the Philippines at 10 cents per day and Chinese laborers at 8 cents per day.

If the American Government should greatly reduce the tariff on Philippine products entering the United States which compete with similar products raised in the United States by labor which commands a wage rate many hundred per cent in excess of that of the Philippines, the American exploiter of those islands will possess an advantage which may bear bitter fruit to the labor and capital engaged in similar industries in the United States.

EXTRACTS FROM LAST PHILIPPINE COMMISSION REPORT CONCERNING LABOR.

[Taft Commission, November 1, 1902.]

THE LABOR QUESTION.

Page 21: "The complaint of the American and foreign merchants in these islands that the labor to be had here is altogether inadequate has become acute, and the chambers of commerce representing the American, Spanish, English, German, and other foreign interests have sent a representative to the United States to invite an amendment to the present Congressional legislation which extends the Chinese-exclusion act—applicable to the United States—to these islands on the ground that it is necessary to admit Chinese for the business development of this country. On the other hand, it is quite apparent from the declarations of the Federal party and other political organizations in the Philippines, and from the vigorous manifesto of the only labor organization in the islands, that there will be much opposition on the part of the Filipino people to the further admission of the Chinese."

* * * * * * *

MANILA LABOR ORGANIZATION STRONGLY OPPOSES ADMISSION OF CHINESE.

Page 22: "The labor organization in the city of Manila is very much opposed to the introduction of Chinese labor, and their declarations upon this point will find ready acquiescence in the minds of all Filipinos with but few exceptions. The truth is that from a political standpoint the unlimited introduction of the Chinese into these islands would be a great mistake. I believe the objection on the part of the Filipinos to such a course to be entirely logical and justified.

DEVELOPMENT OF ISLANDS BY CHINESE WOULD BE AT EXPENSE OF FILIPINO PEOPLE.

"The development of these islands by Chinamen would be at the expense of the Filipino people, and they may very well resent such a suggestion."

* * * * * * *

Page 23: "I do not think it would be just to the Filipinos, or a proper course for America in the development of this country, to do more than to extend to the Commission the power to admit, upon reasonable restrictions, a certain limited number of skilled Chinese laborers, who may contribute to the construction of buildings and the making of other improvements, and who at the same time by their labor may communicate to Filipino apprentices the skill which the Filipinos so easily acquire."

* * * * * * *

Page 24: "I am myself by no means convinced that Filipino labor may not be rendered quite useful."

* * * * * * *

Page 24: "A just view of the future of labor in these islands can not be taken without considering the dependent condition of the Filipino laborers in Spanish times. Much of the labor was then forced, and there was not a single circumstance that gave dignity to it. The transition from such conditions to the one where the only motive is gain must necessarily be attended with difficulty; but when the laborer shall come to appreciate his independence, when he shall know that his labor is not to be a badge of peonage and slavery, when American influences shall make him understand the dignity and importance attaching to labor under a free government, we may expect a great change for the better in the supply and character of labor."

LATEST EXPERIENCES WITH FILIPINO LABOR.

In the above report Governor Taft says (p. 23): "I append as exhibits (F^1 and F^2) to my report the report of Major Aleshire and Captain Butt, in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army, who have had large numbers of Filipino laborers under their control, and who have been quite successful in making them useful."

"Exhibit F^1," under the title "Filipino as a laborer," occupies pages 159 to 167, inclusive, and is devoted to reports of the labor situation by J. B. Aleshire, major and quartermaster, United States Army, in charge Army transport service; F. H. Grant, captain and quartermaster, United States Army, assistant to officer in charge Army transport service; H. W. French, captain of infantry, quartermaster, United States Army, assistant to the officer in charge Army transport service; W. B. Moses, in charge native labor and river stevedores, under direction of Maj. J. B. Aleshire, quartermaster, United States Army.

"Exhibit F^2," referred to in the governor's report, is headed "Philippine labor," and occupies pages 169 to 176 of the same report of the Commission. These pages are given up to reports by Archibald W. Butt, captain and quartermaster, United States Army, in charge of land transportation; "Extract copy of annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, forwarded to the chief quartermaster, Division of the Philippines, Manila, P. I.," certified to by Archibald W. Butt; J. E. Cole, superintendent land transportation; C. F. Lane, superintendent of shops; G. W. Davis, major-general, United States Army, commanding.

From the reports of the above-mentioned officers I append herewith quotations showing that without exception these employers of natives and Chinese report in favor of the Filipino laborers. These men employ several thousand laborers, have employed both classes, and are able to judge by comparison. From these reports it would not only seem that the importation of Chinese contract laborers is unnecessary, but the further and more important fact is established that the native Filipinos, who number between eight and nine million, need but little training to become effective laborers in the various classes of industry.

This being the case, should they be employed in the production of commodities which are also produced in the United States, they will become a menace to American labor and to those American industries with which they compete.

NATIVE CARPENTERS GET 30 TO 50 CENTS PER DAY.

[From report of N. M. Holmes, engineer, United States Philippine Commission, concerning the work of construction of the Benguet road, January to June, 1902, p. 153.]

"Labor.—We pay 5 cents Mexican per hour and work nine hours per day (22½ cents gold per day). A capitas, or native overseer, is paid 60 cents Mexican per day (30 cents gold). Sawyers, when using our saws and four men to a saw, get 60 cents per day. When two men bring a saw and work two men to the saw, they get 1 peso per day (50 cents gold) and file their own saws. Native carpenters get from 60 cents to $1 Mexican per day (30 to 50 cents gold)."

NO DIFFICULTY IN SECURING GOOD FILIPINO LABOR.

[Filipino as a laborer, from report of J. B. Aleshire, major and quartermaster, United States Army, in charge of Army transport service, p. 161.]

"All coal, except that required for launches and steam lighters, was handled by contract at a stipulated price per ton, or by Chinese labor employed by this office at 75 cents United States currency per day, and double rate for extra time and night and Sunday work. In view of the high wages demanded by the Chinese and the cost by contract, the employment of Filipino labor for the handling of coal was commenced July 1, 1901. * * * This labor did well from the first, and while only a small proportion of the coal work was done by Filipinos during the month of July, 1901, they handled more than one-half of the coal in October and have practically handled all coal since December, 1901.

"The quantity of coal handled each month by contractors, Chinese labor, and Filipino labor, with the cost in each case, the number of Chinese and Filipinos employed by this office, the rate of pay, number of days employed, the average number of tons handled per man per day, and cost per ton are shown in the comparative statement herewith inclosed, marked 'A.' From this statement it will be noted that the cost per ton was less and the average per man per day greater with Filipino labor than with Chinese labor or contract."

In conjunction Major Aleshire submits the following answers to inquiries from the governor:

"7. There is no difficulty in securing good labor.

"8. The laborer works from 7 a. m. to 12 m. and from 1.30 p. m. to 5.30 p. m., and under emergencies whenever required, with no extra pay for Sunday or night work.

"9. This labor is very efficient.

"10. Chinese labor was formerly employed for the handling of coal, but has been abandoned and replaced by Filipino labor, which, by practical tests during several months, averaged more tons per man per day and at a much lower rate per ton. I prefer the Filipino labor employed by this office to Chinese.

"11. The attendance of Filipino laborers has been and is excellent. They do not absent themselves after Sundays, holidays, or fiestas, nor during any such days, should they be notified in advance that they will be required for work. Their physical strength is much improved and they are capable of doing as much and as hard work as any laborers we have had in the Orient."

FILIPINO LABOR MORE EFFICIENT THAN CHINESE.

[From report from F. H. Grant, captain and quartermaster, United States Army, assistant to officer in charge Army transport service, p. 164.]

"It is my experience that Filipino labor is much more satisfactory in every way than Chinese labor; it is not so expensive and we can accomplish more in a day with natives than can be accomplished in the same time with an equal number of Chinese.

"It is my opinion, as well as of our stevedores, that 15 of our native laborers will discharge or load more freight in one day than any equal number of Chinese that have ever worked for this department."

ALL HEAVY WORK PERFORMED BY NATIVE LABOR.

[From report of H. W. French, captain of infantry, quartermaster, United States Army, assistant to officer in charge Army transport service, p. 165.]

"But few Chinese are employed in this department from which comparison may be drawn. These are employed, moreover, in loading and unloading small packages from the wagons at the storeroom. All the heavy work is performed by Filipinos. * * * It is earnestly hoped the Filipino labor of this department may not be supplemented by Chinese."

FILIPINO LABOR IS CHEAPER AND BETTER THAN CHINESE.

[From report of Adam Nedar, Army transport service, p. 165.]

"The employment of Filipino labor at 50 cents gold per day and only one hour for dinner, and who will work nights and Sundays if necessary at same rate of wages and load as much or more coal per day.

"When I worked Filipino labor in Cavite yard at 50 cents gold per day, they averaged 2 tons per man and sometimes from 2¾ to 3 tons, according to distance. Chinese never averaged over 1¾ to 2½ tons per man per day. * * *

"My opinion is that the Filipino labor is the cheapest and the best."

NATIVE LABOR SUPERIOR TO CHINESE.

[From report by W. B. Moses, in charge native labor and river stevedores, under direction of Maj. J. B. Aleshire, quartermaster, United States Army, p. 166.]

"I further state that my experience with labor has proved to me that in many ways the native laborers are superior to Chinese laborers, provided the natives are handled in a proper manner.

"The majority of the native laborers employed by this department at the present time under my supervision (500 to 1,000) have been so employed for the past year, and I have never had any trouble in getting these men to work Sundays, holidays, and late at night when it has been necessary for work to be done."

ABUNDANCE OF STEADY FILIPINO LABORERS.

[From report of Archibald W. Butt, captain and quartermaster, United States Army, in charge land transportation, p. 170.]

"While the American wheelwright gets $85 per month, the native started with $14, until now there are four of them who have received a salary of $30 per month. Their work is of the finest order, and the foreman of the wheelwright shop is undertaking to break in and train up additional Filipino laborers on account of their constancy in work and the good class of work they turn out. * * *

"All work in the paint and trimming shops is exclusively done by native laborers under a white foreman." * * *

Page 171: "Forage weighs heavy and is hard to handle. The smallest bale of hay weighs 125 pounds and the compressed bales weigh 260 pounds. The oats average 100 pounds per sack. All hay in this department is piled to great heights. The Filipino takes the lighter bale on his shoulders and carries it over a hundred feet in the air, never putting it down until it reaches the point where it is to be laid, returning for another trip and continuing with little show at skulking. In the case of the larger bales two handle them, or else they are passed from hand to hand. This labor gets 50 cents gold per day." * * *

"I became thoroughly convinced on assuming charge of this department that the Filipinos were entitled to the labor of these islands as far as it was possible to give it. I have made every effort—at times it seemed almost a sacrifice—to advance this cause. My efforts in this direction, however, have more than repaid me for the experiment, as I am not only able to get all the labor I want, but have seen the Filipino develop from what might be termed a shiftless laborer to a constant worker. As long as he was paid by the day, and his work was uncertain, it mattered little to him whether he laid off a day or two, or even three, within a week. He is now paid by the month, and under no conditions is this rule broken." * * *

Page 172: "Take the number of men employed regularly for the month of September, which were 643, and the working days at 26, the total number of days is 16,718 for the month, against time lost, 583 days. This shows a percentage of time lost of 3½ per cent, or an attendance of 96½ per cent. The number of emergency or extra laborers is not included in this percentage."

Page 172: "Owing to the fact that the civil governor asked most particularly about the constancy of Filipino labor, these figures have been carefully made and are fully reliable." * * *

Page 173: "It may be of interest at this point to note that the native labor is capable of the most expert workmanship in many branches of the Quartermaster's Department. While they do not make good teamsters, solely by reason of the fact that they do not possess the necessary strength to handle the Army mule and draft horse, yet as painters, carpenters, saddlers, trimmers, etc., they excel, and while the American occupation has raised the price of native labor, still it remains at a very low figure when compared with other labor in the islands. * * *

"I am convinced that under the direction of American foremen native labor is capable of attaining the greatest excellence in the branches above enumerated. * * *

"In this connection it may be well to call attention to the excellent work of the Filipinos as carpenters when working with skilled American labor and under its supervision. For a time an effort was made to secure Filipino carpenters, but, this being impracticable, unskilled labor was employed, and very little instruction was needed to make it efficient with the saw, the plane, and the level. * * *

"One hears a great deal of the necessity of introducing Chinese labor into these islands to meet the demands. It has been my experience that any labor which can be performed by the Chinese can be performed equally well by the Filipinos. The latter, moreover, have marked advantages over the Chinese, inasmuch as they are more amenable to discipline, more imitative in their methods, more enthusiastic in their work for the work itself, and more easily assimilated by American workmen.

"While most of the coal is unloaded in this office by Chinese labor, employed by contractors, yet all the loading of coal from this office is done by Filipino workmen at 40 cents gold per day. I have studied carefully the efficiency of these two classes in this particular work, and I unhesitatingly pronounce in favor of the Filipino. The Filipinos are certainly far superior to the Chinese in loading and unloading forage. Moreover, they show adaptability in handling the live stock and in workmanship in the repair and saddlers' shops, which I do not believe can even be equaled by the Chinese labor in these islands. I have dwelt at some length on the efficiency of Filipino labor, which as yet is in its infancy in expert work, for the reason that I have to handle a vast amount of it, and have studied it to an extent where I think my opinion may be of some value."

FILIPINO LABOR HIGHLY SATISFACTORY.

[From report of J. E. Cole, superintendent land transportation.]

Page 174: "Filipinos as laborers.—I would respecftully state that they (Filipinos) have proven highly satisfactory, and it is remarkable, out of the large number employed, how few are absent during the month. The percentage is less than 5 per cent.

"Native laborers versus Chinese.—Since my arrival in the Philippines I have had no experience with Chinese labor, yet during the ten months I was in China with the China relief expedition I had to use Chinese labor exclusively in the same capacity as I now use Filipino help, and for this work I prefer the Filipino, as he is quicker to pick up a thing, and at the same time takes more interest, consequently more pains, with his work."

NATIVES STEADY, INDUSTRIOUS MECHANICS.

[From report of C. F. Lane, superintendent of shops, p. 175.]

"In reply to a question as to what I think of the efficiency of the Filipino laborers, I have the honor to report that I have ever found them as mechanics to be steady and industrious. The blacksmiths, wheelwrights, saddlers, painters, trimmers, and carpenters in this department will average in skill with any class of mechanics, taking them as we pick them up. Their attendance averages 95 per cent."

NATIVES SHOW ADAPTABILITY TO WORK.

[From report of Archibald W. Butt, captain and quartermaster, United States Army, in charge land transportation.]

"The paint shop is now run entirely by native labor, with the exception of one American foreman, and in every branch in which they have been trained with patience and earnestness they have shown an adaptability at the work which is surprising."

WAGES PAID.

[From report of Robert McGregor, captain of Engineers, United States Army, city engineer of Manila, p. 177.]

"5. Q. What are the wages which are paid by them to each class of laborers?

"A. Ordinary laborers are paid $1, 80 cents, 70 cents, and 60 cents per day, local currency. A few assistants to janitors get 50 cents and 40 cents." (50, 40, 35, 30, 25, 20 cents gold.)

LACK OF AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS AND DEPLORABLE SYSTEM OF CULTIVATION.

[From Report of Philippine Commission, January, 1900, vol. 4, p. 7.]

"The poor state of production in which the archipelago stands with relation to other countries depends further upon the deplorable systems of cultivation followed by its farmers. In the Philippines there is scarcely known, much less employed, a single one of the thousand well-perfected agricultural machines the use of which in other countries is general, even among agriculturists least skillful. By reason of this all work is done in an imperfect manner, because in no other manner can work be done with the antiquated implements which are here used. * * *

"The unenlightened method of cultivation of the fields employed is purely brutal, it being recognized that to till the soil, with proper fruit, there is more need of work with the head than with the hands. In a word, there is in the archipelago no system of agriculture, properly so called, and the greater part of the people have no idea of what agriculture really means. In a land like the Philippines, in which in every direction there grow spontaneously plants of commercial and industrial value, and of the best quality, how easy it would be to subject them to a cultivation which would greatly improve and proportion the products to a greater number of industries, which would give occupation to many hands in addition to those directly employed in agriculture."

PHILIPPINE HEMP AND OTHER FIBER PRODUCTIONS.

The Philippine Islands are unique in that nature has granted them a copyright on their principal, most profitable, and most prolific crop, and I venture to assert that no other country in the world ever had showered upon it so valuable an agricultural blessing.

Manila hemp can be produced in no other portion of the world.

Manila hemp grows wild throughout a great portion of the archipelago.

Manila hemp affords the greatest return for the effort expended of any industry of the archipelago.

Manila hemp responds to cultivation, which doubles the profit.

Manila hemp can be produced at a profit at one-third of present prices, or for less than one-half the cost of cheaper and unsatisfactory substitutes. The world annually uses approximately $100,000,000 worth of substitutes, hence the market is inexhaustible.

Manila hemp is immune from insect pests or damage by weather conditions.

Manila hemp is grown and harvested without the use of machinery and hence practically no capital is necessary to engage in the business.

Manila hemp forms 65 per cent of the total exports of the islands and over 75 per cent of the agricultural exports. If ever there was a farmer absolutely independent of corporations or other combinations for the production and sale of his product, it is the Filipino hemp producer, who lays his most profitable, copyrighted specialty on the wharf where the buyers of the world are at his feet.

Of the total Philippine exportations of 180,265 tons of hemp for the year ending June 30, 1902, the United States took 56,455 tons, for which we paid $186.97 per ton, or a total of $10,555,381, as against $162.66 per ton for 43,748 tons the previous year.

Our total importations of hemp, sisal grass, and other fibers for the year ending June 30, 1902, amounted in value to $28,436,614.62. (See Nos. 15 and 16, Commerce and Navigation, p. 57.)

The "average price of fair current manila" for the past ten years has been $128.80 per ton, as per the annual statement of Walter H. Hindley & Co., hemp importers, of London and New York. (See chart in July, 1901, Monthly Summary of Commerce of the Philippines, War Department.)

Of sisal grass and other cheaper substitutes for hemp the islands exported $178,120 worth during the past year. During the same period the United States imported 89,592 tons of sisal grass, for which we paid an average of $133.53 per ton, or a total of $11,963,284.

It would thus seem that the possibilities for the profitable culture of fibers in the Philippines were unlimited.

In discussing the removal of the Philippine export tax on hemp, Governor Taft stated to the Senate Philippine Committee (page 150):

"I do not think, with reference to hemp exportation, that anything that would be done would change the amount of the exports from the Philippines. Hemp is always in demand, and all that they can raise they can sell. The effect of the tariff, if changed very much, will be greater in sugar and tobacco."

HEMP THE MOST PROFITABLE CROP.

In his testimony before the Philippine Committee, December 9, Gen. Luke E. Wright, vice-governor of the Philippines, was asked (page 3):

"Now, General, I quite agree with you as to the general policy, that that is the way to do. The chief product of those islands, I suppose, is sugar.

"General WRIGHT. No; hemp is the most profitable."

HEMP FLOURISHES IN VALLEYS AND ON MOUNTAIN SIDES.

"General HUGHES. I can speak for only a very small fraction of the archipelago, but in the hemp country, you understand, the mountain does not interfere with growing hemp. They will grow it on a place where they have to hold on probably in digging up the ground to plant it. It is not a product that requires low ground. They grow it on walls so steep that you can scarcely climb; though it is steep, it is susceptible of cultivation, and it yields a fine crop."

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES IN HEMP CULTURE.

[From Monthly Summary of Commerce with the Philippines, June, 1902, p. 1245.]

"Musa textilis (manila hemp), or abaca, as it is called by the natives, for which the islands have long been noted, and which has never been successfully cultivated elsewhere, is the most important export product, one which may be depended upon to furnish a regular annual yield, is practically immune from damage by insects or hurricane, is very seldom affected by drought, and with the exception of occasional weeding requires no attention after reaching maturity."

COULD PRODUCE HEMP AT A PROFIT AT ONE-THIRD PRESENT PRICES.

[From testimony of Neal MacLeod before Philippine Commission in Manila—Schurman-Worcester Report, January 1900, vol. 2, p. 49.]

"Q. You state that the wealth of the country would increase fourfold under a good American government? Wherein would that increase of wealth be manifest?

"A. In the production of sugar, hemp, tobacco, and coffee. * * *

"Q. And you think the price could be lowered?

"A. Yes; we could produce hemp in these islands at one-third of what is paid for it in the markets to-day, at a profit.

"Q. How would you effect that economy in production?

"A. By increasing the labor. There are forests of wild hemp that have not been touched."

LABORERS MAKE $4 TO $5 PER DAY.

In his annual report to the Philippine Commission, under date of January 11, 1902, Mr. J. G. Livingston, governor of the province of Sorsogan, says, page 459 of Senate Hearings:

"The existing price of hemp in this province is so high that an industrious man earns, if he works well, $4 to $5 Mexican per day."

BEST PAYING AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

[From testimony of William A. Daland before Schurman-Worcester Commission, January, 1900, vol. 2, p. 171.]

(Mr. Daland is an American, and has lived in the Philippines nearly twenty years.)

"Q. Are there not Europeans who have extensive hemp-producing interests here now?

"A. There are one or two of them left. There were a number of them (Spaniards), but they have mostly died off.

"Q. Do you think there is any future for that sort of thing here?

"A. Certainly there is.

"Q. What would you think, as a commercial speculation, of a man going into hemp planting extensively?

"A. If he has money, he will always make money. * * *

"Q. Under what conditions can he get labor at present?

"A The old condition was that the man who cleaned the hemp got half of what it was sold for. * * *

"Q. At the present time what are the best agricultural industries here from a financial standpoint; sugar, hemp, tobacco, I suppose, are the main things?

"A. Hemp."

[Extract from article by Edward W. Harden, special commissioner of the United States. Treasury Doc. No. 2076.]

"The principal industry of the Philippine Islands, as shown in the money return, is in the production of hemp. The southern part of Luzon Island, and other islands to the south, are given up largely to the production of hemp, of which practically all is shipped to other countries to be manufactured. For the year 1897, according to the most reliable figures which could be obtained, the export value of the hemp raised in the Philippine Islands was a little more than $18,000,000 silver. It is the industry which supports a large proportion of the population of those Islands, where it is extensively grown, and, according to the opinion of those most familiar with the trade, there is no danger of an overproduction and a consequent decrease in the selling price of this product. Manila hemp is used in the manufacture of cordage of a superior class. For ships' purpose it is superior to any other material, considering its cost and wearing qualities.

"The cultivation of hemp, while carried on extensively in the Philippine Islands, is conducted in a most primitive manner. It is found nowhere else in the world, and while it is now extensively cultivated, and large amounts of land are planted in it, it is still found growing wild in certain portions of the islands, and in quantities which make it worth while to gather it for shipment. Hemp, or 'abaca' as it is called in the Philippine Islands, is a product of a species of the plantain tree. In its wild state it grows to a height of 8 to 12 feet, but under cultivation it grows to a height of 15 or 20 feet with a trunk from 8 to 12 inches in diameter. The stock of this tree is in appearance something like the banana plant, merely a collection of fibrous leaves, which are closely joined together, and which can be easily cut with a single blow of a sharp knife. The tree is allowed to mature, which requires about three years, this being dependent upon the soil and the elevation of the land upon which it is planted above the sea level. When the tree has attained the proper age it is cut down and divided into long strips, which are put under a large knife, weighted with a lever, and under which the strips are drawn. This separates the stalk and juice from the fiber, and the latter is then spread out upon the ground to dry.

"This work is all done at the plantations, and after the abaca or hemp is sufficiently dried it is gathered up and taken in bullock carts to the nearest waterway and shipped to some port where it is made into bales ready for export.

"The production of hemp is carried on extensively by natives, by Spaniards, and by foreigners. The natives who are engaged in the business extensively are for the most part half-castes, or mestizos—the ordinary native of full blood lacking both energy and capital to carry on the production of hemp, except in a limited way. The export business is practically all in the hands of foreigners, mostly English, Belgian, and German houses. The following table gives the amount of hemp exported for the twenty years ended with 1897:

"In the opinion of those who are largely interested in the hemp industry there is a great future for this product. There are vast tracts of uncultivated land in those parallels of latitude where it flourishes with the greatest vigor, and all that is needed is capital and enterprise to open it up. The fact that there is a constantly growing demand for hemp will probably serve to keep prices up, even though the production is largely increased. The preparation of hemp for the market is carried on in an exceedingly crude manner, and experiments have been made, so far without any very great degree of success, to perfect machinery which will make the cost of its preparation smaller, and which will effect a considerable saving in the number of people employed on a plantation.

"In preparing hemp for shipment the fiber is packed in bales in compresses similar to those in use in early days for baling cotton in the Southern States. There are no compresses worked by steam, and the baling of hemp is a slow and tedious process. A compress built on the plans of those now used at the principal ports from which cotton is shipped in the Southern States would serve a double purpose; it would make the baling of hemp a much shorter process than under the present system, and would enable much larger quantities to be put in the holds of steamers, thereby reducing the freight charges. In the opinion of exporters in Manila this is something that is very much needed in the islands.

"There would also seem to be room for the establishment of a plant for the making of cordage. There is practically no rope manufactured in the Philippine Islands. During the year 1897 the total exports of hempen rope and cable amounted to only 4,029 piculs, as compared with exports of 3,468 during the preceding year.

"The larger portion of the hemp grown in the Philippine Islands is exported from Manila. As shown in the table preceding, the exports for 1897 were 1,804,576 piculs. The exports to the several countries which are large users of hemp were as follows:

	Piculs.
United States (Atlantic coast)	733,004
United States (Pacific coast)	51,900
Great Britain	728,344
Europe (continent)	28,596
Australia	38,058
Singapore and India	12,468
China and Japan	51,300

HEMP PRODUCERS UNIVERSALLY PROSPEROUS (GOVERNOR TAFT'S REPORT).

[Report of Philippine Commission, November 1, 1902, p. 19.]

Hemp.—"The picture that I have given of the depressed condition of agriculture and the tendency to ladronize in the Tagalog provinces and in some of the Visayan provinces does not apply to those provinces in which hemp is the chief product. They are wealthy and prosperous, and while their food costs them more than it used to, they have money enough with which to make improvements, and schoolhouses are being built, roads are being constructed, machinery—agricultural and of other kinds—is being introduced, and there is every evidence of a decided forward movement."

[From the report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission for the year ending August 31, 1902, p. 300.]

"Fiber investigations.—But two vegetable fibers are at present exported from the Philippines, namely, abaca and maguey, the latter in insignificant quantities. The value of abaca is 62.5 per cent of the total value of the exports of the archipelago. Fifty-two fiber-producing plants are at present known to exist here, and others doubtless remain to be discovered. The investigation of the fiber-producing plants and the best means of cultivating those plants which produce fibers of commercial importance has begun, and a preliminary report on the commercial fibers of the Philippines will soon be issued in pamphlet form."

[From report of John W. Gilmore, expert in fiber investigations, Report of the Philippine Commission, p. 603.]

"As a result of these investigations it has been learned that at present only manila hemp and maguey are exported, the former amounting to a valne of $14,453,110, or 62 per cent of the total exports, but the latter only in very small quantities. It may be said in passing, too, that the production of manila hemp seems to be capable of considerable improvement, both in quantity and quality, as the margin between the cost of production and the selling price is quite broad and the methods of production are primitive."

[From report on the abaca or manila hemp soils of the Philippines, by Clarence W. Dorsey, soil physicist, Report of the Philippine Commisssion, p. 643.]

"The area of the archipelago where the successful cultivation of abaca is carried on, roughly speaking, lies between the parallels 6° and 14° north latitude and the meridians 121° and 126° east of Greenwich. In southern Luzon the principal abaca-producing provinces are Ambos Camarines, Albay, including the island of Catanduanes, and Sorsogon. The islands Mindoro, Marinduque, Masbate, Samar, Biliran, Leyte, Cebu, Panay, Negros, Bohol, and Mindanao produce greater or less quantities of abaca fibers. In addition the plant is grown on a large number of smaller islands which lie near some of those just mentioned. * * *

"So important is this fiber industry to the Philippines that every effort should be made to improve it by all possible means, whether it be improving the market conditions, spreading the industry and improved methods of cultivation, or improvement by selection of new and better varieties of plants. It should be the effort of everyone connected with the industry to add whatever he may to make it of still greater value to the archipelago." * * *

Page 649: "Growing in its wild state from central Luzon to southwestern Mindanao, the abaca almost without exception chooses for its habitat the slopes of mountains and hills, where the natural conditions are conducive to a moist and cool atmosphere." * * *

Planting abaca.—"Holes are dug at intervals of a few feet, and the suckers of offshoots of old plants are set out. Suckers are generally used in starting a new plantation, on account of the length of time needed for the plant to mature from seed. Generally, at the time of planting, sweet potatoes are planted to prevent the land from washing and to offer some shade and protection to the tender plants. Frequently rice and even sugar cane are planted for the same purpose, although sweet potatoes are generally preferred. Three years are usually required for the plants to arrive at maturity. After the plants once come to maturity the fields can be cut over every few months, the usual way being to cut the ripe plants twice a year. Only the larger stalks are cut from each bunch of stalks, as in this way but little injury is done to the remaining stalks. * * * Little cultivation is practiced other than to destroy with the bolo the dense growth of weeds and grass that springs up every two weeks."

[From report of F. Lamson-Scribner, chief of insular bureau of agriculture, Report of the Philippine Commission, Nov. 1, 1902, p. 659.]

"Among the many important plant resources of the Philippines, the most valuable at the present time is manila hemp or abaca, a fiber produced nowhere else in the world in commercial quantities. The value of the hemp exported from the islands during the twelve months ending June 30, 1901, was $14,453,110, and the amount exported from Manila alone for the two years ending June 30, 1902, was nearly 100,000 tons, valued at over $13,000,000. There is a constantly increasing demand for manila hemp, and the world's supply of this fiber is practically limited to these islands. An industry of such paramount importance should receive careful consideration at the hands of the Government, and every possible effort should be made to encourage abaca culture and to enlarge the productive area."

FORESTRY.

CABINET WOODS.

The following table shows the Philippine exports, American imports, and American imports from the Philippines of cabinet woods:

Year.	Philippine exports.	American imports.	American imports from Philippines.
1900	$24,267	$2,487,815.00
1901	39,558	2,993,111.87
1902	72,480	3,400,957.69	$783

The chief of the forestry bureau of the Philippines reports between 600 and 700 species of timber, of which he places 12 species under the "superior group" or cabinet woods, many of them unknown in any other portion of the globe.

DYEWOODS.

Of dyewoods the chief reports 17 varieties. The United States importations of dyewoods for the past three years have been as follows:

1900	$894,862
1901	1,093,535
1902	935,546

GUMS AND RESINS.

The Philippine exports of gums already form quite an industry. The following tables are self-explanatory:

The following extract is from the first report of the Taft Philippine Commission (p. 54):

"FORESTRY.

"The timber of the Philippine Archipelago forms one of its most important natural sources of wealth. The timber-producing trees have been classified in order of their commercial value, as follows: Superior group, 12 species; first group, 17 species; second group, 49 species; third group, 74 species; fourth group, 200 species; fifth group, 33 species; total species, 385. It is certain that there still remain more than 50 species not yet classified. Included in this list are very hard woods, capable of taking a beautiful polish; woods that resist climatic influences and are proof against the attacks of white ants; woods especially suited to use for sea piling, on account of their imperviousness to the attacks of Teredo navalis, or for railroad ties, because they last extremely well when placed in the ground; in short, there are woods for every imaginable use.

"There is a great variety of trees yielding valuable gums, and rubber and gutta-percha are abundant in Mindanao and Tawitawi. At least 17 dyewoods are produced within the limits of the archipelago, while other trees yield valuable essential oils or drugs. It has been estimated by the present head of the Forestry Bureau, from such data as he has been able to secure, that there are not less than 40,000,000 acres of forest lands in the archipelago."

Page 56: "The present monthly collections of revenue from forest products are about $8,000 Mexican. This sum should be largely increased in the near future. If the statements of the chief of the Foresty Bureau are correct, the forests of the Philippine Islands are more extensive and more valuable than those of India."

Page 57: "It is believed that nine-tenths of the timber standing in many of the forests of these islands might be removed with great profit to the government and actual improvement to the forests, inasmuch as this would give opportunity for rapid growth to the trees left standing."

PINE TIMBER.

The following is from the annual report of Mr. William H. Brown, governor of the province of Abra, under date of January 12, 1902 (see p. 463, Hearings before the Senate Committee on the Philippines):

"On these mountains I found fortunes for many men; not in gold, not in silver, nor in any other metal, but in pine! pine! pine! Lumbermen from Maine—and I have spent many a day in the pine woods of Maine—would stand with open mouths gazing in admiration at the splendid trees that towered scores of feet about our heads; trees that took three men to encircle them, thousands and hundreds of thousands of them."

QUANTITIES OF FOREST PRODUCTS TAKEN FROM PUBLIC LANDS DURING THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30 1902.

[From report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission, for the year ending August 31, 1902, p. 286.]

"There have been taken from the public lands of the Philippines during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, 3,637,392 cubic feet of timber, 3,808,870 cubic feet of firewood, 247,947 cubic feet of charcoal, 20,685 pounds of rattan, 2,256,458 pounds of dyewoods, 312,154 pounds of tan bark, 1,082,235 pounds of gum mastic, 282,996 pounds of rubber (of superior quality), 373,331 pounds of gutta-percha (of low grade), 9,181 gallons of vegetable oils, 113,905 pounds of pitch, and 20,685 pounds of cinnamon.

"The total revenue derived from these products was $348,073.08 Mexican."

THE FORESTS OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

[From report of the chief of the forestry bureau for the period from July 1, 1901, to September 1, 1902, p. 470.]

"The area of the Philippine Islands, as given by various Spanish engineers, runs between a little less than 70,000,000 to a little more than 73,000,000 acres. The forest area was estimated by Fernando Castro in 1890 at about 48,112,920 acres. This estimate includes all woodland, public and private. The area of private woodlands held under a good title is far below 1,000,000 acres. * * *

"There are between 600 and 700 native-tree species of which there is some information, but there is great confusion in both scientific and popular names of tree species, which it will take much time to correct." * * *

Page 471: "In the total of forty-odd million of woodland we find at the very least 20,000,000 acres of virgin forest. We find virgin forests in the provinces of Cagayan, Isabela, Nueva Viscaya, and in that part of Tayabas formerly known as Principe and Infanta; in fact, the entire east coast of Luzon, south to Atimonan, is a virgin forest. The above-mentioned forests in Luzon will aggregate an area of at least 3,000,000 acres.

"The above is a conservative estimate, and any change made later will undoubtedly be to increase the estimate instead of reducing it.

"There is much merchantable timber left in the provinces of Tayabas, Camarines, parts of Bulacan, and Bataan.

"The islands of Mindoro and Paragua, each containing an area of more than 2,000,000 acres, are covered with a dense stand of virgin timber.

"Mindanao, with an area of 23,000,000 acres, contains more than 10,000,000 acres of virgin forest. Samar and Leyte, both large islands, are heavily timbered. * * *

"We have a number of woods which will attract fine-furniture makers, of which may be mentioned narra, tindalo, camagon, calamansanay, tucan-calao, and alintatao. These varieties are found all over the islands. We find also eleven different oaks, cedar in abundance, teak, and many other species awaiting investigation to bring out their value.

"At this time no more than a mere mention will be made of the fact that there are large areas in the southern islands of this group where gutta-percha and a good quality of rubber are found. (See appended report of Dr. Schurman and statistics of forest products used during the year.) The islands are rich in other gums, in a great variety of valuable dyewoods, and other forest products that time and enterprise will develop. * * *

"It would be difficult at this time to even approximate the present value of the timber on public lands in the Philippines. Statistics of this office show that several hundred varieties of native woods are brought to market in the islands and are disposed of at a fair price. The government charges for the past year on this great variety of woods averaged a little over 6 cents Mexican per cubic foot Spanish. This charge has continued to remain between 5 and 10 per cent of the market price of timber in Manila.

"It will be safe to assume an average stand of about 3,500 cubic feet English, or 4,600 cubic feet Spanish, although the valuation surveys give double this estimate of merchantable timber (over 20 inches in diameter) on each acre of the 20,000,000 acres of virgin forests in these islands.

"At the above valuation of 6 cents per cubic foot, it is evident that the value to the Philippine government of the above timber is more than $100 gold per acre. By removing this timber under the supervision of forestry officials, each forest tract will gradually improve in value, and while realizing the large sum mentioned, the value per acre of public timber land will eventually approach its true and permanent value, which will be much nearer $200 gold per acre than $100; i. e., after the great mass of mature and overmature timber is removed, the revenue from the sale of the annual increase of growth of public timber will, under careful supervision, bring to the state a fair interest on the valuation per acre as given above.

"The remaining public woodland, about 28,000,000 acres, will average in value not less than one-half the value as given for the virgin forest. A small part of this remaining woodland will be taken up as mineral land and for agricultural purposes. After three centuries of civilization in the islands, we find but 6,000,000 acres improved out of a total area of 63,000,000 acres. It will be safe to assume that the forestry bureau will have at least 20,000,000 of the 28,000,000 acres to protect and improve for many years to come. This area, added to the 20,000,000 acres of virgin forest, will give to the state an area of 40,000,000 acres of valuable woodland.

"By diverting the efforts of the timber cutters to the virgin forests, and by a rigid protection of the remaining woodland, the value of the total area will, in about thirty years, reach a value undreamed of to-day by those not familiar with what rational forestry is capable of accomplishing.

"The United States market is not considered in this proposition. The Philippine market will be strong for many years. The Chinese market is always strong, and always will be, as all of lowland China is without timber. The Philippine construction timber is considered by many engineers in China the best timber to be had in the Orient. Strong as has been the Chinese market for timber in the past, the future promises even better, as there are indications that foreign enterprise and capital are securing concessions which will awaken that vast Empire."

INDIA RUBBER AND GUTTA-PERCHA.

Anong the most important United States importations are rubber and gutta-percha, neither of which can be grown in any part of the United States. The 1902 importations of crude rubber and gutta-percha were valued at $27,094,622.58.

The steadily increasing use of these articles in various industries, and especially in the world's phenomenal electrical development, has rendered it almost impossible to supply the demand, especially for gutta-percha. In fact, the demand for gutta-percha, which is found in but limited quantities and in only a few East India Islands, is far beyond the supply, and it is a subject of great concern to the electrical world, no satisfactory substitute having been found for this rapidly disappearing article.

As for rubber, the more common and less valuable article of the two, scores of American companies have been organized with millions of dollars of capital to develop rubber plantations in Mexico and in Central and South America.

In the Philippine Islands both varieties of trees grow wild, and the planters of rubber trees estimate a profit of $150 to $200 per acre at present prices.

The forestry bureau of the Philippines is one of the important government bureaus of the civil government, and already has a staff of 83 men.

In the second Taft report of the United States Philippine Commission (vol. 2), pages 335 to 355 are devoted to the subject of rubber and gutta-percha. In addition to this the subject is further elucidated by the publication of 36 full-page half-tone engravings covering the various phases of the subject.

From these pages it is seen that the Commission believes that this industry will be one of the most important and remunerative of the islands, and will yield enormous profits to capital. Already 38 licenses have been granted looking to its development.

On page 333 Albert McCabe, the acting chief of the bureau, reports that in July, 1901, there was taken from the wild trees on public lands 28,750 pounds of rubber, and in August, 19,452 pounds of rubber and 46,911 pounds of gutta-percha.

On page 338 it is stated, in regard to gutta-percha, that by the present wasteful process of ringing the trees "only one thirty-fifth to one-fortieth of the entire yield can be secured."

The following is reproduced from page 47 of the Report of the United States Philippine Commission, issued under date of October 15, 1901:

"The starting of rubber and gutta-percha plantations in these islands is a project which can in no sense be considered in the light of experiment, in view of what is already known, and which might well attract the attention of American capitalists. The cost of planting cleared ground with rubber seeds has proved to be but $2 an acre. The first good harvest should be in about six years, but it is said to be practicable to plant double the number of trees needed per acre and at the end of three years cut out half of them, the rubber secured from the trees cut being sufficient to pay all expenses up to date. Planters estimate a return of from $150 to $200 per acre from the rubber crop after the trees have reached maturity at the prices which at present prevail."

The Monthly Summary of Commerce of the Philippine Islands for January, 1902, page 653, says, concerning the vast undeveloped island of Mindanao:

"Mindanao is celebrated for its forests of gum, gutta-percha, and rubber trees, but little use has ever been made of them as yet."

Inasmuch as a vast amount of American capital is now going into this industry in revolutionary Latin republics, it must be a question of but a short time when much of it will be diverted to the Philippine Islands, where cheap labor in abundance is to be found under the Stars and Stripes.

QUANTITIES OF FOREST PRODUCTS TAKEN FROM PUBLIC LANDS DURING THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1902.

[From report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission for the year ending August 31, 1902, p. 226.]

"There have been taken from the public lands of the Philippines during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, * * * 282,996 pounds of rubber (of superior quality), 363,331 pounds of gutta-percha (of low grade)."

RUBBER AND GUTTA-PERCHA.

[From report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission for the year ending August 31, 1902. Annual Report of the War Department, Vol. X, part 1, p. 284.]

"Dr. Sherman made an unsuccessful attempt to reach Sibutu, the westernmost island of the Sulu Archipelago, but was informed that neither rubber nor gutta-percha grew there. Tawitawi was found to produce both in large quantities. He reports gutta-percha plentiful in certain parts of Mindanao, but did not find rubber, although the Moros assured him that it grew about the headwaters of the Rio Grande. Numerous samples of rubber and gutta-percha were secured. Dischopsis gutta, the tree from which is obtained the finest gutta-percha known, was not met with, but other trees of the same genus were found.

"The gutta-percha of the southern Philippines is of fair to poor quality, containing a considerable amount of dirt and resin, but a method has been worked out in the government chemical laboratory for the extraction from it of chemically pure gutta, equal in every way to the best gutta heretofore put upon the market, which, before the supply was exhausted, brought $700 (Mexican) a picul in the Singapore market. The crude gutta-percha from which our pure gutta is extracted costs from $30 to $70 (Mexican) per picul in the Mindanao market. The purifying process involves the loss of about 50 per cent of the original mass."

GUTTA-PERCHA.

[From report of Penoyer L. Sherman, inspector forestry bureau, to chief of forestry bureau, Report of the Philippine Commission, November 1, 1902, page 515.]

"The number of gutta-percha trees, as well as the great extent of country containing them, shows conclusively the ideal conditions which Tawi-tawi and Mindanao present for the growth of these valuable and fast-disappearing trees. Many of the places I visited certainly equaled or rivaled the sites chosen by the Dutch and English for large plantations of gutta-percha trees in Java and Singapore. The soil, climate, and natural conditions generally seem all that could be desired."

COPRA AND COCOANUTS.

The following figures show the exports of copra and cocoanuts from the Philippines, the total importations of the same, unprepared, by the United States, from all countries, and the United States importations from the Philippines:

Year.	Exports of Philippines.	Imports of United States.	Imports of United States from Philippines.
1900	$1,692,897	$986,711.61	----------
1901	2,663,350	1,117,269.40	$4,450
1902	1,002,243	1,017,626.97	7

From the following official statement coming from the War Department it would certainly seem that cocoanut growing in the Philippine Islands presented a seductive avenue for the profitable investment of a large amount of American capital.

COPRA.

[From Monthly Summary of Commerce of the Philippine Islands, issue of January, 1902, Division of Insular Affairs, p. 653.]

"Copra is a good, steady commodity in any of the southern islands. A small cluster of cocoanut trees is sufficient to keep a native family in the lap of luxury. The tree has to be planted and guarded against the browsing of cattle for the first four or five years of its life. After that, nature and the Chinese trader will do the rest. At the age of 8 or 10 years the tree begins to bear. It can be relied on to produce on an average 100 nuts a year. In good seasons it will bear 4 crops a year, from 40 to 60 or 80 nuts a crop. The nuts sell on the trees at a peso a hundred. This is clear profit, for no cultivation is needed. Two hundred trees can be grown to the acre, almost assuring an annual income of $100 gold. The life of a tree is in the neighborhood of a century. Thus it can be seen that the position of a proprietor of a large and flourishing grove of cocoanut trees is almost a sinecure. The wear and tear on the human system of sitting in the shade and watching the copra crop mature is so small as to be almost inconsiderable. The chief effort is to get the grove started. The secret of success is to plant as many cocoanuts as possible the first year, and follow this up with as many plantings as can be successfully controlled. Land values do not cut much of a figure in Mindanao, apparently; a gentleman whose business keeps him in touch with the land valuations all over the islands is our authority for saying that land can be bought in Mindanao for from $5 to $20 an acre."

In Mr. Harden's 1898 report as special commissioner of the United States, page 24, he says:

"Copra is a growing industry in the Philippine Islands. It is only during the last few years that there have been any shipments of copra, and the increase of the trade in this has been remarkable. For the year just ended the estimated value of the copra shipped from the various ports is $4,462,920 silver. The total exports for 1897 were 808,416 piculs, as compared with 607,531 piculs for 1896. Shipments to the various countries were as follows:

	Piculs.
Europe (Continent)	748,981
Great Britain	57,614
Singapore and India	1,697
China	124

"Copra is dried cocoanut, and it is used largely in the manufacture of soaps. During the year 1897 the copra industry has been exceptionally prosperous, more than 200,000 piculs having been exported from Manila alone. The first shipments of copra were in 1892, when 5,000 piculs were exported. The Caroline Islands produced most of the copra formerly exported from the islands, being shipped in small schooners to Manila and transhipped from there. Now, however, it is produced in nearly all of the islands of the group, and it is estimated that the next year's shipments will amount to 1,000,000 piculs."

AGRICULTURAL OPPORTUNITIES IN THE PHILIPPINES.

[From report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission for the year ending August 31, 1902, p. 302.]

Cocoanuts.—"There are very large areas of government lands admirably adapted to the cultivation of cocoanuts. Cocoanut trees come to bearing in from five to seven years, reaching the bearing stage more slowly as the altitude increases. The trees can be grown readily and with comparatively little danger of loss. Under existing conditions the minimum annual profit from a fairly good bearing tree is $1 Mexican, and frequently two or three times this amount is realized. The ground under the trees is now either allowed to grow up with brush or is kept clear by hand. The growth of underbrush injures the soil and leads to the loss of falling nuts, while clearing by hand is quite expensive. The use of mowing machines would result in a great saving in the cost of labor necessary to keep the ground clear and gather the nuts. Other crops, such as Indian corn and alfalfa, can be grown between the rows of cocoanut trees while the latter are maturing, and used to fatten hogs, which always bring a good price in the Philippine market. The demand for copra in these islands is greatly in excess of the supply and is steadily increasing, while cocoanut oil now sells readily in Manila at $1.25 Mexican per gallon."

COFFEE.

One of the most important commodities imported into the United States is coffee, of which we are unable to produce a pound.

The United States importations during the past three years have been as follows:

Year.	Quantity (pounds).	Value.
1900	787,902,361	$52,468,041.28
1901	855,674,759	62,860,205.27
1902	1,090,636,832	70,919,257.31

As will be seen by the following figures and statements, the entire central portions of some of the Philippine Islands are adapted to the production of coffee, that they produce a superior article only equaled by the best Mocha, and that in the past they have exported large quantities of this valuable product.

A few years ago the borers invaded the coffee plantations and, owing to the fact that the people were devoid of the necessary agricultural science to check the ravages of this pest, the bulk of the plantations were devastated.

In near-by Java millions of dollars find profitable investment in the production of a coffee not equal to that of the Philippines, much of it being shipped to the United States, and with an unlimited American market, coupled with the fact that we are unable to grow a pound of coffee, this industry in the Philippines is worthy of the attention of capital.

[From report of Edward W. Harden, special commissioner of the United States.]

"Coffee was an important industry until a few years ago, and large coffee plantations have been established in various parts of Luzon and other islands of the group. In 1891 an insect made its appearance on the coffee plantations, which destroyed the plants, and practically all of the big coffee plantations have now been abandoned. During the year 1897 exports of coffee were only 2,236 piculs, but this was an increase of 804 piculs over the shipments of the preceding year. Efforts have been made to stop the ravages of the insect which has destroyed the coffee plantations, but so far with only partial success. It is believed that a careful study by experts would discover a means of killing the insects and that the coffee industry would once more assume its old-time proportions. For the year 1897 the value of the coffee exported from the Philippine Islands was only $96,100. When the industry was at its height shipments were made of more than $4,000,000 in a single year. The shipments of coffee to the various countries were as follows:

	Piculs.	Pounds.
Europe (Continent)	1,969	275,660
China and Japan	246	34,400
Australia	12	1,684
Singapore and India	9	1,260

In the report of the Schurman Philippine Commission, vol. 2, p. 16, January, 1900, Mr. Edwin H. Warner was asked:

"Q. What about coffee? Haven't the Batangas plantations been pretty well cleaned out by the borer?

"A. Yes; there is a place called Orbera where they are planting it. All the center of the island is given over to it."

In the same report, vol. 4, p. 12, is the following statement as to coffee:

"Coffee.—Coffee was until a short time ago a very widely distributed product, which was found in the provinces of Laguna, Tayabas, Cavite, and especially in Batangas, which was the chief center of its production. Philippine coffee may be compared to that of Java and Martinique, but there are some localities where, according to experts, it is produced equal to that of Mocha. The statistics of the years 1887 and 1888 give a production of coffee in all the islands of 115,000 piculs, some 100,000, valued at 2,000,000 pesos, being exported, half of this exportation going to Spain and the rest to China, British India, and Japan.

"In order that Philippine coffee may compete in the markets of the world with similar American products it only lacks perfection in shelling and polishing, which deficiencies can be easily remedied by apparatus suitable for correcting those defects.

"For some time past the production of coffee has been diminishing to such a degree that during the year 1893 only 374 piculs of this valuable article were exported. The cause of the decadence is the destruction caused in the plants by an insect of the genus Xylotrechus and by a fungus of the genus Peromospera."

The following is from the Monthly Summary, Treasury Department, June, 1902, page 1246:

"Coffee.—Despite the ravages occasioned by worms a few years since, which so discouraged coffee planters, the growing of coffee, which in the past frequently stood third in importance as one of the principal articles of export, may again become one of the most profitable industries of the Philippines. That it may be highly remunerative has been fully demonstrated in the vicinity of Lipa in Batangas Province."

[From the annual report of William F. Pack, governor of the province of Benguet, January 18, 1902. Hearing before the Philippine Committee, 1902, p. 2418.]

"Coffee is the only production in excess of consumption of the province, and the surplus is small, having never been over 600 cabanas, and this year being about 400. It is, however, of a remarkable fine grade, being a good-sized berry, perfectly clean, without blight, and possessing a flavor equaled only by a combination of the best Mocha and Java."

[From report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission for the year ending August 31, 1902, p. 303.]

"An especially fine coffee is grown in the mountain regions of Benguet and Bontoc and in the province of Lepanto. The bushes yield heavy crops, and the unhulled coffee at present sells readily in Manila at $35 Mexican per cavan for consumption in these islands or for shipment to Spain. Coffee bushes come to bearing in Benguet in three years. There is no region in the United States which has a more healthful or delightful climate than is afforded by the Benguet highlands, where a white man can perform heavy field labor without excessive fatigue or injury to his health."

[From report by Oswald A. Steven to Philippine Commission, report of November 1, 1902, p. 633.]

"Coffee can be grown on most of the islands of the group where there are timbered gulches or ravines, and up to an elevation of 2,000 feet. Coffee in these islands lately had a setback from a scale; the native grower just "dropped it," but the manager of a modern farm will be able to rid himself of the scale, but must have the right location to grow the coffee.

"After an education in this commodity it is only a question of time when coffee can be a large export, for the soil, climate, and conditions are just suited to it. The most expensive part of the raising of coffee is the labor, and here in the Philippine Islands this item is reduced to a minimum."

Page 634: "The machinery required for the proper marketing of coffee is so simple and cheap that it figures very little in the expense, and even the poorer natives here could raise and market a choice coffee if shown how. The principal and most important part in the whole process is the grading or classing of the berry, but it is essential that high elevations be secured for best results."

COCOA OR CACAO.

For the year ending June 30, 1902, there was imported into the United States crude cocoa to the value of $6,642,717, and of the prepared article $297,619.59.

Unable to produce a pound of this article at home, the large American consumption insures a perpetual market for such countries as are adapted to its production.

COCOA IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

[From report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission for the year ending August 31, 1902, p. 303.]

"Cacao.—Mr. Lyon, the expert tropical agriculturist of the agricultural bureau, informs me that in no other country has he seen climate and soil so favorable to cacao growing as in Mindanao. The cacao now produced in that island is of superior quality and is nearly all bought up for shipment to Spain, where it brings an especially high price. There are numerous other regions in the islands where cacao can be raised to great advantage, but it is hardly too much to say that there is not to-day a cacao plantation in the archipelago, the Filipinos having almost invariably contented themselves with planting a few scattering bushes, which are left practically without care, to be swamped by brush and preyed upon by insects. Proper harvesting and curing methods are not employed. The fruits are torn from the bushes, injuring the bark and leaving the way open for the attacks of injurious insect pests."

SUGAR.

PRODUCTION IN THE PAST.

Ten years ago the Philippine Islands exported 261,519 tons of sugar, an amount equal to the estimated crop of all the 43 American beet-sugar factories for the season of 1902–3.

By reason of almost constant revolution, death of water buffaloes by rinderpest, and other misfortunes, the exports have steadily decreased, reaching low-water mark in 1900–1901, somewhat recovering in 1901–2.

On page 12, volume 4, of the report of the Philippine Commission for January, 1900, still other reasons are given for the decline of sugar exports, as follows:

"Sugar.—For a long period this was the chief article of export and one of the principal Philippine products. Afterwards the demand for and production of hemp grew in importance until it was placed at the head of our exportations, while with rare turns of rising, the demand for Philippine sugar diminished. In the period from 1889 to 1893 the average sugar exportation amounted to about 11,500,000 pesos.

"Three enemies, as cruel as persistent, mainly conspire to kill the exportation of Philippine sugar, and they are: Beet-root sugar, high freights, and the bad curing of sugar.

"The very impure Philippine sugars contain great quantities of dregs and of vegetable acids already in a state of fermentation, which occasions a great loss of crystallizable saccharine substances in the refineries."

POSSIBILITIES OF EXPANSION.

The sugar-producing capacity of the islands is almost beyond the power of mind to conceive.

With 65,000,000 acres of arable land, much of which is eminently adapted to sugar culture; populated with 8,000,000 people, 6,500,000 of whom are civilized Christians, accustomed to working, if at all, for 8 to 10 cents per day, the human mind scarcely realizes the extent to which this industry might be developed.

Perhaps the nearest approach to an estimate of the islands' sugar possibilities is contained in the following extract from Governor Taft's testimony before the Insular Committee, page 265:

"Mr. MOODY. Are the islands in respect to soil and climate and labor conditions capable of indefinite extension along the line of the production of sugar?

"Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

"Mr. MOODY. So that it is another place where the sugar of the world can be produced?

"Governor TAFT. Yes. I have no doubt that there is enough land there, if the sugar was properly cultivated, to raise—well, I do not know how much Cuba can raise, but if conditions favor us we are going to be a great sugar-producing archipelago, if I can use the word 'we' in that editorial sense. * * *

"Mr. HITT. It is said by experts on the Hawaiian and Philippine and Cuban lands that the Philippine lands are as good as the Cuban lands.

"Governor TAFT. Yes, sir."

[From testimony of Gen. Luke E. Wright, vice-governor of the Philippine Islands, in hearing before the Committee on the Philippines of the United States Senate, in relation to affairs in the Philippine Islands, Washington, D. C., December 9, 1902.]

COOLY LABOR NECESSARY (P. 4).

"Senator BURROWS. Do you know to what extent that industry can be developed in the Philippines—the sugar industry?

"General WRIGHT. The sugar industry, in my opinion, can not be very largely developed in the Philippine Islands. Of course it can be increased considerably, but it can not be made a rival to other countries which produce sugar on a large scale so long as the present policy of the United States is continued as to the exclusion of Chinese cooly labor from that country. In other words, the native Filipino laborer is largely engaged in raising rice and food products aside from sugar, and in gathering hemp and copra, and there is not a very great amount of labor there available for sugar raising on a large and profitable scale.

"Senator BURROWS. Then do I understand that owing to labor conditions the development of the sugar industry would be retarded?

"General WRIGHT. It would be slow.

"Senator BURROWS. And it would be necessary to admit cheap labor, Chinese labor, in order to make it profitable?

"General WRIGHT. Yes, sir."

COULD BE DEVELOPED INDEFINITELY (P. 4).

"Senator BURROWS. If that cheap labor were admitted, to what extent might that industry be developed?

"General WRIGHT. Oh, indefinitely. The islands are very rich, and both climate and soil favor the production of sugar on a large scale. There is no doubt about that.

* * * * * * *

ACREAGE PRODUCTION EQUAL TO THAT OF HAWAII (P. 5).

"Senator DUBOIS. Do you know how much sugar they can produce per acre as compared, we will say, with Hawaii?

"General WRIGHT. By the same methods of intensive farming as are used in Hawaii?

"Senator DUBOIS. Yes.

"General WRIGHT. I should say they would produce as much. I am inclined to think the soil in the Philippines is fully as good, and probably better.

"Senator DUBOIS. That is about three times as much as we can produce per acre in Louisiana.

"General WRIGHT. I can not speak, of course, from personal knowledge on that subject. I was talking to a gentleman who was examining the island of Negros, which is a sugar-producing island. He came from Hawaii and was familiar with the sugar industry there. He thought that Negros was a better island than any of the Hawaiian Islands, as to soil and everything."

YIELD.

From the report of L. Locsin, governor of Occidental Negros, under date of March 8, 1902, page 1791, Hearings before Senate Committee on Philippines.

"The land is very fertile in the plains of the north and the south and in the interior. A hectare (2.471 acres) of land requires an outlay of 75 pesos for the planting, cultivation, and treatment of the cane, and produces on the average 75 piculs of sugar, 40 piculs being the minimum and 200 piculs the maximum, depending on the nature of the soil. Under the present system experts estimate that there is a loss of 45 per cent in the treatment of the sugar cane."

Taking the above basis it will be seen that the 2.471 acres yield an average of 10,500 pounds of sugar (75 piculs of 140 pounds each), or a fraction over 4,200 pounds per acre. This is a fraction under the yield of Cuba, which was given by various witnesses before the Committee on Ways and Means last winter as 2½ tons. In the above statement, however, it should be noted that the governor says that under the present system there is a loss of 45 per cent in the treatment of the cane. With modern machinery the extraction in the Philippines would show a greater tonnage per acre than even in Cuba.

AGRICULTURAL METHODS.

To one who has observed the vast amount of skillful labor which is required to grow sugar beets, the following description of how the field labor is performed in the Philippines is suggestive. If under the present manner of tilling the soil they are able to produce sugar at a cost of 62½ to 95 cents per 100 pounds, the adoption of American farm machinery should certainly enable them to produce it at a cost far below what has ever been dreamed of.

[From Monthly Summary of Commerce of the Philippine Islands, War Department, July, 1901, p. 12.]

"The work at the plantations is carried on in very crude fashion. The big water buffalo is employed to haul a wood-pointed plow through the soil, and two or more natives guide the plow, and they make hard work of it. A few American plows for these plantations would be very acceptable. There are no shovels, hoes, picks, or other tools available, and the natives may be seen by the dozens on their hands and knees turning and preparing the soil with their hands, or with little bamboo sticks."

[From same publication, October, 1901, p. 310.]

"The grower does not take any pains in cultivating the plant. He lets it grow wild, and the only time he shows any interest is when harvest time comes."

WAGE RATE PAID ON SUGAR HACIENDAS.

[From statement of Brig. Gen. Robert P. Hughes, under date of February 26, 1902. (Hearings before the Senate Committee on Philippines, p. 535.)]

"Senator HALE. Do you mean to convey the idea that the haciendas were burned by the owners themselves or by the dissatisfied employees?

"General HUGHES. By the dissatisfied employees.

"Senator CARMACK. On account of the nonpayment of wages or inadequate wages?

"General HUGHES. The inadequate wages. The ordinary wages, if paid regularly and promptly, which seemed to satisfy the native was 1 peso a week—a peso being 50 cents of our money. If he got that, he seemed to be content, but he needed that to buy his rice. He had to have it."

The wage rate above stated is 8⅓ cents per day, and corresponds with the following from the July, 1901, issue of the Monthly Summary of Commerce of the Philippine Islands, War Department, page 12:

"One of the advantages possessed by the Filipino sugar planter is that he can hire help very cheaply. The average farm hand will work for 10 cents per day and board himself. Native boys may be hired still cheaper. The Chinese coolies overrun the farming sections, and they are first-rate laborers, steady and reliable, working for about 8 cents per day."

SUGAR-MANUFACTURING PLANTS.

The average sugar-manufacturing plant of the Philippine Islands is perhaps as crude as any similar plants to be found in the world, either now or during the past century.

That they have been able to produce sugar at a cost of 62½ to 90 cents per hundred with such crude apparatus, no agricultural implements, and with a loss of 45 per cent of the sugar indicates what may be expected as to cost of production under modern equipment, labor-saving implements, and cheap labor.

[From Report of Philippine Commission, January, 1900, vol. 4, p. 51.]

"In the manufacture of sugar the best methods are not generally employed. The natives extract the juice by means of mills of stone, wood, or iron, these being called trapiches. The juice is then collected and boiled in kettles, a little lime being added to purify it. When the boiling has reached a certain point, which is recognized by those who are expert, it is passed on to a second kettle, where the boiling is continued until it reaches a certain temperature. It is then poured into conical molds, which are placed upright, so that the molasses may drain off. These molds are placed over small jars, where they remain until the sugar has formed, it now being free from molasses. It will be seen, therefore, that there is great opportunity for improvement in these methods. In Negros and Pampanga there are many iron mills worked by animal power, water, or steam."

[From statement of Brig. Gen. Robert P. Hughes, under date of February 26, 1902, pp. 534-535, Hearings before the Senate Committee on Philippines.]

"In Negros there was a great deal in the papers of the burning of sugar haciendas. I can not recall what the total number was when it was finally stopped, but I can remember distinctly that in one report the number stated was 52. The burning of haciendas as read in this country would probably appear to be a good deal of a loss. When you come to look at it out there on the ground, it was usually nothing more than an old shack, set up on posts, with a nipa roof over it, and some old crude material for a grinding machine. The whole thing, plant and all, would not cost over $1,500."

[From Commerce of the Philippine Islands, War Department, June, 1902.]

"The sugar estates are as a rule quite small, the mills in many instances primitive concerns, consisting of two cylinders rotated by buffalo power; the process of manufacture is of the crudest and is poorly conducted, and as a consequence the raw sugar is necessarily of inferior grade. The transportation to market is made over rough roads by means of bullock carts."

[From Commerce of the Philippine Islands, War Department, November, 1901, p. 419.]

"The large sugar estates of Luzon and Negros possess nothing but the most antiquated machinery. Yet even with these sugar is grown to advantage and marketed at a profit."

[From Commerce of the Philippine Islands, War Department, July, 1901, p. 13.]

"Buildings.—The regulation sugar mill is constructed of bamboo, but very many are made of stone and roofed with sheet metal or with nipa. There was great destruction of the sugar mills by native troops during the war, and in most instances only the roofing burned off, leaving the walls standing. The nipa stuff burned so quickly that often the heat failed to be severe enough to damage the machinery greatly. Hundreds of these partly burned mills have been restored for active service by replacing the roof and cleaning and overhauling the machinery. Quite a number of Americans have been able to buy these deserted mills at ridiculously low prices, and they are making a good thing out of the investment. The old animal traction machines are usually exchanged for new devices, but even with the old apparatus money is made. The American owner hires an experienced Filipino or Spanish overseer to manage things, and he usually does well.

* * * * * * *

"Markets.—Prices are low, usually 2 or 2½ cents per pound, but the cost of production is also small, so that profits are good.

Nearly all of the sugar planters, refiners, and candy makers of the islands with whom I met appeared to flourish. I know that many of the planters have their servants and wheeled vehicles and their bank accounts. I would not advise anyone to act hastily, but from personal experience I can state that quite a number of the discharged soldiers and others who purchased sugar plantations and works on the islands at low values are making money on their investments, even with the old types of machinery and crude implements. They hire native labor, which is so cheap that the wage scale is not very costly at the end of the month, while often the product is quite large. But American modern machinery for cultivating the soil, grinding, and refining should be introduced. There is a good future for the sugar industry in the islands."

COST OF PRODUCTION.

It should also be noted that the above-mentioned 4,200 pounds of sugar costs to grow and manufacture 75 pesos, or $37.50 gold, which is a trifle under nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound. With modern machinery this cost should certainly be very greatly reduced. The writer also says that the first three grades of sugar, running from 83 to 89 degrees, are "quoted in the markets of Negros and Iloilo at prices ranging from 3 pesos to 5½ pesos." In other words, this sugar, the cost of which is less than nine-tenths of 1 cent a pound, is sold at 1½ to 2¾ cents per pound in the markets named. The governor says:

"These prices are nearly always high and constant prior to the grinding season and low and variable during the harvest time."

And he adds the following significant statement:

"It will appear from the above that a farmer engaged in the cultivation of the sugar cane who works with his own capital is never a loser; but one who has to pay high interest on loans seriously risks his property and his credit. Small loans are made at from 20 to 30 per cent, and the Iloilo companies, while they appear to loan at 15 per cent, really make considerable additional profit out of the stipulations which they insert in the contract of loan. These stipulations compel the debtor to sell his crops to his creditor, or through his agency on a commission basis of so much per cent, to order through his agency the goods needed on the estate, also on a commission basis, to transport the sugar in the creditor's boats," etc.

The Philippine Sugar Estates Development Company, Limited, which bought the lands of the Philippine friars, and is the largest producer on the islands, filed a protest with the Philippine Commission against the contemplated action of this Government, of dispossessing the friars and making some other disposition of their property. The protest and other papers relating to the same are reproduced on pages 2352 et seq. of the Hearings before the Senate Philippine Committee. On pages 2364–2365 appears the following:

"A trial and an experiment was made on the estate of Calamba, as follows: Four areas, equal to 400 square meters, were measured out and planted in the usual way with cane. It produced 160 arrobas, equal to 1,904 kilos, of cane, which, milled in an ordinary mill, gave 20 arrobas, or 3 piculs, of 65-degree current sugar. The hectare, or 2½ acres, tried produced 91.25 piculs of raw sugar. The land selected for the purpose was not of the best, as the padres desired to arrive at the truth of what the average land could actually produce.

"Taking the value of a picul of sugar at $3 Mexican, 91.25 piculs produce in value $273.75. The cost of cultivation, viz, interest on capital invested, laid out in carabaos, building, machinery, labor, milling, etc., panned out $160 per 2½ acres, or $1.75 per picul of sugar, leaving a net profit of $113.75."

From the above it appears that on an experimental tract, not of their best land, the cost of production and manufacture, including interest on the capital invested, was $1.75 Mexican per picul (140 pounds) of sugar, or 0.875 cent, which is equal to 0.625 cent per 100 pounds.

In the statement of this company (page 2365) it gives a table covering the entire sugar production on their lands in 1896, when they belonged to the friars. The table is as follows, omitting the column of rents paid to the padres, which does not concern the statement as to cost of production:

Location.	Acres.	Production.	Value.
		Piculs.
Calamba	12,680	301,880	$905,640
Santa Rosa	6,767	164,676	494,028
Binan	2,552	62,000	5,312
Total	21,999	528,556	1,586,268

Their experimental tract of 2½ acres produced 91.25 piculs of sugar, or 5,110 pounds per acre, about 2½ tons, which is the average in Cuba.

The average yield of their entire 21,999 acres in 1896, as per above table, was 3,363 pounds per acre.

Their entire expense, including interest on the investment, for growing cane on the 2½ acres and manufacturing it, 5,110 pounds of sugar, was $160 Mexican for the 2½ acres, or $64 per acre Mexican, equal to $32 gold.

Of course their expense per acre was not as great in working up the 3,363 pounds of sugar which they produced from each of their 21,999 acres as in working up the 5,110 pounds per acre off of their 2½ acres, but figuring that it was the same, we get the following results:

Acres in cane	21,999
Total expense of culture, manufacture, and interest on investment, at $32 gold per acre	$703,968
Value of product in gold ($1,586,268 silver)	$793,134
Net profit of operation (in gold)	$90,166
Total production in piculs of 140 pounds	528,556
Total production in pounds	73,997,840
Total cost per 100 pounds (in gold)	$0.95
Average selling price per 100 pounds (in gold)	$1.07
Net profit per 100 pounds (in gold)	$0.12

(From Monthly Summary of Commerce of the Philippine Islands, issue of February, 1902, Division of Insular Affairs, p. 766.)

Sugar.—According to the figures given above, sugar can be made in the Philippines at about one-third the cost of Hawaiian sugar—an item of considerable importance.

[From Report of Philippine Commission, January, 1900. Testimony of Edwin H. Warner, vol. 2, p. 16.]

"Q. What you mean is we want to open up to Bulacan and the hill country?

"A. Yes; so they could get supplies into Manila.

"Q. What would that country produce?

"A. Sugar, coffee, and rice.

"Q. How is sugar as a business proposition at present?

"A. Bright; they get the best prices.

"Q. When times are normal, for instance, not at present, as it is to-day, but in normal times, would it justify a man going into the business?

"A. It would pay him handsomely. Labor is going to be higher in this country than it has ever been before. The Indian on an estate is getting a less wage to-day than he ever did before; but things will eventually adjust themselves, so that he will get back to his old scale of living."

[From testimony of Neil MacLeod.]

"Q. Is sugar raising a profitable investment under the conditions that have existed for the last three or four years?

"A. Very profitable for people who look after their own interests and have Europeans in charge to keep the natives from pilfering, and to keep them at their work."

[From report of investigations in the islands of Cebu and Negros with the view to the selection of a site for a model sugar estate, by Oswald A. Steven. (Report of the Philippine Commission, p. 633.)]

"Upon receipt of my commission as special agent of the Interior Department, dated February 10, 1902, and also your letter of instructions, dated February 11, 1902, I proceeded, as per your instructions, to the islands of Cebu and Negros for the purposes of examining lands on these two islands and to select a suitable site for a model sugar estate experimental farm, and later, as per your telegram, to combine therewith an industrial school. * * *

"Sugar.—The tendency of the sugar planter in the Philippines is to grow sugar on the low, level lands, where the soil is largely the same over the entire islands, namely, a black, heavy soil or a brown loam. With an abundance of level land the planter has not been compelled to cultivate the higher mountain lands nor a different soil from that he is conversant with, but immediately following the natural increase in the cultivation of lands to sugar, from modern methods of agriculture and machinery, demonstrating the immense profits from the proper cultivation of sugar, these other soils and elevations will be brought under cultivation, and a cane seed especially adapted for such soil or elevation will have to be primarily grown by the experimental station, and hence the actual necessity for varied soils and elevations."

Pages 634, 635.: "Adjoining and in the vicinity of a model sugar estate there should be enough farms now raising sugar whose cane could be ground at the model mill, the returns from which, being carried to the credit of the mill, would pay off the indebtedness of the mill and farm in five and a half years at present prices of sugar and under present conditions.

"These mentioned requirements, together with the fact of suitable soil as to quality and depth, is what I am certain is necessary to the site upon which is built a model sugar mill and experimental station.

"Such locations, each of about 700 hectares, with Government land in the interior at the rear of such land, is at San Carlos, and for a second choice Bais.

"At both of these places I made a proposition as follows: That the sugar planters, or residents of the pueblo, would purchase such specified vacant land in their vicinity and deed it to the Government; also give rights of way for railroads over their plantations, which part of said road running over their land they should maintain to the satisfaction of the manager of the model farm; also that such plantations should contract with the model mill for the grinding of all their cane for a term of ten years from date of erection of mill, at a percentage of proceeds in sugar not to exceed 50 per cent; also that they, the planters, would enter into an agreement to keep their lands grown to cane during the term of ten years, and that such planters would cut their cane and supply it to the cars on track, at the written request or demand of the manager of the mill; then, and in the case of legally agreeing to perform these items of agreement, I would advise the agricultural department of the Philippine Islands to cause to be cultivated such lands deeded in all modern methods, and to erect such modern buildings, machinery, etc., for the extraction of sugar, and to enter into all agreements as a party thereto.

"Such mills to be not less than a 50-ton mill per day, with all the very latest appliances; also that the department should and would introduce and propagate new seed cane, beneficial to the lands of the islands, and sell the same after production, and would in every way advance and benefit by progressive methods the sugar and other industries; and that such land, if at any time the department decided to sell the same, should be first offered to previous owners of the land, at a price equal to the highest price offered, before being sold to other parties.

"As an assistance from a financial standpoint, in the matter of comparison between production now and what will be raised, I offer the following, which is correct, and based upon present prices, both here and in the United States:

Present.

	1,000	hectares of land.
	75	piculs sugar to 1 hectare.
	75,000	piculs, at 4½ pesos per picul.
	4½
	337,500	pesos. Deduct transportation to Iloilo, at 25 cents per picul:
	18,750	pesos.
Leaving	318,750	pesos, gross.

Future.

	2,500	acres.
	40	tons of sugar cane per acre.
	8)100,000	tons of cane, 8 of which to 1 of sugar:
	12,500	tons of sugar, at $65 gold, San Francisco.
	65
	$812,500
	43,750,	from which deduct transportation to San Francisco at $3.50 per ton:
	$768,750	multiplied by 2 equals 1,537,500 pesos, gross.

"If I were looking for a site for the establishment of a mill for commercial purposes alone, there are other places, namely, Isabela and Carbancalan, with their surrounding country, that are far better adapted for earning money alone, and which would be the finest investments in the sugar world; but I hold to the fact that you are wanting the lands suitable for diversified industries, with all possible natural advantages, and which will yet be revenue producers."

TOBACCO.

As regards the exportations of tobacco from the Philippines, they are gradually increasing, especially cigars, a fair quality of which is sold at 1 cent each. The total exportations of tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes during the past three years have been as follows:

1900	$2,182,022
1901	2,217,728
1902	2,501,367

These exportations are largely to oriental countries, very little of their tobacco having been imported into the United States, though with the recent reduction of tariff it is thought that Philippine tobacco and cigars will reach here in considerable quantities.

The tobacco industry of the United States is not only extensive, but widely distributed, there being no less than 43 States which are now producing tobacco. Of these 43 States, 21 had a tobacco acreage in 1900 in excess of 1,000 acres each, the total acreage under tobacco cultivation being 1,101,433, which produced 868,163,275 pounds, the farm value of which was $56,993,003.

Eighteen States produced over 1,000,000 pounds each, 8 States produced over 20,000,000 pounds each, and 3 States over 100,000,000 pounds each, the value of this tobacco ranging from 2 cents to $2 per pound.

The internal revenue collected from tobacco in 1900 amounted to $59,220,007.34. The average annual United States exports of tobacco from 1894 to 1898 were 279,675,076 pounds, valued at $23,751,026.

Our exports of tobacco were made to the following countries, the first five arranged in the order of the amount taken by them:

Great Britain,	Belgium,
Austria,	Holland,
Italy,	Africa,
France,	Mexico,
Spain,	Central America,
Germany,	West Indies,
Canada,	China,
Switzerland,	Japan.

The 1901–2 imports of tobacco amounted to 24,146,628 pounds, valued at $16,331,535. Our importations of tobacco are largely in cigars and the finer grades of tobacco for manufacturing into cigars. By the success of recent experiments conducted by the Department of Agriculture we are in a fair way to entirely cut out the importation of these finer grades of tobacco.

AMERICAN-GROWN HIGH-GRADE WRAPPERS.

To the uninitiated, the tobacco experiments constantly being made by the skilled corps of scientists of the Department of Agriculture are little known or appreciated.

The matters of soil analyses, seed beds, cultivation, fertilization, insects, diseases, pruning, topping manipulation, sweating, fermentation, sorting, grading, baling, and a multitude of other things which affect the yield, the grain, the color, the aroma, and the burning qualities of the leaf, all receive the closest attention of the best experts in the world.

In the United States we now produce tobacco of the farm value of over $80,000,000, a manufactured value of over $283,000,000, and from internal revenue turn into the United States Treasury $60,000,000 a year. The net internal-revenue receipts from tobacco from 1863 to 1801, inclusive, have amounted to the enormous sum of $1,270,461,623.18.

Our exports of tobacco now amount in value to over $26,000,000 annually, while our imports of unmanufactured leaf tobacco amount to but $16,000,000 worth. These imports are divided between filler and wrapper tobacco for cigars, the former coming largely from Cuba, and the latter from the island of Sumatra.

A few years ago the present Secretary of Agriculture, the Hon. James Wilson, determined that, if possible, we should grow in the United States all the tobacco we consume. He dispatched one of his tobacco scientists to the island of Sumatra to study their soil, climate, and processes for a year. On the return of this scientist the Secretary started a search for the American soil corresponding most closely with the Sumatra soil which produced their finest grades of tobacco. It was found in the Connecticut Valley and in Florida. Experimental stations were established in Connecticut with the purpose of producing the Sumatra climate. An acre of ground was tented over with mesh wire and cheese cloth, supported by posts 9 feet high, the cloth running down to the ground on all sides. Under this tent the Sumatra tobacco grew to perfection, and brought $2 a pound, as compared with a few cents a pound for tobacco grown near by in the open air.

The expense of production was about $700 per acre, but the next year planters covered 36 acres, and this year 1,000 acres will be covered.

The Secretary of Agriculture is firmly convinced that within five to eight years we shall be growing all of the $6,000,000 worth of Sumatra leaf which we are now annually importing.

Not content with the success which attended the efforts of his experts in growing our wrapper tobacco, the Secretary has since had his experts investigating the possibilities of producing the fine Cuban filler tobacco. Favorable soils were discovered in Ohio and Texas, which last year produced such satisfactory results that the Secretary confidently predicts that within a very few years we shall not be obliged to send a dollar abroad for tobacco, but will produce at home the very choicest grades.

It would thus seem that within a comparatively short time the American market for foreign tobacco will be a thing of the past.

The following tables show the extent to which the home industry has grown:

AMERICAN TOBACCO FARMS.

PHILIPPINE VERSUS AMERICAN WAGES.

From the foregoing figures it will be seen that there are 107,932 persons employed in the American cigar and cigarette factories, and that the total amount paid for their services was $45,638,382. This is an average of $422.84 each per annum, or $1.36⅔ per day for three hundred and nine working days.

From the United States Government figures published elsewhere under wage rates in Manila it will be seen that there are 31 cigar and cigarette factories in Manila, which employ 12,168, as is shown by the Government figures. These Manila employees receive a daily wage of 35½ cents, or a fraction over 25 per cent of what is paid for labor in the same class of establishments in the United States.

TOBACCO.

[From report of Edward W. Harden, special commissioner of the United States, Treasury Document No. 2076, November, 1898.]

"Tobacco leaf, cigars, and cigarettes have formed a considerable item in the exports of the Philippine Islands. Until the year 1882 the Spanish Government had a monopoly of the tobacco industry, and much of the discontent that existed up to that time among the natives was due to the tobacco monopoly laws which were on the statute books and the rigorous manner in which the officials enforced them. The natives in those sections where tobacco could be produced advantageously were compelled to plant a certain amount of land in tobacco, and the entire product of the islands was required to be delivered to the Government warehouses, where payment was made at prices arbitrarily fixed by the Spanish Government. Each unmarried native who cultivated tobacco was required to set out 4,000 plants each year, and each married man was required to set out double that number. There were Government inspectors who supervised the planting, cultivation, and harvesting of the crop, and who also required that it be packed in a certain way and shipped at a certain time to the Government warehouses.

"The natives were not permitted to use the tobacco which they grew. Penalties were provided for those who smoked cigars or cigarettes, and it was not an uncommon thing for a native engaged in the raising of tobacco to be put in jail for smoking a few leaves which he had raised himself, and which he had rolled into a crude cigar or made into a cigarette. According to the evidence of foreigners, inspectors often arrested natives on a charge of smoking their own tobacco when, as a matter of fact, the charge was entirely unfounded. The price paid by the Government for tobacco under the monopoly was about one-half what is now paid. During a good portion of the time the monopoly was in force, particularly the latter part, payment was made in scrip, redeemable at the option of the Government. For a number of years this scrip was paid with a fair degree of promptitude, but after a time payment was deferred for so long a period that it often sold for one-third of its face value. Speculators did a good business in buying this scrip from the natives at from 10 to 40 per cent of its face value, and some of the fortunes made by officeholders, it is claimed, came from this system.

"The injustice worked through the tobacco monopoly in the Philippine Islands became so great, and the natives had become so incensed over the unjust treatment accorded them, that finally the Spanish Government was compelled to end the monopoly. An investigation was made and a royal edict was issued under which the monopoly ended in December, 1882. The cultivators of leaf tobacco were freed from Government supervision on July 1 of that year. The tobacco business is now conducted as any other industry in the islands, and large manufactories have been erected for the making of cigars and cigarettes. This is one of the important industries of Manila, which practically controls the manufacture and export of tobacco, and where a great many people are constantly employed in the factories. From its monopoly of the tobacco industry the Spanish Government derived a revenue which, for several years preceding the ending of the monopoly, averaged about $4,000,000 a year. The number of officials employed in this branch of the service alone exceeded 400. The cutting off of this source of revenue proved so serious a blow to the finances of the islands that it was found necessary to increase taxes in other ways. License fees were increased, the cedula personales, or head tax, was considerably increased, and an export tax on leaf and manufactured tobacco was put in force.

"The cigars manufactured in Manila are sold for a very small price. The average price lists of the various manufacturers in Manila show a range of from $10 to $75, silver, a thousand. The ordinary cigar of Manila, of fair quality, sells for about $2, silver, a hundred, or less than 1 cent apiece figured on our money basis. There is very little tobacco and few cigars shipped from the Philippines to the United States. Freight charges, customs dues, and internal-revenue taxes make the cost of the cigars so high that they can not compete with our domestic cigars. In China, Japan, and India, Manila cigars are used almost exclusively, and there is a constant increase in the export of both leaf and manufactured tobacco.

"Exports of tobacco leaf during the year 1897 were considerably in excess of those of 1896. The total exports for the year were 309,585 quintals of 46 kilograms, or 101.42 pounds to the quintal (30,789,590 pounds), as compared with exports of 198,978 for 1896, or an increase of 110,607 quintals. Principal shipments were as follows:

	Quintals.
Europe (continent)	245,436
Great Britain	51,635
Singapore and India	9,734
China and Japan	2,748
Australia	32

"Of the shipments to the continent of Europe nine-tenths went to Spain. Of the shipments of tobacco to Great Britain only one-fifth was for consumption in that country, the remainder being manufactured and reshipped to Portugal, Sweden, and other European countries.

"Shipments of cigars during the year 1897 showed a falling off as compared with the shipments for the preceding year, owing to the fact that many of the operatives in Manila having joined the ranks of the insurgents. The total shipments of cigars for the year 1897 were 169,465,000, as compared with 194,136,000 for 1896, a decrease of 24,671,000. Principal shipments were as follows:

China and Japan	58,420,000
Singapore and India	37,310,000
Europe (continent)	30,500,000
Great Britain	24,230,000
Australia	16,300,000
United States and Canada (Atlantic)	2,490,000
United States (Pacific)	183,000

[From report of Schurman-Worcester Philippine Commission, January, 1900, vol. 4, p. 51.]

"This is without doubt the principal Philippine industry which, on account of the excellence and cheapness of its products, can compete with those of more advanced nations. In general it may be said that the tobacco industry since the abolition of the monopoly has increased in all regions to an extraordinary degree, both in the quantity and quality of the product. As a result the Habana methods of gathering and curing the leaf and manufacturing the product have become popular throughout the country. A full knowledge of the fermentation or preparation of the leaf is still lacking, or perhaps this work is carried out under poor conditions, so that the leaf does not have the aroma and strength of the Habana. In many parts of the islands the manufacture of tobacco is carried on with modern machinery. More women are employed in the tobacco factories than men.

"The samples of manufactured tobacco shown in the general exposition of the Philippine Islands in 1887 indicated great advances in the manufacture of this product. The beautiful containers in which this tobacco was exhibited followed the models of those used in Cuba.

"The General Tobacco Company of the Philippines has a factory in operation near Manila known by the name 'Flor de la Isabella.' This building has 12,000 square meters of floor space and gives employment to 4,000 persons, almost all women. This factory uses the best of selected tobacco from Isabela and Cagayan. The cigarette machines in this factory are worked by steam. All of the containers used are made here and all the labels are printed here. The factory communicates with the Pasig River by a canal crossing the company's land, which was opened at the company's own expense. The company owns in the province of Isabela two important plantations, which produce tobacco of a superior grade, due to the vigilance shown in cultivating and gathering. In all the towns in tobacco-producing regions of the Philippines the company has agents, these being dependent upon a central agent in each province."

[From Schurman-Worcester Philippine Commission Report, p. 12, vol. 4.]

"Philippine tobacco represents now substantial wealth and a flattering future, because the tobacco business rests upon a solid basis, which is the excellence of the leaf, only excelled in the whole world by the justly celebrated Habana tobacco. For the present, limiting ourselves to the prepared leaf or leaf tobacco, we shall say that from 552,000 pesos' worth exported in 1884 the exportation during the past five years has risen to about 2,000,000 pesos, without counting the value of manufactured tobacco, which is considerable.

"These figures and this gradual increase observed in the exportation of our tobacco in the midst of the general crisis through which almost all the producing countries have been passing, overwhelmed with stocks larger than the demands of universal consumption, offer a legitimate and very pleasing outlook for the Philippines, because they clearly demonstrate that the only reason for this increased demand for our tobacco is its marked superiority."

[From Report of the Taft Philippine Commission, October 15, 1901, vol. 1, p. 49.]

"On the recent trip of the Commission up the Cagayan Valley, in Luzon, inquiry was made as to what percentage of the tobacco lands of that region was under cultivation, and we were informed that practically all the good lands were cultivated. We inquired what constituted good tobacco lands, and were told that those lands fertilized annually by the river were considered good because they were thus annually fertilized and never became exhausted. Upon asking as to lands not annually overflowed, we were informed that they were not considered valuable, as they would only produce tobacco for about twelve years without enrichment. There can be no reasonable doubt that judicious use of fertilizers on ground which grows sugar cane and other valuable products would be far more than repaid by increased crops."

[From statement of Governor Taft before Insular Committee, 1902, Record, p. 168.]

"There are some large haciendas there also. The Tobacalera has a large plantation there, and there are 60,000 acres owned by the Augustinian Order, conveyed to it by a recent governor-general; but there are a large number of small tobacco-land owners, and on their land they raise two successive crops of corn, the corn ripening in two and one-half months, and then the seventh month is used for tobacco on the same land."

[From the report of William H. Johnston, governor of the Province of Isabela, January, 1902, hearings before the Philippine Committee, p. 1519.]

"The one industry of the people is the culture of tobacco, once enforced by the Spanish Government, and now so thoroughly natural to the people that they neglect other crops which would, with tobacco, render life more endurable to them. They cultivate some corn, and in Cordon alone a little rice, but the planting of other articles of food would cheapen the cost of life and enhance its enjoyment. For some years it has been customary for the large tobacco companies to bring Ilocanos to their haciendas under contract to remain thereon for periods of years. There have been many questions between these tenants and the administrators of the haciendas, with a tendency of the former to escape the burden of their contracts by leaving the haciendas.

"While the private landowner may frequently sell his tobacco at a price better than that paid on the hacienda, where the old Spanish tariff is still maintained, his expenses are greater. But with the advent of American civil government most of the tenants believe they should become private landowners; and their right to choose their own road to perdition con not be denied, although it is little understood by the European agents in control of the haciendas. In addition to the haciendas, all companies employ many buyers of tobacco and each Chinese storekeeper buys tobacco. The Spanish tobacco buyers attempt to keep the purchase price down to the old tariff ordered by Spain and this year have refused to buy tobacco until it has been arranged by the owner in lots according to its classification. The Chinese have generally bought tobacco regardless of arrangement, but it is charged that they loan money at such exorbitant rates of interest that they can offer their debtors liberal terms in order to extinguish a debt which is represented largely by interest.

$60 GOLD PER ACRE PROFIT ON TOBACCO.

[From Taft Philippine Commission Report of October 15, 1901, p. 209.]

"Don Rafael Maramag, presidente of Ilagan.—Replying to questions, he stated the principal products of Isabela to be tobacco, corn, and palay, the tobacco being the most important resource of the province. The tobacco crop was very good this year. The land was mostly in small holdings of from 1 to 1½ hectares. He thought a hectare of tobacco land would produce, in an ordinary season, about 60 bales of tobacco, which, at the present price of $6.50 per bale, would bring about $195 gold. Of this about $300 Mexican would be profit. (A hectare equals 2½ acres. $300 Mexican is equal to $150 gold. This shows a profit of $60 gold per acre.)"

CITRUS FRUIT.

In the census year 1899 there were in bearing in the United States 9,916,387 orange and lemon trees, which produced 7,048,237 boxes of fruit. This fruit, together with other subtropical fruit, the latter of little importance, was valued at $8,549,863, while the value of all imports of oranges and lemons was $4,105,858.36 in 1902.

It will thus be seen that we are now producing about two-thirds of the citrus fruit which we consume, and when Florida regains her former position we will be able to supply at home the entire American consumption.

Acre for acre, American citrus-fruit orchards represent more value in land, trees, and labor in bringing them into bearing than any other soil, and once in bearing the expense of maintenance is exceedingly large.

In the Philippines the trees grow wild, receive no care, and yet produce fruit in such quantities as to be shipped out by the hundreds of tons.

Should that fruit be allowed free access or approximately free access to our markets, it is perhaps but a question of time when the adoption of American horticultural skill, aided by cheap labor, immunity from frost, and refrigerator boats would enable the Philippine producers to drive the California and Florida producers out of business.

[From preliminary report on the work of the bureau of agriculture in cooperation with the military department in Batangas Province, by W. J. Boudreau, Report of the Philippine Commission, November 1, 1902, p. 641.]

"I have made inquiries in regard to the chief agricultural products and find that at present the only articles exported from Batangas in any quantities are sugar and oranges; but the people have absolutely no conception of horticulture, and although hundreds of tons of oranges are exported the industry could be greatly extended and the profits increased if the natives could be educated to the point of pruning their trees and otherwise taking care of their orchards. Improved varieties from Japan would also contribute much to the welfare of the people."

[From report of the secretary of the interior to the Philippine Commission for the year ending August 31, 1902, p. 304.]

"Citrus fruit.—Excellent native oranges are produced in the province of Batangas, in the Calamianes Islands, and elsewhere. The trees, which are often large and vigorous, seldom receive any care, nor has any systematic effort been made to improve the quality of the fruit, which sells readily at a good price. There is every reason to believe that improved citrus fruits can be successfully introduced."

CITRUS FRUIT AND TEA.

In addition to agricultural products already being exported and which are elsewhere treated separately, may be mentioned tea, lemons, oranges, and bananas.

The first Taft report says in regard to tea:

"Attention is especially called to this product; grows well in highlands, but aroma not yet tested; Chinese or Japanese needed to prepare the crop."

In the record of the testimony before the Philippine Committee appears the annual report of Mr. William F. Peck, governor of the province of Benguet, from which I quote:

"Rice is raised in large quantities; with the camote form the principal products of the Igorrotes of Benguet. The climate and the soil here, however, will produce anything that can be grown in the Temperate Zone.

"On the government property are growing and fruiting now the coffee and the tea, the lemon, orange, and banana. All States vegetables can be grown here, and I have plucked and eaten as delicious strawberries here as ever I did in America."

MINING.

Several valuable minerals have been discovered in the islands, including gold, copper, iron, and coal, but the extent of the deposits have not been ascertained.

The only mineral of which large deposits are said to have been discovered and shipments of any quantities have been made is copper.

The shipments of copper from the Philippines—not stated whether copper ore, ingots, or old copper—have been as follows during the past three years:

Year.	Pounds.	Value.
1900		$35,230
1901	244,635	24,439
1902	205,707	18,935

The value of United States importations of unmanufactured copper during the past three years have been as follows:

Year.	Value.
1900	$15,107,713.98
1901	20,223,610.52
1902	24,865,300.58

In his first report, page 48, Governor Taft says:

"Mineral wealth and the mining industry.—Present indications are that the near future will bring a great change in the mining industry. According to the chief of the mining bureau, there are now some twelve hundred prospectors and practical miners scattered through the different islands of the archipelago. Of these, probably 90 per cent are Americans. They are for the most part men of good character. They are pushing their way into the more inaccessible regions, furnishing their own protection, and doing prospecting of a sort and to an extent never before paralleled in the history of the Philippine Islands. The result is that our knowledge of the mineral resources of the group is rapidly increasing. When all due allowance is made for prospectors' exaggerations, it is not too much to say that the work thus far done has demonstrated the existence of many valuable mineral fields. The provinces of Benguet, Lepanto, and Bontoc in particular form a district of very great richness.

"Copper.—In the province of Lepanto, at Mancayan and Suyoc, there are immense deposits of gray copper and copper sulphide, and running through this ore are veins of gold-bearing quartz, which is more or less disintegrated, and in places is extremely rich. This copper ore has been assayed, and the claim is made that it runs on the average 8 per cent copper, while gold is often present in considerable quantities. The deposits are so extensive as to seem almost inexhaustible."

When before the House Committee on Insular Affairs (1902), Governor Taft said, page 203:

"The mineral resources of the islands are great. There is said to be a copper vein that is as large as any in the world up here [indicating on the map]. It is estimated that there are about 1,500 American prospectors in the islands. They are an excellent body of men, and they have gone all over the islands."

PROTEST OF THE CHINESE MINISTER.

[From letter by Mr. Wu Ting-fang to the Secretary of State, under date of September 12, 1899. Senate Document No. 397, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, p. 4.]

CHINESE.

"Having been officially informed of the existence and enforcement of the military order of September 26, 1898, applying the Chinese-exclusion laws of the United States to the Philippine Islands, I now present to you, and through you to the President and Congress of the United States, the most earnest and solemn protest of the Imperial Chinese Government against the existence and enforcement of the order as contrary to international law and comity, in violation of the spirit of existing treaties, and in utter disregard of the friendly relations which should exist between the two Governments."

EXTRACTS FROM FIRST PHILIPPINE COMMISSION REPORT.

EXAMPLE OF PHILIPPINE WAGE RATE (VOL. 1, P. 54).

The following is a statement of the annual expenses of a pueblo of about 20,000 people:

	Per year.
Secretary, at $8 per month	$96
First writer, at $6 per month	72
Two second writers, at $4 per month	96
Third writer, at $3 per month	36
Two alguaciles, at $2 per month	48
Total	348
Six cuadrilleros (rural police), at $1.25 per month	90

OPPOSED TO CHINESE (VOL. 1, P. 151).

Comment of the Commission on an extract from report of Señor Norzaray, formerly governor-general, on giving up his command in the Philippines:

"This is the most interesting part of the paper of Señor Norzaray, in that he strongly argues that it would be better for Spain to be impoverished by taking energetic and saving measures against the Chinese than that the Philippines should be ruined by foreign commercial absorption."

CHINESE POPULATION OF THE ISLANDS (VOL. I, P. 153).

There are about 40,000 Chinese in the archipelago, of whom 22,000 or 23,000 live in Manila.

CHINESE WOULD COME IN BY HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS (VOL. I, P. 154).

If Chinese immigration to the islands were unrestricted, it is thought that many hundreds of thousands of Chinese would come to them.

After peaceful American occupation labor would be in great demand, especially for the mines, in which the islands are rich.

NATIVES ARE STRONGLY OPPOSED TO THE CHINESE.

It is sufficient to say that the great majority of the natives are strongly opposed to Chinese immigration. It has sometimes been said that the natives hate the Chinese for their virtues, but this is not true. There are as many wicked and vicious Chinese pro rata as there are natives. The Chinese are notorious gamblers, and there are many criminals among them.

It can not be doubted, we think, that the chief reason for the prevailing and pronounced antipathy for the Chinese grows out of labor competition. The Chinese keep prices down and are in many respects better laborers than the natives, who are inclined to indulge in gentlemanly vices and to take time for pleasure, and who love dress and display. * * *

PEOPLE WHO DO NOT EMPLOY CHINESE DO NOT WANT THEM.

There was considerable evidence taken by the Commission at Manila to the effect that the Chinese should be excluded. The people who employ Chinese in business want them to come in, but those who do not employ them are opposed to their admission. There was testimony before us to the point that the Chinese take out of the country everything they can; that they spend little in the country because they live on little; that they intermarry with the Filipino women, and that they produce a race which does not furnish good citizens; that many of the great troubles of the islands are caused by Chinese and their descendants. Most of the witnesses concur in stating that it would not be advisable to let the Chinese come into the country without restriction. The natives do not like them, and their presence frequently causes trouble.

NATIVES BUILT THE ONLY RAILROAD IN THE ISLANDS.

It was stated before us that the natives built the railroad to Dagupan. The production of rice along its tributary territory has increased nearly 100 per cent, owing to the opening of the country through which the railroad went. We believe that in many parts of the archipelago the native is quite capable of developing his own country.

CHINESE DROVE OUT NATIVE SKILLED ARTISANS.

Some years ago nearly all the artisans, such as carpenters, stone masons, builders, and bricklayers, were natives; now they are nearly all Chinese. You can hardly find a native carpenter or bricklayer.

CHINAMAN USEFUL BUT A GREAT DRAIN ON THE COUNTRY (VOL. 2, P. 17).

[From testimony of Edwin H. Warner.]

Q. I would like to know your ideas about what restriction ought to be placed upon bringing Chinese into this country, if any. You are a business man here, and I would like to know your opinion from a business man's standpoint.

A. It is a very difficult problem, that. The first thing that you have got to take into consideration is that in this province you will find that the Chinese are very unpopular; on the other hand, in other provinces they are popular. The Chinaman is very useful so far as Manila goes—that is, from a business standpoint. He is a very useful man because he does most of the cooly work.

Q. That same remark would apply to Iloilo and Cebu? I mean the general desirability of admitting him there.

A. If you take the Chinaman here as a rule, he is a very good distributer of merchandise; that is to say, they have had the whole of the import business; that has all been in the hands of the Chinese. On the other hand, the Chinese are a great drain on the country.

Q. You mean they do not add to the wealth of the islands?

A. No; they invest nothing here.

NEVER SHORT OF FILIPINO LABOR (VOL. 2, P. 18).

Q. I want to know whether you think well of them; whether it would be necessary to have them here. Suppose the mines were opened up and railroads built, and large undertakings in the plantations started, would it be practicable to get native labor that would be able to run these things without the Chinese?

A. We have a mine in Bulacan, and we were never short of men.

Q. You used Indians entirely?

A. These Tagalogs. When the railway was built there was never a lack of laborers, and they used natives. In some parts of the islands there is a shortage of labor.

NATIVES NOT LAZY, BUT HARD WORKING.

Q. I have read in books that the natives are lazy, and that if you started a large industry you might any day find yourself short of laborers. How is that?

A. No; some of these men have been working for ten years and have never missed a day. They are the most docile men to work.

Q. Is that true of the Visayan as well as of the Tagalog provinces?

A. Yes.

Q. How is it at Tarlac? Is it easy to get laborers there?

A. Yes; sometimes it is easy, and at other times it is difficult.

Q. The Bohol natives have a pretty good reputation for industry, have they not?

A. Yes; and the Ilocos people. In the harvest time they go down south and take in all the crops.

Q. They are a very hard-working people?

A. Yes; and then they go up north and do the same.

Q. I have been told that you could not get natives to do cooly work, such as unloading steamers, etc.

A. Oh, yes, you can.

Q. Do any Chinese women come here?

A. No; they are not allowed to. That is the trouble.

Q. That promotes a half-breed population?

A. Yes.

Q. What kind of citizens do they make?

A. The Chinese half-breeds are causing all the trouble.

WOULD GIVE CHINESE FREE ENTRANCE (VOL. 2, P. 34).

[From testimony of Neil MacLoud.]

Q. Was there any sentiment against their coming and going?

A. They did all the cooly work and the natives had no chance, because the natives did twice the work the Indio would do.

Q. They supplanted the Indians in hard work?

A. Yes.

Q. Should the Chinese be excluded, in your opinion, from this island?

A. They should not be excluded; they should be allowed free entrance.

Q. Wherever the Chinese go in the world they supplant everyone else. You go to Singapore and you find 20,000 or 30,000 of them there; you go to Colombo and you find the same thing. They undersell everybody, and they work cheaper than any other person; and after they have made a certain amount of money they return to China. Under this statement do you think the Chinese should be allowed to come in without restriction?

A. He should not be excluded; but I think special legislation is wanted to let a large number of Chinese in. They should be obliged to work in the fields or do cooly work, and licenses for trading Chinese should be restricted.

Q. Have the Chinese who have come here in the past developed into traders?

A. A great many of them have. As soon as they get a few dollars, if they are coolies they develop into something else.

Q. How many of them?

A. In Manila now a very few, according to what used to be. Eighty thousand here in Manila.

Q. Is that the normal number?

A. We have had half a million Chinamen here in my time.

Q. What, here in Manila?

A. In Manila and the provinces. We have had 120,000 here in Manila and half a million all over the islands.

Q. You have had 120,000 in Manila?

A. Yes, in Manila alone, in my time.

Q. In what years?

A. The sixties and seventies. I am quite an old stager here.

Q. Any Portuguese?

A. Very, very few.

Q. If the Visayan natives will do their work, and the natives of the northern and southern sections of Luzon will do the work in those sections, you would need Chinese only to take the place of these Tagalogs; isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't it quite likely that the Tagalogs will become industrious under new legislative and industrial conditions?

A. Yes, if you keep them in place and at work—as long as they are kept at work. I think after you have read this paper which I handed you, you will be able to ask me some questions relating to the Chinese question. Of course I am talking of going ahead with work on roads and railroads. You have got to make roads where they do not now exist, and you have to make railroads where they do not exist. This is the finest country for railroads that I ever saw.

EASY TO GET ALL NATIVE LABORERS NEEDED (VOL. 2, P. 115).

[From testimony of Adolph Von Bosch.]

NOTE.—Mr. Von Bosch is a Belgian and has lived in the island for ten years past. He speaks French, German, Italian, Spanish, New Greek, Holland Dutch, and Tagalog.

Q. In your own experience, have you had serious trouble in getting on with the native workmen? Have you had any difficulty in getting the right sort of labor?

A. I have never had the slighest trouble with anyone.

Q. Are you able to get all the help you want?

A. If I only say I want to go anywhere, there are 40 men ready to go.

WAGE RATE $60 TO $100 MEXICAN, $30 TO $60 GOLD, A YEAR.

Q. How much a month or year do your woodcutters average in wages?

A. A woodcutter would not earn more than between $60 and $100 Mexican a year, and that would be paid him in part in dry goods, gin, cigars, and rice.

ACTUAL COST OF LABOR $15 TO $30 A YEAR.

Q. And this sum which you have mentioned is what the dry goods, etc., would actually cost you?

A. Oh, no; there is 50 per cent profit for me on that. Of course, if you want the truth I will tell you. That profit is on dry goods and cigars and manufactured goods, but not on rice. The profit on dry goods and cigars is 50 per cent.

Q. I wanted to know if this statement you made as to the value of the earnings of the natives was the actual cost to you or to them.

A. No; that refers to the value of his work.

CHINESE ARE NOT HONEST AS MERCHANTS (VOL. 2, P. 178).

[From testimony of Señor Legarda, capitalist and native of Manila.]

Q. You are pretty well acquainted with the Chinese, I suppose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been here a long time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of citizens do they make?

A. In the commercial competition in which they enter they cause a loss in all the objects which they have anything to do with.

Q. What do you mean by that—cause a loss? Do they undersell other people?

A. They discredit the products. They adulterate the products.

Q. You think they are not honest merchants?

A. I think not.

CHINESE ARE GOOD LABORERS.

Q. How are they with regard to labor, whether they work well or not?

A. Oh, yes; they work better than the Indian.

Q. How are they as agricultural laborers?

A. Very good; but they do not engage in that because they get greater remuneration in business.

Q. Are there many of them who labor on farms and plantations?

A. None; they are all engaged in commerce.

* * * * * * *

FILIPINOS WOULD DO THE WORK, BUT AT GREATER COST (VOL. 2, P. 179).

Q. Would not the Filipino work if the Chinese were not here?

A. Yes; but labor would be a little more dear. The Indian would not do everything that the Chinaman does.

Q. Wouldn't he do it by degrees if there wasn't anybody else to do the work?

A. Yes; little by little.

FILIPINO SENTIMENT OPPOSED TO CHINAMEN.

Q. What is the general sentiment of the Filipinos as regards the Chinese?

A. Terribly against the Chinese.

Q. Then if the Chinese were excluded from coming here, leaving those here who are here now, you think the Filipinos would approve of it?

A. I believe so; yes, indeed, it would be a very good political measure.

NATIVES SHOULD NOT BE IMPROVED OFF THE FACE OF THE EARTH (VOL. 2, P. 179).

[From testimony of Charles Ilderton Barnes, partner in the firm of Warner, Barnes & Co., exporters, resident of Manila for twenty-four years.]

Q. You think, then, that there are laborers enough already in the country to meet immediate demands in the development of the country and the building of roads and railways?

A. I think so, unless there are more people killed than I know of. I think so. You know the native in the interior, where he is not contaminated by bad influences, is not a bad sort of man; he is pretty honest. You don't generally lose much money with the natives, which is not usual with the Spanish and mestizos. I think he ought to have a chance to populate these islands, and we should not "improve" him off the face of the earth with some combination of Chinese and natives, which we know does not produce a very satisfactory result.

CHINESE SHOULD BE LET IN AS BEASTS OF BURDEN.

[From testimony of H. L. Higgins, engineer and general manager of the railway company—road 122 miles long—resident of Manila since 1887.]

Q. Will you give us your views on the Chinese question, whether they ought to be admitted or not, and why? We have taken a good deal of proof on that subject.

A. If the Chinese come in here and are allowed to trade they will simply spoil everything. If admitted here the same as in Java, under the contract system of three years, and used more or less as beasts of burden for cooly labor, then it will be all right for contract work. It will be all right if they could be brought in here for contract work.

Q. And then sent out when the contract was complied with.

A. Yes; because it is just a question now whether the Indian will work, or, if he does work, whether he won't ask exorbitant wages, wages in excess of the amount that his labor is worth.

ADMISSION OF CHINESE WOULD COMPEL NATIVES TO WORK FOR ALMOST NOTHING.

Q. If there were no Chinese here would the Filipinos work?

A. The Chinese are good workers, and of course if they came here the Filipino people would find their bread was being taken away from them, and they would be compelled to work for almost nothing.

* * * * * * *

NATIVES BUILT THE RAILROAD.

Q. How was your road built—by Chinese labor?

A. No; Indian labor. We tried the Chinese on one section, and they didn't do good work. They would not work in water. The Indian will work in water better than a Chinaman.

WAGE RATE 16½ CENTS A DAY.

Q. Did you have any difficulty with the wages of your laborers?

A. No; our general wages ran up to about 32½ cents a day Mexican (16½ cents American).

Q. Do you feed the men in addition to that?

A. No; just pay them at the end of the week.

Q. Will the Indian do as much work as the Chinaman in the same time?

A. On a day wage they will; on piecework the Chinaman works like a slave, but put him on day work and he won't do anything.

NATIVES WOULD MURDER THE CHINESE.

[From testimony of Jose Camps, vol. 2, p. 342, coffee planter and hotel keeper.]

Q. In your opinion, what action ought to be taken in regard to the Chinese coming here?

A. I think you will find that in the provinces you will have to treat the question in a different way. For instance, in the province of Cavite it would be too much responsibility to protect him against the natives. The natives would murder him.

Q. You are now speaking of agricultural laborers?

A. I am speaking of agricultural laborers.

* * * * * * *

CHINESE DRIVE NATIVES OUT (VOL. 2, P. 344).

Q. They (the natives) do the lighterage work?

A. Yes.

Q. And they drive the carabaos?

A. In the last ten years the Chinese have been steadily forcing them out of that business and getting it for themselves. Previously, when I first came here, every carabao driver was a native; now more than half are Chinese.

ADVENTUROUS AMERICAN EXPLOITATION SHOULD BE PREVENTED (VOL. 2, P. 352).

[From testimony of Dr. Frank S. Bourns, practicing physician.]

Q. Do you think the idea of exploiting this country for the benefit of adventurous Americans ought to be discouraged?

A. Entirely.

* * * * * * *

WOULD NOT ADMIT THE CHINESE—NATIVE HAS HIGHER ASPIRATIONS (VOL. 2, P. 367).

Q. What is your opinion as to the admission of the Chinese?

A. I do not believe that the Chinese should be allowed to come in here without restriction.

Q. You can go on and state your restrictions, please, Doctor. It is a serious question, and one in which I am greatly interested, on account of my very long residence in China and my great desire not to do any injustice to these people. What restrictions do you recommend?

A. We have promised the Filipinos that we will establish a government here for the Filipinos. Just at the present time there are some difficulties on the labor question in the provinces on account of the erroneous ideas that the Filipinos have in their heads as to what liberty is. They consider it a license, and that equality means that the laboring man is as good as the employer—false notions which I think can be gotton out of their heads in a comparatively short time. I believe that the result of our presence here will be to raise the price of labor to a point where it will be worth while to the Filipino to apply himself to work, and that he will be better contented than he is now, and that we should not, therefore, admit without restriction labor which tends rather to make the Filipino's wages less than they are at present or than they have been. Then, too, we know that the Chinaman does not leave his money in this country. His object is to acquire money and return to China, so that it is taken out of the country immediately. He is more frugal than the native, although the native is ordinarily able to get along with a very small amount. The native has higher aspirations than the Chinaman; he does like to live well if he can. I believe, therefore, if by our policy we can better the condition of the Filipino workingman that it would make him so much more contented with American rule.

Q. You believe he would work if the Chinaman were not here?

A. Yes, I do. There would be some difficulty for some months.

Q. You believe, then, that the labor question has the same aspects here as at home?

A. Yes. I do not place the Chinaman on as high a plane as I do the native.

Q. Don't you think our contiguity to China would result in bringing over many thousands or millions of them, if they were not restricted as to their coming?

A. Yes, I do.

ALL MANUAL LABOR PERFORMED BY NATIVES (VOL. 2, P. 417).

[From testimony of Senor Luzuriaga, resident of Bacolod, island of Negros.]

Q. In that island (Negros) do the Chinese do manual labor, or are they shopkeepers?

A. No, sir; all the manual labor there is done by natives. The Chinese are shopkeepers. Some of them are plantation owners. In Iloilo, some Chinese are day laborers, but they were brought by contract from China.

WOULD ADMIT 4,000,000 CHINESE IN ORDER TO BRING NATIVES TO THEIR SENSES AND MAKE THEM WORK FOR A "REASONABLE LIVING WAGE" (VOL. 2, P. 451).

[From Exhibit 5.]

There is room for three to four millions of Chinese comfortably, while only about 200,000 are the present estimate. Chinese coolies and the buffalo are two essentials. The place can not get on without them, and were there any roadmaking, railway, or agricultural work being done, at least a million of Chinese would be absorbed right off, and the next year another million, and so on until the population be half Chinese—to make the natives come to their senses and work for a reasonable "living wage."

* * * * * * *

CHEAP LABOR THE LIFEBLOOD OF THE PHILIPPINES.

As before said, cheap labor is the lifeblood of this country, and the natives being few (only 8,000,000), and these few being disinclined to work, there is no solution of the difficulty except a free admission of Chinese labor, and the Chinaman is the most industrious and most economical of known Asiatics.

EXTRACTS FROM SECOND PHILIPPINE COMMISSION REPORT, TAFT COMMISSION, OCTOBER 15, 1901.

THE LABOR PROBLEM (VOL. 1, P. 27).

The Commission is not prepared to make recommendations in regard to the admission of Chinese as laborers. It is very difficult to secure good labor in the islands, especially skilled labor. Labor such as is secured is irregular, poor, and much more expensive for work done than in the United States. There is not the slightest danger of pauper competition in these islands with the laborers of the United States. How much of the difficulty is due to unsettled conditions and how much is inherent in the race we can not say, but we think the tranquilizing of the provinces will certainly make labor better and easier to get, though it will long be unsatisfactory when measured by American standards. Throughout the archipelago wages have doubled and in many cases trebled since 1898. In too many instances the immediate result of doubling the wage is to induce the laborer to work just half as many days.

LABOR IN THE PROVINCES.

The following items are taken from testimony given before the Commission on its trip through the various islands of the archipelago:

LABOR 12½ CENTS TO 25 CENTS GOLD PER DAY (P. 72).

Señor Gaspar Zerbito, presidente of Masbate, said that day laborers in the interior towns got from 25 to 50 cents per day, including food, while in Masbate they were paid 1 peso per day, without food. Stated that this had been the wage in Masbate since American occupation. It was formerly 25 to 50 cents, with food. The food consisted of rice and fish, worth about 10 cents a day.

LABOR 25 CENTS GOLD PER DAY (P. 73).

Señor Pedro de Jesus, presidente of Milagros, stated that the people of his town gained a livelihood by agriculture and by fishing. The daily wage was 50 cents per day, with food. Daily wage before Americans came was 30 cents.

LABOR 12½ CENTS GOLD PER DAY.

Señor Josa de la Rosa, of Magdalena: People live mostly on tubers, which they raise. Cut wood for their own use only. Had no cattle there since the plague. Daily wage, 25 cents Mexican, same as formerly.

LABOR 25 CENTS GOLD PER DAY.

Señor Valentin Caparina, presidente of San Augustin: Daily wage, 50 cents, with food. Wages before miners came, 25 cents.

LABOR, 25 CENTS GOLD PER DAY.

Senor Perfecto Asuero, presidente of Mandaon: Cattle raising was principal industry, but most had died by disease. They raise corn, tobacco, "canotes," and cut fire wood. Exported some fire wood, also some tobacco. Daily wage 50 cents, with food. Had been that for five years. Before that was 25 cents. Increase caused by coming of vessels into that port.

LABOR, 20 CENTS GOLD PER DAY.

Senor Vidal, at Capiz: The speaker said that the daily wages in Capiz was about 40 cents Mexican per day. He thought, in view of the hard times, and if the work was continuous, laborers could be had for 25 cents Mexican per day.

POLICEMEN RECEIVE $3 PER MONTH.

Señor Andriano Enriquez, of Carcar (p. 152): He said his town now had 30 policemen on salary and 130 militiamen who served without pay. Their policemen received about 6 pesos per month.

SUGAR PLANTERS PAY 20 TO 30 PER CENT INTEREST.

Señor Aniceto Clarin, of Loay (p. 159): He said most of the sugar planters borrowed money on their property; pay 20 to 25 per cent, and some as high as 30 per cent interest on their money.

INTEREST RATE 2 PER CENT PER MONTH.

Señor Enugdio Acebedo, of Palo (p. 165): Being asked what rate of interest the people paid on money, he said about 2 per cent a month.

LABOR 25 TO 37.5 CENTS GOLD PER DAY.

Señor Juan Calenzoga, presidente of Baybay (p. 166): Referring to the daily wage of laborers, he said it varied according to the class of work. In Tacloban, ordinary laborers got 50 cents Mexican per day with food, and 75 cents Mexican without. They had been receiving this wage since American occupation; before that it was 40 cents.

LABOR 25 CENTS GOLD PER DAY.

Señor Fulgencio Contreras, of Nueva Caceres (p. 181): He said that during Spanish times day labor was paid 20 cents per day, while now it was 50 cents.

LABOR 25 CENTS GOLD PER DAY.

Señor Eduardo Nepomuceno, presidente of Boac: Being asked the daily wage in Marinduque, the speaker said it was 50 cents.

LAND VALUES $1.20 TO $3 GOLD PER ACRE.

Señor Angel Lopez, presidente of Bacnotan (p. 227): Inquiry developed that the value of sugar, tobacco, and rice lands in the province ranged from 60 to 150 pesos per hectare, such land having increased greatly in value during the past year.

WAGE RATE 50 CENTS PER DAY.

The "joural" or day's wage in Isabela was $1 Mexican. There was a little sugar raised in the province, but they had no mills. The average life of good tobacco land was about twelve years, although good river-bottom land would sometimes last twenty years without fertilizing. * * * The price of labor had gone up from 50 cents per day to its present price $1, at which latter figure there was a good supply.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONY BEFORE THE INSULAR COMMITTEE, JANUARY TO JUNE, 1902.

PRESSED TO ADMIT CHINESE.

Governor TAFT (p. 182). We are pressed to admit the Chinese in order that those who invest capital may have a class of labor on which they may rely. The skilled laborer among the Filipinos does not meet the demand in the islands. There were a good many Chinamen, but that supply has been now exhausted, and the merchants, people who desire to invest capital, are pressing the Commission to admit skilled labor. I received a letter from General Wright yesterday morning, stating that the Commission recommended to Congress the conferring on it of discretionary power to admit, temporarily, skilled labor under such restrictions that it shall only serve until, by industrial schools and other ways, the skilled labor among the Filipinos may be increased. The Filipino is skillful with his hands, and there is not the slightest difficulty in his learning to be a carpenter, brick or stone mason, machinist, or engineer.

SHORT OF LABOR (P. 247).

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Could the railroads be constructed by native labor?

Governor TAFT. I hope so. I have doubts about it. We have had a great deal of difficulty in securing enough labor to construct the Benguet wagon road from Pozoubio to Baguio. That is a road we are very much interested in, because the wagon road must be constructed before the railroad is constructed, in order to carry the material for the road, and we have not succeeded in getting as much labor as we wanted.

* * * * * * *

CHINESE DRIVE FILIPINOS OUT OF BUSINESS.

Governor TAFT. So far as the importation of Chinese is concerned, the chief hostility of the natives is not to the Chinese laborers, but to the Chinese traders. The Chinese laborer after he has been in the islands, if he is not restricted, in six months becomes a trader, and he is greatly more successful in trading and more economical in living than the Filipino, and he drives the Filipino out of business by competition, and, as a consequence, there is a very deep feeling in the islands against him as a trader.

I have a letter from General Wright on the subject which seems to be now under consideration by the commercial bodies in Manila with reference to the temporary admission of skilled Chinese labor and of cooly labor for particular work, and I shall be glad at the next session if I may submit that correspondence. The lack of skilled labor is a very serious one in the development of the islands. General Wright thinks it possible, and I agree with him, that they might be let in temporarily. He incloses a communication from a shipbuilding firm, in which the firm says that if they could admit Chinese skilled labor they would establish at once a shipbuilding establishment, and that it would be the means of educating the Filipinos by apprenticeship in skilled labor. We hope to do a great deal of that by the manual training schools which we are establishing, but there is to-day a great dearth of skilled labor in the islands.

* * * * * * *

Then I beg to have the privilege of reading from General Wright's letter, which I received about a week ago or less than a week ago, and which may be more useful to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and yet which bears generally upon the power of the Commission. He says:

"I take it for granted that among the important topics of discussion between you and the authorities at Washington will be the insular policy as to the exclusion or admission of Chinese. It is a subject which we have discussed frequently and upon which I believe we are agreed. I think it well to say, however—in view of the multiplicity of subjects upon which you have to deal, that you may not overlook it—that, in my judgment, it is extremely important that, should it be the policy of the Executive and Congress to continue the exclusion of Chinese from the United States by treaty and legislation as heretofore, it is very important that these laws should not be enforced in their entirety here. The Filipino laborer, as he is, can not be relied upon at this time for steady work.

"I think it very probable that under American administration, as his horizon broadens and his wants increase, his disposition to work, in order to gratify those wants and better his condition, will increase proportionately. But that is a work of time and education. It is very doubtful if to-day any large public work could be successfully carried to completion without great delay and increased expenses with Filipino laborers alone. The number of Filipino mechanics and other skilled laborers are extremely few and confined to a small number of trades.

"So, then, if railroads and other works of internal improvement are to be constructed, and shipyards, manufactures, etc., are to spring up in these islands, reliable labor becomes a necessity. Without it but little real progress can be made for a long time to come. I do not mean by this statement to say that we ought to throw the Philippine ports open to the free immigration of Chinese, for I do not believe that this ought to be done. I do mean, however, to assert that our ports here should not be hermetically sealed against them, and that either Congress should itself provide, or, what would be better, give the government established here the authority to provide, for their admission under proper limitations.

"These limitations may be made stringent enough to require their removal whenever the necessity for their importation ceases to exist. Persons or corporations requiring the use of either skilled or unskilled laborers might be required to give bond and security for their return to China after a specified time or on demand of the government here.

"Inclosed I send you a communication from Messrs. Cameron & McLaughlin on this subject, which seems to me to state the case fairly well and which is worth perusal. A few days since I had a visit from a Mr. Twentyman, who is the managing director of the great shipbuilding firm of Boyd & Farnham, of Shanghai, who was brought in by Messrs. Cameron & McLaughlin.

"He stated that he was very much impressed with Manila as the site for a great shipbuilding and repairing establishment, and that he would be glad, either alone or in conjunction with American capitalists, to build one here if he were assured that he might bring in Chinese skilled labor, and that he was willing to do so under any reasonable guaranty as to their return. I understand there are several other industries awaiting the action of our Government with reference to the Chinese-labor question."

The letter from Cameron & McLaughlin, with the permission of the committee, I will read:

"MANILA, P. I., January 3, 1902.

"Hon. LUKE E. WRIGHT,

"Acting Governor, Philippine Islands, Manila, P. I.

"SIR: We beg to respectfully submit for your consideration the fact that there is a great scarcity of mechanics and skilled laborers in these islands, and it is doubtless within your personal knowledge that this circumstance precludes the possibility of any new industrial enterprise being successfully undertaken here on a large scale. Skilled American workmen are, unfortunately, unable to endure the great strain of physical labor in this enervating climate, and the law prohibits the importation of skilled labor from China. Those who are anxious to open up any new business in the Philippines which involves the employment of any considerable number of skilled laborers are therefore placed at great disadvantage, as compared with Singapore, Hongkong, and competing ports in China.

"As American citizens representing American interests here, and being identified with the development of these islands and interested in everything appertaining to their welfare, and being desirous of seeing Manila become the foremost city of the Far East, commercially and industrially, we earnestly and most respectfully place this before you, and trust that you will consider the advisability of submitting a special report on the subject to His Excellency the President of the United States, through the honorable Secretary of War, to the end that a recommendation may be made to Congress to authorize skilled labor to be admitted from China into the Philippines, under such restrictions upon the employers who introduce such labor as will enable the collector of customs at Manila to safeguard all of the provisions of the Congressional act herein proposed.

"In view of the great scarcity of artisans and mechanics in these islands, we beg to respectfully represent that it would unquestionably be in the interests of the public generally if it might be admissible to introduce skilled labor from China under reasonable restrictions. In no other way can the people of these islands, notably the people of Manila, compete with other cities of the Far East in industrial and manufacturing enterprises.

"There is but little skilled labor in these islands, and what there is is very imperfect. By the introduction of skilled labor from Singapore and Hongkong a tremendous impetus would be given to trade, and the benefit to all the people of the Philippines would be felt immediately.

"With artisans here of the highest skill, all work requiring trained mechanics could be performed better and cheaper, and in time these skilled artisans could instruct a class in the Philippines who would be capable to do the work; that is to say, apprentices could be obtained here from among the natives to assist the skilled workmen brought here at the start, and these apprentices would thus learn the various trades and in this way these islands would in a few years furnish all the skilled mechanics and artisans that the growing industries would require."

FILIPINOS MAKE ADMIRABLE SKILLED WORKMEN.

I may interject here that there is no doubt about the capacity of the Filipino to make an admirable skilled workman. His manual skill is capable of the highest development. That is shown both by carving, by the few instances that there are of skilled carving among the Filipinos, and by work that you can pick up here and there that has been done by the Filipino:

"The insular Philippine government would in this way be practically establishing a great manual training school, without cost to the people, for the education and instruction of the rising generation in the industries and trades, and would thus, in so far as the manufacturing industries in these islands are concerned, be doing precisely what the government is now doing so well, but at large expense, in the matter of general education—that is, fitting the native for the higher degrees and responsibilities of citizenship.

"Until some general provision is made for the introduction of skilled labor from China it will be impossible for any company or syndicate, however great its capital, or even for the insular government, with all its resources, to economically and successfully undertake any great private or public work, such as the building of steam railways on a large scale in a limited time, with a view to the early development of the immense natural resources of these islands. Without this skilled labor it would in like manner be impossible to institute any great shipbuilding enterprise or other project that would result in the expenditure of large sums of money, which would require the employment of labor on a scale sufficiently large to speedily result in the general betterment of the conditions of all the people.

"It is a well-known fact that a number of men have visited Manila during the past year, chiefly from the United States, but some from other countries, with the object of establishing industrial enterprises in this city to convert the hard woods and other native products of these islands into manufactured articles, and supply the demand for such goods in China and other countries in the Far East. It is an unfortunate fact that while Manila has all the natural advantages desired in a manufacturing town it has been impossible for any of these great enterprises to be undertaken, simply because of the inability to secure skilled artisans here or to bring them in from China. It is manifestly most unfortunate for the prestige and supremacy of Manila as a commercial and manufacturing city that no authority has been vested in the governor of these islands to authorize the introduction of skilled labor from China in cases where it is obviously advantageous to every interest of the government and the people of the Philippines.

"It is well known to every person who has had occasion to investigate the subject that the Philippine Islands do not possess the skilled labor that is necessary to carry out any public or private work of considerable magnitude. To undertake this with the unskilled workmen who are now here would mean a question of many years to perform a work which could readily be done by skilled Chinese workmen in as many months.

"In so small a matter as that of repairing the little coasting vessels that ply in the interisland trade the annual loss is very large, owing to the detention of ships in docks arising from want of skilled labor. The ships that can be most successfully operated in the trade of these islands are those of very light draft. Many of these can not safely cross the rough China Sea for repairs. The time lost here in waiting for repairs, due wholly to lack of skilled labor, represents a loss to the shipowners of the islands of hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. This loss in turn must be made good, in part at least, by the merchants and others who use the ships, and consequently is a tax upon the industries and commerce of the islands, and ultimately becomes a burden upon the people generally.

"There is also the extra cost of insurance in sending a small vessel to Hongkong for repairs, it being at least 6 per cent of the value of the boat each way, or equivalent to 12 per cent of the entire value of the vessel for insurance both ways, which is a large item. Even at these high rates, which is a great burden on the shipping interests in the Philippines, the marine companies do not wish to insure these small boats to cross the China Sea.

"In view of the foregoing statement of facts, which are largely within your personal knowledge, we respectfully request that you will present the matter to the consideration of the Congress of the United States, with the recommendation for the necessary legislation to import skilled labor from China into the Philippines when in the opinion of the civil governor of these islands the introduction of such labor is necessary to promote the public welfare, or under some such general law as Congress in its wisdom may deem it expedient to enact.

"CAMERON & McLAUGHLIN."

The general view of the Commission is against the introduction of Chinese labor. That is, as I have already explained to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, as a political question the feeling of the people is against the introduction of the Chinaman, because he goes into trade and becomes a competitor in trade and drives out the Filipino engaged in the same trade. The motives, therefore, of the Commission, from a political standpoint, are strong to exclude the Chinese. I think, therefore, that they might be trusted, if Congress will do so, with the right to allow, temporarily, the introduction of Chinese skilled labor, and perhaps even of unskilled labor—although upon that point I am not so certain; General Wright has suggested it—under restrictions for the removal of the Chinese—such restrictions as the Commission may impose—for I am sure Congress may be certain that the power will not be abused in the direction of too general admission of the Chinese.

The CHAIRMAN. What are the principal classes of laborers who would come in under that definition of skilled laborer?

Governor TAFT. Carpenters, bricklayers, stone masons, and machinists.

The CHAIRMAN. Would there not be a great demand for the admission of common laborers?

Governor TAFT. Yes; there would.

The CHAIRMAN. And if you permit skilled labor to come in for the benefit of one class of capitalists——

Governor TAFT. You would have to allow it for all.

The CHAIRMAN. I was going to say that it would be difficult to say that the man who wished to build railroads should not be allowed to employ unskilled labor.

Governor TAFT. No; I think there might be a distinction between the skilled and the unskilled labor, because there is unskilled labor in the islands. There is no doubt about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that could be employed advantageously in the building of railroads.

Governor TAFT. I think that after the capitalists became accustomed to the peculiarities of that labor they might make it useful. I say so because I have talked with a good many quartermasters who have had a great many Filipinos under them, and some quartermasters are much more successful in securing steady labor from the Philippine Islands than are others, showing that it is a matter of tact and of understanding the Filipino nature.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think that the receipt of regular wages at a fair rate, and better than they have been accustomed to receive, would tend to induce the Filipino to become a laborer on railroads?

Governor TAFT. I think it would help. Of course, the difficulty with a laborer is this: You get 1,200 men working on a railroad and pay them off on Saturday night, and you will not get more than about 300 or 400 Monday morning; they would not come, probably, until Tuesday or Wednesday. Itis that lack of constancy in labor that is the difficulty with Filipino unskilled labor, but I think they can be trained.

I am not discouraged about unskilled labor, though the capitalists and the merchants in Manila would not agree with me about that. I think that the unskilled-labor market has not been given a fair chance. The unsettled conditions of the country have prevented there being a fair test throughout the country. It is trying upon one used to the regularity of American labor or the regularity of Chinese labor; but nevertheless I do not despair at all of securing Filipino unskilled labor. But, of course, skilled labor is out of the question. The supply does not exist, and we can only hope to bring it about by manual-training schools and such a system as that.

* * * * * * *

Governor TAFT. We of the Commission are very much opposed to the general introduction of Chinese labor. We would want to avoid the charge, made in the insurgent proclamations which have been used, that we expected to use the Chinese to exploit these islands, and, in fact, turn them over to people from China for the purpose of development.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you please outline the provision of law that you would like passed touching that subject?

Governor TAFT. I can state generally that what I should like would be that the Chinamen should be excluded altogether from entering United States ports from the Philippine Islands. I mean that the Congressional act should be made to apply to the Philippines as if it were foreign country with reference to the Chinese, and then that there be given to the Commission power to allow the introduction of skilled labor, at least, under such restrictions as would secure the removal of that skilled labor as admitted under restrictions within a reasonable time. But it is a matter the details of which would be difficult here to draw, and I think it might be trusted to the Commission or to the legislative body that succeeds the Commission.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me ask you is there any prospect for white labor to come to those islands?

Governor TAFT. No, sir. In Benguet and Bontoc, and possibly in some of the other mountain regions, white labor might be employed. That labor would be mining labor only. The climate in Benguet, Lepanto, and Bontoc is such that American labor could work in the sun as well as the natives could.

Mr. HITT. What is the proportion of the 200,000 or 250,000 of them (Chinese) who are unskilled, or coolie laborers, now—not when they came?

Governor TAFT. I suppose half of them are unskilled laborers.

Mr. HITT. They all were when they came?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HITT. You do not know the value of the Filipino on the sugar plantations—whether he is worth anything?

NATIVES GATHER ALL THE SUGAR CANE.

Governor TAFT. No, I do not; but I know all the reaped sugar cane that is cut on the Philippine Islands is cut by Filipinos and that the Chinese do not work in the fields.

Mr. HITT. Is he effective; can he stand the heat between the rows?

Governor TAFT. Oh, yes.

Mr. HITT. How does he do in the rice fields, where it is so wet?

Governor TAFT. He does very well indeed.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HITT. Are not the Chinese considered more successful and efficient than the Filipinos for rice planting?

Governor TAFT. They are not generally used in the Philippine Islands. I would say, of course, that the Chinaman is a very fine laborer if he is taught what to do.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Out of those 150,000 in the islands, you said 75,000 probably are coolies. What are the balance?

Governor TAFT. They are divided between the skilled laborers and the tradesmen; I should think the tradesmen were greatly in the majority.

The CHAIRMAN. How many thousands are skilled laborers?

Governor TAFT. That would only be a guess. I could not say; I should think the number of skilled laborers is small; I should doubt if they exceeded 5,000, although that is only a guess.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HAMILTON. There have been uprisings of the Filipinos against the Chinese and, in the past, large numbers of Chinese have been massacred, have they not?

Governor TAFT. That was long before we came there.

Mr. HAMILTON. Yes; I know.

Governor TAFT. I believe there have been disturbances of that sort.

CHINESE THE ENEMY OF FILIPINO LABOR.

[Excerpts from translation of a letter from Mariano Frias, of Cavite, to Mr. Felipe Buencamino.]

Tell the truth, and nothing but the truth, and show that the country, without deserving it, has several bitter enemies—the friars, the Chinese, and even the Spaniards. These are those who desire that the Filipinos should be divided; for, should they agree, good-bye to the good dinners and bargains.

Chinese immigration is highly prejudicial to the country, and although the lack of labor is now evident, that is not because of the natives, but the lack of encouragement, equity, and especially a certain amount of despotism and lack of confidence with which the Philippine employees are usually treated. The failure of the gang of laborers organized and sent by you to Abra or Benguet finds an explanation in this.

In the arsenal of this port it is observed that, little by little, salaries are being reduced, and that they will continue to be reduced, without doubt, to the level of that of the laborers of the varadero of Canacao. The equality in the salaries of this institution has its raison d'être in the change of the permanent character of the employment of those who prove their qualifications, which is not the case in the arsenal with regard to the Philippine laborers, while the Chinese or natives of Macao never suffered any change and are better established than anybody else.

EXTRACTS FROM TESTIMONY BEFORE THE PHILIPPINE COMMITTEE, JANUARY TO JUNE, 1902.

CHINESE AND FILIPINO LABOR (P. 96).

Senator HALE. Do you think it is a possibility or a probability that in expending this large amount of money on public works you will be driven to the necessity of bringing in Chinese?

Governor TAFT. That is what the contractors say.

Senator HALE. You think it may come to that?

Governor TAFT. I hope not. Some of the quartermasters in the Army—Captain Butt, particularly—think it is possible by care to secure labor and teach it constancy. But if you talk with the business man in Manila, who is usually not very friendly toward the Filipino, he scouts the idea; and I think possibly you have already had a petition from the American Chamber of Commerce of Manila to allow the entrance of Chinese because the labor of the Filipinos is so unsatisfactory.

HAS BECOME A POLITICAL QUESTION IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Senator CARMACK. Is there not considerable prejudice among the Filipinos against the introduction of Chinese?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir. It is a political question as well as an industrial question. It is one upon which the Commission has made no recommendation, because it is such a delicate question.

CHINESE WORK FOR $6 TO $7.50 GOLD PER MONTH.

The Chinaman comes into the country and labors, say, at 12 silver dollars a month and 15 silver dollars a month. Out of that, the local saying is, he saves $16 to $18. At any rate, he is not not there for more than three or four months before he has capital enough out of what he has earned to set up a store, and when he sets up a store the Filipino who has a store next to him is driven out of business.

* * * * * * *

DEMAND FOR MORE CHINAMEN CAUSED BY INCREASED WAGE RATE (P. 99).

I think the picture painted of the abundance of Filipino carpenters and mechanics in Manila is altogether fanciful, for the reason that there is the greatest demand for them in Manila now, and while there are some, almost all of the skilled mechanics are Chinamen, and the effect is this: The supply of Chinamen is limited by the exclusion law and the demand for building is increasing, and as a consequence the salaries of skilled Chinamen who are in Manila has doubled or trebled since I have been there. That is pretty conclusive proof that the statement that there are many carpenters and machinists available among the Filipinos has no foundation.

BITTER AGAINST THE CHINESE.

[From annual report of Mariano Frias, governor of the province of Cavite, January 14, 1902.]

The province of Cavite, by reason of the industriousness of its inhabitants, supplies the arsenal and shipyards of Cañacao with a good contingent of hard-working and intelligent workmen, and would furnish more if these establishments would throw out altogether the Chinese workmen, who in everything and everywhere make ruinous competition in the country. They are mere parasites in the country which nurtures them; they spend very little, and consume only the products of their mother country. While it is true that as storekeepers and merchants the Chinese sell and manufacture cheaper than the natives, they do not trade with good faith—they manufacture in a slipshod way, badly, and unsubstantially, and they doctor and adulterate everything.

This is why they prefer a retail business to any other industry; the simple transactions of buying and selling give them better opportunities for the exercise of fraud and their inveterate tendencies toward adulteration. They live huddled up in little pigsties; they are not remarkable for cleanliness, culture, or morality, and under the Spanish rule frequent attempts were made to prevent their immigration by the imposition of heavy taxes, contributions, and burdens in favor of the state, but these were borne without complaint. Past history shows that the Chinese, who were well received on account of their reputation for industriousness and submissiveness, have risen up against the government. In the revolution of 1896 they played a double game, and in the recent insurrection their behavior was no better. For them these islands are but a mine whence they extract money with which to enrich their own country, and if they wished to possess themselves of the archipelago all they would have to do would be to stretch forth their hands and take it.

MORO LABOR IN MINDANAO (P. 184).

Governor TAFT. In Mindanao, I am told by gentlemen who have gone down there, and who have looked into the question, that they can get Moro labor sufficient to run their sugar plantations. I do not know how true that is. That is their judgment; but I concur with the suggestion of the Senator that there will be constant pressure on us, because of the lack of industry of the Filipinos, to let in a race which is the most industrious in the world, I suppose—the Chinese. We have resisted that up to this time, and, so far as I know, we do not intend to yield to it if we have the power.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION TO THE ISLANDS (P. 265).

Senator CARMACK. I wish to ask you whether you think it will be necessary to throw open the doors to Chinese immigration in order to secure a supply of efficient and helpful labor for the development of the country?

Governor TAFT. I am profoundly hopeful that it will not be. Pressure has been brought to bear upon the Commission to recommend such a policy. In certain parts of the archipelago the admission of Chinese labor without permission to trade, keeping him a laborer, and requiring those who bring him in to take him out again, may possibly aid, and would doubtless aid, in the development of islands like Mindanao, where the population is scarce, but in Luzon, in Panay, in Negros, in the thickly populated islands, I am now hopeful that we can gradually give the people a motive for labor and that they can be so encouraged that their labor will be more efficient than it now is.

EFFECT ON PHILIPPINES OF CHINESE IMMIGRATION (P. 267).

Senator CARMACK. How will the people of the Philippines be affected by the importation of Chinese labor? I wish to call your attention in this connection to a statement from General MacArthur's last report, in which, speaking of the Chinese, he says:

"Such a people, largely endowed as they are with inexhaustible fortitude and determination, if admitted to the archipelago in any considerable numbers during the formative period which is now in progress of evolution, would soon have direct or indirect control of pretty nearly every productive interest, to the absolute exclusion alike of Filipinos and Americans.

"This view is stated with considerable emphasis, as unmistakable indications are apparent of organized and systematized efforts to break down all barriers, with a view to unrestricted Chinese immigration, for the purpose of quick and effective exploitation of the islands, a policy which would not only be ruinous to the Filipino people, but would in the end surely defeat the expansion of American trade to its natural dimensions in what is obviously one of its most important channels."

Do you think that is a correct statement of the effect of unrestricted Chinese immigration into the Philippines?

Governor TAFT. I think the effect of unrestricted Chinese immigration into the Philippines, as there said, would absorb nearly all the smaller avenues of trade. Just what effect it would have upon the labor problem is a little more difficult to say. Whether by creating a spirit of competition it would induce the Filipino laborer to do better than he does now I can not say. It is altogether conjectural.

FILIPINO OPPOSITION TO CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Senator CARMACK. Are not the better class of Filipinos, those who are supporting the United States in the Philippine Islands, very much opposed to Chinese immigration?

Governor TAFT. Yes, sir; they all are.

Senator CARMACK. All of them?

Governor TAFT. The Tabacalera Company, which I think I have already mentioned as the largest company in the Philippine Islands, has been quite urgent to have us allow them to bring in Chinese skilled laborers with a view to the construction of warehouses and some other buildings connected with their tobacco plantations, saying they could not get Filipino skilled labor. And so with Spanish and foreign interests; and I have seen in the newspapers the petitions of American merchants in Manila, I think, for the admission of Chinese coolies.

OBSTACLES TO PACIFICATION OF THE ISLANDS.

Senator CARMACK. Is it not true that one of the great obstacles to the pacification of the islands has been, and is, the fear of bringing Chinese labor to the country, and the fear of sudden and excessive exploitation, and the belief that the United States want the islands purely for purposes of such exploitation?

Governor TAFT. Certainly there has been, if one can judge by the proclamations of the insurgents and by the statements of insurgent leaders, a very considerable attempt to make the public believe that that is the purpose of the Americans; and from that fact you may infer that a great many people have thought so. Now, with respect to the effect of Chinese importation, possibly that goes with it.

Senator CARMACK. What is that?

LABOR CONDITIONS IN THE ISLANDS (P. 643).

Senator DUBOIS. Yes, sir. Yesterday I presented to the Senate and had read an appeal from the American Chamber of Commerce of Manila. I think almost every Senator received the same appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. It was presented to the Committee on Immigration, too.

Senator DUBOIS. I will not read it all unless you desire me to, but it says:

"Tobacco, hemp, and sugar plantations are only partially cultivated by reason of insufficiency of manual laborers. There are at present people in the city of Manila who came here for the purpose of investing in plantations, and to cultivate them upon lines in advance of the primitive ideas now in vogue. Investors are compelled to either leave these islands or await such time as laborers can be secured. This being the situation at present, without this legislation the Philippine Islands can not be properly developed."

The legislation they ask for is the repeal of the laws of Congress in regard to Chinese immigration, so that cooly labor shall be allowed to enter the Philippine Islands.

(P. 646.) Senator DUBOIS. Our bill provides for franchises. We invite capital over there. You are a pretty robust American yourself. Americans will go there with capital. They will want some labor. They are not going to sit around and theorize and wait for the development of the Filipino mind. They want action for their money. Where are they going to get their labor? What labor is there for them?

General HUGHES. I should not be surprised if they could get the negro from America. I have looked into this matter. They can get labor from Japan without any trouble at all.

Senator DUBOIS. They can get the Japanese. There is no restriction against them.

General HUGHES. They can get millions, of course, from China.

JAPANESE THE BEST LABOR FOR THE ISLANDS (P. 647).

Senator DUBOIS. What labor will they turn to, naturally? What labor must they have and will they have? What is the best labor for them?

General HUGHES. The best man is the Japanese.

Senator DUBOIS. He is even more imitative than the Chinaman?

General HUGHES. He is a very much quicker man.

Senator DUBOIS. And more imitative?

General HUGHES. Yes.

Senator DUBOIS. Now, if it be not the Japanese, would it be the Chinese?

A CHANCE FOR AMERICAN NEGROES.

General HUGHES. I am very much in earnest about giving the darky a chance, and I will tell you why. The darky troops whom they sent to Samar mixed with the natives at once. Wherever they came together they became great friends. When I withdrew the darky company from Santa Rita I was told that the natives even shed tears over their going away. I know they begged me to leave them.

WHAT LABOR WILL THE ISLANDS GET?

Senator DUBOIS. Let me ask you a question which you can answer directly. What labor do you think they will get there, white labor being excluded?

General HUGHES. And you also want the Japanese left out?

Senator DUBOIS. No. What labor will they get?

Senator PATTERSON. Outside of white labor?

Senator DUBOIS. White labor being excluded.

General HUGHES. I hope Japanese. They have a good deal of Chinese labor there now.

Senator DUBOIS. What do you believe?

General HUGHES. I have no doubt that will increase.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now restricted. The Chinese are shut out.

General HUGHES. But you can not keep them out.

Senator DUBOIS. I am coming to that, if you will allow the General to answer my question, if he will. White labor being excluded, what labor is going there?

General HUGHES. I think it is mainly Chinese.

DEMAND OF MANILA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE (P. 648).

Senator DUBOIS. Do you not think the demand which the chamber of commerce makes represents the true sentiment of the Americans over there, and will represent the true sentiments of the Americans who go over there with capital, which is a demand that we remove the restriction and allow Chinese labor to come in? Do you not think that that demand will be incessant and peremptory?

General HUGHES. It is my opinion at present that there will be a demand for labor. I do not believe it will be nearly so great as they imagine. There is a great deal of labor in the Philippine Islands to-day that is not being utilized because they can not get the work. We never had any trouble at all in getting men whenever we said we wanted them, or in getting all we wanted. I remember one case at a sand spit at the island of Bohol, where there was nothing in sight apparently, except four or five fishermen, and our boat had gotten high and dry, 300 yards from the water, and we wanted it dragged down. The quartermaster simply held up his hand and called for men, and we had 35 in less than fifteen minutes.

Senator DUBOIS. The meeting of the chamber of commerce was held on the 3d day of January of this year. The petition states:

"The American Chamber of Commerce, of Manila, P. I., respectfully represents to your honorable body that by authority and under instruction of resolution adopted at a full meeting of this chamber held on the 3d day of January this chamber does petition and earnestly request the enactment of laws by Congress allowing cooly labor to enter the Philippine Islands under such restrictions and laws as the Philippine Commission may from time to time enact."

In your judgment, does that reflect the sentiment of all Americans over there?

General HUGHES. The trouble is this, Mr. Senator. Have you the list of the names of the signers of the petition? The reason I ask is that when I was there the chamber of commerce was composed almost entirely of British subjects. They are notoriously indifferent to our interests; in fact they have actually opposed us by their actions, if not in intent.

Senator DUBOIS. This is signed by F. E. Green, president.

General HUGHES. I do not know him.

Senator DUBOIS. That sounds like an American name, and it is also signed by Roger ap C. Jones, secretary.

General HUGHES. I should like before I acknowledge that as the sentiment of American interests to go over the names of those who belong to the chamber of commerce, because, as I tell you, when I left there it was mainly composed of foreigners. I do not suppose there were three Americans in it, and our interests would not have been considered in any action that commercial establishment took.

LABOR THAT WOULD GO TO THE ISLANDS (P. 649).

Senator DUBOIS. Leaving that out, then what labor do you think would go there?

General HUGHES. There is no doubt it would be Chinese if it can get there.

Senator DUBOIS. And the demand will be incessant on the part of capitalists who go there to remove the restrictions and to allow Chinese labor to go there?

General HUGHES. I do not know whether it will be in case you send Americans. As I said we never have had trouble in getting all the labor we want, and the English planters in Negros, and the Swiss, and the rest of them, Spaniards excepted, did not seem to have any trouble at all. I know they bothered me to death to let hundreds of men come from Panay for their harvest.

FEELING OF FILIPINOS TOWARD CHINESE.

The CHAIRMAN. I should like to ask one question in this connection. It has been stated to us from various sources, and most recently by Governor Taft, that there is a very great feeling of hostility among the Filipinos toward the Chinese; that they dislike them.

General HUGHES. That has been carried in some parts of the districts of the Visayas to an extreme extent. In one village—I think in Billiran, which is an island belonging to the province of Leyte—the natives took out all the Chinamen of the town and sacked them up with some rocks and sunk them. In another village of the same province—at least one of their large towns in population, although it looks like a village—they petitioned me to stop the Chinamen from keeping stores, doing any mercantile business, alleging that they, the natives, could not compete with them in that business.

LABORERS WILL BE FAITHFUL WITH PROPER MASTERS (P. 669).

Senator BEVERIDGE. These are the common laboring people?

The CHAIRMAN. Then you think they are faithful to their engagements?

General HUGHES. I think, with proper masters, there will be no earthly trouble with the natives. The trouble to-day is with the system of presidentes, who have been masters absolute.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. I wish to make clear what you are saying, in which I am very much interested. You are constantly referring to a class——

General HUGHES. The tao, the laboring man.

The CHAIRMAN. The peasant class?

General HUGHES. Yes.

Senator BEVERIDGE. The common people.

EMPLOYMENT OF TAOS (P. 671).

General HUGHES. I employed a great many of them from time to time. In Manila I think I had possibly as high as 900 or 1,000 at one time.

The CHAIRMAN. How did you get them—directly?

General HUGHES. That was in the city. I could get those through agents; that is, I would appoint a foreman to go and get them. But when I got to the Visayas and wanted men, I had to go usually for the first time to the presidente. I tried at different times to get them directly; just to notify them that I wanted so many men for such work—building a road or building a bridge—and I could not get them. But by going to the presidente and simply saying to him, "I want 250 able-bodied men for such a work," he would herd them in in a couple of hours. We would make a roll of them, and at the end of the week we would pay them. We would have the necessary change, and every man got his week's pay. After that took place there was no trouble whatever.

FILIPINO LEADERS INIMICAL TO AMERICANS (P. 672).

The taos are really the power of the nation, and when you get them broken away from their leaders, who at present dominate everything, there will be no trouble in those islands.

The CHAIRMAN. After you had paid them, they would come voluntarily themselves.

General HUGHES. We could get two for every one we wanted.

ADAPTABILITY OF FILIPINOS (P. 706).

Senator DUBOIS. In your judgment, if American capitalists went there and took lands in order to have them produce, as we do here, would the Filipinos, under the direction of the Americans, cultivate the lands satisfactorily from our point of view?

Mr. BARROWS. I am inclined to the opinion that the Filipino would. I think some of the most trying part of his labor could be relieved by the application of machinery. He is very successful in the handling of machinery and in learning how to handle it, and I am inclined to think he would be able; and I do not know——

Senator HALE. You mean agricultural machinery?

Mr. BARROWS. Yes, sir. I think he could handle agricultural machinery. They handle the steam rollers in making roads and they are very adept in handling launch machinery—small engines.

Senator DUBOIS. Do you think they would perform the labor instead of Chinese or Japanese?

The CHAIRMAN. Agricultural labor?

Senator DUBOIS. Agricultural labor.

CHINESE NOT AGRICULTURISTS IN THE ISLANDS (P. 707).

Mr. BARROWS. I have only a feeling, but that feeling is that the Chinese will not prove in those islands a very good agricultural laborer. My experience has been that he keeps out of the sun, and that the man who plows the rice fields and who prepares the land for the planting of cane and who does the burdensome work in the hot sun is the Filipino.

PRESENT LABOR CONDITIONS (P. 712).

Senator DUBOIS. It will take time to bring about those conditions, however. If you were to go over there and establish a factory now, do you think you could get Filipino labor? Take 5,000 acres of land and suppose you wanted to put it in sugar.

Mr. BARROWS. I imagine I would have difficulty in getting the labor I wanted, and that I would be requesting the introduction of cheap labor, looking at the matter purely from the financial view. But our whole treatment has been to regard the Filipino himself; to look to what is the best course for him; how we can give him the best opportunities for enlightenment and material improvement, and on those grounds I would pronounce against the introduction of Chinese labor.

GREAT MASS OF FILIPINO AGRICULTURISTS (P. 831).

Senator PATTERSON. Yes. General, you state that the great bulk of Filipino people are farmers—are connected with the land and tilling the soil?

General OTIS. Yes, sir; in small holdings, which, in many cases, are owned by large proprietors.

Senator PATTERSON. They have families?

General OTIS. Yes.

LABOR IN THE ISLANDS (P. 834).

They say that the following legislation for the Philippine Islands is urgently needed; that this request is—

"For the immediate passage of laws for the admission of cooly labor, as the native labor is inadequate and insufficient for the development of the resources of the islands."

Is that true, in your opinion?

General OTIS. The native labor is limited, but I should say that the introduction of cooly labor would be very unwise.

Senator DUBOIS. They say that "the native labor is inadequate and insufficient for the development of the resources of the islands."

General OTIS. How great the work of development that they contemplate is I do not know. I was obliged to apply the Chinese-exclusion law, with some modifications. I allowed every Chinaman who had ever lived there, who had ever been a resident there, even temporarily, to return; but they came in in such large numbers, and the Filipinos became so excited, and they came to me making so many complaints, that I finally, as a matter of protection, was obliged to apply the Chinese-exclusion law, with modifications, and it still prevails. I do not think the present Commission has modified it in any way.

RAPID EXPLOITATION (P. 835).

General OTIS. Well, there is a great amount of land there. All the valleys and slopes can be cultivated, no doubt.

Senator DUBOIS. That would make 30,000,000 acres of public land which are susceptible of being improved as agricultural land. We have in contemplation the civil bill for the Philippines. In that bill we propose to grant franchises; we intend to throw open this public land in tracts as large as 5,000 acres; we propose to invite American capital to go to the Philippine Islands and develop them. Suppose some American takes up 5,000 acres of land and wants to put it in sugar, for instance. Is this statement true here that the native labor would be inadequate and insufficient for the development of those lands?

General OTIS. I should say yes—a rapid development.

Senator DUBOIS. You take one of our American capitalists. If he goes over to the Philippines and puts his money in business—you know what an American capitalist is—or an American manufacturer or agriculturist on a large scale, would they be content with Philippine labor?

General OTIS. That would be difficult, no doubt.

Senator DUBOIS. Would it not be totally insufficient, as these people say?

General OTIS. For rapid development they could not find the labor at the present time, although I will say that at the present time over there they have no difficulty in the tobacco and hemp districts in getting what labor is at present necessary. There is a large tobacco district north of Luzon. They have their own settlements there, and they pay the men so much for the cultivation of the soil and give them a certain percentage. They are very happy and they get along very nicely. Of course the Chinaman is a much better laborer than the Filipino. We have employed Filipinos mostly in the work we have had, but when we had to rebuild the railroad we were obliged to take Chinamen.

NO EXCLUSION LAW AGAINST JAPANESE.

Senator DUBOIS. The Japanese, of course, could come in. There is no exclusion law against them?

General OTIS. No.

Senator DUBOIS. Would the Japanese be as satisfactory as the Chinese cooly labor?

General OTIS. They would be very satisfactory, I think.

Senator DUBOIS. The Japanese would be as satisfactory as the Chinese cooly?

General OTIS. They affiliate with the Filipino.

Senator DUBOIS. And stand the climate well?

General OTIS. Yes; they stand the climate well.

PETITION FOR REPEAL OF EXCLUSION LAW.

Senator DUBOIS. Now, this is the second petition that has come from the American Chamber of Commerce insisting that Congress shall remove the restrictions in regard to Chinese cooly labor, and in addition to that, in the Hawaiian Islands they are pressing us constantly to allow Chinese and Japanese labor to come in; they say that otherwise they can not cultivate their sugar fields. Do you not think that when this American Chamber of Commerce is augmented by these capitalists, whom we induce to go over there to put in their capital, that the demand will be incessant on us to allow Chinese cooly labor to come it?

General OTIS. I think you will receive constant demands from these companies. You see, it is for their pecuniary benefit, and I have no doubt you will get demands constantly.

FILIPINO LABOR (P. 838).

General OTIS. And also Filipino labor. Now, some of those large establishments are carried on entirely by Filipino labor to-day. Take the cigar manufacturers, for instance.

Senator DUBOIS. How many hands do they employ?

TOBACCO INDUSTRY.

General OTIS. Oh, I suppose there are 10,000 people employed in the tobacco industry in Manila at the present time. The Filipinos came to me after I had been there for a short time and they wished to know if they could establish a tobacco manufactory. I had quite a long conversation with them, and I replied that they could, but to keep all the stock in the hands of the Filipinos; not to let the Europeans or anybody else outside have any of the stock. They went to work and built up quite a large establishment, and I suppose that stock to-day is worth 200 or 300. They employ 300 or 400 men.

Senator DUBOIS. That work is not nearly so heavy, however, as the work in woolen mills and cotton factories, and is not so constant?

General OTIS. I think there is a great deal of Chinese labor in the islands at the present time; a good deal of Filipino labor. All the work on the railroads is done by Filipinos. All the officials are Filipinos except a few of the most important officers.

COMPETITION WITH AMERICAN LABOR (P. 841).

Senator DUBOIS. Now, we intend to exploit those islands; that is our object. To do that we must have a good deal of labor if our capital goes over there. Now, when they raise their sugar, do you mean to say that that sugar will not come in competition with our sugar? Do you mean that the laborers raising that sugar in the Philippine Islands will not be in competition with our laborers here who are raising sugar.

General OTIS. It depends entirely on whether you keep up the present tariff provisions; if we have free and unlimited trade it might come in competition with our sugar interests in this country.

AMERICAN GETS $40; FILIPINO DOES SAME WORK FOR $15 (P. 1377).

Senator DUBOIS. I do not know whether I understood you correctly yesterday or not, but if I did you thought that under some conditions the Filipinos could do the labor which will necessarily have to be performed in the archipelago.

General MACARTHUR. You understood me correctly, Senator.

Senator DUBOIS. I think you said that there were some 400 in Manila working under Americans, and they received steady wages, and their self-interest was appealed to, and under those conditions they worked like Americans?

General MACARTHUR. Precisely so.

Senator DUBOIS. Well, what does a Filipino consider good wages?

General MACARTHUR. I think they were receiving $15 gold, although I could not be certain on that, for labor that Americans were receiving $40 gold for. They considered that good wages. In making a statement of that kind, that is offhand and from recollection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that $15 gold a month?

General MACARTHUR. Yes.

Senator DUBOIS. Fifteen dollars a month, I understood.

General MACARTHUR. I would like to have that stated together—the Filipinos got $15 a month gold; the Americans got $40 for the same labor.

Senator DUBOIS. The Filipino, then, in this particular labor that you were speaking about, where there were 400 employed, were content to receive one-third of what the Americans got?

General MACARTHUR. They were at that time; that was such a tremendous increase from anything they had known before.

Senator DUBOIS. Were they doing as good work as the Americans or about one-third as good?

General MACARTHUR. Not as good, but more than one-third as good, I should say. The 400 men that I had particular reference to were employed in the corral in the management of horses and transportation, and in that capacity they were rendering very good work indeed. The unit of relative value there would be very much above one-third or even one-half from the nature of the work.

Senator DUBOIS. Of course that was an isolated and unusual case of labor.

FILIPINOS CAN DO THE WORK (P. 1379).

Senator DUBOIS. These lands under this bill which we are now considering are to be leased or sold in tracts of not less than 5,000 acres. That is the bill that we are considering.

The CHAIRMAN. Not exceeding 5,000 acres?

Senator DUBOIS. Not exceeding 5,000 acres.

General MACARTHUR. You mean the undeveloped public lands?

Senator DUBOIS. The undeveloped public lands; yes. Now, it is a reasonable supposition that if Americans go over there to cultivate those lands, to put them into sugar, in organizing companies they will take 5,000-acre tracts. Suppose they should take them in large tracts, can the Filipinos do the farm labor and cultivate those lands?

General MACARTHUR. I think so. They can do it to the extent of necessity so far as the public interest requires; most decidedly.

Senator DUBOIS. Can they do it to the satisfaction of the Americans who go over there?

General MACARTHUR. Not to the satisfaction of the American or European exploiters; no. But they can do it to the limit of necessity and the beneficial interests of the nation, both American and Philippine.

Senator DUBOIS. And knowing the enterprise of our capitalists, if they go over there, and put their money in, they will want returns for it, and they will want labor which is satisfactory to them. Will the Filipinos, in your opinion, perform this labor to their satisfaction?

General MACARTHUR. They will perform the labor. Whether it will be to the satisfaction of those people you describe I do not know. From my own point of view I deprecate the idea advanced in your question, that we are going to sell public lands there in blocks of 5,000 acres, with a view to rapid exploitation. That I should regard as disastrous both to American and Filipino interests, absolutely.

Senator DUBOIS. That is in the bill which we are considering, which is going to pass.

General MACARTHUR. Well, I should answer your question with a modification stating that the Filipinos would furnish the labor.

Senator DUBOIS. Would not?

General MACARTHUR. Would. They would have to be paid to do it, though, on the basis of American labor.

Senator DUBOIS. What would the Filipino farm hands charge for their labor?

General MACARTHUR. They would charge what they could get, and if that kind of work was undertaken they would charge a great deal; they would charge about what they do in Montana, probably.

Senator DUBOIS. They would charge what farm hands would in Montana?

General MACARTHUR. Yes.

Senator DUBOIS. Do you think these American capitalists would employ them?

General MACARTHUR. I do not think they would.

Senator DUBOIS. You know the Filipinos and their capacity for work. Do you think they would employ these Filipino hands?

General MACARTHUR. I do not think they would.

DANGEROUS EXPLOITATION (P. 1380).

Senator DUBOIS. Then, they would not open up the land?

General MACARTHUR. Then that would be a good fortune to everybody concerned.

If the Senator will allow me for a moment, I can illustrate what I mean by referring to the experience of the Dutch in Java. Although I consider the experience of the Dutch in Java a very good example of what not to do, still under the process of what they call the culture system they raised the population of that island from about 3,000,000 in 1816 to about 25,000,000 in 1895. That was the process of exploitation carried to the verge of almost a mania, but in respect of that system the Dutch have exceeded all other nations, and if our purpose is simply to exploit and breed people for the purpose of labor we can produce the population in the Philippines as rapidly as the Dutch did in Java.

The culture system I suppose is well understood to the members of the committee. It was the device of a military man who went there to organize that island after it was turned back to Holland in consequence of the termination of the Napoleonic wars. He devised this system, which has had the most remarkable results, probably, of any industrial system which was ever invented. It consisted in contracting the land, providing the labor, and promising to take the crops. It resulted in what we know, or did know some time ago, as Old Government Java coffee. They took all that crop. They would contract with a respectable, educated, representative Dutchman; that is, a Hollander. They would give him his land. They would insure him his labor, and they would contract to take his crop.

Now, in the process of a little more than eighty years we find the population of that island raised from about 3,000,000 to 25,000,000. Of course these laborers did not come into existence instantly because the exploiters wanted them; but the power was constant, the force applied was constant, and the result was absolutely certain. And the laborers came, and there they are to-day; and although they are there in large masses, they are the most doleful, somber people on the face of the earth. Although regulated with justice, still they are simply human machines, without a single psychological emotion.

Senator DUBOIS. That was a government exploitation, not a private exploitation. You say these Filipinos work, though, for $15 a month gold, which was much more than they ever received before, and that they were content, and that the Americans for the same labor got $40 a month gold. Now, why would the laborers on the islands—not the laborers in the city, but scattered around throughout the islands—demand the same wages that the Montana farm hand would demand?

General MACARTHUR. Simply because they would become permeated with the American idea, which they are taking up very rapidly.

Senator DUBOIS. If they were content to work in Manila, where there is more of the American idea, of course, than there is in the country, for two-thirds less than the wages the Americans received, why should they demand, out in the country districts and places outside of Manila, as much wages as the man in Montana gets?

General MACARTHUR. I do not say they do now. They would under your process of forcing things.

Senator DUBOIS. There is no process of forcing.

General MACARTHUR. I think about 4 pesos was what laborers were paid when we first went in there, and we are now paying them nearly 30 pesos.

Senator DUBOIS. It is not a question of forcing them at all. I, for instance, go over there under this bill, if it becomes a law, and buy land and want laborers. I ask them to go to work for me, and there must be plenty of field labor, because there are 7,000,000 or 8,000,000 people over there.

General MACARTHUR. Undoubtedly.

Senator DUBOIS. And there must be plenty of them, and they have never received anything. Now, why would they demand as much as a Montana man?

General MACARTHUR. I do not know that they would. I only say this: That if you put your exploitation ahead of the labor market you would have to pay in proportion thereto to get your men. If you wanted men in the field more than somebody wanted them in the shop, you would have to pay more to get them. You would get them, but you would have to pay for them. If you followed the Dutch method of waiting to get a larger population by waiting for the birth rate to increase and thereby multiply the labor market, you would get the same result, but in a longer time.

FILIPINOS MAKE GOOD FACTORY HANDS (P. 1383).

Senator PATTERSON. In industrial pursuits they would make good mill hands, you think?

General MACARTHUR. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. How is it in the cigarette and cigar factories?

General MACARTHUR. The cigarette and cigar factories are full of the Filipino women.

The CHAIRMAN. The labor in those factories is Filipino labor, and not Chinese labor?

General MACARTHUR. Almost exclusively Filipino labor, I think. It is quite a sight to see the hands leaving the factories in Manila.

The CHAIRMAN. They are, of course, skilled operatives?

General MACARTHUR. Yes; I do not think there is a question about the power of the Filipino to reach any standard of excellence in almost any direction you want to develop.

Senator BEVERIDGE. It is a question of development, of evolution?

General MACARTHUR. That is all.

Senator PATTERSON. Now, in respect to the labor of the Filipinos as you were describing it in response to questions by Senator DUBOIS, you spoke of the employment of some 400 Filipinos?

General MACARTHUR. These were the men employed in our quartermaster's corral in the city of Manila.

Senator PATTERSON. And those are under favorable circumstances?

General MACARTHUR. Undoubtedly. Our officers watch them and protect them against unnecessary interferences from outsiders.

Senator PATTERSON. And the wage they get there is a better wage than they get outside of that employment as a rule?

General MACARTHUR. It is about the standard they get everywhere now, I think; but it was very much higher than the standard when we entered the town,

Senator PATTERSON. Then, under the most favorable auspices at the present time, a Filipino is willing to work for one-third of what the American is willing to work for?

General MACARTHUR. I should say so offhand; yes.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. DEPEW resumed the speech begun by him on Wednesday last. After having spoken, with interruptions, for over three hours,

REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN L. YOUNG.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know whether it is the desire of the Senator from New York to go on with his eloquent speech to-night; but if he is tired, as I suppose he is, and we are about to adjourn—I do not know the programme of the boss [laughter]—I have a little House bill which I am very anxious to get through the Senate, which will take but a moment, if the Senator from New York will kindly yield. I do not want, however, to interfere with him, but could he not get more ammunition by to-morrow?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I certainly trust the bill to which the Senator from South Carolina refers will be passed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator kindly give way to me to ask for its consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DEPEW. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7792) for the relief of the legal representatives of John L. Young.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the legal representatives of John L. Young, of Union, S. C., $1,471.18, for services rendered the United States in carrying the mails in 1860 and 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. I inquire of the Senator from New York whether he will yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. DEPEW. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

[Mr. DEPEW's speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. LODGE. I hope that we may have a short executive session, if the Senator from Pennsylvania has no objection.

Mr. QUAY. Very well; I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being until to-morrow, Saturday, February 14, 1903, at 1 o'clock p. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 13, 1903.

ATTORNEYS.

John J. Boyce, of California, to be United States attorney for the district of Alaska, to be assigned to division numbered one, in the place of Robert A. Friedrich, deceased.

William B. Sheppard, of Florida, to be United States attorney for the northern district of Florida, vice John Eagan, deceased.

Marcus C. McLemore, of Texas, to be United States attorney for the southern district of Texas. A reappointment, his term having expired February 12, 1903.

MARSHALS.

George H. Green, of Texas, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Texas. A reappointment, his term having expired December 19, 1902.

Vivian J. Fagin, of Ohio, to be United States marshal for the southern district of Ohio. A reappointment, his term expiring March 1, 1903.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

John T. McDonough, of New York, vice James F. Smith, resigned.

SURVEYORS OF CUSTOMS.

Amor Smith, jr., as surveyor of customs for the port of Cincinnati, in the State of Ohio, vice Lewis Voight, sr., whose term of office will expire March 3, 1903.

Will Barnes, jr., as surveyor of customs for the port of Albany, in the State of New York. (Reappointment.)

POSTMASTER.

OHIO.

Elias R. Monfort, to be postmaster at Cincinnati, in the county of Hamilton and State of Ohio, in place of Elias R. Monfort. Incumbent's commission expires March 3, 1903.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AMERICAN REGISTER TO STEAMSHIP BEAUMONT.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave until Monday to file minority views upon the bill (H. R. 16734) granting an American register to the foreign-built steamship Beaumont.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. DALZELL. I submit a privileged report, which I send to the desk, from the Committee on Rules.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution providing for consideration of the bill S. 7053, have had the same under consideration, and herewith report the following in lieu thereof:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to debate for a period not exceeding one hour the bill (S. 7053) to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States, with the amendments thereto recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as set forth in their report (No. 3765) on the said bill; and at the end of the debate a vote shall be taken on the said amendments and on the bill to its final passage, without intervening motion.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for the previous question on the adoption of this resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose at this time to occupy the attention of the House at any length. The House is familiar with the provisions of the bill known as the Elkins bill—a bill which originated in the Senate, which passed that body, and has been favorably reported, with several amendments, by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House. The purpose of this rule is to bring before the House for immediate consideration that bill, with the amendments recommended by the committee.

Inasmuch as this is merely one phase of the antitrust legislation that has been so thoroughly debated, it was not thought advisable or necessary that there should be any protracted debate at this late day of the session, and therefore the limit of debate has been fixed at one hour, at the end of which time a vote is to be taken upon the amendments recommended by the committee and upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by the presentation of this rule the House is brought to the question whether the rule shall be adopted without protest, that is, whether we shall consent that this rule shall pass without objection. It ties the hands of every member so that we can not offer any kind of amendment to modify or add to the bill in any shape or fashion. I do not believe that we ought to be confronted with such a rule at this time. The effect of the rule will be to bring us, after one hour's debate, to a vote upon the bill presented by the committee, with such amendments as that committee, or a majority of the committee, shall offer, without any opportunity to offer other amendments.

Now, I assert that there is no such emergency in this House as to require a rule of this kind. I take it that we shall all vote for this bill. For myself, at any rate, I am prepared to say that I shall vote for it. But, while that is true, I do not think there ought to be denied to us the right to propose amendments in order to make the bill more effectual for the suppression of the great evil in this country that we are all crying out against.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know that we can vote down this rule; but if we could vote it down, we might so amend it as to permit a fair consideration of the measure, with the privilege to members on both sides of the Chamber to offer such amendments as they may deem necessary, and which are shown to be necessary by the conditions existing in the country.

Mr. Speaker, I shall ask this side of the House to join with me in the effort to vote down the rule in order that we may amend the bill—in order that amendments may be permitted to be offered. As I have said, we can not have that opportunity under the rule as now framed, which absolutely prevents anyone from offering a motion to recommit the measure in order that there may be tendered from this side of the House, or from the other side, a better bill than the one now pending.

For these reasons, I think the rule should be voted down. I yield ten minutes of my time to my colleague on the Committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I agree with what my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], has said in reference to his position on this bill and the rule provided for its consideration. I am in favor of the Elkins bill. That bill provides for the punishment of railroad or other transportation companies that give rebates to certain corporations. I believe that the granting of such rebates by our great transportation companies is one means of fostering the trusts, and therefore I favor the Elkins bill as far as it goes, but it does not go far enough.

Mr. COCHRAN rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman wishes to ask a question, I will yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. This bill, among other things, provides that imprisonment, wherever now prescribed as part of the penalty for violation of the existing laws on this subject, shall be abolished. Now, I want to inquire of the gentleman whether he approves of that feature of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not.

Mr. COCHRAN. That, in my judgment, is the salient and the all-important feature of the measure.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is of course an important feature, and that is the reason I am opposed to this rule. But I believe that the bill as a whole is better than no bill at all. I believe it will to some extent benefit the people of this country if this Elkins bill should be passed. But I say that the bill not only does not go far enough, but that the amendments offered to the bill in this House weaken its effect, and the result is that as it comes before the House it is not as good a bill as when it came from the Senate. But we are helpless. The ingenuity of man could not conceive a more drastic rule than the one that is presented to this House to-day. It is impossible for us as individual members on the floor of this House, or for this side of the House as a party, to offer an amendment, to offer a motion to recommit, or to change a word or a syllable of this bill. If this rule is adopted, we are required to accept this bill as it is handed to us by the Republican members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee or vote it down entirely.

Now, I say that we should endeavor to attempt to defeat the rule, but if we fail in that regard, if we are unable to defeat this rule, if we are forced to vote for this bill as it is in order to advance this legislation, then I say it is wise for us to accept what we can get, and for this reason: We are not charged with the responsibility of legislation on this question before the country. The Republican party and the Republican members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee in this instance bear that responsibility. Not only that, they have said to the country, by bringing in this rule and adopting it, if they do, that they absolve us not only of any duty or any responsibility in this matter, but absolve us of any ability to help ourselves or help the country. They come here and tie our hands, shackle us, and then say that this is all the legislation they will give. Now, under those circumstances they bearing the responsibility, they bringing in these rules in reference to trust legislation, where we can not offer as amendments or through a motion to recommit propositions that we believe would be of benefit to the country in wiping out the trusts and benefiting the people, I say, then, let the responsibility rest with them.

Let them go to the country, and if the legislation which they propose at this session of Congress, if the legislation which they pass through this House, is not effective in bringing about the results that the people of the United States demand then they can not charge any responsibility for its failure to this side of the Chamber. They have prevented us from offering any relief; they have taken the entire responsibility, and when they go before the people in the next Presidential election they can not say that we have hampered them in their legislation. We have taken the position that they should have free hands to work. We agree with what the Republican party says ought to be done. Their President and their committees on the floor of this House say that the great trusts of this country should be regulated. We agree to that proposition. You say you know how to regulate them. We say your remedy is not effective, but knowing that your remedy is not effective, and yet believing that it may aid to some extent in the attempt to regulate the trusts, we are willing to give you free hands, and never by our votes or our actions have we hampered your legislation in this matter. If you fail, the failure must be charged to you and to you alone. If you succeed, then we have endeavored to help you toward success. But if this does not produce the effect that you say it will produce by the time of the next Presidential election, then you must take the entire responsibility before the country of that failure, knowing that you have stood here with absolutely free hands to enact any legislation that you might see fit.

Now, you come here with a bill to-day and you propose to regulate the trusts by not allowing the great transportation companies of the country to grant them rebates. So far, so good. Why do you not want them to grant rebates to the trusts? Because you say by that means they have built up and fostered the trusts of this country. Why not go a step further? It is well known to you that many of the great trusts of this country are fed on the protective tariff rates, that many of the great trusts of this country sell their goods in foreign countries for less than they receive at home for the same goods. Many of the great trusts of this country would not exist to-day if it had not been for the tariff law, which protects them against foreign competition and turns thousands of dollars into their treasuries.

Now, if you are willing to regulate the trusts, to diminish their profit, to give some chance to the toiling masses of the people of this country by not allowing these trusts to receive rebates from the great transportation companies of the country, why are you not willing to allow us to offer an amendment or amendments to this bill by which we could cut off the tariff duties that are placed on trust-made goods? Is it because your constituencies do not want it? If I read the history of the times correctly, it seems to me that at a not far distant day in the past I have heard a clamor from the constituencies on that side of the House as well as on this side of the House, to cut down the tariff rates that to-day protect the great trusts of the United States. Why are you not willing to do so? Why do you force us here to a vote on this bill without an opportunity to offer such an amendment to the country, if you earnestly desire to regulate the trusts and prevent the great amassing of capital in their treasury? It would be only necessary to allow a simple amendment. If it is proper to take from their earnings by cutting off their rebates, why is it not just as proper to take from their earnings by requiring them to sell to the citizens of the United States their products at the same price and at the same rate they sell them to foreign citizens and countries beyond the sea?

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSNN of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, how much time did the gentleman from Alabama consume?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama consumed the ten minutes which were granted to him. The gentleman from Tennessee has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the discussion of the rule by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is to my mind the best indication I have ever heard of the wisdom of the Committee on Rules in bringing it in. What the country wants now is legislation on the lines of this bill.

No one claims that this legislation is going to be perfect; but it is a step in the direction of the regulation of these great corporations, a step that the country expects the Congress to take and that the Congress is ready to take. The discussion of the tariff, Mr. Speaker, that is suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has been had on other measures and is certainly not necessary at this time. We are in the closing hours of the session. We have on this side the responsibility of legislation, and I am glad, for one, that the Committee on Rules has brought in a rule that will enable this House to vote at once on a measure which has been before the members for weeks, which has passed one body, which has been considered by one of the strongest committees of the House and is presented to us in such manner that the House, in my judgment, should take it as presented by the committee and close at least this step in the discussion of the regulation of these great corporations. Let us do something and not merely talk about it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield a moment to me?

Mr. DALZELL. Are you going to speak for the rule or against it?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am going to make an inquiry of the committee in reference to a suggested amendment to this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I can not yield to the gentleman for that purpose. I trust the gentleman on the other side will use the balance of his time now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman propose to close the debate in one speech?

Mr. DALZELL. I propose to say a few words only and leave to my colleague on the committee the closing of the debate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman is going to have two speeches, he ought to use a little more of his time now.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has sixteen minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] five minutes, or as much as he desires.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want five minutes. I think I can say all I desire in two.

This is the 13th day of February. This Congress expires on the 4th of March. The supply bills substantially have not been enacted. Some of them, and the most difficult, are not yet through the House. The Republican party is in power in the House and the Senate. The House, the large body, the popular body, does business when a majority of its members so desire. I do not speak in criticism of what takes place in another place, but it is legitimate for me to say that the business of another body is done by unanimous consent. There is a public sentiment in the country, and in my judgment a just and wise public sentiment, that desires legislation upon certain matters. This bill, with the amendments upon which this rule will operate, is one of them.

In my own judgment, if legislation can be enacted and enforced by apt provision, accompanied by apt appropriation, that will dissolve a real or alleged, and in my judgment a real, copartnership in many instances between the great shippers and the common carriers, so that each citizen engaged in interstate commerce, letting the unit rest upon the carload, can get the same rates that a man does who is a larger shipper, I believe that would be the great thing to do, and if that legislation is had and can be enforced, I believe it will be more powerful to solve the abuses of which we complain, and of which the country complains, than any other. [Applause on the Republican side.]

This bill goes a long way, as I believe, in that direction. We can get this legislation. In the other body, where it is by unanimous consent, I am not so sure how far we can go. Let us clinch this, and then if we can go further and get something that is desirable we have that opportunity. Take that and render sure what we can get and clinch it, and then move on to further conquests, if something further is desirable. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois just for a moment.

Mr. CANNON. I have not much time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has half a minute remaining.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether the committee having the bill in charge would agree to unanimous consent, in case the rule is adopted, to strike out the word "willful" in the second line? The bill now provides that "willful" failure upon the part of a common carrier subject to the act to file and publish the tariff of rates and charges, and the "willful" failure to strictly observe, etc.——

Mr. CANNON. I have only half a minute.

Mr. DALZELL. If this is coming out of my time, I object.

The SPEAKER. It is coming out of the half minute of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Now, in reply to the gentleman——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me finish my question, please.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. I can not even answer the gentleman's question. My time has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Maine one minute to continue his inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will continue it, then, in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee, if I can not be allowed to do so in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I will say the gentleman whose name this bill bears in another body stated that the word "willful" ought to be stricken out of this bill, and ought not to be in it. Now, I want to perfect the bill, if it is going to pass, and I simply ask the committee if they will, in accordance with the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman, by unanimous consent, strike out the word "willful;" that is, if they fail to do the thing required of them to do by publishing the list of rates and filing them that the Government will not be compelled to show that the failure was "willful."

Mr. CANNON. Well, does my friend desire me to answer the question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, the distinguished Senator the gentleman refers to in another body can voice his views—a very considerable Senator, but I have never heard of him as a great lawyer. I say again——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I did not yield to the gentleman from Illinois. I only yielded a minute.

Mr. CANNON. Well, then, I hope——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yielded a minute for an answer. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I hope the gentleman will use the balance of his time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suppose the gentleman has only one speech in closing.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to say a few words, and yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think the rule is that the gentleman ought to conclude in one speech and not two.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule on the subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This is the custom.

Mr. DALZELL. I trust the gentleman will not be technical.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not technical, but it is not usual to close with two speeches. The gentleman understands that. It is only fair play that he should have the speech in closing, and that ought to be the last.

Mr. DALZELL. I must insist on the gentleman going on. I have the right to conclude after that whether in one speech or in two.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have six minutes. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to hope, Mr. Speaker, that there could be found in this House, upon the other side of it, enough of gentlemen, fair minded and sincere, to defeat the adoption of this rule. There is no danger in the world that this measure may fail of consideration. There is no question of consideration at this time; the question is how it should be considered. There is no question about the passage of the measure; the question is whether it should be passed with amendment, if amendment ought to be made, or whether the opportunity for amendment shall be denied. A few days ago this House passed, by unanimous vote, another bill upon the same subject, and the minority of this committee has recommended that some of the provisions of that bill be attached to this bill. Now, why ought there not to be opportunity to do it if the House sees proper to do it? It will not do to say that to amend this bill will be to delay or defeat its passage, because the committee recommend amendments, and presumably they will be adopted. Everybody knows, although we have been informed by the gentleman from Illinois that the 13th day of February is here, that there will be found abundant time in which to do a great many things between this 13th day of February and the 4th day of March, a considerable portion of which ought not to be done.

Now, what good reason is there, if gentlemen desire to deal fairly, frankly, and honestly with this question, to deny all opportunity for amendment?

I will be glad to hear somebody state one. Gentlemen say that the country is demanding legislation; and some of them perhaps might be understood, from what they say, as asserting that the country is demanding this legislation. I deny that; and there is no evidence in the world that it is true. The country is not demanding this legislation. This legislation will bring about no good that the people were promised, and because it is to be no good is the reason why some are urging it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

What is there in this bill that is calculated to add to the value of the law already on the statute books? The great object of this bill is to repeal remedial legislation. It is not adding to it a particle by its provisions about rebates. The provision against rebates and discriminations is weak and puerile as compared with the provisions of the interstate-commerce law as now existing. The provisions of this bill take away a part of the penalties to be enforced and imposed for the violation of that law—the imprisonment. That is made plain and distinct. There never was a better instance in the world, there will not be one furnished in long years, of the deliberate, premeditated attempt to bunco the people of the country than this effort to pass through with hot haste this bill. Gentlemen know that the bill can not bear consideration in the light, with an opportunity to amend. Gentlemen could not oppose and would not oppose or reject these amendments if they were brought to a vote. It would be a stultification for everyone who voted for these propositions on the bill which passed the House a little while ago; and can you afford to deny this House an opportunity to consider any of them, so that they may be attached to this bill?

Who can doubt the purpose, who can be in error as to the animus of this kind of legislation? It is a mere demagogue's play. I do not use the word from choice. I do not select it to be offensive, but I know of no other that will properly designate or characterize the attempt at stifling legislation instead of legislating. The gentleman from Illinois has suggested that the reputed author of this bill—I say reputed author—is not esteemed as a great lawyer. Yet he is esteemed as great in some other things, and those things are to find their vindication in this process of legislating without consideration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Does that exhaust the time on the other side, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has one minute remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, those members of the House who undertook in a straightforward way to reach some conclusion by way of legislation upon this problem sought to accomplish three things, and when I say three things I mean that all who pursued the study in a careful manner followed that same channel of thought. The first of these propositions was a measure to expedite cases now pending in order that we might have the judgment of the Supreme Court upon some of these problems. That bill has passed and I think it is now a law. The second proposition was some measure of publicity through which great corporations might be compelled to disclose certain methods of doing business, and especially those things upon which rests the valuation of their capital stock. The third proposition was the effort against discriminatory practices in rebates, existing between great shippers and carriers.

The second proposition, that of publicity, has appeared in a bill which passed this body on last Saturday. It also appeared in the bill providing for the department of commerce, different in some respects, but at all events seeking that same line of publication.

The chief and most material part of this bill now under consideration directly affects the discriminatory practice in rebates. That proposition, substantially in the same language in which it appears in this bill, appeared in the bill which passed this body on last Saturday, and appeared also in the bill understood to have been framed by the Attorney-General of the United States. Mr. Speaker, I believe in practical legislation. If we have this same provision substantially in three different bills, now having control of one of them, it is the part of wisdom, in my judgment, to take advantage of this opportunity and pass this measure. I still believe, Mr. Speaker, that the bill we passed last Saturday is the better bill of the two.

That bill we have already passed, and whether it is ignored or favorably considered by the other branch of Congress I do not know. I believe in view of the near approach of the day of adjournment of this Congress and the ability we now have to pass the same provision in this bill we ought not to neglect this opportunity, but to pass the bill with the amendments suggested by the committee which has had it under consideration. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee use his minute now?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not if the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to close with two speeches.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule on that subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I appeal to the Chair that there has been a universal rule, if not written into the rule, the universal practice, to close with only one speech.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to occupy his time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not now.

Mr. DALZELL. Is the gentleman to occupy his remaining minute?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve my minute, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I desire my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio, to be heard, I shall not stop longer than to say this. My colleagues on the other side of the House, instead of giving a reason why the rule should not be adopted, have given most conclusive reasons why it should be adopted. They say, "We are all for the bill; this bill, whether good or bad, is a bill for which we all intend to vote; it ought to be considered and ought to be passed." Now, I call attention to the fact that the House has adopted the previous question on the adoption of this resolution, and, therefore, to vote down this rule would be to set aside altogether the consideration of this bill and make the regular order the consideration of the sundry civil bill. Therefore, if we want this legislation we must pass this rule.

Now another thing. As the gentleman from Indiana has well said, we have already enacted into law two-thirds of the anticipated trust legislation, and that is an abundant reason, a cogent reason, a dominant reason why we should now, when we have it in our power, enact a third proposition and put it on the statute book, whatever may become of the other legislation, and complete the legislation proposed for the control of trusts.

I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, in the one minute that I have remaining, all I have to say in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is that if we vote down this rule there will be no serious difficulty in the way of having another rule. The gentleman seems to think that if we vote down this rule and do not take up the Senate bill to be acted on in the manner which the rule prescribes, we lose the opportunity to pass the bill. Why, sir, the machinery of the House of Representatives is oiled and ready. The Committee on Rules could have a rule here in two minutes and a half to meet the case. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Our "machinery" is all right; there need be no trouble about having a proper rule. We could have here in less than two minutes and a half a rule by which the bill might come before the House and be properly considered, with proper opportunity for amendment, and be passed in less than an hour. Why, sir, if you will let us offer amendments to the bill, we will willingly give away the hour for debate; in that case we do not want any hour's debate upon it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am content now that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] shall proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that in the consideration of a matter of so much importance, and one that does not involve legitimately any question of political advantage one way or the other, we should find ourselves constantly impeded in the progress of this legislation by efforts to gain political advantage. Political or personal advantage ought not to be a dominant consideration as affecting the question of supporting this rule. I very much fear, Mr. Speaker, that the effect of the defeat of this rule at this particular time would be to throw into a chaotic condition the whole system of antitrust legislation which has not been already concluded by the action of the Republican party. Though we might permit the other side of the House to write into this bill whatever measures they have suggested, they would vote against the rule reported by a Republican committee; and they would discredit the act while passing through the House, and would proclaim to the country, as the gentleman from Alabama has said, there is nothing in this legislation. Happily for the judgment of the people of this country, the country believes there is much in this legislation. The people of the country are looking to this House and to this hour; and they will not lightly discriminate between the men who want to put their quibbles into a bill of this character in order that they may have something to come out of the result.

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that the language of this bill——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have not time to be interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that the language of this bill is faulty in this—that in the second line of the second page the word "willfully" is embodied. Let me give an illustration of the position which gentlemen are taking upon that question. A railroad company charged with the duty of filing its statement places it, we will suppose, in the mail, thus doing what it can to send it to the various places required by law; but there occurs a railroad accident, a fire, a mob—various things may happen so that this statement does not reach the place intended. Now, in that case, gentlemen on the other side say that the officers of the railroad company, thus failing by no fault of its own to make these returns, shall be subjected to fine and imprisonment because of such failure. I undertake to say—and I stake my reputation as a lawyer on this statement—that the word "willfully" in this connection means "purposely," and would be so construed by every court in the United States; and when you have indicted an individual for having willfully failed and neglected to do a prescribed duty under the law, he ought to have the opportunity to show that the failure was not willful, because of the surrounding circumstances, because of the accident, it might be, that caused the failure.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have reached a point in this legislation where we must do something or fail to do it. We have here embodied in three acts—the two acts already passed, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana, and the third, the one which I now hold in my hand—the concentrated judgment of the best ability we can bring to bear in the two Houses of Congress. Shall we now open the door? Shall we lay open to a contest between the Senate and the House of Representatives this whole question, and under a proceeding requiring unanimous consent in one branch of Congress give to one man or half a dozen men the opportunity to prevent any of this legislation?

I do not undertake to say whether this legislation is sufficiently drastic or not. I do undertake to say that in passing these three measures we make three great strides toward carrying out the purpose of the people of this country. And I do undertake to say that our duty is very plain here this morning; that the duty laid upon us can not be shifted or turned aside by any question of throwing open the opportunity of amendment upon this bill.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has been, as usual, general in his statement. What amendment does he propose to put upon this bill? He does not tell us.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Littlefield bill, which we have passed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman would put into this bill "the Littlefield bill," and any Tom, Dick, and Harry's bill, in order to stir up any kind of trouble anywhere, if he can only disturb the peace. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] I hope we may vote unanimously for this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate under the previous question has expired. The question is on agreeing to the report of the Committee on Rules.

The question was put.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the ayes have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 134, noes 95.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for tellers.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 110, answered "present" 4, not voting 97; as follows:

Mr. HILDEBRANT with Mr. BROUSSARD.

Mr. VREELAND with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan with Mr. JONES of Virginia.

For the vote:

Mr. MCCLEARY with Mr. NEVILLE.

Mr. DAVIDSON with Mr. GOOCH.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the rule, one hour is to be devoted to debate.

The SPEAKER. Not exceeding one hour.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask unanimous consent that that time be equally divided, and controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] and by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can easily arrange that, as he controls the hour.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well. I will yield, then, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk, however, should read the bill, unless the reading is dispensed with.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I ask unanimous consent that we waive the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be waived. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized to control thirty minutes of the time.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes of that time to my colleague [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, at the outset somebody should state precisely the effect of the proposed legislation upon that already on the statute book, and I desire to enter my protest against the enactment of a law so important, so vitally affecting existing legislation that, in my judgment, it will open wider and wider the meshes through which heretofore the corporations have escaped any punishment whatever under existing laws, with no effect on the part of the gentlemen in charge of it to state precisely how it will affect and change existing statutes.

In my opinion this law exempts the officials of railroad companies entirely from punishment. No matter what may be done by the railroad managers and agents, under this bill only the corporation can be proceeded against. You can not find in it a line under which the managers of a railroad company can be indicted or punished. It reenacts in part existing legislation and, in my opinion, repeals the provisions of the interstate-commerce law imposing penalties on corporation officials. It visits punishment solely upon the corporation, so that henceforth it will be impossible under this law to indict the officer responsible for the illegal acts of the corporation.

In the next place, it makes the persons receiving rebates equally guilty with the corporations conceding them, and we are told that this changes existing law. A mere glance at the interstate-commerce law is sufficient to convince anyone who will take the pains to look at it that this is only a reenactment of a law already on the statute books. So are all the features of this bill that deserve support, but it contains matter that weakens instead of strengthening the laws heretofore enacted. It was intended to have this effect. It is a fraud. It was designed to prevent the punishment of offenses committed by the managers of the corporations.

By far the most objectionable feature of the bill is the repeal of the statute authorizing the imprisonment of violators of the interstate-commerce law. For one, I will not vote for a law the most salient provisions of which aim at relieving the lawless railroad managers from the penalties imposed by existing statutes.

I am astounded that a law so sweeping in its aims should be brought in here by a committee, with nothing in the report recommending its passage to advise the House or the country as to its effect upon existing statutes.

Never has so brazen, so shameless an attempt been made to impose upon the country a measure so reprehensible. It will be swallowed by the majority in the House, not because it is in any sense responsive to the demands of the people for the control of the monopolies, but because the newspapers have said that it has the approval of the White House and is in line with the policy of party leaders who have no desire to interfere seriously with trusts and monopolies, but who thus make a false pretense of obedience to the popular demand for reform legislation.

I desire to direct particular attention to the fact that as the bill passed the Senate it provided that—

> Anything done or omitted by a corporation common carrier subject to the interstate-commerce law, "which if done by any director or officer thereof," * * * "would constitute a misdemeanor" under said act or this act shall be held to be a misdemeanor committed by such corporation," and then goes on to provide that the offending corporation so convicted shall be "subject to the penalties provided by the interstate-commerce law or this act in reference to such persons, except such penalties as are herein changed."

The House committee brings in an amendment inserting in line 9 of page 1 of the bill, after the word "shall," the word "also." Thus amended, the bill reads that—

> Anything done or omitted by a corporation common carrier subject to the interstate-commerce law which, if done by any officer or director thereof, * * * would constitute a misdemeanor under said act or under this act shall "also" be held to be a misdemeanor committed by such corporation.

Is there any doubt that but for this House amendment this miserable measure, the aim of which is to cripple existing laws on the subject, would have exempted the officers and agents of the railroads from all the penalties provided by the interstate-commerce law?

Read this provision as it passed the Senate, keeping in view the sweeping repeal of all laws inconsistent with this bill, which forms its last section, and consider it in connection with sections 10, 11, and 12 of the interstate-commerce law, and whatever may be your opinion as to other questions involved you will be forced to the conclusion that it was the intention of its author to relieve the officials and agents of the corporations of the penalties imposed by existing laws for lawlessness in the conduct of the business of common carriers.

Does the insertion of the word "also" in the bill so change it as to thwart this purpose? I do not believe that it does. This bill was intended to exonerate lawlessness from punishment. It certainly repeals the law prescribing fine or imprisonment as the penalty for violation of the interstate-commerce law, and substitutes a fine as the only penalty. This alone is sufficient to condemn it.

[Mr. SHACKLEFORD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SHACKELFORD. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield the time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, observing that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is with us this morning—and I am glad he is here, because I want to avail myself of this opportunity to call his attention, and incidentally the notice of the members of this House, to what the gentleman from Maine said last Saturday on the floor of this House when his so-called antitrust bill was pending. On page 1903 of the RECORD the gentleman from Maine, referring to my antitrust bill, which his committee did not report, says:

Now, that being the case, I am going to read a legal proposition on this bill, which has been voted for twice on this floor by every one of our Democratic friends—I take it without reading it. Now, I will read a paragraph of this bill:

"The claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not excuse such person from testifying, but such testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding."

What does that mean?

Mr. SULZER. I will tell the gentleman, if he will yield to me.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. One moment. That is not even common sense. It is not even common nonsense.

"The 'claim' that testimony would incriminate should not be used against the party testifying."

That provision in the bill simply discloses the fact that the man who drew it did not know how to use language to express a coherent idea. It is a tale told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing. That is all I have to say in reply to the gentleman from New York.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on the same day after the gentleman from Maine had concluded his remarks I replied to him as follows, and I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at pages 1903, 1904:

Mr. Chairman, just a few words in reply to the gentleman from Maine. In referring to my antitrust bill, the gentleman from Maine, it appears to me, makes an argument exactly like a trust lawyer. He seems to have changed his mind. I do not think his argument was very sound or very logical, and it even lacked the merit of being original.

But that is to be expected from the gentleman from Maine. He has flopped on the trust question, and we may now and hereafter look for all kinds of vagaries regarding this matter from the once great and only and original trust buster. [Laughter.]

The gentleman has pointed out in my antitrust bill only one defect, and that defect is in this provision: "The claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not excuse such person from testifying, but such testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding." The gentleman claims, as I understand him, that that provision is unconstitutional.

I know the gentleman is learned in the law, but with all due respect I take issue with him on that point. As a matter of fact, that provision is taken verbatim from law now on the statute book and it has been held constitutional. It has been held over and over again that where a witness gives testimony incriminating himself as well as others, by the way of information or confession, that the district attorney representing the Government can extend the witness immunity. In many States the law does it. That is exactly what this provision does; so there is nothing to that objection.

At that time, sir, it seemed to me that the gentleman from Maine was as precipitous as he was severe; but I overlooked it because I knew how excited the gentleman was and the great load, the tremendous responsibility, he was staggering under in trying to pass his own bill—a bill that would do the trusts about as much harm as the great volume of words he hurled at this side of the House.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have before us now another so-called antitrust bill, namely, Senate bill No. 7053, entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States."

This bill unanimously passed the Senate on the 3d day of February, 1903. On the 4th day of February, 1903, it was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House, and favorably reported yesterday, and is now before us for discussion only—remember I say for discussion only, because under the rule just adopted by the Republican majority this side of the House is prohibited from amending the bill in the slightest particular.

Now, sir, I will call the attention of the House, especially the attention of my friend from Maine, to page 6, line 6, of this bill now before us, which reads as follows:

The claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such person from testifying or such corporation producing its books and papers, but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, in such proceeding.

That provision, as anyone can see, is almost word for word the same as the provision in my antitrust bill. [Laughter.] Now, the gentleman from Maine called that provision unconstitutional. He even went further and said that it was not "common sense;" that it was not even "common nonsense;" and, continuing, said in conclusion that it was the "tale of an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." I wish at this time to make the comparison; but, then, Thackeray once said "Comparisons are odious," and perhaps I have said all I should say when I call the attention of the gentleman from Maine and of the members of this House to the provision contained in this bill now under consideration and in my bill and show that the language of both is the same, word for word. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think that reflects great credit on the Senate.

Mr. SULZER. And the gentleman might add on myself, but I am modest in the matter. However, in this connection I will now read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at page 1902, what I said last Saturday in further answer to my friend from Maine:

And, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to stand up here and say that the gentleman from Maine, my friend, the erstwhile trust buster, did put into his bill some of the provisions of my bill, but they were the mild provisions of my bill which amount to little. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Maine studiously left out of this bill everything in my bill which would do something, which would amount to something, which would check the trust evil and more effectually curb the potential power and the autocratic sway of the trusts.

Now, another thing—and this is a good time to say it again, and I want to repeat it every chance I get, on behalf of my Democratic colleagues—that when the department of commerce bill was pending in this House I offered my antitrust bill as an amendment to one of the sections of that department of commerce bill, and every Democrat in this House voted for it, and every Republican in this House, including the great, the only, and the original trust buster, my good friend from Maine, voted against it. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I have noticed, however, that since the department of commerce bill has been pending in the Senate a farseeing and sagacious Senator contemplates amending that bill by incorporating in it an antitrust provision very similiar to mine.

I hope the Senator will do so. He can have my antitrust bill in toto; and I believe it is the best bill ever introduced in this House to establish "publicity" regarding the trusts. I have no personal vanity in this matter. I am only a humble servant of the people, with mediocre ability; and being in the minority, I can not hope to do more than construct legislation. I can only prepare good bills; I can not pass them. Only Republicans can make laws nowadays. But I care not for the glory; all I want is to secure results for the people. [Laughter.]

So much for the facts, Mr. Speaker, by way of comparison, and the record will speak for itself. I know the gentleman from Maine does not relish it, but hereafter he should, in the words of Davy Crockett, "be sure he is right before he goes ahead."

What, sir, will the gentleman from Maine do now? Will he vote for this bill containing this, as he calls it, unconstitutional provision; that, as he says, is not "even common sense;" that, as he terms it, "is the tale of an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing," or will he vote against it, or will he run away from it, as he did on another bill the other day? What does the gentleman from Maine think about it all now? Does he still think it is "nonsense" and "unconstitutional?" Does he still say it is "a tale of an idiot?"

Let him answer, and let me say to him that he is not the only great lawyer in Congress. There are others. This bill passed the Senate unanimously. Does the gentleman from Maine want us to believe there are no lawyers in the Senate? It was reported unanimously from the Senate Committee on Commerce. Does the gentleman from Maine want us to believe the distinguished Senators on that committee can not tell the difference between a well-settled provision of law and the "tale of an idiot?" Now, who are the Senators on the Senate Committee on Commerce? Here they are. I will read them:

William P. Frye, of Maine.	John P. Jones, of Nevada.
Stephen B. Elkins, of West Virginia.	George C. Perkins, of California.
Knute Nelson, of Minnesota.	George G. Vest, of Missouri.
Jacob H. Gallinger, of New Hampshire.	James H. Berry, of Arkansas.
Boies Penrose, of Pennsylvania.	George Turner, of Washington.
Marcus A. Hanna, of Ohio.	Thomas S. Martin, of Virginia.
William E. Mason, of Illinois.	Alexander S. Clay, of Georgia.
Chauncey M. Depew, of New York.	Stephen R. Mallory, of Florida.

A great committee—a great list of names—including some very great lawyers, with all due respect to the gentleman from Maine and his childish expression of a hasty opinion to the contrary notwithstanding.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine may know it all, but I am inclined to think he is in error in regard to this proposition of law. As he said, a law student should know better. I am sorry for him. I sympathize with him. I regret to see him in his present predicament. But to go on. After the bill passed the Senate and came to this House the Speaker referred it to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and that committee passed on it and reported it favorably with this same provision in it. Let me read the names of this House committee. They are:

William P. Hepburn, of Iowa.
Loren Fletcher, of Minnesota.
James S. Sherman, of New York.
Irving P. Wanger, of Pennsylvania.
Charles F. Joy, of Missouri.
John B. Corliss, of Michigan.
James F. Stewart, of New Jersey.
James R. Mann, of Illinois.
William C. Lovering, of Massachusetts.
Frank L. Coombs, of California.
Emmett Tompkins, of Ohio.
Robert C. Davey, of Louisiana.
William C. Adamson, of Georgia.
Robert W. Davis, of Florida.
Dorsey W. Shackleford, of Missouri.
William H. Ryan, of New York.
William Richardson, of Alabama.

Some great names there, names of able lawyers. Will the gentleman from Maine deny it? No; I think not. The trouble with the gentleman from Maine in this matter is that he is so absorbed with his own bill that he can see no good in any other bill.

The gentleman should be broader and more liberal and more charitable. Of course, we all know he is great—very great, and continually contemplates on it—but there are just a few others, and there were a few here before he came to Congress, and they are still with us. The gentleman from Maine should give credit to whom credit is due. His bill is not the only pebble on the beach. In fact, some good lawyers in Congress do not think it is constitutional, and some eminent antitrust people think it is not an antitrust bill, but, on the contrary, a good bill for the trusts. I spoke briefly about the bill when it was before this House. The opinion I then expressed has since been confirmed. Let me read from the New York World of the 11th instant, as follows:

Representative LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, the author of the antitrust bill which passed the House last Saturday, went to the White House to-day. He asked the President to use his influence in securing the passage of the Littlefield bill by the Senate.

The President refused to do so. He told Mr. LITTLEFIELD that his antitrust bill was of no particular value; was unconstitutional, and was entirely too drastic, and that he would not indorse it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD was greatly surprised, and left the White House in no good humor. He went to the Capitol and undertook to organize a revolt among the Republicans against the adoption of the conference report on the Department of Commerce bill, which would include the Nelson publicity amendment. He had the promises of several Republicans, but when the report came up to-day and Mr. HEPBURN demanded a record vote, all the Republicans weakened.

Now, that is too bad. Think of the President—who ought to know—telling the gentleman from Maine his bill was unconstitutional! I sympathize with the gentleman. It is really pitiable. But let me read from the New York American—a great antitrust newspaper—from the issue of February 11, 1903:

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate will in a few days proclaim to the country that the Littlefield bill is unconstitutional!

My, my, just think of that! And now let me read an extract from an editorial in the Philadelphia Inquirer of yesterday, as follows:

The Littlefield bill, which is now before the Senate, will fall by the wayside; but that measure is long and complicated.

Long and complicated, indeed! If it is, then it must be like some of the logic of the gentleman whose name it fictitiously bears. But now, to cap the climax of the humiliation of my friend, let me read some resolutions adopted at a largely attended meeting of the American Antitrust League in this city on the 11th day of February, 1903. The resolutions are as follows:

Whereas there are now pending in Congress certain bills which purport to be antitrust bills, alleged to be for the purpose of regulating and controlling the so-called trusts; and

Whereas after a careful examination of these pending bills to regulate trusts we are forced to the conclusion that the so-called Littlefield bill, H. R. No. 17, is a most vicious bill in that it proposes amendments to the existing antitrust law which will emasculate the criminal clauses of the antitrust act of 1890, and thus enable the trusts to escape just punishment for their offenses; and

Whereas the so-called Elkins bill (S. 7053) is clearly intended to still further weaken the effectiveness of the antitrust act of 1890, in that it abolishes the imprisonment penalties and tends to prevent the securing of evidence by making the giver and receiver of rebates equally guilty; and

Whereas the Sulzer bill (H. R. 15927) is a measure which proposes practical steps for a better enforcement of the law against trusts: Therefore

Resolved, That we denounce the Littlefield bill (H. R. 17) and the Elkins bill (S. 7053) as not being antitrust bills, but really protrust bills, intended solely to enable the trusts to escape just punishment for their offenses; and be it further

Resolved, That we indorse the Sulzer bill (H. R. 15927) as the best measure proposed for publicity as to the workings of the trusts, which, if enacted into law and properly enforced, would lead to the destruction of the most oppressive trusts in the country.

H. B. MARTIN, Chairman,
WM. L. DEWART, Secretary,
Joint Committee American Antitrust League and D. A. 66, K. of L.

Mr. Speaker, these resolutions speak for themselves. I need say no more. But in justice to myself and in behalf of the antitrust bill I introduced I want to have the RECORD tell its story, and——

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. I only have a few minutes left. If the gentleman will give me some of his time I will be glad to answer his questions. I ask the gentleman if he will give me some of his time?

Mr. HEPBURN. No.

Mr. SULZER. Then I decline to yield.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SULZER. Do it in your own time. I decline now to yield. I started out to call the attention of this House and the country to the sad and sorrowful spectacle the gentleman from Maine has made of himself. He said that I had put all the Democrats on record on two different occasions in favor of this "tale of an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." Now, let us see what he and his colleagues will do about it.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who is a great lawyer, keeps the language I referred to in this bill now before us and asks all the Republicans, including the gentleman from Maine, to vote for it, and is going to put every Republican in this House, as the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] put every Senator in the Senate, on record in favor of this "tale of an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing." [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, one word more. Let the gentleman from Iowa explain that to the gentleman from Maine, and I am content, and the next time the gentleman from Maine will know more law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I have no disposition to enter into any dispute with the gentleman from Maine as to the choice of language he may have made in characterizing the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.] I would not have used that language in reference to him myself, but——

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman is too good a lawyer.

Mr. HEPBURN. Since the gentleman from Maine has seen fit deliberately to do so, I will allow those two gentlemen to continue the contest to their contentment.

Mr. SULZER. Let me ask the gentleman a question as to whether he agrees——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, yes; I will yield.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman has lots of time. He has thirty minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do not talk about it, but let the gentleman ask his question.

Mr. SULZER. Very well; I want to know, regarding this language taken from my bill and put into the Senate bill, and now before this House, whether the gentleman agrees that that provision is what the gentleman from Maine characterized it, as a "tale of an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing."

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know in the first place if the gentleman did use that language in regard to this language.

Mr. SULZER. He did, and it is——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York will be in order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I know this, that the gentleman's claim for authorship is not very well founded, because of the fact that that language is the law now.

Mr. SULZER. That is what I said the other day in reply to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HEPBURN. And this language has been the law for years, and he is pluming himself upon having discovered the exact phraseology that will make the octopus responsible. That language is in the law and it has been for years.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I decline to yield.

Mr. SULZER. Just for a minute?

Mr. HEPBURN. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to further yield.

Mr. SULZER. I want to call his attention to the fact that I said the other day just what he says now in regard to this matter. We agree, but we differ from the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to believe that the gentlemen on that side of the House will vote for any proposition. You intend to vote for this bill. You have denounced it in the bitterest terms. Every one of you will vote for it. You denounced the bill that the honorable gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] introduced and that bears his name. Every one of you voted for it. You would do it again, if it came up.

You vote for anything. Why, that side of the House the other day voted——

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has declined to yield.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have declined to yield.

The SPEAKER. There is no use in repeating it when a gentleman declines to yield. It only leads to unseemly proceedings in the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. You gentlemen voted for a proposition—every one of you—under which it would have been possible to have fined the Pennsylvania Railroad for a single act the sum of $8,000,000.

Mr. SULZER. We wanted to make the punishment fit the crime.

Mr. HEPBURN. You not only did that, but in the same section you voted for language that you proposed to make the law under which that railroad corporation could be fined the sum of $16,000,000. You have voted for that kind of idiocy. You have not stopped at anything, if you simply labeled it antitrust or called it antioctopus. This provision that we are now considering, as has already been said, completes the legislation that many persons in this country, not all, think will be necessary in order that the law should control the subject of trusts. I am not sure that this legislation is the best possible. I am not sure that the two other propositions that are already enacted are the best possible, but they are the best attainable under the circumstances, and that is all that we will be required by our constituents to accomplish.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I prefer not to yield. I do not know that gentlemen should criticise the House or the Republicans of the House for endeavoring to secure this legislation. It is good; possibly not the best. The evidence of its being good is that you will vote for it. But you say we are abandoning something. Not so. Who here has abandoned the provisions of the bill that we voted for a few days ago? It is now in process of enactment into legislation. We have done our part. Whether or not all the good that you gentlemen say would be accomplished by that measure will be accomplished is dependent upon another body. The responsibility rests upon it; not upon us. Now, for fear, possibly, that that may not become legislation, here is another proposition that we offer to you. We offer it to you because it is a certainty. It has already passed that body where danger may lurk toward that which we have passed. Do you prefer to have nothing? If you can not have the bill that the House voted upon a few days ago, is it not better to take this, even according to your own assertions that it is vastly inferior to that which has already been done?

I am not prepared to yield to the proposition. I believe that this accomplishes much. What has been the great difficulty in the way of administering the interstate-commerce law? Where has the trouble originated? Mind you, that in sixteen years, with all of the broad provisions making criminal the acts that we reprobate, no single successful prosecution has been waged against a malefactor; not one. There has been no conviction. Why? Simply because the Interstate Commerce Commission could not make the proofs. The knowledge that was essential to conviction was locked in the minds of a comparatively few people.

The prosecutions were almost invariably against that class, and the community of kindly feeling, the close relations that existed prevented one member of that class from testifying against his fellows, and hence it has been that prosecutions have failed. They refused to testify, because the punishment would fall upon the individual and might be for long periods of imprisonment. Hence the witnesses would not and could not be made to testify. We are trying to remedy that difficulty. In consonance and in harmony with the oft-repeated recommendation of the Interstate Commerce Commission we propose what? To make the individual less culpable? No; the gentleman from Missouri to the contrary notwithstanding. That gentleman has failed to read the law, or else he must have purposed a misstatement of the law. I say that there is no repeal from first to last in all this legislation——

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HEPBURN. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman ought not to refer to "the gentleman from Missouri" if he does not want to yield.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ought to refer to the gentleman from Missouri at any time when he deliberately misstates a proposition.

Mr. COCHRAN. I brand that as a deliberate lie. I did not deliberately misstate the question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then ignorantly. The gentleman can take either proposition. I say that there is no repeal of the present statute making culpable and responsible criminally the individual under the interstate-commerce law. But in addition we make the corporation liable criminally. The subordinate is now under the law, and to that we add by this statute the culpability and criminality of the master, the corporation.

Mr. THAYER. But do you relieve on the subject of imprisonment?

Mr. HEPBURN. We repeal the matter of imprisonment, and we do away with it in harmony with the advice of the Interstate Commerce Commission, repeated over and over and over again.

Mr. THAYER. But you do it, just the same.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, sir; we do it. There is no punishment by imprisonment under this law, but penalties are continued from $1,000 fine to $20,000. Another difficulty in the way of the proper administration of the law is in relation to the constant giving of rebates. The burden of complaint that has been made in the weeks and months of investigation that has taken place before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has been against discrimination. Not one man, of all the scores from every part of this broad Union that have appeared before us to testify upon this subject of interstate commerce, has alleged that rates are exorbitantly high.

On the contrary, many men have said over and over again that many of the rates at many periods were too low. What they have objected to is the discrimination as to commodity, discrimination as to place, discrimination as to persons—mainly as to persons—in the rebates that are paid. Under the present law the man who pays the rebate—not the corporation, but the individual who pays—is the one who is criminally responsible. The man who solicits, who persuades, who tempts this traffic, that man is not held responsible; but the only man held responsible is he who could or would testify. Now, under this law it is made criminal to solicit, to receive, equally with the offer of the gift. This is wise, and in my humble judgment it will stop discriminations; and if we stop discriminations, then clearly the major portion of the evils complained of cease to exist.

But again, this law which gentlemen tell us amounts to nothing—this law which my colleague from Missouri condemns so bitterly—he will vote for. You can not probably prevent him voting for it without you keep him by violence out of the House. He will want to vote for it so badly and have his constituents know that he did that on that side of the House gentlemen will demand the yeas and nays, for legislatively they are in a bad fix just now. They voted against the rule, and the supposition will be they are against the measure, and will have to call the yeas and nays in order to right themselves, and I think they will do it, although I may be mistaken.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have indicated in the presence of the gentleman several times that I prefer not to yield.

Mr. THAYER. I did not know but that you might change your mind.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not. If there is any person in the world that could persuade me it would be the gentleman from Massachusetts; but he can not, under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, this bill gives to the Commission among other aids toward the enforcement of the law the right to appeal to the equity side of the court. I regard that as invaluable. I think that that provision is of the utmost importance. I remember only a few months ago I had an interview with a distinguished jurist from the city of San Francisco, who said to me that among the methods that were in use for the purpose of preventing outrages of discrimination and other outrages under the interstate commerce law none had been so formidable as this; that where the pleader understood his business, knowing how to draft a bill in equity and search the conscience of his adversary and would require him to answer under oath, such a proceeding invariably could be successful, and in his court in every instance but one had been successful. We have added that feature to the law, so that the right will no longer be in dispute.

One other change that I wish to speak of, proposed by the committee, is this: In the bill as originally framed, the initiative of all suits was in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they were under the control and direction or subordinate to the Department of Justice. Your committee thought that that was not the best course, and we changed this bill in order to conform with the statute as it now is, and to allow the head of the Department of Justice still to preserve the discipline of his Department by having control over all of his subordinates.

The Attorney-General, at the instance of the Commission, will institute these suits. The Attorney-General will, at their instance, require the diligent service of all of his subordinates, and under another provision enacted by this House he has now the means to expend $500,000 to employ the best of legal talent; and employing all these other means of preparing cases for trial entitles us to believe that we will have in that class of investigation a much larger measure of success.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have said half a dozen times that I preferred not to be interrupted, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FLEMING. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he did not think it would be better to insert on page 6, line 9, after the word "corporation," the word "from."

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman called my attention to that, and I have given it a careful examination. I think it is not necessary. The sense is complete as it is now, and I am perfectly content with it.

Mr. FLEMING. The sense is not complete. The defect is patent.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, much complaint has been made on the part of gentlemen on the other side because a larger opportunity for discussion has not been given to them. The general features of debate are the same under this bill as under the other. As they have been pursued by gentlemen on that side, the particular features of the bill under consideration have in no instance, or but seldom, been discussed. They have discussed the general subject, and they have done that amply. Under a bill that was pending a little while ago they had five hours for discussion, and they had three full hours for the purpose of securing amendments, and every conceivable one that the ingenuity of man could conjure up was offered before this House, secured its attention and their votes, and were voted down by the majority.

It was well conceived that further discussion of that kind would not be productive of good; and as we are near the end of the life of this Congress, and as every man, I take it, in good faith wants the best legislation he can get, and as there are difficulties still in the way of this bill or of another that we may pass before it reaches the status of law, it is wise to give all of the time possible—to give all of the time for avoiding those emergencies, those pitfalls of legislation and of legislative procedure that may stand in the way of a great measure like this.

I believe that in these three measures that have been before this House we have struck that happy medium with regard to these vexed questions that will produce the least of individual injury and the most of public good. That is what we all want. I take it that there can be no legislation of vigor, no legislation that can produce results such as we desire, without falling harmfully somewhere where no one wants it to fall—without falling harmfully somewhere upon the innocent, who ought not to be the victim of law, but under the three measures referred to we will have the least of harm and the most of good. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will submit them in gross. The Chair hears no demand.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 250, nays 6, answered "present" 3, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—250.

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the balance of the day:

Mr. Foss with Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee.

On this vote:

Mr. LITTLEFIELD with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. BROWN with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. DOVENER with Mr. COOPER of Texas.

Mr. GROW with Mr. KERN.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. BILLMEYER.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

On motion of Mr. HEPBURN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 7298. An act to fix the rank of certain officers in the Army;

S. 7245. An act amending the act of June 19, 1888, providing for the erection of a public building at Bridgeport, Conn.; and

S. 6931. An act for the relief of Sadie Thome.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 7298. An act to fix the rank of certain officers in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 6931. An act for the relief of Sadie Thome—to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15449. An act to increase the efficiency of the Army; and

H. R. 14764. An act to establish United States courts at Wilkesboro, N. C.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 569. An act to establish the department of commerce and labor.

CHESTER, PA., A SUBPORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. DALZELL. I call up a privileged bill—the bill (H. R. 2052) making Chester, Pa., a subport of entry.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, be, and is hereby, constituted a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means. The bill is privileged under the rules.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DALZELL, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SALARIES OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CANNON. I send to the desk, with a request that it be printed as a House document, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. May the title of this document be read by the Clerk?

The Clerk read as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, with inclosures, concerning Government salary tables to be used in payment of salaries of all officers and employees of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). The gentleman from Illinois requests an order of the House that this letter be printed as a House document. In the absence of objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. TAWNEY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17202) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of about 845 acres of land lying south of the Fort Snelling Military Reservation, for use as a target range, at not exceeding $100 per acre; also for purchase of the improvements thereon, at not exceeding $25,000; in all, $110,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 112, in lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "at not exceeding $100 per acre."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction, including heating and plumbing, of a three-story and basement storehouse at Schuylkill Arsenal, Philadelphia depot of the Quartermaster's Department, $125,000.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 12 on page 113, insert:
"For construction of a 100-bed hospital at Fort Riley, Kans., $100,000."

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I think that if the Committee on Appropriations had understood the situation at Fort Riley this provision would have been reported in the bill. I think the committee has overlooked the fact that at Fort Riley there has been established by act of Congress a school for drill and practice of cavalry and artillery. All the other schools of this kind have been established by administrative orders from the War Department. In the present case the act of Congress establishing this school provided for its maintenance. The construction of the work at Fort Riley has been going on from time to time since 1887. There are, I think, more than a million dollars' worth of buildings there—all modern buildings, with all the modern improvements. The hospital for that entire post contains only two wards and accommodates only 36 beds. The surgeon of the post and the post commander, and also the surgeon of the department and the department commander of that department, have recommended this appropriation. The Quartermaster-General recommended it in his estimates for the year. I think this recommendation was probably overlooked by the committee or this item would have been inserted in the bill.

Under that order of the War Department, and upon consultation with the officers of the adjacent States, provision has been made for an annual assemblage at Fort Riley of the militia of the several States adjacent to Kansas. At the annual encampment last year about 15,000 men were encamped there for five weeks in addition to 2,000 stationed at the post. During that encampment the sick were cared for in temporary buildings, sometimes in tents, and were very poorly accommodated.

Sir, in a post of 2,000 or 2,400 men there is usually necessity for from 60 to 100 beds for the ordinary use of the post alone. The building which is now in use for hospital purposes there has been standing a good many years. It is utterly insufficient for this purpose. It can be used for other purposes at the post. So that there is no loss by the disuse of the present building.

But the chief argument in favor of this provision is that it is a matter of necessity for the work of completing the post according to the original plan as intended by the act of Congress which established this post.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is at all times an ungracious duty, if it be a duty—and it seems to me so in this case—to antagonize amendments which are from time to time offered to this bill. I know quite well that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CALDERHEAD] knows that so far as he is concerned personally I would sooner not object to the appropriation than to object to it. It is true that an estimate is submitted for this appropriation. A great many estimates have been submitted which have not been recommended. It is true that a post is established by law at Fort Riley and that it is a great military reservation, and a beautiful one, established many many years ago. There has been a very large expenditure at Fort Riley and also a large expenditure of money at Fort Leavenworth. Fort Riley is some distance out from the Missouri River, on the line, or at least near the line, of a railroad.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. The main line of the Union Pacific.

Mr. CANNON. It is very true that from the appropriation for barracks and quarters the Secretary of War, in his discretion, has made very considerable, and I believe is making very considerable, improvements in the shape of barracks and quarters and otherwise at Fort Riley. I believe it is used to assemble for instruction of cavalry arms, and is perhaps desirable also for other purposes in connection with a militia, or will be. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to this fact, that the appropriation for barracks and quarters of $1,200,000 in this bill, in the general appropriation, is available for this purpose in the discretion of the Secretary. I want to call attention also to the fact that the appropriation of four millions and three-quarters, I believe, for barracks and quarters in the Army appropriation act, which has passed the House and will no doubt be enacted into law, is available for this purpose up to $20,000. Now, from those two appropriations I think a sufficient hospital can be erected at Fort Riley. In a general way, I know there is a hospital at Fort Riley now. I do not recollect how many beds there are, but suffice it to say it is large enough for the administration of a hospital. It accommodates all the surgeons and assistants necessary and accommodates the nurses and various and divers other people—I think possibly 30 or 40 beds besides.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Thirty-six beds.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says 36 beds. I am under the impression that if there could be something less for the employees there would be more room for beds; but it is a hospital built of stone and can be added to, and here is an appropriation of $1,200,000 to abandon the hospital and build an entire new one, or here is an appropriation of $4,750,000 on the Army bill which can be used to build any building or any addition to any building at a cost not to exceed $20,000 the first appropriation without limit—and the second appropriation limited only to $20,000. I have an impression that if any additional hospital is needed there, hands down, $20,000 is enough. I do not criticise the gentleman for offering this amendment. I have no doubt on earth that if I represented his district I should offer it. Ours is a representative Government, and yet, from the standpoint of public service, with the large expenditures being made there from these two general appropriations for additional barracks and every purpose necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of War, I think, with the liberal general funds we give, we better leave it in the discretion of the Secretary for the coming fiscal year. That is all I want to say.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman has just said is not quite sufficient to satisfy me, and it would hardly satisfy himself if he were required to analyze it. It is not a political question at all in the Fifth district of Kansas as to whether there will be a stone laid in Fort Riley or not.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not think so at all.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. And will probably not be while I represent that district. The Surgeon-General of the Army recommends this as necessary at that post, and in doing so uses this language:

That Congress be asked for a special appropriation of $100,000 to erect a modern hospital for 100 beds at Fort Riley, Kans. This is considered necessary on account of the increased garrison and the fact that it is proposed to have a large camp of instruction or for assembling volunteers upon the Fort

Riley Reservation. It is not believed that the present hospital can be enlarged in a satisfactory manner and with economy, but when the new hospital building is completed the old hospital can be utilized for other purposes.

The post surgeon remarks: "The large amount of sickness at this post with small hospital accommodations is felt more at the present, and patients can be accommodated only by overcrowding all available wards and rooms. With the contemplated increase of the post, especially with additional large summer encampment, more room will constantly be needed for hospital accommodations at this post.

"I believe under these circumstances that the hospital at Fort Riley should be large enough to comfortably accommodate a hundred patients, with necessary Hospital Corps attendants. Even with the present comparatively small garrison, the daily average number of patients in this hospital had been about 60; a hundred-bed hospital would not, in my opinion, be too large for this post to provide for its needs as enlarged."

The post commander states: "It is evident that the hospital accommodations at this post are entirely inadequate and will be more so as the strength of the garrison is increased, as it is almost certain to be in the near future.

"If the necessary money can be had, I would recommend that a new hospital with all the modern improvements and conveniences be erected, using the present hospital building for the hospital corps and for everything else not pertaining to the hospital proper.

"The erection of a number of temporary buildings may be a necessity, and on that ground alone may be tolerated; but they are unsightly and objectionable for many reasons, some of which, such as their combustibility, discomfort during the long hot summers usual in this part of the country, etc., need only to be mentioned to be appreciated."

The chief surgeon of the Department states: "The necessity for increasing the hospital accommodations at Fort Riley is evident. While a frame structure was built as a temporary measure, yet I am not in favor of continuing that plan, which was adapted to meet an emergency.

"I fully concur in the views of the post commander as to the propriety of erecting a large new hospital sufficient for the prospective needs of the command, and believe also that it would be more economical in the end, as well as far better adapted for administrative purposes."

The department commander also approves the construction of a new hospital, the necessity for which is quite evident, and it is considered that a modern hospital as is herein asked for should be erected, the estimated cost of which is $100,000.

It will be impossible to erect this building from the regular appropriations of the Department, and it is therefore respectfully requested that if possible a special appropriation for the purpose be made.

Now, it is evident enough that a hospital of the kind that the post needs and that the Surgeon-General thinks it needs can not be erected for $20,000, and if it can not be erected for $20,000 then not a dollar of these $4,000,000 about which the gentleman speaks so eloquently can be used for that purpose at all. Twenty thousand dollars of it might be used for the erection of a temporary building, but that is not what would be needed at Fort Hamilton or at Fortress Monroe or any of the old forts that were established by act of Congress. There never was a minute of time spent debating about whether $200,000 should be used at Fort Hamilton two years ago, and there never was a minute of time spent debating about whether $110,000 should be appropriated to buy a target range at Fort Snelling.

And yet it is not thirty minutes since the item appropriating $110,000 to buy a rifle range was read in silence here in the Committee of the Whole. Here is a matter that is imperative. Here is a matter at a permanent post of the Army, where never less than a full regiment of cavalry and a full regiment of artillery will be encamped, and where continually additional troops will be brought from other forts for the purpose of drill and practice in field movements. Here is one of the largest reservations that the Government has for that purpose, 15,000 acres, and not a dollar necessary for the purchase of a rifle range or any other territory for the drill of the troops. Here is an improvement that is necessary now, and that if it were not necessary now at such a post as this must evidently become necessary if the post is to remain a permanent post. There is no evidence, either in the condition of the Army or of the Army post or of the temper of the War Department, that the post will ever be abandoned.

The time of Mr. CALDERHEAD having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. CANNON, it was extended five minutes.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I only wish a few minutes. I agree with some things that the eminent chairman of this committee [Mr. CANNON] said yesterday concerning the number of military posts that are in existence that are not necessary. It would be right difficult for me to say why a military post should be necessary in the State of Iowa at all, with her peace-loving inhabitants and the location in the heart of the country, protected by all the other eighty millions of people that live in it. I see no necessity for it there. And yet it is not two years since, at a town that no other member of the House is able to name now, you appropriated $400,000 for a post, and there was not two minutes' discussion about it. No man in the House knows whether there is a brick or stone or frame building upon that location or not.

I am speaking for this matter now as a measure which has been earnestly recommended by the Surgeon-General and by the general commanding the Department of Missouri, speaking for a permanent building for a permanent post; not as a matter that can be of any special benefit to myself or to the district I live in, but as a matter of necessity for the proper care of the troops that will be maintained there. It was decided that a school for drill and practice of the Army was proper and necessary when the original act passed to establish this post.

Not far away from us, at Fort Leavenworth, is a reservation, I think, of 1,200 or 1,500 acres. It is a beautiful post, and has historic memories connected with it. It has been designated by the War Department as a training school for infantry and cavalry in field movements. It is a delightful parade ground, but it has not the area for field movements that Fort Riley has. Yet within the last two years three times the amount of money which is now asked for has been expended upon buildings at that place. This hospital is a necessity at this place, and if this matter had been considered, I think, as I am now presenting it, there would have been no question about the committee putting it in the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I rise to ask to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial taken from the New York Sun of this date, which does not bear upon this bill, but bears upon the bill that has just been considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks an editorial from the New York Sun. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The paper referred to is as follows:

THEODORE ROOSEVELT'S GREATEST SERVICE TO HIS COUNTRY.

What is now called "the President's programme" of legislation for Federal suppression of business appears to be nothing more or less than this:

The rejection of all the more radical measures proposed by Senators or Representatives, or judiciary committees, or unofficial sociologists, or even by Attorney-General Knox.

The elimination of every plan or proposal which by the utmost strain of courtesies of language can be described as a real sure-enough trust buster.

The progressive refinement of the original demands of strenuous conviction down to the point where the passage of the Elkins antirebate bill and the enactment of the department of commerce bill, with its mildly statistical bureau of information, are regarded as "satisfactory" by the President.

Let no candid person withhold from Mr. Roosevelt the immense credit that belongs to him for his present efforts, between 11 o'clock and noon, to undo, as far as possible, the mischief wrought in the darkness and unwisdom of the early hours of the morning. Consider what it is he is now doing for the cause of sanity and constitutional government! He had delivered on the stump a series of speeches which could scarcely be distinguished from Mr. Bryan's utterances on the same subject. He had inspired by suggestion the great mass of incendiary measures that are piled high in the document room of the Capitol, like a harmless monument in memory of his initial mistake. He had spurred on Mr. LITTLEFIELD to a rivalry which resulted in that statesman's discomfiture and disgust. He had even set ablaze the sociological imagination of the venerable Mr. HOAR. He had carried the white plume of Rooseveltian leadership far to the front of the attack on the foundations of business confidence and national prosperity. He had done all this and much more in the emotional earnestness of his misunderstanding of his mission and duty at Washington.

But so soon as the President clearly perceived the disastrous potentialities of the forces he had invoked and the true direction and significance of the movement he had inaugurated—and he has apparently had the wit to perceive the same before it was too late—no foolish consideration of personal consistency or pride of individual opinion prevented him from facing squarely about and bracing himself with all the force of his will to withstand the onset of the revolutionists.

We accordingly find him now employing the enormous power of his office to check the raid upon the United States Constitution; to allay the dangerous sentiment aroused by the speeches of last summer; to defeat the plans of the radical experimenters and innovators. The measure of the conservative influence Mr. Roosevelt is now exerting may be found in the circumstance that his programme includes even the repudiation, as unconstitutional, of the bill drawn by poor Mr. LITTLEFIELD to meet the suggestions so elaborately conveyed to the Judiciary Committee by the President's legal adviser, the Attorney-General.

May it prove that Mr. Roosevelt is not too late in his revised conception of the Presidential mission!

More power to his elbow! He is now attempting, under disadvantageous conditions, the greatest service it has yet been his privilege to render to the nation. The ride up San Juan Hill was nothing to this masterly retreat to the cover of common sense.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just a single word and then I will be ready for a vote. The gentleman is correct. The appropriation for $4,750,000 is only available at Fort Riley or the other forts, first, for repairs and maintenance; second, for the construction of additions to buildings or the construction of new buildings not exceeding in cost $20,000. That is correct. My friend emphasized that. But my friend—and that is just as I would have done if I had been making his speech—did not emphasize the fact that the appropriation in the sundry civil bill for barracks and quarters for $1,200 may be used, every dollar of it, in building hospitals, one or a dozen, at Fort Riley or Fort Leavenworth, or anywhere else, without limit as to cost. That is a general appropriation. If it be important for this hospital, the Secretary has discretion. The gentleman says that we have just read past a provision to buy 800 acres of land at Fort Snelling for a rifle range.

A full hearing and the necessity for the appropriation to be made by provision of law before it could be bought, and at that great post it seemed to be necessary, because it is the post near St. Paul and Minneapolis, which is always to remain a post, as it always has been, and as they could not use the general fund for that purpose, therefore a special appropriation was made. Fort Riley was authorized almost a generation ago. There was a large expenditure of money, and it is a magnificent reservation—my friend says 15,000 acres—somewhere about the central or western part of Kansas, and another at Leavenworth. Senator Plumb, as I recollect, had much to do with the selection of the location of this site and was a very strong friend of it during his time. Somebody else came in as Secretary of War, and Fort Riley went into innocuous desuetude.

Under the present practice, in the discretion of the War Department, Fort Riley again bloomed, and very considerable—I was about to say large—expenditures were made, not by special appropriation, but from the general appropriation for barracks and quarters. My friend says the prospective use would require a large hospital. I submit, on the other hand, two-thirds of the posts we have now could be dispensed with, and I wish we could wash our hands of them from the changed conditions. My friend very well says there is not much danger to the public peace in Iowa, nor is there much danger to the public peace in Kansas. In fact I believe I would rather cast my lot in Kansas than Iowa. I have said all I want to about it. The committee is in possession of it, and I am content with a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 19.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park: For continuing the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park; for the compensation and expenses of two civilian commissioners; maps, surveys, clerical and other assistance, messenger, office expenses, and all other necessary expenses; foundations for State monuments; mowing; historical tablets, iron and bronze; iron gun carriages; for roads and their maintenance, and for the purchase of land already authorized by law, $40,000.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16 insert the following:

"Provided further, To enable the Secretary of War, through the commissioners of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, to improve the road from Crawfish Springs, Ga., through the Widow Davis's Cross-Roads and Bailey's Cross-Roads, to Stevens's Gap, a distance of 12 miles, $25,000."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, to that amendment I make the point of order that it is for the improvement of a road or roads not owned by the United States, but in the State of Tennessee or Georgia, one or both, and not authorized by law.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will reserve his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MADDOX (continuing). And let me see if I can not persuade him to accept the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I will reserve the point of order, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter written by General Boynton to Senator CLAY, of Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA
NATIONAL PARK COMMISSION,
Washington, January 3, 1903.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiries concerning the historical importance of the road from Crawfish Springs to Stevens Gap in connection with the establishment of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park I have the honor to say that this was the road over which and along which the main operations of the Union Army preceding the battle of Chickamauga took place, and which is indicated upon the map herewith inclosed by dotted lines in blue, the distance being 12 miles.

The corresponding road over which and along which the operations of the Confederate army took place previous to the battle of Chickamauga is indicated upon the map by the red line on the east side of Pigeon Mountain, extending from Lee and Gordon Mills to Lafayette, a distance of 13 miles.

As the line of the preliminary operations of the Confederate army has already been improved, it would seem entirely appropriate that the corresponding line of operations of the Union Army should also be improved. These preliminary operations of both armies were of an exceedingly interesting character and had most important bearings upon the results of the campaign.

In view of the annual maneuvers which are now contemplated from the national park as a general rendevous for portions of the Regular Army and the National Guard of most of the States south of the Ohio and the Potomac and east of the Mississippi, it would seem advisable to have one important road along the main line of both Confederate and Union operations. The completion of the line now in question would accomplish this. This would leave various unimproved branch roads running from these main lines of operations into the numerous theaters of detached engagements, and thus leave abundant lines of rough roads for practice over ordinary country lines of travel.

The right of way over this road has already been ceded to the United States by the State of Georgia. It is believed that this road can be completed for the sum suggested in your proposed amendment.

Very respectfully,

H. V. BOYNTON.

Hon. ALEXANDER S. CLAY,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be seen by this communication that the road from Lafayette, Ga., where General Bragg marshaled his forces to march to the plains of Chickamauga, has already been improved. Where General Rosecrans marshaled his troops, at Stevens Gap, and marched from that place to the battlefield, has not been improved, and this amendment simply asks that what has been done for the Confederates on that side be done for the Federals on the other. I do trust that the gentleman from Illinois will not insist upon the point of order. The State of Georgia has already ceded its rights to this road to the Federal Government, and this Commission ought to have something to do. If I remember correctly—in fact, I have the figures here that the gentleman himself furnished me at the last session of this Congress—we appropriated $50,000 for that Commission, and it was shown in your own statement that $25,000 of that sum was paid in salaries. Now I see you make an appropriation of $40,000 this session. I apprehend there will be no falling off in the salaries, and that these are still to be paid. If that is true, there is $15,000 left. If $25,000 have been paid out for salaries, with the addition of this sum of $25,000 this road can be built and these people will have something to do. I am satisfied this House would grant it if the gentleman will waive the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that it takes two to make a bargain. The State of Georgia can not throw the burden on the United States to improve their roads by merely ceding them unless the United States accepted them, and probably then can not. Now, on that wonderful march of Sherman from Atlanta to the sea I understand there were a good many roads, and if there is any trouble about giving this Commission employment, why there is a thousand miles in Illinois that we could cede.

Mr. MADDOX. I can not hear the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, he just wants me to talk a little louder. I will not be responsible for the marking of one road or the improvement of 12 miles on one road near Chickamauga Park that the United States does not own.

I will say to the gentleman that in this matter of improving roads I have half a dozen in mind. I am compelled to insist on the point of order.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to say that this construction has no connection with General Sherman's march to the sea; that was before he got there.

Mr. CANNON. That was a wonderful march; quite as important and quite as interesting, and why not preserve that road?

Mr. MADDOX. While it was a wonderful march, it was nothing compared with the battle of Chickamauga. There was nothing in this century, nor in the last, nor in the one behind it, to compare with it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will let the gentleman settle that with the Gettysburg people.

Mr. MADDOX. I am willing to talk with them. I happened to be down there on this side with one or two others. This is a matter that I have presented to the House at the request of others, that you do for the Union army what you have done for the Confederate army. If the gentleman from Illinois insists on his point of order of course I can not help it.

Mr. CANNON. I am compelled to insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Artificial limbs: For furnishing artificial limbs and apparatus, or commutation therefor, and necessary transportation, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of War, $152,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the language in this provision covers soldiers in the recent war, the Spanish war, and the Philippine trouble, or war, if you can call it a war. Do they have a right to have artificial limbs given them under this provision?

Mr. CANNON. I am under the impression that it covers them. I can not answer certainly. If the law allows it the appropriation would be available. If the law does not allow it the law ought to be amended, if such be the sense of Congress. I can tell on a little investigation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am sure no one in this House, or out of it, would object to putting legislation in this bill extending this privilege to them if there is any doubt about it. I hope the gentleman will investigate the question in time for us to insert an amendment so as to make it applicable to soldiers of the late wars. I have made inquiry on this side and no one seems able to tell me whether it does apply to soldiers in the recent war or not.

Mr. CANNON. Upon investigation I find that it does apply to the soldiers in the Spanish war.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion of said Battle Mountain Sanitarium, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including all buildings necessary in the discretion of and approved by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; and the said board shall cause to be procured plans for all buildings authorized herein and in the act of May 29, 1902, establishing said sanitarium, based upon accurate estimates, and cause the same to be constructed within said estimates, and cause to be furnished all other needful objects authorized herein or by said act, to the end that said sanitarium shall be completed and ready for occupancy and operation in all of its details within the sums herein and heretofore appropriated for the establishment of said sanitarium, $350,000.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, on page 132, insert "for the purpose of acquiring additional land in connection with the site heretofore donated by the people of Hot Springs, S. Dak., for a national sanitarium for disabled volunteer soldiers, which may be acquired either by purchase or condemnation, $10,000.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. OLMSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 12, 1903:

H. R. 2441. An act for the relief of William M. Bird, James F. Redding, Henry F. Welch, and others;

H. R. 7007. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Maj. William Kendall;

H. R. 11858. An act for the relief of William E. Anderson; and

H. R. 15198. An act defining what shall constitute and providing for assessments on oil-mining claims.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For president of the Board of Managers, $4,000; secretary of the Board of Managers, $2,000; general treasurer, who shall not be a member of the Board of Managers, $4,000; inspector-general, $3,000; assistant general treasurer and assistant inspector-general, $2,500; 2 assistant inspectors-general, at $2,500 each; clerical services for the offices of the president and general treasurer, $10,500; messenger service for president's office, $144; clerical services for managers, $3,900; agents, $1,800; for traveling expenses of the Board of Managers, their officers and employees, $15,000; for outdoor relief, $1,000; for rent, stationery, telegrams, and other incidental expenses, $6,000; in all, $58,844.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 133, line 11, strike out "ten thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "twelve thousand."

In lines 18 and 19 strike out the words "fifty-eight thousand eight hundred and forty-four" and insert in place thereof the words "sixty thousand three hundred and forty-four."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I also offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 133, after line 17, insert "appropriation herein or that may hereafter be made for the construction of buildings or appurtenances at any Branch National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be available immediately after the passage of the act containing the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

State or Territorial Homes: For continuing aid to State or Territorial Homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, including all classes of soldiers admissible to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $950,000: Provided, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State Homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the proviso in the paragraph just read. The act of August 27, 1888, requires the Federal Government to appropriate $100 each for every member of a State Soldiers' Home who is eligible for admission into a National Military Home. The law is without limitation or qualification. This paragraph purports to appropriate $950,000 in pursuance of that law, presumably $100 for each inhabitant of a State Soldiers' Home eligible for admission into a National Home.

The proviso undertakes to take from the various State Soldiers' Homes a portion of a fund which they may legitimately avail themselves of. The proviso is not a limitation. The paragraph appropriates a fixed sum of $100 each for every member of the State Soldiers' Homes in accordance with the original law, and then the proviso says that certain funds received by various State Soldiers' Homes shall be placed to the credit of the Federal Government on that account, and therefore it is new legislation. I believe it is obnoxious to the rule. The original law is very clear and plain, and this is clearly new legislation. It is clearly an attempt by this bill to take from the State Soldiers' Homes funds that legitimately belong to them.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, there is an act of Congress, if I recollect aright, that provides or rather authorizes an appropriation from the National Treasury of $100 a year to each member of the State Homes. Now, then, for a number of years back this proviso has been upon appropriation bills. I might perhaps rest there and say that the law for the current year is sufficient to avoid the point of order. But I will place my position upon what seems to me to be the true ground. In fact, some of the States reserve the pensions of soldiers, or a portion thereof, for the benefit of the State Homes, whereas the United States pays $100 per member in the State Home toward his maintenance. The cost in round numbers for maintaining a member of the State Home in the National Home is about $125.

Now, this is a limitation. We have a right in appropriating this money to place a limitation upon its expenditure. It is equitable that we should do so; otherwise the State could take half the soldier's pension or all of it and dedicate it to the general use of the Home, and still get the $100. That is not equitable. Under the power to limit the use of the money from one year to another, this provision has for many years run in the annual bills. We might refuse to appropriate anything. The law gives $100, but we could withhold all appropriation. That is a familiar position to the Chair. Or we can give the appropriation with such limitations as seem to us proper. We might provide, if we chose, that one-half of this money should be devoted to food——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair a question? Does the gentleman say that this proviso is now the law?

Mr. CANNON. I say that for many years this proviso has been upon each annual bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not, then, permanent law?

Mr. CANNON. Well, for the purposes of the rule, it has been held that the law for the current year is sufficient to authorize a provision in an appropriation bill for the coming year. That has frequently been held.

In addition to that, however, I take the broader ground that as Congress can not be compelled to make appropriations, we can place limitations upon the money we may choose to appropriate. If the Chair will follow me, I will read the language of the bill:

'Provided, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for.

In other words, in one case $100 is to be paid, but where $5 a month or $5 a year is deducted by reserving that proportion of the pension, then we appropriate only $95, or whatever else may be the proper sum. It is a matter of computation.

Now, it is entirely competent for us, instead of appropriating $100, to appropriate $50, or to affix any other condition that we see proper by way of condition upon the appropriation for the year. In this instance it amounts to an appropriation of less than $100, the amount to be ascertained, namely, one-half of the amount that has been retained by the State home from the pension of the member of that home, in which case the $100 appropriation is cut by just that much. How much I can not tell; but in law that is certain which may be made certain, and when you come to the payment of the money and the approval of the voucher this is rendered certain.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the position of the gentleman from Illinois is not at all tenable. In the first place, the object of the rule is to prevent legislation on appropriation bills. When Congress has enacted a law which is clear and unequivocal and unconditional in terms, authorizing an appropriation, that should be the guide of the committee and of the House in determining questions of order arising upon an appropriation bill.

Now, the mere fact that in times past appropriation bills may have had this same proviso does not operate to repeal or change the law in any way. Each appropriation bill is only an appropriation for the fiscal year to which it applies; and for that one year, for instance, the appropriation is made with the priviso. But we are appropriating now for a new year. The original law is the basis of the authority, and the original law prescribes the duty of Congress to make the appropriation. So that I do not think there is anything in the two, three, or four precedents that may have been established in appropriation bills in the past to justify this provision.

There is nothing clearer to my mind than that this is not a limitation. The Chair is doubtless familiar with the technical distinction between conditions and limitations. This is an appropriation, on its face, for $100 each for all the inmates of the various State Soldiers' Homes that are eligible to the National Military Homes. Then it is provided that certain funds, of which the State Homes have a right to avail themselves under the law, shall be applied in the reimbursement of expenditures under this appropriation. An appropriation of $100 for each inmate, to be expended this way or that way, would be, perhaps, a proper limitation; or an appropriation of a less sum than that required by law would not be obnoxious to the rule against legislation. But where the appropriation is made for the full sum, the proviso is equivalent to legislating that State Homes shall not take more than one-half of the pensions of members—over $8 a month, for instance—when there is no law to prohibit them from taking that sum.

If it is contrary to the policy of the Federal Government to permit the State Soldiers' Homes to take any portion of the pensions of members, there ought to be legislation to prevent it. This is an attempt to legislate halfway on the question. It is legislation, and it is new legislation, preventing the State Soldiers' Homes from taking more than one-half of the pensions above a certain rate of soldiers who are sheltered and protected and subsisted in those institutions. That is the effect of the bill.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If this is legislation, then of course the same provision last year was legislation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Then, if last year was legislation, why is it not now established law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Just for this reason. There may be legislation upon a particular appropriation. It may not be permanent and continuing and running legislation. It is legislation, nevertheless, for the fiscal year to which this appropriation applies, and if this provision was in the appropriation bill last year it was legislation for that year only. It was legislation as far and as long as the appropriation bill continued to be operative.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TAWNEY). The Chair will say that this paragraph appropriates or authorizes the payment of a certain sum of money in continuing aid to State or Territorial Homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, which is now the law. This proviso, in the judgment of the Chair, is clearly a limitation upon that appropriation. It says that "one-half of any sum or sums retained by State Homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for." This, in the judgment of the Chair, is clearly a limitation in the paragraph on the appropriation which precedes the proviso. Under the rule of the House, and uniformly followed—and, as has been said, this rule has become the parliamentary law of the Committee of the Whole—this proviso being a limitation, it is clearly in order. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], in which he invokes the legal distinction between limitations and conditions, I will read from the precedents an opinion given by the late Mr. Dingley, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, in which he says that "in order to be considered as a limitation or restriction a provision must prohibit the use of the money for some purpose already authorized by law." This proviso in effect prohibits the payment of so much of the appropriation as may be equivalent to the amount deducted by these State institutions from the pensions received by inmates thereof. The Chair therefore thinks that the point of order is not well taken, and overrules the same.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I invite the attention of the House to the paragraph of the bill under consideration which carries an appropriation for the maintenance of soldiers in the State and Territorial Homes. That paragraph is as follows:

State or Territorial Homes: For continuing aid to State or Territorial Homes for the support of disabled volunteer soldiers, in conformity with the act approved August 27, 1888, including all classes of soldiers admissible to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $950,000: Provided, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State Homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for.

The motion I made is to strike out the proviso which takes from State Homes one-half of all pension moneys that may have been withheld from those who are admitted as members in those institutions and turns it into the Federal Treasury. A number of years ago Congress began the construction of national military homes for the support and maintenance of disabled volunter soldiers of the various wars of the Republic. There are now quite a number of such institutions in various parts of the country, distributed geographically so as to meet the convenience of those who may find it necessary to take advantage of this generous provision of the Government.

It was a most creditable thing to do, and these splendid institutions, which are standing monuments of the gratitude of the people, now furnish comfort and shelter to thousands and thousands of those of our citizens who contributed so much in time and sacrifice for the preservation of the country. It is but the amplification of the magnanimous policy of the Government toward those who bore the brunt of battle and gave so much of their energy and substance for the common good.

This country pays in pensions to its soldier citizens upward of $140,000,000 a year, several times as much as is paid by all of the other nations of the earth combined for this purpose, and yet in the distribution of this vast fund to the benefactors of the country, the individual allowances in many instances are so small that they do not provide the comforts and even the necessaries of life, and where the recipients have no other means of support it is necessary that some provision be made for their maintenance. It would be a lasting reproach to the Government to permit any of its gallant defenders to be cared for in the common almshouses of the country. Hence the policy of establishing and maintaining national soldiers' homes.

The function of administering public benefactions generally belongs to the States rather than the nation, but the surviving soldiers of the wars of the Republic are justly regarded as wards of the nation. They have a just claim upon the whole country, that in their declining years they be saved from want and destitution. While the pension appropriations are very large, and, as a rule, are equitably distributed, in a great many cases, for technical reasons, worthy claimants do not receive that which they are justly entitled to. It is impossible to distribute so vast a fund among so large a number and do exact justice to all. It is the policy of the Government, however, to come as near complete justice and equity in bestowing pensions as is possible, and the system is being gradually improved.

The National Military Homes are objects of pride and congratulation on the part of all. They are well provided, well managed as a rule, and everything is done that is possible to add to the comfort and happiness of those who take refuge therein in their decrepit and declining years.

It was my privilege recently to visit the National Home located at Marion, in the State of Indiana, for which that State is indebted chiefly to my colleague [Mr. STEELE]. It is a magnificent institution, indeed, located upon a beautiful site, with surroundings and appointments well-nigh perfect; good food, comfortable shelter, and efficient hospital service are afforded; church service, entertainments, music, and literature are supplied, and everything is done that can reasonably be expected to make the institution as pleasant and home-like as possible.

National Military Homes admit only honorably discharged volunteer soldiers and those who find it necessary to avail themselves of this beneficent provision of the Government, if they are married and have families, are compelled to leave their wives and families on the outside. Upon my visit to the Home at Marion I saw upward of 2,000 grim and grizzled veterans of the civil war who were marching down the western slope of the hill to meet the last great enemy of mankind, and the picture was one of mingled inspiration and pathos. There were 2,000 men, advanced in years, who, thirty-five years ago were the very pride and flower of American manhood—then the strength and the glory of the Republic, now its helpless wards—marching on with hope and facing the future with sublime confidence. I was profoundly reminded of the fact that the great remnant of that once splendid army is rapidly fading away and in few more years it will live only in the memory and in the affections of a grateful posterity.

While that Home, as a type of others, seemed to be perfect in all of its appointments, and is perhaps as good a substitute for a home as it is possible for the Government to provide, yet it is not home in the real sense. In it there are only men—a monotony of men. Many of them have wives and children living on the outside, and perhaps struggling with poverty and illfortune as best they may. Those Homes provide for the physical comfort of their members as well as it can be done, but people advanced in years need something besides food, clothing, and shelter. The companionship of the wife with her tender care and sympathy is an essential thing in a real home, and no Government can supply a substitute for it.

To meet this aspect of the situation and to prevent the severing of real home ties and the separation of man and wife, the various States several years ago began the construction of State Homes into which honorably discharged volunteer soldiers could be admitted with their wives, and widows of dead comrades were likewise made eligible. For the purpose of encouraging the construction of State Homes of this character, in August, 1888, Congress passed a law providing that the Federal Government should contribute to the States $100 a year for every soldier who was supported in a State Home and who was eligible for admission in one of the National Military Homes. In pursuance of this law, and with the expectation of receiving the benefit of the provision contained therein, the State of Indiana, among others, constructed a Home on the banks of the Wabash River in Tippecanoe County, in the district which I have the honor to represent in this House. It is a magnificent institution, beautifully located, arranged upon the cottage plan, and it now has a membership of about 500 men and 350 women. It is most efficiently managed, and everything possible is done to promote the comfort and happiness of those who find shelter within its portals.

It was a noble conception. In the Indiana Home aged veterans, with their wives, find support and maintenance. They live together in cottages, many of which are built by the various counties of the State, and are a comfort and a solace to each other in their declining years. The tender hand of the wife decorates and adorns the rooms and the homes and gives the whole institution an air of refinement and affection that comes more nearly fulfilling the requirements of a real home than it is possible to otherwise be. Besides, there are a number of widows of deceased soldiers in the institution who loan to it the refining and helpful influence of their womanhood. It is an institution in which every citizen of the State of Indiana feels a patriotic pride. I speak of this Home particularly because I know more about it personally, and I regard it as a type of State Homes generally.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do.

Mr. STEELE. In the National Homes the pensions are not withheld from the soldiers?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand not.

Mr. STEELE. In the State Homes many of the soldiers are receiving in excess of $12 a month?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; some, perhaps.

Mr. STEELE. The cost of maintaining a man in a National Home now, with everything so very high, is $141.57?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. In the State Homes, if you deduct $240 a year from the man who is drawing a $20 a month pension or $144 a year from the man who is drawing about the average pension, there would be $240 a year or $144 a year go to the State Homes, deducting all the pension?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; upon that hypothesis.

Mr. STEELE. Is it fair to the veterans in the State Homes that those great institutions should be made unpopular by deducting from them the pensions they receive to pay their own keep while there are no such deductions in the National Homes?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I expect to discuss that aspect of the question presently. In order to assist in defraying the expenses of maintaining wives and widows of soldiers most of the States require soldiers admitted to State Homes to turn over to the Home fund a portion of the pensions they receive from the Federal Government. Twenty-seven of the States of the Union have State Soldiers' Homes, and of this number twenty-one receive some portion of the soldier's pension or pay, and six allow the soldier to dispose of his full pension as he chooses. Those requiring a portion of the pension are California, Colorado, Idaho, Indiana, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

The States which require nothing from the soldier as a condition of admittance are Connecticut, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, and Oregon.

It is one-half of this fund that is accumulated from the pensions of soldiers in State Homes that the proviso in the paragraph of the bill which I have read requires to be turned over to the Federal Treasury.

I am not here to advocate the policy of taking from the soldier who is a member of either a State or National Home, any portion of the pension that is paid him in part compensation for sacrifices he made for the common welfare. If the matter were for me to decide, I would most likely say that the entire pension should be given to the soldier, to be used for his own benefit in the manner which he deems best for himself, but notwithstanding any views I may have personally in relation to this policy, it is true that twenty-one out of twenty-seven States that maintain Soldiers' Homes do take a portion of the pension money of the soldiers, and the question now is, Should this fund thus created out of the money that belongs to the members of the Homes, be expended for the comfort and welfare of the soldiers of the Homes or shall one-half of it be taken by the Federal Government and put into the common Treasury for the benefit of all the people? That is the question raised by the motion to strike out the proviso of the paragraph contained in the bill. The Indiana Home, I understand, requires each soldier upon entrance to turn over to the management all of his pension above the sum of $8 a month to be used for the benefit of the Home and for the support of soldiers' wives and widows. Nothing at all is exacted of soldiers' widows who may be drawing pensions.

As a rule, soldiers who are maintained in either State or national Homes draw comparativaly small pensions. Men who receive above $12 a month maintain themselves outside of those institutions, as a general thing. While soldiers' homes are excellent institutions, they are not resorted to as a matter of choice, and men prefer the independence of individual homes and individual life as long as they can afford it. In the Indiana Home there are now about 500 men and 350 women on the rolls. The average attendance of men for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, however, was 330.5. This was the basis upon which the Federal Government made its appropriation of $100 each for the members of that institution. Leaves of absence and furloughs are granted, so that the average attendance is much below the regular registration. The amounts of pensions withheld by the management of the Indiana institution for that year was $10,025.24.

A provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the year 1902 required the managers of the State Homes to turn over one-half of that fund to the Federal Government, and in pursuance of that provision $5,012.62 were turned into the Federal Treasury to be used for general purposes. With an average attendance of 330.5, the amount withheld from each soldier was $2.52 a month, showing that the average pension of the men in the Indiana Home is but $10.52 a month. This is the average. Of course some receive more and contribute a larger share to the common fund and others receive less and contribute nothing.

According to the report of the Boards of Managers of National Homes for the year 1892, the average cost of maintaining members in the various National Homes for that year was $141.57 each. The Government pays $100 each for soldiers living in State Homes, and in Indiana the pension fund withheld amounted to $30.33 each, not counting the wives and widows, so that with the appropriation under the act of 1888 and the pension fund the State receives $10 less than the cost of maintaining soldiers in National Homes, and a great deal more than that less than it costs to maintain the soldiers in the State Homes. This is upon the hypothesis that the State of Indiana received the entire fund that is withheld from the pensions. In turning one-half of that fund over to the Federal Government, the State received from the appropriation under the law of 1888 and one-half of the pension fund $115.16—about $26 less than it costs the Federal Government to support soldiers in its own Homes, to say nothing of the maintenance of the soldiers' wives and widows.

We are told, Mr. Chairman, that the law prohibits the managers of National Military Homes from withholding any part of the pensions of members of those institutions. I concede that this is the law, but at the same time there is such a broad discretion vested in the various Boards of Managers of National Homes that they do require every soldier who enters those institutions to assign and turn over three-fourths of his entire pension to his wife and family, if he have a wife and family, leaving him only one-fourth of his pension to be expended for his own benefit. This, I understand, is a general rule at all of the national homes.

Instead of excluding the wife of the soldier and taking from him three-fourths of his pension for her support at some distant point, the State of Indiana admits the wife and takes from the soldier on an average of $2.52 a month—less than one-fourth of his pension—to help support her in the institution, so he can have the privilege of her help and companionship. The soldier is allowed $8 a month to use for his own benefit at his own pleasure. If the average pensions of members of National Homes are the same as those of the State Homes, the member of the National Home who has a wife is allowed only $2.50 a month for his personal use, and the balance goes to his wife.

There are over 10,000 veterans of the civil war living in the various States Homes and about 8,000 wives and widows of veterans. The States are more liberal in the matter of granting to the members of the various Homes the use of pensions for their own personal benefit than are the Managers of the National Homes. The States support 10,000 veterans, who were defenders and are now wards of the nation, for which they receive from the Federal Government $100 each per annum—$41.57 per capita less than it would cost the Federal Government to maintain them. Besides they support and maintain in comfort 8,000 wives and widows of soldiers, for which the Federal Government does not contribute a single cent.

My contention is that as long as the State Homes take any portion of the pensions of the veterans who inhabit those Homes the fund should be used entirely to promote the comfort and happiness of the members of the Homes, and no part of it should be paid back to the Federal Government for the purpose of paying salaries of Congressmen, for rivers and harbors, public buildings, etc. The policy of saying to the State that if you withhold $2 a month from a soldier who is sheltered and made comfortable in your institution, you shall pay $1 a month of that small fund into the Federal Treasury is a kind of pinching off policy which borders very close upon "cheese-paring." This fund is not large in any particular institution. It did aggregate last year, however, $5,012.62 in the Indiana Home, and I submit that that fund, if properly used, might have contributed very materially to the comfort and happiness of many weary and pain-racked veterans in that institution.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will gladly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is nothing in the law that requires the State Homes to retain one cent of the soldiers' pensions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Nothing at all.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is wholly optional with the management of the State Home as to whether or not any portion of the pension is retained.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then this legislation does not in any way affect the retention of pensions by the State Homes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Indiana State Home takes all above $8 a month and uses it for the maintenance of the institution, and this bill says, "You shall divide this fund with the General Government." Those who vote against the proposition to strike out the proviso vote to saddle that much more tax upon their respective States.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; but any legislation passed by Congress does not require the State to retain one dollar of the soldiers' pensions.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Of course not.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In other words, the State can give the soldier every cent of his pension or keep a portion of it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the Government says, "If you do retain any portion of it one-half shall go back to the Government to offset the $100."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is just what I am complaining about. The Government ought not to take the small pittance, for instance, of $1 a month, which is saved from a soldier who draws $10 a month, in order that his wife may live with him and get the comforts of a State Soldiers' Home. Who gets the benefit of the half of this fund which the Government takes away? The soldier, or his wife or widow? No. It goes into the Federal Treasury for the benefit of all the people. The State accumulates the fund out of the soldiers' pensions, and the soldier has the right to insist that it shall be expended exclusively for the benefit of himself and comrades and their wives and widows. If a veteran who draws $10 a month is living in a State Home with his wife, the State institution requires him to contribute $2 a month of his pension for the support of the institution as part compensation for the companionship of his wife. The proviso requires one-half of that small sum to be turned back to the Federal Treasury, and that is what I am seeking to defeat by my motion to strike out the proviso. My contention is that the fund belongs to the soldiers and should be used for their benefit.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say, as far as I am concerned, that I believe the State ought not to retain one cent of the soldier's pension; but if it does, it ought to pay back one-half of what it retains, because $100 is the cost of keeping the soldier.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I beg to say to my colleague that I am not an advocate of the policy of taking any part of the soldier's pension for the purpose of maintaining him, but I do insist that if it is taken in accordance with the policy of three-fourths of the States which maintain Soldiers' Homes, it should be expended for the exclusive benefit of the soldier. The gentleman is mistaken in his estimate of the cost of maintaining soldiers in National Military Homes. The reports of these various institutions show that the average cost last year was $141.57 per capita. The expenses of living was somewhat more last year than it had been theretofore, but the average cost for the last ten years has been above $135 per capita in Soldiers' Homes, and the Government pays the States only $100 for each soldier in the State institutions.

The function of disbursing charities, as a general thing, belongs to the States, and the States should be encouraged in maintaining charitable and benevolent institutions. In the course of nature the National Homes will in a few years be depopulated. The residuum of our citizenship from which those institutions are recruited is growing smaller and smaller every year, and in a few more years it will disappear forever. Then those splendid institutions will become useless and will crumble and decay, while, on the other hand, the State, with its various needs and responsibilities, can make a proper use of Soldiers' Homes after they cease to be needed for the maintenance of veterans and their wives and widows.

Therefore I believe that the Federal Government ought to maintain a policy that will encourage States in providing for the comfort and happiness of soldiers not only as a matter of economy, but as a matter of local gratitude. It brings the subject of the sacrifice of the soldiers closer to the people, and the maintenance fund is paid by a direct tax, and the various taxpayers know that in making their contributions a portion of it goes toward making life more comfortable and endurable for those who have such strong claims upon the gratitude and bounty of the country.

The policy of taking one-half of the small funds saved by State institutions from soldiers' pensions is not a commendable one, to say the least, and I therefore hope that the proviso in the bill to which my motion is directed will be stricken out.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like just for a minute to call the attention of the committee to what this proposition does. There are National Homes and State Homes. That provision of law passed many years ago. We appropriate a hundred dollars a year from the National Treasury to the respective States for every soldier that the State cares for in the Soldiers' Home. That is a donation that is made, if you choose to call it that, from the National Treasury. Where the soldier is cared for in the National Home he is completely supported. I said a little bit ago it was $100 or $125 a year, what it has been heretofore; but with the increase in the cost of living, provisions, etc., the gentleman says it is now $141.57. Now, then, here and there the State retains a part of the pension of the soldier in the State Homes for the benefit of the Home—in many of them. Indiana is one; Illinois does not; Pennsylvania does not; New Jersey does not; New York does not.

Now the gentleman says we will take the $100 in Indiana to the State. Now, mind you, this goes to the State for every member that is in the State Home. If the member in a State Home has not a wife, or if you choose, as many of them have not, near relatives, and is getting $20 a month pension from the United States, we will take half his pension. Well, now, assume it is $20 a month that he receives. That is $240 a year. Now, the State of Indiana takes $120 of that man's pension and receives $100 from the National Treasury. That is $220. The man has no wife. Now, I have heard much of bitter complaint on the part of soldiers who have been members in the Indiana Home at that provision. The gentleman says it is for the purpose of enabling the State of Indiana to care for the man's wife and his children in a cottage at the Indiana Home. If the State of Indiana sees proper to do that, and I am not criticising this matter, it sets the pace for New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and nearly all the other States, by taking money from the National Treasury, $100 a year plus $120 if the soldier is getting $20 a month, to carry out this particular policy. Now, that may be a wise policy. If so, let Congress take it in hand, and legislate for all the States and all the members of the State Homes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, the gentleman says that his idea, as I understand it is, that it is not a proper thing to do to withhold this sacred fund from the soldiers, but if the States will whack up with the Government it will be all right. Is that the attitude the gentleman occupies?

Mr. CANNON. No, no. My attitude is this. Let the provision to pay the pension and to pay the Soldiers' Homes be uniform. Now, then, I say again I have heard much bitter complaint——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. I have heard much of bitter complaint from members of the Indiana Home who have no wives that half of their pensions are retained, if you choose, if that is the amount, or the whole of it, as the case may be, whatever amount it is. What for? At the same time Indiana is being paid $100 for the keep of the soldier. There is no uniformity. Now, Congress for many years has put this provision on here, and said to the States if you do retain half of this man's pension money we will pay you $100 less the amount you retain. I think we had better let it alone. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to say just a word. The gentleman used an extreme case for the purpose of illustration. He took the case of a soldier who drew a pension of $20 a month for the purpose of showing that the State of Indiana, for instance, withheld $12 a month, or $150 a year, approximately. I doubt if there is a member of the Indiana Home that draws $20 a month.

Mr. CANNON. I used that merely as an illustration, whether much or little.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. As a practical proposition, members of this House know that men drawing $20 a month maintain themselves outside of Soldiers' Homes as a rule. The average of the pensions in the Indiana Home will not run much above $10 a month, and the amount that is withheld by the State Soldiers' Homes will not cover the difference between the cost of maintenance and the amount appropriated by the Federal Government. If it is the policy of the Federal Government that pension moneys shall not be withheld in any State Soldiers' Home or National Home, let that policy be expressed in a law where it can be taken up and considered in the proper way and not in an appropriation bill like this. In the next place, the gentleman said in the National Homes the soldiers got all the pension. They do not.

Mr. CANNON. I beg the gentleman's pardon; here is the law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I appeal for vindication to my colleague, Governor STEELE.

Mr. CANNON. And I appeal to the law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But, regardless of the law, there is such a broad discretion in the governing and managing boards of the various National Homes that they do take three-quarters of the pension from every man that enters within the portals of those institutions for the purpose of maintaining their families. That if what is done in Indiana to-day; three-quarters of all the members of the National Homes——

Mr. CANNON. Now, we can not afford to disagree about the law and the fact. John A. Logan, when he was a Senator, led the fight in the Senate that changed this law, by which it was provided that the members of the Home shall have their pension, and that is the law. Now, then, if there is some regulation by which these people who have families are coerced, so that before they are admitted they part with a portion of their pensions to their families, it is a regulation that stands outside of the law. But there is no regulation by which a man that has no family shall have his pension decreased to support somebody else's family.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; but we have in our State a regulation providing that a man who has no family shall have $8 a month, a good home, comfortable food, and hospital facilities, and all that sort of thing, and if he has a pension of $12 or $14 we say, "In order for you to get the benefit of the Home you must surrender all above $8 a month, so that we may maintain the Home for the benefit of the widows and wives of your comrades." Now, the Home in Lafayette is popular and it is full. If this regulation were so burdensome, members would not remain there. They would go to Marion, or to other National Homes. I think there is nothing in the gentleman's argument.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me. There happens to be a Branch Home near my home, and it is a matter of weekly and sometimes daily occurrence that soldiers in the Indiana Home, some from Illinois, come and ask me, thinking I have the power to get them into a National Home—to get them in. "Well," I say, "where is your discharge?" And when you come to find the discharge you will find that the National Board of Managers make a regulation that no member of the State Home shall be admitted until after he has been discharged for six months. Otherwise the National Home would be overburdened and the State Home depleted.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman know of any inhabitants of the Home in his town who are dissatisfied with the place and are seeking for admission elsewhere?

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of the regulation they have been compelled to make.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am speaking of the illustration that the gentleman gave of the dissatisfaction of soldiers from the Indiana Home.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to strike out the proviso on page 134.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRUMPACKER) there were—5 ayes and 27 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to correct a total.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 133, in lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "seven hundred and sixty-nine eight hundred and eight," and insert "seven hundred and eighty-one thousand three hundred."

Mr. STEELE. On examining the records, I find the cost of maintenance in the National Home to be $141.57 instead of $144, and this includes everything—traveling expenses, buildings, fuel, subsistence, etc.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CANNON, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insular and Territorial affairs: For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in the conduct of insular and other territorial matters and affairs within the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice, including the payment of necessary employees at the seat of government or elsewhere, to be selected and their compensation fixed by the Attorney-General, and to be expended under his direction, $25,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I move to amend by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, according to my recollection, this Insular Bureau grew up during the recent Spanish war, or possibly during the Philippine war. It is a product of our recent wars, and it seems to me that after these wars are over the Insular Bureau should be abandoned, because we should have no further need for it. It is an increasing burden, as I will show, even in peace.

I read the following from the report of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, 1903, at page 180, under the same heading found in this bill—"Territorial and insular affairs:"

Insular and Territorial affairs.

Expended for a portion of the fiscal year 1902 ..... $5,259.11
Expended to December 29, 1902, for the fiscal year 1903..... 6,430.07

The payments made up to December 29, 1902, for the fiscal year 1903, as above shown, represent only a portion of the expense for the first six months of the current fiscal year. The present pay roll of employees in this Bureau, excluding all expenses, is $19,000 per annum, and it therefore seems apparent that the amount estimated for the fiscal year 1904 is not too large and certainly will be needed.

The estimate for the Bureau of Insular and Territorial Affairs is a regular annual estimate for a new bureau in process of economical and careful development. Persons have been employed only as absolutely needed, and the business is constantly increasing.

Estimated expense for current fiscal year $25,000.00

Mr. Chairman, here is a bureau that was created, as I have said, according to my recollection, during the wars and because we had a war, created under and by the Secretary of War. And yet in time of peace this bureau is not only in existence, but it is an increasing expense, and it is spoken of as "a new bureau in process of economical and careful development." We are carefully and economically developing this bureau—cultivating it—putting Uncle Sam's pap to its mouth, as it were, every day—in time of peace, although, as I have said, this is a war production and the war is over.

Here is another expense, Mr. Chairman, of "holding to the Philippines," as the President said in his message to Congress of December 2. In that message he congratulated us upon our policy of "holding" them; congratulated us, to use his own words, on "holding to the Philippines." We appropriated $4,000,000 yesterday of the people's money gathered from taxation in this country from our own people because we are "holding to the Philippines;" and here is a sum of $25,000—an increase from $6,000 or $8,000 appropriated last year.

This new bureau, as I have said, is a war production, an outgrowth of the War Department. Yet this great Committee on Appropriations, headed by the great economist that we all love to listen to, and whom very often we follow upon these questions, has provided in the bosom of this bill for the continuation of this bureau. It is continued here in time of peace. It is a new bureau which, according to the language of the report, is "in process of economical and careful development." And we give it $25,000 this year. This is another of the natural offsprings and expensive adjuncts—as I take it gentlemen on the other side will say—a necessary outgrowth and appendage of the policy of "holding the Philippines," which we have not tried at any time to turn loose.

These Philippine expenses and conditions there remind me of a conversation I had in Ceylon, August 22, 1901, with an English army officer, Colonel Vershoyle, who said:

I have been twenty-seven years in the English army, in two of England's wars, now in charge of the Boer camp, Ceylon. I wonder that you are embarking in colonialism. Why, the Philippine Islands will weaken you. They will be a nuisance, a heavy expense, lay you open to all sorts of trouble, force you to keep a large army and navy there. Why, if we, or any other nation over here were to get into trouble with you, the first place of attack would be the Philippine Islands. England can put 50,000 soldiers in there in a week.

It is too far from your base of supplies to ever strengthen you, from a military point, and hence a source of weakness, and the money or trade you get out of it will not pay in the long run.

I asked, "Why do you speak this way, and yet England expands?"

"Why, sir," he said, "we do not want to expand. Nobody does. We got into the expanding business and we can not stop. Some little nation will tread on our toes over here somewhere on the line—do some devilment—and we have to go over there and fix it up with our guns and take and rule the country to get rid of the trouble. You see we do not do so because we want to, but can not help ourselves. We have got more territory now than we can get along well with. This sort of policy is just what causes the downfall of all countries—Rome, for instance."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture, as required by the act approved January 12, 1895, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 15, on page 153, insert the following:

"Whenever any document or report containing illustrations shall be ordered printed by Congress, such illustrations shall not be printed unless the order to print so specifies; and the heads of the Executive Departments, and the heads of bureaus, not connected with the departments, before transmitting their annual reports to Congress, shall cause the same to be carefully examined, and shall exclude therefrom all matters, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports to be necessary and relate entirely to the transaction of public business; and in no case shall the Public Printer permit the insertion in any document, report, or other Government publication, except those emanating from the Patent Office, of any diagram, photogravures, half-tone, or other picture or illustration, unless express authorization has been given in writing, with the reason therefor, by the head of the Executive Department by which such document, report, or publication is issued; and if the same is issued by any bureau or division not immediately under and a part of any Executive Department, then such authorization therefor must be first given by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I submitted this amendment to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; and I think when the gentleman shall hear the reasons for the amendment he will withdraw his point of order. I do not mean to reflect personally on anyone.

In my judgment this is in the interest of good legislation. There is a growing abuse in this matter of printing illustrations, pictures, diagrams, etc., in these reports.

As an evidence of that, if any gentleman will take the trouble to get the report of the Director of the Mint for 1902, and it is only a sample, he will find 50 pages of that report made up of pictures, etc. Some of these pictures are half-tones, some are diagrams of different kinds, and add very materially to the cost of the document. I have taken the trouble to inquire in this one report of this year what the cost is of inserting these 50 pages of illustrations. Under the rule, there are 1,025 copies of this report printed. The cost of printing 1,025 copies with these illustrations is $1,696.20. The cost of printing the report, which is all we want, without illustrations is $1,126.50, an increase by reason of the pictures of $569.44, and that in this one report of the Director of the Mint. I will here publish the letter from the Public Printer on this subject:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1903.

Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In compliance with your request by telephone this morning, I have the honor to give below a statement showing the cost of printing the report of the Director of the Mint for 1902, both with and without illustrations:

1,025 copies, with illustrations, including the cost of engraving -----	$1,696.20
1,025 copies, without illustrations, would have cost-----------	1,126.56

Respectfully,

F. W. PALMER,
Public Printer.

I undertake to say that there is not a single picture in there that is worth a solitary cent to any legislator or to any private citizen. One of the pictures, as I remember it now, is the picture of a lamp-post that stands on one of the streets in Philadelphia in front of the new mint building constructed there. That picture takes up a whole page, and it cost the Government Printing Office, as I was assured, not less than $5. There is nothing on the page except the picture of a lamp-post in front of the mint in Philadelphia, and in the whole report there are 50 pages of these illustrations, the cost of which is more than one-third of the entire cost of the publication.

Last year I called attention to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, which contained illustrations of the interior of the Pension building, a not very handsome structure, as we all know, when viewed from the outside. When it was decorated, however, and pictures taken of the inside, some of them were quite pretty. This is an abuse which is growing. We ought to stop it. This amendment simply provides that when it is necessary to publish illustrations the head of the Executive Department—the Secretary of State, for instance, or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be—that wishes the publication shall simply certify to the Public Printer that it is necessary that these illustrations should go into the publication. I think no gentleman ought to object to the amendment. I do not admit that it is a change in existing law. It is a limitation upon this amount that we are appropriating for public printing.

I do not think that it is subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but if it were, I submit to the gentleman that he should not insist upon the point of order, but that we ought to economize to the extent provided for in this amendment. Mr. Chairman, the publication of these documents is a growing evil. The President of the United States in his annual message referred to it. I simply remind you of that fact. He urged upon the heads of these departments and the chiefs of these bureaus and the heads of divisions the desirability of reducing the amount of public printing. This matter of pictures, of course, was not in contemplation by the President when he referred to the mere publication of documents, but this is an evil that we can suppress without interfering with the privilege of printing.

Now, this expense of printing is one that is growing very rapidly. Only a few years ago I had the honor to be the chairman of the Committee on Printing, and served, I think, six or eight years as chairman of that committee. For that reason I became more or less familiar with the Government Printing Office. I have here an estimate that shows the amount appropriated only a few years ago, and the amount appropriated at this time by this bill. This bill itself carries between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000, while only a few years ago the bill carried only a little over $2,000,000. It is growing, and will continue to grow, and if we do not pass this amendment or some similar amendment to stop this abuse, there is no telling to what extent this matter of expense in printing will go. I cite one instance of the case where a man was sent to a far-away possession of ours—not the farthest—to take the census of the United States, and one of the first things he did in his report sent back was to insert his own photograph, so a whole page was taken up in the report to show us the face of the man who was taking the census.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will excuse me, there are also photographs of all our school-teachers, or nearly all, that we sent there.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly. It is an abuse of a privilege that ought to be restrained. I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will not insist upon the point of order. I know the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not do so, because I conferred with him and called his attention to the fact that I desired to offer this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend that he is correct in that statement. I have examined his amendment with some care, and for many years the Committee on Appropriations, having in charge these growing expenditures for public printing, have talked about the necessity for legislation which would restrict it. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has considerable knowledge in respect to the subject, and when he prepared this amendment and submitted it to me it commended itself to my judgment and approval, and so far as I am concerned, I have nothing to say against it from either the standpoint of the point of order or the standpoint of limitation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it was impossible from a mere hearing of the reading of the amendment to understand just how far it goes, but it is not quite possible for me to understand how you are going to permit illustrations in one book and forbid them in another without leaving it to the discretion of somebody.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The amendment leaves it to the discretion of the head of the department. It says that if the head of the department sees fit to insert them they can be inserted.

Mr. MANN. That may make a very great deal of difference. There may be a book that is gotten up for the very purpose of being illustrated.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that if it is a part of the work there is no difficulty at all when it goes down there for the head of the department to certify that the illustrations are necessary.

Mr. MANN. I can understand how there might be a very great deal of difficulty in passing the accounting officers of the Government. Here is a book on the Diseases of the Horse, filled with illustrations of one sort and another, and I apprehend that under the gentleman's amendment the Secretary of Agriculture would be compelled to certify as to each of these illustrations. The gentleman nods his head in the negative. How else will you reach it? The Secretary of Agriculture puts in a certificate that the illustrations in this book ought to be published. It is under his jurisdiction now. He is the one who is responsible now.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, I submit to the gentleman that the amendment is not liable to that construction; but it would be no hardship for him to certify that illustrations numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and so on, should be inserted. The Public Printer would respect that certification, I have no doubt; but the gentleman will remember that the only way to reach the evil is by making the law general. Take the report I refer to—of the Director of the Mint—and you will find that in a publication of perhaps 150 pages there are 50 pages of pictures such as I have indicated.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to admit the gentleman's contention that a very large number of illustrations are published which ought not to be published, pictures of people, and so forth, particularly pictures of officials themselves who have to do with the publication. I do not condone that, but it seems to me it is far better to have that, and have other illustrations which are necessary to be published, than to have none at all, and I am afraid of the result of this.

I think an amendment of this sort ought to be presented where members of the House have an opportunity to consider it, although I have very great confidence in the opinion of the gentleman from Tennessee, and particularly in reference to matters of printing. It seems to me that the House ought to have a chance to consider a proposition of this sort, and I suppose it would be privileged, coming from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; it would not be.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Resolutions that relate to printing for the two Houses are privileged, but resolutions for printing for the Departments are not.

Mr. MANN. It would be privileged to the extent that it relates to the printing of documents for the House or Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that there is very little abuse in that. It is in the departmental publications that the abuse arises.

Mr. MANN. Most of them are sent to us to be printed as Senate or House documents.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. They are sent to us after they are printed.

Mr. MANN. They are sent to us and printed as House or Senate documents.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call attention to the fact that this bill provides for this $6,000,000 to be used in printing, and we do not see the publications in manuscript. They come to us printed before we see them.

I insist upon a vote upon the amendment, because I have drawn it with all the care I can give it; and I will say to the gentleman that I did not draw it without submitting it to the intelligent late foreman of printing and the present chief clerk in the Government Printing Office. The amendment was drawn in his office, by my request and direction, at the Government Printing Office, so that the gentleman may depend upon my assurance that the amendment is carefully drawn.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly satisfied that the gentleman himself believed it to be carefully drawn; but I have seen so many things of that sort go through where the gentleman who proposed them believed them to be carefully drawn, and it developed afterwards that they did not meet the approval of many of the members of Congress, that it seems to me I have the right to see a proposition of that sort in advance before we are compelled to vote upon it. For that reason I am disposed, if I have the power, to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit in addition to what I have already said that it is not subject to a point of order, for it is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of the amount appropriated; and I will say to the gentleman that passing it here does not make it a law. It has got to be considered elsewhere. It will have to go to conference, probably. I do not insist on the language, specially, that I have used, although it is the best I could command. I hope the amendment will be agreed to, because I know the abuse we are liable to in these publications.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment the gentleman from Tennessee proposes is to regulate the printing of certain illustrations in public documents. The gentleman himself states that there is no regulation or law to regulate the publication of these illustrations at the present time. In this amendment it is proposed that whenever, either this year or the next fiscal year, or whenever any document or report containing illustrations be ordered printed. this shall apply. It has no reference to the present appropriation or any future appropriation. The Chair thinks it is not a limitation upon the appropriation carried in this bill, and is, therefore, legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw the point of order, in view of the manifest necessity of this amendment?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the necessity for the amendment had been so manifest, it might properly have been presented to the House before the hour of 5 o'clock, when the committee is about to reach a final vote upon this bill. I am not criticising the gentleman for presenting it at this time; and until we can be better informed, I shall have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think I can modify the amendment so as to remove the difficulty and bring it within the rules.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman can modify it if he chooses, so that it will be a limitation for this year.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understand the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am perfectly willing that he shall make that modification, as he has the amendment, so that it shall be a limitation, in order that it may be brought within the rules. I will ask the chairman of the committee to suggest the words that make a limitation such as he chooses that will bring it within the rule.

Mr. CANNON. By unanimous consent, I ask that we continue the reading of the bill and return in a few minutes to this.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to pass this portion of the bill and to continue the reading of the remainder of the bill, with the privilege of returning to this paragraph hereafter. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting thirty days' annual leave to the employees of the Government Printing Office, $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. Before the amendment is read, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted a few words about this amendment, I frankly concede that it is subject to a point of order, and if it is made by any gentleman in the House, of course the amendment will go out. I think there is a necessity for it. I believe it is a proper amendment; I believe it ought to be the law, and for that reason I have offered it. It relates to the salary of the Public Printer. I ask the Clerk to read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 154, after line 6, the following words, namely: "The annual salary of the Public Printer hereafter shall be $6,000."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have never before offered an amendment to raise a salary in this House.

Mr. CANNON. I just want to say that I reserve the point of order. I do not think I shall make it, so far as I am concerned; but I merely reserve it, if any gentleman desires to make it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Let it be reserved, and if any gentleman insists, it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I have never, in my experience in the House, offered a bill—that I remember—increasing the salary of any officer; not that I thought it was not proper and just at times to do so, and I have frequently voted for them if the necessity required; still I have never introduced or offered a measure increasing a salary until I offered it in this case. I introduced the bill increasing this salary several days ago. It has been referred to the Committee on Printing; it has been unanimously reported by the committee favorably.

Now, with that statement, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that when the salary of the Public Printer was fixed at $4,500 he did not have more than 2,200 employees. There are in the Government Printing Office now more than 4,000 employees. The salary was fixed at that sum when he expended $2,000,000 or a little over for public printing. This bill itself carries $6,300,000, and the public printing will be nearly $7,000,000 for the next year, in my opinion. More than three times over the amount of work has been increased, and more than double the number of employees. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that $4,500 is enough to secure the best man known to the printers and bookbinders' trades in the United States for the office of Public Printer, and for that reason I think the salary ought to be fixed at $6,000.

It is a matter of economy in the line of the amendment I introduced a moment ago. That amendment was in the interest of economy; it was intended to reduce and would reduce by thousands and tens of thousands of dollars the expenses of public printing. This amendment is in the same line—that of economy in public printing. In order to get and keep an efficient and competent Public Printer and get more work and better results it is necessary to pay a larger salary.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman from Tennessee mean to imply that we have not a competent and efficient Public Printer now?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir; I am glad the gentleman asked that question. The present Public Printer is an efficient public officer. He commenced to be the Public Printer twelve or fourteen years ago, when there were a little over 2,000 employees in the office. To-day he handles between four and five thousand employees with a corresponding increase in the expenditures for public printing that I have mentioned. I think the Public Printer at present is an efficient man, but if he were to die and we were called upon to choose some man to take charge of this establishment at the present salary, I doubt if you could get the best man. For that reason I have offered this amendment to make the salary $6,000, and I know that is not extravagant. We have the largest government printing office in the world, and it is growing all the time.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 91, after line 17, insert:

"Augusta Arsenal, Augusta, Ga.: For necessary connection with sewer system of the village of Summerville, Ga., provided that no other or further charge shall be made against the United States for the future use of said sewer system, $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Georgia that his amendment does not relate to that part of the bill which has just been read. The part that his amendment relates to has been passed, and without unanimous consent we can not return to it.

Mr. FLEMING. I understand that, Mr. Chairman, but the chairman of the Appropriations Committee investigated this and suggested that I wait until this stage and then ask unanimous consent to return.

Mr. CANNON. What is the page?

Mr. FLEMING. Page 91.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not antagonize the gentleman's request to return by unanimous consent to consider the amendment he has offered. This estimate was for the sum of $20,000. I think the War Department had confidence in the Ordnance Department, and I was under the impression that the arsenal at Augusta ought to be discontinued; but on a full inquiry and investigation the gentleman in charge of the Ordnance Department says that considering the seacoast defense and the service, the fact that he has already abandoned several arsenals, that it is necessary at least for the present and immediate future to retain this arsenal for storage purposes, and so forth. If that is done I think the connection could be made with this sewer system. While this is not the amount estimated, the general in charge said that upon investigation that he had conducted he was satisfied that this amount was reasonable.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss this amendment unless some objection is made to it. It has been investigated at the War Department, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to return to page 91 of the bill to offer the amendment which has been read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question on the amendment offered by Mr. FLEMING was considered, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 18, line 10, for the purpose of inserting an amendment, which I will send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is one more paragraph of the bill to be read.

Mr. CANNON. I thought the reading of the bill had been completed.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one more paragraph.

Mr. CANNON. Let the last paragraph be read.

The Clerk proceeded and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 24 for the purpose of offering an amendment that does not involve an appropriation, but a change in the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to return to page 24. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Insert the following between lines 6 and 7 on page 24:
"That so much of the sundry civil act approved June 6, 1900, as relates to the removal of the quarantine station at Brunswick, Ga., in words as follows:
"'The quarantine station, Brunswick, Ga.: For removal of station, purchase of site, erection of buildings, and equipment of station, $20,000,' be amended so as to read:
"'The quarantine station, Brunswick, Ga.: For removal of station, purchase of site, erection of buildings, and equipment of station, or, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purchase of the site of the present station and the improvement thereof by the erection of buildings and otherwise, $20,000.'"

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas called my attention to this amendment, and I am satisfied that there is no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 112 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] asks unanimous consent to return to page 112 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, on page 112, insert:
"For additional amount necessary for purchase of land for a military post at or near Indianapolis, Ind., and for necessary expenses incident to the appraisal and sale of the arsenal property in said city, $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I now offer the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. ZENOR. I raise a point of order upon the amendment, and should be glad to hear some explanation of it from my colleague.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, technically, I should imagine that the point of order is properly taken; yet there are such equities in favor of this amendment that it seems to me quite probable that when properly understood they would secure a withdrawal of the point of order.

Under a statute of about a year ago the military reservation known as the arsenal at Indianapolis was ordered sold. Under direction of the War Department an appraisement was effected; and that appraisement, after careful examination, was fixed at $154,000. The same statute which directed the sale of that arsenal property directed the Secretary of War to invest in other lands adjacent to Indianapolis an amount of money equal to that realized from the sale of the arsenal, and that land was to be used for a military post.

The Secretary of War has had two different boards examine the land, and has fixed upon a site. He has been unable to make a swap of one of these tracts of land for the other. The land which he has selected for an Army post will bring $180,000 or $181,000 in round numbers. In view of the probability that the arsenal property may not bring an amount equal to that which the purchase of the new site will require (the sale of the arsenal property having been fixed for March 16), he now asks that he may have this additional sum, on which he may draw should the occasion arise. I can see no good reason for objecting to this proposition, and I believe the amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any law authorizing the purchase of this site?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The same law which authorized the sale of the arsenal authorized the purchase of a site. But I will say to the Chair that it directed that an amount of money equal to that which the arsenal property should bring at the sale be invested in other lands in that same vicinity for the purposes of a post. The sale has been authorized and it will occur on the 16th of March next. The Secretary fears that the amount of the appraisement will be the "upset" bid, and if that should prove true, then it will not realize by about $27,000 what the site for the purpose of the Army post will require, so that he asks this additional sum as a leeway. If the sale brings as much as the new site will require, then none of this money will be drawn upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the effect of this amendment, from the standpoint of the point of order, would be to increase the limit of cost of the original purchase?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is what it would practically amount to. I trust that my colleague will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. ZENOR. How much land is there in this tract upon which the arsenal at Indianapolis was located?

Mr. OVERSTREET. About 80 acres.

Mr. ZENOR. What is the estimated value of those 80 acres?

Mr. OVERSTREET. One hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars; and this is all it is worth.

Mr. ZENOR. Will my colleague state whether it is expected that that amount will be realized at the sale?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I doubt whether any more will be realized.

Mr. ZENOR. As I understand, the law under which these proceedings have been taken for the sale of the arsenal and the reinvestment in the purchase of land for a military post confines the investment of that sum to the amount realized from the sale of the arsenal property.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I said that technically such is the fact; but the Secretary has been unable to simply swap the two tracts.

Mr. ZENOR. Where is this land proposed to be purchased by the Government located with reference to the city of Indianapolis?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Secretary, after careful investigation, having two different military boards visit the property for the purpose of the investigation, has determined upon the purchase of 1,833 acres about 8 miles from the center of the city of Indianapolis.

Mr. ZENOR. Of whom was this Army board composed—of residents of Indiana?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Army board was composed entirely of officers of the United States Army.

Mr. ZENOR. Now, let me ask my colleague whether these 1,833 acres of land which it is proposed to purchase for this military post are not assessed upon the assessment book of the county of Marion for about $30 an acre.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know what the assessment is, but I will say this, that all assessments are lower than the actual value.

Mr. ZENOR. Precisely.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I know that my friend desires to have this located in his own district, but the board decided otherwise.

Mr. ZENOR. These 1,833 acres are located in a broken, hilly country, are they not, and are not even very valuable for farming purposes?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no; the Adjutant-General, on the other hand, and other officers of the Department have advised me that the land lies in such a way as to make a most admirable Army post, and they so regard it.

Mr. ZENOR. I will ask the gentleman to state if the market value of the land situate and located in the same section in which it is proposed to invest this money is not to-day no more than $50 an acre, the very best of it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I have information that it is not worth over $30 an acre.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say that I presume the gentleman's information emanates from a circular letter which has been forwarded to members of the Indiana delegation. I received one. That letter touches upon the valuation of this land. The letter was written by constituents of mine, a reputable real-estate firm which had other lands to sell to the Department, but did not succeed in disposing of them.

Mr. ZENOR. I am very glad to have the indorsement of my colleague as to the gentlemen.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Gentlemen of the committee can draw their own conclusion as to the criticism raised by that firm. I will say that I have no criticism to pass upon any of the acts of the War Department, either in its course of conduct in reference to the proposed sale or in the manner of arriving at the selection of the site. It has been gone about in the ordinary way pursued by the Department.

Mr. ZENOR. Just one more question. Does the gentleman think that the 1,833 acres are necessary to constitute this military post at Indianapolis? Is not that acreage far in excess of the actual needs for that purpose?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was entirely left to the Department. I had no consultation with them whatever.

Mr. ZENOR. I will ask my colleague whether he knows if that number of acres, 1,833, is the amount of land agreed upon?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It has been agreed upon, and so ordered by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ZENOR. And is located about 8 miles from the city of Indianapolis?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ZENOR. I will ask further whether land in that part of the country is selling at $100 an acre?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will ask if this dialogue is pertinent to the point of order that is pending?

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I trust that my colleague will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I will not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement in regard to this proposed amendment of my colleague, and I will determine as to whether or not I shall press this point of order. I think, however, that it is well taken. I understand that the proposition to secure the location of an Army post at Indianapolis, Ind., originated with the Indianapolis people about a year ago. They conceived the idea of selling the Government reservation and arsenal located thereon, at that city, and procure the reinvestment of the proceeds thereof in the purchase of other lands at or near that site. This argument addressed to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Secretary of War prevailed as against the claims of other parts of my State, notably the southern part, and that committee reported a provision in the appropriation bill of last year authorizing the Secretary of War to sell said arsenal and grounds and deposit the proceeds in the United States Treasury. It further appropriated said money and authorized the Secretary of War to purchase other lands in that county at or near the arsenal site for a military post, but not to exceed the amount of such proceeds. He, the Secretary, was expressly limited by the provisions of the law to the proceeds of the sale of the arsenal property.

Having succeeded in successfully competing with other parts of the State for the Army post, and largely upon the ground that it would cost the Government nothing beyond the small expense incidental to a sale of the arsenal property and reinvestment of the proceeds in the purchase of other lands for a suitable site for such post, and having secured what they now consider the permanent establishment of this post, they, at the first opportunity, and, it seems to me, in breach of good faith, come to Congress and tell us that they want to buy 1,830 acres of land for this proposed site, and they lack money enough to do this. They say they can realize for the arsenal property $154,000, but they want $181,000, and are short $30,000.

They now propose to go beyond the limit fixed in the law and expend $30,000 more than they first said they wanted or needed. But this is not the serious objection—the most objectionable—to this proposition. They have, as they say, taken an option upon, or have had an examination and appraisement made, of the land they propose to buy, and that this consists of eighteen hundred and thirty-three acres, about 8 or 9 miles from Indianapolis, and propose to pay for this land the enormously high price of $100 per acre, or $181,000 to $184,000 for the same. Mr. Chairman, this is, in my judgment, from information now in my possession from reliable parties, citizens of Indianapolis, an outrageous price—more than the land is worth by double. I have letters and other data from a reputable firm of business men in that city saying that this land is situate in a rough, hilly, and broken country, and is not worth at the highest price over $45 or $50 per acre.

I have information which I understand to come from reputable gentlemen in Indianapolis, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] has just admitted that these gentlemen are reputable. These statements and letters have been sent to me as well as to other members, perhaps, of the Indiana delegation, and are to the effect that this property which is now sought to be purchased by the Government is assessed upon the assessment books of the county of Marion for a little more than $30 an acre—an average of $30.43 per acre.

I have in my possession a list, said by these gentlemen to be taken from the assessment books and duplicates of Marion County, of 2,300 acres of land, all lying in the sections from which it is said these 1,833 acres proposed to be purchased by the Government are to be selected, and the average assessed value of these lands is $30.43 per acre. Well, they say—my colleague [Mr. OVERSTREET] says—these assessments are too low, they are very much under their fair cost value. Let us admit that. Let us assume that they are not assessed for more than two-thirds of their value, and it will certainly not be contended that the assessor of Marion County would so far forget his duty as to put lands at less than two-thirds of their value for taxable purposes when his oath required him to assess them at their fair cash value. Then we have lands worth $45 per acre—and at this price the lands would be worth only $82,485—showing that at this price they still have money enough to pay for these lands at a fair price and have a balance ramaining of $71,515 for other improvements in the way of buildings and equipments.

I understand that the lands are not worth to exceed $45 an acre at the outside. They are valued at not more than $30.43 or $30.44 an acre, I think, on the assessment books; and certainly the assessor of that county did not so far forget his duty that he put an appraisement value on real estate in the county of Marion at less than one-half of what it is really worth. If such be the fact, then it is a great injustice to other people living in the southern part of Indiana, whose real estate usually is appraised at its fair cash value and in but few instances as low as three-fourths of what it is worth.

Now, supposing that it is one-half of what it is worth or two-thirds of what it is worth, taking this 1,833 acres and putting it at $45 an acre, at one-third more than the value as fixed by the assessor of Marion County, the total 1,833 acres amounts to $82,000. Yet they come in here with a proposition that the Government shall pay $180,000 for this 1,833 acres. Put it at the highest and say that it is worth $50 an acre. And I say I have statements and letters from entirely trustworthy people that this real estate is not worth to exceed $45 per acre, and, further, that real estate is advertised in the papers of Indianapolis, located in the same community and in the hands of real-estate agents in Indianapolis, and offered at $50 an acre, 150 acres of better land in many respects than this which is proposed to be purchased, and that land can not be disposed of.

It seems to me that it is but fair to the members of this House that before they vote upon this proposition, before they authorize the purchase of this real estate at this enormously high price, they should consider this proposition, first, that it is in excess of any provision of law or authority conferred upon the Secretary of War. The law expressly confined this cost for the location and establishment of a military post at Indianapolis to the proceeds of the sale of that arsenal, which will amount to $154,000. Yet it is proposed to buy this real estate at what seems to me to be this enormously excessive price.

That is all I have to say. I shall not press the point of order, but let the House determine whether or not this expenditure shall be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. OVERSTREET) there were—ayes 44, noes 35.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we return to page 87, with reference to the provision for the Mount Rainier National Park. I desire to submit an amendment that I trust will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to page 87 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment already adopted as a substitute amendment the following:

"And for protection and improvement of said park, and repairing and extension of roads and trails, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CANNON. It was on page 115 of the bill that the other amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought it was page 87.

The CHAIRMAN. It is on page 115. The Chair understood the gentleman to say page 87.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood it was page 87 where the other amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington to return to page 115?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend that I do not want to have that amendment adopted. It is entirely independent of the former amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me say to the gentleman that it was understood we could go back, and therefore I did not ask unanimous consent to do it.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I will not interpose any objection to going back, but let us hear the amendment read again, and let us in that same connection hear read the amendment that we did adopt.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington. The Clerk will now report the amendment, together with the amendment previously adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mount Rainier National Park: To enable the Secretary of War to cause a survey to be made of the most practicable route for the establishment of a road into said park, and toward the construction of said road after the survey herein provided for shall have been made, $10,000.

Add to the amendment just read the following:

"And for protection and improvement of said park, and repairing and extension of roads and trails, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest to the gentleman that that is the language of the appropriation for the improvement of Crater Lake, National Park, on page 87.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to turn both these departments in there. It should be done, if at all, under the authority of the Secretary of War. In other words, there is no economy in turning both these departments in there. We are caring for the park substantially by details from the Army.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest that the gentleman misunderstands the situation. In the act organizing this park it says that the control of it shall be exclusively in the Secretary of the Interior; so that we can not without new legislation put the Secretary of War in there. The substitute amendment has nothing to do with the park. That substitute amendment simply says that under the direction of the Secretary of War he can survey a road into the park. Now, that simply takes it to the park. There are 24 miles through the forest reservation before you get to the park that will be surveyed under that provision. Now, I have investigated the matter, and I find that while the Secretary of War continues to detail soldiers to the different national parks, they are there by virtue of separate acts passed by Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to request the Secretary of War to detail troops, and when these troops are detailed the officer in command is the acting superintendent of the park, under the Secretary of the Interior. Now, that is the situation in reference to these other parks. This is not an attempt to give the Secretary of War any new power. It simply makes provision for what the Secretary of the Interior requests and earnestly recommends in his report. The park can not be cared for or looked after without the $10,000 provision. That has nothing to do with the park itself.

Mr. CANNON. Well, in other words, it is to give somebody salaries where there is no improved park. I will submit to my friend, why not enlarge the survey and let us have a report?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Report on what?

Mr. CANNON. On what the roads will cost, and so on, and so on. In other words, there is nothing at Mount Rainier Park now.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The main object is to get somebody to look after the park, and the Secretary, as I read yesterday, has had to put the forest superintendent of Washington there temporarily in charge, but this interferes with his work, and the Secretary recommends the appropriation for this park so that it may be looked after. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. CANNON. It does not lie with me, but with the committee, to let this matter in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But if the gentleman does not object the committee will not object.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe it is wise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MADDOX. Division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 33, noes 27.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia demands tellers.

Mr. MADDOX. I did not make the demand for tellers, Mr. Chairman; but I do make the demand for a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw this amendment. I see there is a disposition to make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask now, Mr. Chairman, to return to page 24 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to page 24 for the purpose of offering an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MADDOX. I did not withdraw my point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the gentleman withdrew the amendment; and I will say to the gentleman from Georgia I think with this amendment and probably one by the gentleman from Virginia that we can conclude the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I shall insist on my amendment, which I have here, and the authorities.

Mr. CANNON. I think we can dispose of it in a very few minutes. I would like to finish the bill to-night. If we do not do it in fifteen minutes, I will move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist on the point of no quorum?

Mr. MADDOX. I would not insist upon the point of no quorum, but I am informed by gentlemen behind me that they are going to demand a quorum when we rise and a yea-and-nay vote on the question of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana. After hearing the statement of my colleague on the left, I think we may just as well quit now.

Mr. CANNON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17202, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had presented this day to the President of the United States for his approval bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14512. An act to amend an act to add certain counties in Alabama to the northern district therein, and to divide the said northern district, after the addition of said counties, into two divisions, and to prescribe the times and places for holding courts therein, and for other purposes, approved May 2, 1884;

H. R. 7. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to cause to be erected monuments and markers on the battlefield of Gettysburg, Pa., to commemorate the valorous deeds of certain regiments and batteries of the United States Army;

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States: which was ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with an accompanying draft of an act making an appropriation to carry out on the part of the United States the provisions of the convention between the United States and Great Britain concluded January 24, 1903.

In order that there may be no delay in the appointment and assembling of the tribunal provided for in the convention, I ask for the matter the favorable consideration of the present Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 13, 1903.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all members may have leave to print for five days on the bill S. 7053, that the House considered this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for general leave to print for five days upon the bill that passed to-day, known as the Elkins bill.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I shall object, unless the remarks are confined to the subject under discussion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said remarks upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama amends his request so that remarks must apply to the bill which has been under consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MICKEY was granted leave of absence for five days on account of important business.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

On page 6, line 11, after "person" to strike out "corporation;"
On page 6, line 13, after "he" to strike out "or it;" and
On page 6, line 14, after "proceeding" to insert:
"Provided, That the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to expedite the hearing and determination of suits in equity pending or hereafter brought under the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,'" "'An act to regulate commerce,'" approved February 4, 1887, or any other acts having a like purpose that may be hereafter enacted, approved February —, 1903,' shall apply to any case prosecuted under the direction of the Attorney-General in the name of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. CLAPP. On behalf of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CRUMP.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the close of eulogies to-day upon the life and character of AMOS J. CUMMINGS, late a Representative from the State of New York, I shall submit resolutions commemorative of the life and character of ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the daily session of the Senate hereafter, during the present Congress, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I will move to proceed to the consideration of what is known as the statehood bill. I give the notice in order that I may not come in conflict with notices by others Senators.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 33, Cigar Makers' International Union, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the States power to deal with intoxicating liquors which may be shipped into their territory from other States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of the Ministerial Alliance, of Leavenworth, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to recognize and promote the efficiency of chaplains in the Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petitions of C. E. Jewell and sundry other citizens of Osborne County; of E. E. Booker and sundry other citizens of Mitchell County; of F. H. Quitland and sundry other citizens of Smith County, and of C. W. Talmadge, of Rooks County, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in Government buildings; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I present the address of Hon. W. B. Childers, retiring president of the New Mexican Bar Association, delivered at the seventeenth annual session at Santa Fe, N. Mex., January 12, 1903; also a letter from ex-Governor Prince, published in a recent issue of the New York Tribune, and a brief editorial from the World-Herald, of Omaha, Nebr., of Friday, January 23, 1903, in reference to the admission of the Territories to statehood. I ask that the papers may be printed as a document.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall make any objection to the request, but I hope the Senator will not press it now, because if editorials and articles of that kind are going to be put in the RECORD or printed as a document, then it will necessarily require the printing of other editorials. I hope the Senator will not press the request right now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish the Senator would object or not. I shall press the request. I ask that the order be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the papers to which he refers be printed as a document.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not know that I will object later in the day, but just at the present moment I shall object, because I want to talk with the Senator about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I move that the papers be printed as a document. I will say——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am perfectly willing for the Senator to have the papers printed as a document if he is not willing to withhold his request long enough for us to have a conversation about it. I do not think I shall then object, but——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that these papers are entirely respectful and such papers as I would like to have the privilege of sending to some of my constituents. I have never raised an objection to a respectful request to have any respectful matter
